MR. EDITOR: I find that some of our dear Liberal friends do a great deal of fault-finding. I believe in giving everyone a chance, for truly you cannot call anyone a Liberalist who wants to push anyone aside and not hear his side of the question. Now let me tell you how my husband and I get along in this dear Christian community. We hav them east, west, north, and south of us. On the northeast side of us is a sort of mixed Methodist and Adventist minister. On the southeast side is an Advent minister, and the rest are a mixed-up mess. There is one family besides ours that are Spiritualists. There are plenty of Liberalists and Spiritualists in Rochester. If they would come out and take a stand and fight for it, I think we would hav a majority. But they are afraid to speak, and I hav the opinion that some of them are afraid to think, for fear of somebody's disapproval. I believe in everyone's standing on his own feet, independent of any church or creed. My husband and I hav always done it, and been straightforward and honest in dealing with our fellow-men and lived up to what we thought was right. Therefore we hav the respect of all our neighbors if we do not hav their love. I hav been confined to the house for more than a year, and as there hav been but two church-members in to see me, I hav come to the conclusion they think I am good enough to be left alone. I see a great deal about Spiritualism and its manifestations, and I find there is a great deal of fun made of it. Now, what right hav I to ridicule your belief? We all hav the right to believe what we want to, and I always avail myself of that right, whether the world likes it or not, and would take that stand if everybody in the world were against me. I believe in investigating, as the Irishman did, when he made up a fire of brimstone and jumped into it, to see how hell would seem. I am a firm believer in Spiritualism, and I do not care who knows it. I know when my husband, girl, and boy, and myself sit down to a table, there is no fraud, and we hav had the tablecloth dragged from the table, while my son, a boy of thirteen, tried to hold it. Then I asked questions which nobody knew but myself, and they were answered as correctly as a person of flesh and blood could hav done. I hav never seen any materializing, but my husband has. And when he tells me he has seen these things I hav no right to say he has not. If we are going to be Liberalists, let us hav Liberalism broad and grand, and let us hav it so the whole world can get the benefit of it. Let us be one grand and noble family, and stop backbiting and ridiculing. And if there are two debating on any subject, let others keep out until they hav settled it, for I do not think there is one that writes for this paper but that is capable of doing it. If I had the talent of Sister Slenker I would try it with some of them.

Since I wrote that other letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER I hav had a great many letters and papers sent to me. I am very grateful for them, and would hav answered them all, but my health would not permit me. I wish we could hav a good Freethought lecture here. I think it would arouse the people. We had a pupil in the high school who took a stand for Robert Ingersoll, and the consequence was, one of the teachers got terribly down on him. MRS. J. A. BROCK.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., April 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished reading the ANNUAL for 1889, and what strikes me most forcibly is the lame and impotent replies given to Question 14 addressed to the stars of Liberalism.

The star of stars, the great Ingersoll, does not answer at all. What is the matter? Has he no views on the subject? Or is he afraid to utter them? Perish the thought! Next comes Parton. He answers none of your questions. Then Miss Helen H. Gardener. She says: "I hav never heard of a remedy which seemed to me adequate," and modestly adds, "nor do I imagin that I could offer one!" then, as if to qualify the foregoing, she says, "Certainly not in the allotted space." I would suggest for her consideration "Progress and Poverty," by Henry George. Putnam follows with: "Question 14. What do you suggest as the remedy for economic troubles? A. More knowledge and less theology; more work and less talk." But he does not say on what lines we shall work. Charles Watts givs an answer that, if followed, would alleviate, but not cure, the troubles. Stevens's answer, "Government (the people's) control of the means of life," is good, if he means by "means of life," land, the source of all wealth.

Parker Pillsbury's, as an answer is good enough, but is indefinit as a remedy. Robert C. Adams givs the answer of the state Socialist. E. B. Foote, Jr., says: "Free speech, free press, free mails, free schools, and Liberal clubs." I submit that these are not remedies, but simply means by which a remedy may be propagated. Lucy N. Colman givs as a remedy for economic troubles, "Coöperation and free trade, with all the word implies," the best answer as yet given. John Peck givs the answer of the Greenbacker. As I am one myself, I hav no objection to the answer, except that, while good in itself, it is not enough, nor of the first importance.

The rest of the answers are scarce worthy of notice, except that of Mattie A. Freeman, which is as follows: "Justice, which includes a realization of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, will go further as a remedy for economic troubles than all the celebrated nostrums recommended by political parties as a panacea. Without it nations hav crumbled to pieces as though built of sand. Justice—a free access to the soil, an equal right to nature's opportunities and nature's resources, a just distribution of wealth; justice—'liberty for man, woman, and child,' universal mental liberty."

To my mind, Mrs. Freeman's answer is the best that was made of all the Freethought host. Justice—making of the Declaration of Independence a living principle, instead of a mere Fourth of July motto. Equal rights for all; special privileges for none. And how are we to do all this? By wiping out all forms of taxation except a single tax on relativ land values. Taxation is robbery. The single tax so-called is not really a tax, but a rent paid by the individual to the community for use and control of a privilege, whereby benefits are equalized between him who has an advantage not created by his own exertions and the rest of the community. This tax, or rent, will create a fund sufficient to pay all necessary expense of a government founded on justice, for it is largely by the denial of man's natural right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, through existing laws, that government is so costly. HENRY WALKER.

THORPE, WIS., March 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to contribute my mite to your most valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. In looking at the history of different nations of people, I find in Borneo a class of people who are more than civilized, so far as their moral character is concerned, for they are hospitable, sympathetic, honest above all other people, steadfast in friendship, utterly without religious sentiment and with no idea of a God, never given to slavery, monogamistic, devoted to their families, and almost totally unacquainted with lewdness. These attributes belong to the Dyak in his natural life, when uninfluenced by interlopers—who so corrupted him at one time that his moral nature was almost changed from humane to savage. There seem to be several different tribes—Kyans, Sea Dyaks, and Hill Dyaks. The Hill Dyaks more nearly retain their primitiv manners than the others. Hence we will present them in their original simplicity. The people of this tribe are morally the most developed of any in the island, which, in view of the extent of the influence Hindooism formerly exerted over them, is all the more surprising. Although they, as a tribe, are wholly without religion or any of its "restraining" influences, their moral principles would put to blush the children of Israel in its best days. To the other virtues they add that of strict honesty and a profound respect for the rights of others. It is positivly asserted that they never steal from Europeans. They hav no religious ceremonies or observances whatever, nor any conceptions of a God who controls the destinies of men for good or ill. Marriage among the Hill Dyaks is not a solemn event, but the wife is honored for all that. The ceremony is not always the same; sometimes it is effected by the mere exchange of presents, or simply eating rice together. Simple as this is, it answers the purpose admirably; a public avowal of the marriage is invariably made, and thenceforth the parties liv together in great harmony, save in very rare instances. In case of death the property is equally divided among the children, without regard to sex or condition; so if a man dies leaving a widow, all his property passes to her without the annoyance of executors; she is bound for his debts, and always manages to pay them.

The most wonderful trait, however, is their faithfulness in paying their debts. If the people of the village want goods, a trader will let them hav his whole cargo, if he can get them to accept it, in exchange for jungle produce to be collected. The day for full settlement is named by the head man, and by that day the debts are all paid. "Like their neighbors of the hills, the Sea Dyaks are without priests or creeds, or even the faintest notion of religious observances. Their moral laws are a product of their own evolution, for we see in them no reflection of the religious customs of any of the people who hav thus far come in contact with them, Hindoo, European, or Chinese. Savage nations usually acquire all the vices, and but very few of the virtues, of the civilization which touches them, but so far these people hav gone through the fire unscathed. They are yet free from the groveling idolatry and abominable religious fanaticism of the Hindoo, the sordid avarice of the Chinese, the deceit, treachery, and licentiousness of the Malays, and the brandy and the sodaism of the Christians." They are subject to very few diseases, and insanity is so rare that many of them never saw a case; deformity of person is almost unknown, and the diseases so common to women of our country are unheard of among them. Now, what does this teach us? In these strange children of nature we see all the cardinal virtues without a ray of religion, morality without priests or ministers, the Christian graces without Christ or gospel. They keep no Sabbaths, pray no prayers, build no temples, worship nothing and nobody, and acknowledge no higher tribunal than the bar of public opinion on one hand, and the Sarawak court on the other. They are, perhaps, the most happy and contented people under the sun. The Dyak's wants are few, and his nativ jungle supplies nearly all of them. His children do not hav scarlet fever, diphtheria, croup, or whooping cough, nor does his wife hav the consumption, dyspepsia, rheumatism, or gout. And but for the rascally Chinamen, years ago, introducing their toddy, or arrack, he might to-day be without the means of getting drunk, which vice is generally the gift of civilization. In hospitality, human sympathy, and charity, they are not outranked by any people, and their morals are as much superior to ours as our intelligence is beyond theirs. If happiness is the goal of human existence, they are much nearer it than we. In this instance, at least, the highest civilization has not evolved the most perfect state of society. Consequently Borneo is no field for missionaries, for no religion can giv the Dyak aught that will benefit him or increase his happiness in the least. I wish the Christians to compare these people with their boasted godlike Abyssinians.

I am indebted to F. B. Springs, of Maitland, Mo., who is a stanch and influential Liberal, for the first copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to which I hav become very much attached. And at Maitland I heard, with pleasure, the debate between W. F. Jamieson and Professor Dungan, of Iowa, the latter being driven to the wall by the well-directed blows of W. F. Jamieson. I also heard Miss Gardener, Mrs. Freeman, Mrs. Krekel, and Remsburg in his masterly "Sabbath Question," on the subject which is now agitating the minds of the people. And I hope every senator will enter his protest against the miserable Blair bill. For, as some one has said, before they can trample upon the rights of the people by carrying this into effect, they had better consider the cost, for it will certainly be an incalculable waste of money and blood. A friend to mental liberty, MARTIN FLEMING.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Spring Chorus.

Oh, such a commotion under the ground
When March called, "Ho there! ho!"
Such spreading of rootlets far and wide,
Such whispering to and fro!
And, "Are you ready?" the Snow-drop asked;
"'Tis time to start, you know."
"Almost, my dear," the Willow replied,
"I'll follow as soon as you go."
Then, "Ha! ha! ha!" a chorus came
Of laughter soft and low,
From the millions of flowers under the ground—
Yes, millions, beginning to grow.

"I'll promis my blossoms," the Crocus said,
"When I hear the bluebirds sing."
"And straight thereafter," Narcissus cried,
"My silver and gold I'll bring."
"And ere they are dulled," another spoke,
"My Hyacinth bells shall ring."
And the Violet only murmured, "I'm here,"
And sweet grew the air of spring.
Then, "Ha! ha! ha!" a chorus came
Of laughter soft and low,
From the millions of flowers under the ground—
Yes, millions, beginning to grow.

Oh, the pretty, brave things! through the coldest days,
Imprisoned in walls of brown,
They never lost heart, though the blast shrieked loud,
And the sleet and the hail came down;
But patiently each wrought her beautiful dress
Or fashioned her beautiful crown,
And now they are coming to brighten the world,
Still shadowed by winter's frown;
And well may they cheerily laugh, "Ha! ha!"
In a chorus soft and low,
The millions of flowers hid under the ground—
Yes, millions, beginning to grow.

—Harper's Young People.

The Two Brothers.

(From the Talmud.)

In Palestine long years ago—
So runs the legend old—
Where Kedron's sparkling waters flow
Across their sands of gold,
And Mount Moriah lifts his head
Above the sunny plain,
Two brothers owned—as one—'tis said
A field of golden grain.

And when the autumn days had come
And all the shocks and sheaves
Stood waiting for the "harvest home,"
Among the withering leaves,
The elder brother said one night:
"I'm stronger far than Saul,
My younger brother. 'Tis but right
That I should giv him all
These sheaves upon the plain
We own together, so
I'll put with his my stacks of grain,
And he will never know!"

Scarce had he left the sheaves of wheat
When quietly there came Across the field with stealthy feet,
And errand just the same—
The younger lad, who said: "I see
My brother Simon's need
Is greater far than mine, for he
Hath wife and child to feed;
And so to him I'll giv my sheaves,
It is but right, I know—
And he will never think who leaves
These wheat stacks on his row!"

Next morning when the brothers twain
Began to count their store,
Behold! each found his stacks of grain
To number as before!
"Why! how is this?" in great surprise
Each to himself then said—
"I'll watch to-night and see who tries
These tricks when I'm abed!"
And so, half way across the plain
They met—each one bent o'er
With shocks and sheaves of golden grain
To swell his brother's store!

Good Saul and Simon! Would to-day
More brothers might be found
Who seek each other's good alway,
And in kind deeds abound.

—Youth's Companion.

The Three Playmates.

One bright summer day, as James was playing in the back yard with his baby brother Lou, one of his favorit playmates came along. We shall call her Sarah. Soon they were in want of a game.

"Oh, what shall we do?" began Sarah.

"I know," said Jim.

So saying, he took baby's high chair, and cut the legs off rather short; then he secured two poles, and these he put under the chair. Then Lou was placed in it.

"Now," said Jim, "let us carry him down to the pond. Then we can catch fish."

So one went to one end of the poles and the other to the other end, and they started off in jolly good humor to the pond. Before they reached it Lou became heavy and they stopped under a large tree to rest. In the mean time a heavy shower was coming up, the sun hid behind the clouds, and loud peals of thunder rang through the air. This startled the children. Lou began to cry and the elder ones picked up their luggage and started home in hot haste. But before they were half way home the rain began to pour down and baby to cry louder than ever.

They at last reached home, weary, frightened, and drenching wet. James caught a hard cold, and his mother gave him home-made medicins. But he grew worse, and lay sick a long while, and his parents had a heavy doctor's bill to pay.

Now, my little readers, you hav read this story. Do not go off to play and get caught in a shower, as these thoughtless children did.

S. A. C.

Self-Control.

To control one's self—to hold in check the passions, the appetites, the desires—is what every person should aspire to. Every boy and girl should strive for this mastery, for if you do not control yourself somebody else will. Or some habit, some appetite, will get the better of you, and no tyrant is half so exacting and cruel as a bad appetite—an impure passion. To be a king over one's self, to be the master of the temple in which you liv—your human body—to rule the back brain, is to attain power over a great kingdom. Strive for that end. S. H. W.

A Frost Picture.

Winter, the wizard, was gruff and grim;
He saw how the little ones frowned on him.
"Do they think," he cried, "that the flowers are dead
Just because they are sent to bed?"

And he blustered and blew with much ado
To find how little the children knew;
But in the night with a pencil white
Upon their window a sketch he drew.

Lovely it was in the morning sun;
Who can say just how it was done?
"Ah!" said Daisy, and "Oh!" said Don,
"Here are the flowers with their night clothes on!"

—Youth's Companion.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

Little Randall was pounding vigorously at the door one day and calling his mother to unlock it and let him in. One of the neighbors hearing him, said, "Why, Randall, you are making an awful noise; what if you should break the door down?" "I could get in then," was the reply.

Bobby had slipped back into the dining-room, and was hurriedly discussing a second piece of the apple-pie when his mother came in. "You said I could, ma," he remarked, in answer to her reproof. "You told me I mustn't go over to Willie Waffle's until I was in apple-pie order, an' a boy can't get in apple-pie order on only one piece."

A small boy was calling the other day on one of his school friends, and fell into conversation with the mother of the latter. He was led to remark it was getting very hard to tell, from the places in which people liv, whether they are entitled to social consideration or not. "Now, there is Blank street," he said; "you wouldn't think anybody that livs on Blank street much, would you? But there's Mr. T., he livs there." "And is Mr. T. much?" she asked, not unwilling to draw him out. "Mr. T.," he repeated with the air of one who is overwhelmed with astonishment that so obvious a fact should hav escaped the knowledge of anybody. "I should think he was! He's an awful swell. Why, he won't speak to my father."

An Anecdote of Chief-Justice Fuller.

A reminiscence of the doings of a lyceum which flourished in Oldtown, near Bangor, Me., forty years ago, brings out an interesting incident in the career of one of the foremost public men of to-day. All the doctors, lawyers, and ministers of the town belonged to the lyceum, and they were present in force one evening to hear the question of capital punishment discussed. During the evening a boy who had been a regular attendant at the meetings of the lyceum replied to Deacon Rigby upon the question. The deacon was for hanging and the boy opposed him. The deacon quoted from the Mosaic law: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man his blood shall be shed," and, assuming this settled the matter, he harped upon the point until his time had expired. Then the boy got up and said:

"Supposing we take the law which the gentleman has quoted, and which, in a philosophic sense, has been abrogated as null and void since the birth of our savior, and see what the logical deduction would come to. For example, one man kills another, another man kills him, and so on till we come to the last man on earth. Who's going to kill him? He dare not suicide, for that same law forbids it. Now, deacon, what are you going to do with that last man?"

The deacon couldn't tell and the boy got lots of applause. His name was Melville W. Fuller, and he is now chief-justice of the United States.

Cosy Chats with Correspondents.

Geo. J. R.—We place you among our ablest and best young friends and writers. Yours next week.

Wm. Scott.—We hav not forgotten you. Glad you are still in the poetic mood and that you kindly remember the Corner.

Cora Anthony.—We cannot tell. Coming events may cast their shadows before sometimes, but the great future is a sealed book, made bright by pictures of anticipation and hope.

Ellen Adell.—People become more tolerant as they grow wiser. Yes, always defend that which you believe to be right, and study to be able to defend it.

Johnny R.—Good conduct is best of all. We judge persons, not by the position they occupy, not by their standing in a church, but by their actions. A tree is known by its fruit.

Laura Price Stewart.—Your article is most excellent. We are always glad to get a line from you. The public school question is one of the most important of all questions. Upon its wise administration depends the future weal of the country.

Correspondence.

Rockville, Ida., March 28, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I thought I would write a few lines for the Corner. I am eleven years old. I hav three brothers and two sisters. We call the baby Robert Ingersoll. We liv out in the mountains, eight miles from the post-office, and two miles from school. I am, Your Liberal friend,

W. A. Carlton.

Waterloo, Ind., March 31, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I havn't written you for almost a year. We hav a Salvation Army here, and they are having a great time. The captain was in a trance fifty-five minutes. All the trash in town belong to it (the army). Once they had sixty members, and now they hav only twelve. We take The Truth Seeker. I like to look at the pictures, and think they are very funny. I am nine years old. I study in the Second Reader and arithmetic. I hav a little dog, and his name is Colonel. He got into a hole the other day after a woodchuck, and could hardly get out. I guess it is about time to close.

I am still, Your Freethinker friend,

Frankie Saltsman.

Monticello, Ill., March 31, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I thought I would write you a few lines for the first time. I hav written some letters to my little friends, and thought I would write you a letter. My papa takes The Truth Seeker, and likes to read it very much. I like to look at the pictures and read the Children's Corner. I am nine years old, and going to school. I hav no brothers, but hav one sister older than I am. School will be out in April. I liv in town not far from school. I hav a nice large yard to play in. I hav a swing, and it has one seat in each end, and the swing bed is almost like a buggy bed. I got it for a birthday present, and put it under some nice shade trees in the yard. I hope to see this in print.

Your friend, Eva Tatman.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 1, 1889.

My Dear Miss Wixon: I take great pleasure in reading The Truth Seeker. I do not say prayers, for I see no good in doing so. I do not go to church or to Sunday-school.

Ny name is Emanuel Roca Navarro, and I liv at 305 Van Brunt street, Brooklyn.

The number of the school I go to is public school No. 30. I go to school every day, and I study arithmetic, reading, spelling, geography, and grammar.

I am only ten years of age, and I hav two brothers and a little sister. The smallest is a little boy whose name is Joseph. I hav a little sister whose name is Allie, and a very large brother about twelve years old.

As I hav nothing more to say, I will close my letter. So good-bye, dear friend.

Emanuel Roca Navarro.

Denver, Col., March 25, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: We are having a great newspaper debate here at present between the Protestants, the Catholics, and the Liberals. It is on the much-vexed question of church and state—the particular point being the advisibility of Bible-reading in our public schools.

Thinking you may be interested by the arguments brought forth by Joseph Wolff and John R. Kelso, the exponents of the Liberal element in this discussion, I send you the clipping from to-day's paper.

The dean of the Episcopal church, who is not even a citizen of our country, has made some very grave assertions as regards truth and common sense.

I also send a short sketch of "American Literature," thinking it may prove interesting to some of us who can hardly be called children, nor yet "grown-up"—us middle-aged children. Your friend,

Laura Price Stewart.

Brooklyn, April 1, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I take great interest in reading the Children's Corner of the valuable Truth Seeker. My papa has been a constant reader of such papers for about ten years. I hav often thought I should like to see my name in the Corner, so I will now say a few words. I am twelve years old, and attend public school No. 30. I study arithmetic, grammar, geography, history, and a Fourth Reader. I do not attend church or Sunday-school. I think I can be a good and honest boy without going there. I see some boys that attend church and say their prayers yet are the worst boys in the neighborhood. Good-bye. John R. Navarro.

[It is not necessary to go to church and Sunday-school in order to be good and true. Be moral and upright in all your dealings, be kind, generous, and just, be temperate and virtuous, study and practice the right in all things, and do to others as you would like others to do to you, and you cannot fail to grow up manly and noble, a good and respected citizen, and good citizens are greatly needed everywhere.—Ed. C. C.]

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

FAITH OR AGNOSTICISM?

—o—

Two Letters from Dr. Field, D.D., editor of the Presbyterian Evangelist, to Colonel Ingersoll, and two Replies thereto. Dr. Field is one of the exceedingly few Christians who hav opposed Colonel Ingersoll kindly and courteously, and the Great Agnostic has used him accordingly. Dr. Field's arguments, however, are broken in pieces.

THE ONLY AUTHORIZED EDITION.

Price, 50 cents in paper; $1.00 in cloth.

JUST PUBLISHED!

THE
Cosmian Hymn Book.

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Antiquity of Christianity.

By JOHN ALBERGER, Author of "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues."

Paper, 12mo, 61pp., 25 cents.

Contains testimonies of the early Christian Fathers and others, and cases of striking similarity to Christianity in many ancient religions.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

AN OUTLINE OF THE
French Revolution
ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

By W. S. BELL.

Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Advancement of Science

By PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Portrait, Biographical Sketch, and Articles on Prayer.

Paper, 12mo, 105 pp., 25c.; cloth, 50c.

It is in many respects one of the most extraordinary utterances of our time.—N. Y. Tribune.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
ohn Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade. 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	28
James Parton,	32
Helen H. Gardener,	33
S. P. Putnam,	36
Charles Watts,	37
E. A. Stevens, Sec. A. S. U.	41
Parker Pillsbury,	42
Robert C. Adams,	44
J. D. Shaw,	46
F. M. Holland,	47
E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D.,	50
Lucy N. Colman,	51
J. H. Burnham,	53
L. K. Washburn,	63
Ella Gibson,	64
Susan H. Wixon,	67
John Peck,	71
W. S. Bell,	78
E. C. Walker,	80
Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	84
Dr. Juliet H. Severance,	87
Mrs. E. D. Slenker,	89
Col. J. R. Kelso,	91
G. H. Dawes,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist.
BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."
Price, - - Paper, 25 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

LIBERALS SUPPLIED
With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GODS AND RELIGIONS
OF
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t28 Shakers P. O, N.Y

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM
By DR. FREDERIC R. MARVIN, Professor of Physiological Medicin and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Paper, 12mo, 68pp., cloth, 50 cents.

His analysis of nerveus and mental phenomena is sharply scientific; his pathological theories are rational, clear, and modern.—Medical Review.

His language is strong and well chosen, his style admirable in its directness and brilliancy, his thought clear and logical.—Liberal Christian.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

FATHER, SON & HOLY GHOST.
By T. E. LONGSHORE.

5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen; $1 for 25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

DR. FELLOWS
STARKEHOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

New Publications.

Henry McKinney, Great Bend, Pa., is one of those Christians who hav discovered, what is a fact, that the true Sabbath commanded by the Bible is Saturday, not Sunday. His book, "No Sunday in the Bible," he sells at 10 cents.

"Sketches of the Scientific Dispensation of a New Religion" presents in small compass the main aspects of the work of science, now going on, in supplanting religion. It is clearly and correctly written. The author is Singleton W. Davis, 916 3d st., San Diego, Cal. Price, 20 cents.

The agitation spreading in the labor ranks against the class of laws under certain of which the Chicago Anarchists were held guilty, finds expression in No. 10 of the New York Labor Library. The book is entitled, "Immoral and Unconstitutional: Our Accessoryship Laws." Price, 10 cents.

THE BIBLE INQUIRER.

OAK MILLS, KAN., Jan. 25, 1889.

MR. ANDREW JACOBSON, Dear Sir: I hav been acquainted with "The Bible Inquirer" for several years, and consider it one of the best little books for propagandist work that we hav. Your latest edition is a great improvement upon former ones.

Yours truly, J. E. REMSBURG.

REVERE, MASS., Jan. 25, 1889

MR. ANDREW JACOBSON, My Dear Sir: I write you to say that I hav just read your pamphlet entitled, "The Bible Inquirer," and that I regard it as a valuable contribution to the library of Freethought. No more complete refutation of the Christian claim that the Bible is a work of divine inspiration could well be made.

The candid mind, after a perusal of your pamphlet, can never again look upon the Bible as the "word of God." This work should be circulated among Christians—among those who still believe in "inspiration." There is no answer to your propositions; they are witnesses that cannot be forsworn. You hav done a service to the cause of truth, to the cause of humanity, and to the cause of Liberalism, by preparing and publishing this pamphlet, and I sincerely hope that you will reap the reward of your labor. You deserve the patronage of the Liberal public. Yours very truly,

L. K. WASHBURN.

TROPICAL AFRICA. By Henry Drummond, LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.G.S. New York: The Humboldt Publishing Company. Price, 15 cents.

A timely publication is the book with the above title, issued by the Humboldt Publishing Company. It is a work of interest, giving an account of the author's experiences and observations in a trip through some of the most mysterious portions of the continent which is now attracting so largely the attention of the public. It is racily written, and the author is both graphic in his descriptiv passages and witty in his observations. The interior life of the country, where civilization has just begun to wrestle with barbarism, is laid open. The number is 104 of the Humboldt Library publications.

THE PSYCHIC LIFE OF MICRO-ORGANISMS: A STUDY IN EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY. By Alfred Binet. Translated from the French. Chicago, 1889: The Open Court Publishing Company. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

M. Binet's researches and conclusions show "that psychological phenomena begin among the very lowest classes of beings; they are met with in every form of life from the simplest cell to the most complicated organism." The author contests the theory of the distinguished English scientist, Prof. George F. Romanes, who assigns the first appearance of the various psychical and mental faculties to different stages or periods in the scale of zoological development. Thus while Christians in stagnation and impotence are repeating parrot-like their guesses of old barbarians about life, mind, and matter, accomplished scientists are pressing forward in their discoveries, and are now establishing that the simplest cell of living matter possesses mind.

Ex-Mayor Beckwith of Dowagiac, Mich., not long ago established in connection with the Round Oak Stove Works, of which he was the founder, a hall to be called the Round Oak Hall. At the opening of the hall an address was delivered by Harvey Hersey on "Iron as an Element in Civilization." The address marks that tendency growing of late to recognize the real causes of our civilization. A Christian knows as much about what caused it as a cat. Ask one and he will deliver himself, mechanically and brainlessly, of a lot of stuff that he has been taught to repeat by the church, about "Christianity," "grace," etc. The real causes are in the larger part material ones—inventions in the practical arts by which knowledge has been spread through the cheap production of books, and by which facilities for locomotion and intercommunication hav obliterated national and local barriers and with them the ignorance and bigotry that they produced. But the Christian knows nothing of all this. He is absolutely incapable of assigning to one social phenomenon its true cause. He is as helpless and "feebly impotent and vain" here in this world as a child in a midnight wood; everything that is done has to be done by us of sense and science and Rationalism, and through it all we hav to drag forward the cringing, fear-struck, ignorant product of the church. This searching out of the material factors of our civilization, and establishing of them clearly before the eyes of all men as the true and only ones, is a labor to which we direct the attention of every Freethinker. On the cover of "Iron as an Element in Civilization" is the motto, "Labor and amusement," under the pictures of the two pagan goddesses tutelary to those two activities. Nothing Christian—no figure praying or killing, cringing or torturing. Good; and if we are to hav any gods let those two pagan ones be the two adopted; let us Work and Play, and do nothing else, and in our work we shall find how to obtain those conditions that shall bring about lasting happiness to all mankind.

Theosophy, a system of mysticism growing lately, too akin to Christian mysticism to meet favor with us, has come up in turn to take a view of that enigmatical mytho-historical personage called Christ, and giv its interpretation of him. Most systems of thought and most thinkers hav had some new interpretation of him; a few of the opinions are as follows:

Kant regarded him as the ideal of human perfection; John Stuart Mill, as a very extraordinary man; Lord Amberley, as an "iconoclastic idealist;" Fichte, as the first teacher who revealed the unity of Man with the supreme spirit; Hegel, as an incarnation of the Logos; Schelling, as a kind of Avatar, i. e., one of the periodical descents of divinity; Dr. Keim, as a mysterious man, whose glorified spirit inspired his disciples to attempt the reformation of the world; Strauss looks upon him as a moral reformer, who occasionally stooped to imposture to secure the confidence of his adherents; Renan, as an effeminate idealist, an impostor who performed "bogus phenomena;" Schleiermacher, as a man in whom self-consciousness was so saturated with the divine principle, that he really became a god incarnate; Anatole Bembe, as a modern Anarchist and Socialist of the most fiery kind; and Gerald Massey, who bases his opinions upon historical researches, finds that Jehoshua Ben-Pandira was born some one hundred and twenty years before the Christian era, and that the typical Christ of the gospels was made up from the features of various gods.

The Theosophical work from which the above is quoted is entitled, "The Life of Jehoshua [Jesus] the Prophet of Nazareth: An Occult Study and a Key to the Bible." The author is Franz Hartmann, M.D., author of "Magic," "Secret Symbols of the Rosicrucians," etc. The publishers are "the Occult Publishing Co., importers and publishers of works treating on Occultism, Theosophy, Spiritualism, Astrology, Mesmerism, and kindred subjects." We don't like occult things. Occult processes—the spiritual exaltations, the wild mystic ecstasies, of all the rapt enthusiasts and visionaries of all the centuries, hav never revealed a single truth that could be demonstrated or done a thing toward making man better, wiser, or happier. The price of the book is $2.

We commend to all wishing to study science and evolution the monthly numbers of the Modern Science Essayist, each of which contains a complete short treatis upon some department of science as developed under the application of evolution. The titles of the first sixteen numbers are: Herbert Spencer, Charles Robert Darwin, Solar and Planetary Evolution, Evolution of the Earth, Evolution of Vegetal Life, Evolution of Animal Life, The Descent of Man, Evolution of Mind, The Growth of Language, Evolution of Society, Evolution of Theology, Evolution of Morals, Proofs of Evolution, Evolution as Related to Religious Thought, The Philosophy of Evolution, The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. The number on Herbert Spencer will suit those who find gratification in contemplating the grand work, silent but far-reaching and tremendous, that the books of this philosopher are accomplishing all over the globe. While Darwin's name usually accompanies mention of evolution, Spencer was the original discoverer of that principle. Spencer's "Psychology," exhibiting evolution as it stands to-day, was published in 1857; Darwin's "Origin of Species" in 1859. And while Darwin's work was special and limited, dealing with little more than the development of higher from lower organisms, by Natural Selection, after life was once started, Spencer applies evolution to every department within the range of human thought—the creation of the earth, the origin of life, and morals, manners, customs, and government. This, his great work, embodied in the several volumes of his "Synthetic Philosophy," is the foundation upon which is now silently rising in the minds of scholars and thinkers that system of knowledge and guidance which shall magnificently answer the question, "What hav you Freethinkers done to build up?" Mr. Spencer's life, says the author, is simply "the uneventful existence of a student who saw what was in him to do, planned his course, and followed it steadily to the exclusion of everything else. The history of his personal life may be told in a paragraph; but who shall write the history of his books? Who can measure the influence they hav already exercised upon human thought and action, and who will venture to predict the limit of their power?" It is sad to think that this great mind must soon be arrested in its beneficent labors. The author says:

It was in February, 1886, that I last saw Mr. Spencer. He had perceptibly aged, and appeared feeble. I did not tarry long, for I fancied conversation wearied him. As he took my hand at parting, he said, mournfully, "Tell Youmans you hav seen me, that I hav not much strength left, and I shall never see him again." What he had in mind was his own decease; but Professor Youmans passed on to the great majority before him. Since that day we hav reports of a long illness, from which he has partially recovered. There is small likelihood that the "System of Synthetic Philosophy" will ever be completed, but Mr. Spencer's energy is great and he will work as long as work is possible.

The writer pronounces Spencer greater than the admired Aristotle or Plato, or any other great man of antiquity. He says:

Agassiz, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Wallace, and all the host of them, awaken our gratitude and command our reverence. But though we hav traveled much in these realms of gold,

And many goodly states and kingdoms seen, profounder emotions are stirred when we contemplate Mr. Spencer and his work. We think no longer of the ingenious mechanisms and marvelous adaptations of nature; the wonderful order, the many beauties, the curious things revealed and displayed for our observation and study. Rather, it seems as if barriers were suddenly thrown down, and a vision opened of boundless knowledge and exhaustless being.

The following remarks of this great thinker, made while he was visiting America, will be found of particular significance:

"The American has not, I think, a sufficiently quick sense of his own claims, and, at the same time, as a necessary consequence, not a sufficiently quick sense of the claims of others—for the two traits are organically related. I observe that you tolerate various small interferences and dictations which Englishmen are prone to resist. I am told that the English are remarked on for their tendency to grumble in such cases; and I hav no doubt it is true."

"Do you think it worth while," asks the interviewer, "for people to make themselvs disagreeable by resenting every trifling aggression? We Americans think it involves too much loss of time and temper, and doesn't pay."

"Exactly," replies Mr. Spencer, "that is what I mean by character. It is this easy-going readiness to permit small trespasses, because it would be troublesome, or profitless, or unpopular to resist, which leads to the habit of acquiescence in wrong and the decay of free institutions."

The Modern Science Essayist is 10 cents per number, and may be had of the publishers, the New Ideal Publishing Co., 620 Atlantic ave., Boston, or of this firm.

COME, LET US SING!

The "Cosmian Hymn Book" has come to my hand. It is a well-printed and carefully compiled work, well worthy the high purpose for which it was intended. So conservativ in its respect for the honest opinions of others, there is little or nothing in it that the most orthodox—Buddhist, Christian, or Jew—must be narrower than a razor edge not to be pleased to chant in his church; so radical that one must out-radix a belladonna root not to find in it what will suit his mind to sing.

The book opens with a song for the sad:

While, with ceaseless course, the sun
Hasted through the former year,
Many friends their race hav run,
Never more to meet us here.

Farther on is a gem for the glad:

I would not sing a loud song,
For any crowing crew,
If so, my humble, proud song
Stirs one sweet soul and true;
To lift through tawny labor
To higher planes that win—
My song for every neighbor
Has morning roses in.

Here is a psalm for the religious:

Let love be your religion;
Let justice be your aim;
Let all that's good and noble
Your strict attention claim; etc.

A rhapsody for the sentimentalist:

'Tis love that paints the purple morn,
And bids the clouds in air upborne
Their genial drops distil;
In every vernal beam it glows,
And breathes in every gale that blows,
And glides in every rill.

We hav even an anthem for the Atheist:

Thou, nature, grandest theme of all!
From rolling worlds to flow'ret small,
'Tis one sublime, unending chain
That comes and goes and comes again.

And the Spiritualist may rise and sing:

Hav you heard of the golden city
Mentioned in the legends old,
Everlasting light shines o'er it,
Wondrous tales of it are told?
. . . . . .
It will last and shine transfigured
In the final reign of right,
It will merge into the splendors
Of the city of the light.

From the "Lute of Zion" are taken these lines for a funeral tune:

A gentle quiet reigns around
When nature calls her children home,
And naught disturbs their peace profound
In all the rolling years to come.

A poem of progress for the march of man:

Step forward, dear friends, and keep time with the truth!
Be manly as men in the ardor of youth;
Step forward, not backward, nor ever aside,
At bidding of austere ambition or pride; etc.

A tribute to our fore-mothers:

Women who, when freedom, fettered,
Shook its chains, defiance hurled;
'Twas their hand that lit the beacon,
Theirs the flag of truth unfurled;
Theirs the fingers, swift and skilful,
Spun the flax as white as snow;
Wove the cloth that clothed the armies
Which for freedom struck the blow.

The children of the home hav their canticles:

We hold our lives like lily flowers,
May we be pure as they, and white;
May sunlight shine upon our hours,
And we be sweet in all men's sight;
And when at last our winter nighs,
Oh, may on earth the seeds we strew,
Then from the dust still re-arise
To bloom in other flowers anew.

And there are teachings of temperance, mingled with the chimes of the children, perhaps because it is hard learning old dogs new tricks. It is well that I did not write this warlike stanza, or it might hav blown up THE TRUTH SEEKER bookstore:

There are high massiv forts
Where the enemy is strong,
And we know not yet how we shall enter in;
But the test of battle waits and our hands shall ope the gates
Of the fortresses of wickedness and sin.
Come! oh, come and join our army!
To the temp'rance flag be true!
We will plant it side by side
With the banner of our pride,
With the starry flag of red and white and blue.

Together with hymns of humanity and home, peans of liberty, odes of country, carols of joy, and much more, specimens of all of which would make a book in themselvs.

I will add to this review one composition which does not appear in the "Cosmian Hymn Book" because it arrived too late for the printer:

A HYMN OF HUMANITY.

A hymn of humanity we tend you to-day,
A hymn of reality to cheer the rough way;
A tune of rejoicing as right onward we go,
A tune of hilarity to happiness now.

A hymn of love human sung to sweeten our cares,
A hymn of the heart and the hard burden it bears;
Let catholic brotherhood no evil estrange,
But wide as the world become extended its range.

A hymn of the home, whence social feelings hav flow,
A hymn of the fireside, which in kindness should glow;
Where, in place of prayer-altars, sits charity's seat,
To welcome the friendless, the mourner to greet.

A hymn of our freedom we maintain by our might,
A hymn of our liberty to rob none of right;
And bidding defiance to all tyranny high,
We scorn petty meanness, and jealousy fly.

A hymn of our country, the dear land of our pride,
A hymn to the patriots who liv or hav died;
A nation and people where the priest has no say,
No slave bends the knee, and no vain lord rides the way.

A hymn of true science, not of faith but of fact,
A hymn of great Nature, her laws ever intact;
No myth and no miracles her harmonies jar,
But one evolution from dew-drop to star.

A hymn of toil human, our tasks to relieve,
A hymn of the hands which all our comforts achieve;
Giv honor to labor for it bringeth forth bread,
Provides our apparel and enshelters our head.

The world's aspirations to music we set,
An anthem prophetic of what earth shall beget;
When progress of reason base religion shall ban,
And art be devoted to the glory of man.

Lynn, Mass. JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Deathbed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

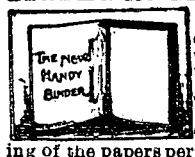
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.—[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257.

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY BURR. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED.

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right.

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

News of the Week.

On the 22d Prohibition was defeated in Massachusetts by a popular vote.

Oklahoma, containing 1,800,000 acres, which in 160-acre tracts will make 11,250 farms, was thrown open on the 22d, and is rapidly filling up.

The pope is ill.

The Danmark's passengers were rescued.

Five Indiana White Caps hav been shot by a man whose house they attacked.

England has sent Sir Julian Pauncefote as minister in place of West.

Constitutional conventions for North and South Dakota are about to be called.

Five Mormon missionaries hav been whipped and expelled from Dale county, Ala.

Felix Adler objects to the centennial military parade, as our nation is a peaceful one.

The czar's second son, George, will visit the Paris exposition, attended by a large squadron.

The czar narrowly escaped death from a plot to dynamite him when at the funeral of General Paukli.

It is said that Stanley will renounce his American citizenship and adhere to Britain, which nation will confer on him high honors.

The trial of Boulanger before the court of the French senate has begun, though he is personally still absent in Belgium.

Large numbers of cats are being shipped to Dakota, where they are wanted to destroy the rats that swarm about grain bins.

The greatest fire of late years took place at New York on the 19th, consuming many grain elevators and connected buildings.

Russell Harrison has been arrested in a suit brought by Ex-Governor Crosby, who asks $100,000 damages for libel; bail in $5,000 given.

Oskaloosa, Kan., has reëlected its female government, and two other cities of the state, Cottonwood Falls and Rossville, hav elected women rulers.

The German government, upon the dissolution of the Reichstag, its main legislativ branch, will prosecute several Socialist members of that body.

The new earl of Carlisle, a strong teetotaler, has closed all the saloons and brew-houses on his property, and emptied out the private stock of his cellar.

The Belgian government has again warned Boulanger that he will not be allowed to use their territory as a place of conspiracy against the French government.

At Bridgeton, N. J., a master-workman of the Knights of Labor has been arrested under the conspiracy law for inciting a strike at the Cumberland Glass Works.

Emperor William has directed the adoption of gorgeous court and military costumes. The court dress comprises knee breeches, buckle shoes, and three-cornered hat.

Postmaster Pearson is dead. It is said by his friends that he died from overwork in the public service; but, while he was hard-working, it would be more exactly true to giv as the cause hemorrhage of the stomach, caused by a tumor.

Sylvester Grubb, hanged at Vincennes, Ind., for murder of a girl, passed his last hours in receiving religious consolations from Rev. Mr. Ruth. Malachi Allen and James Mills were hanged at Fort Smith, Ark. Mills prudently joined the Catholic church several weeks before execution; Allen sent for a Methodist preacher an hour before hanging, and requested baptism.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

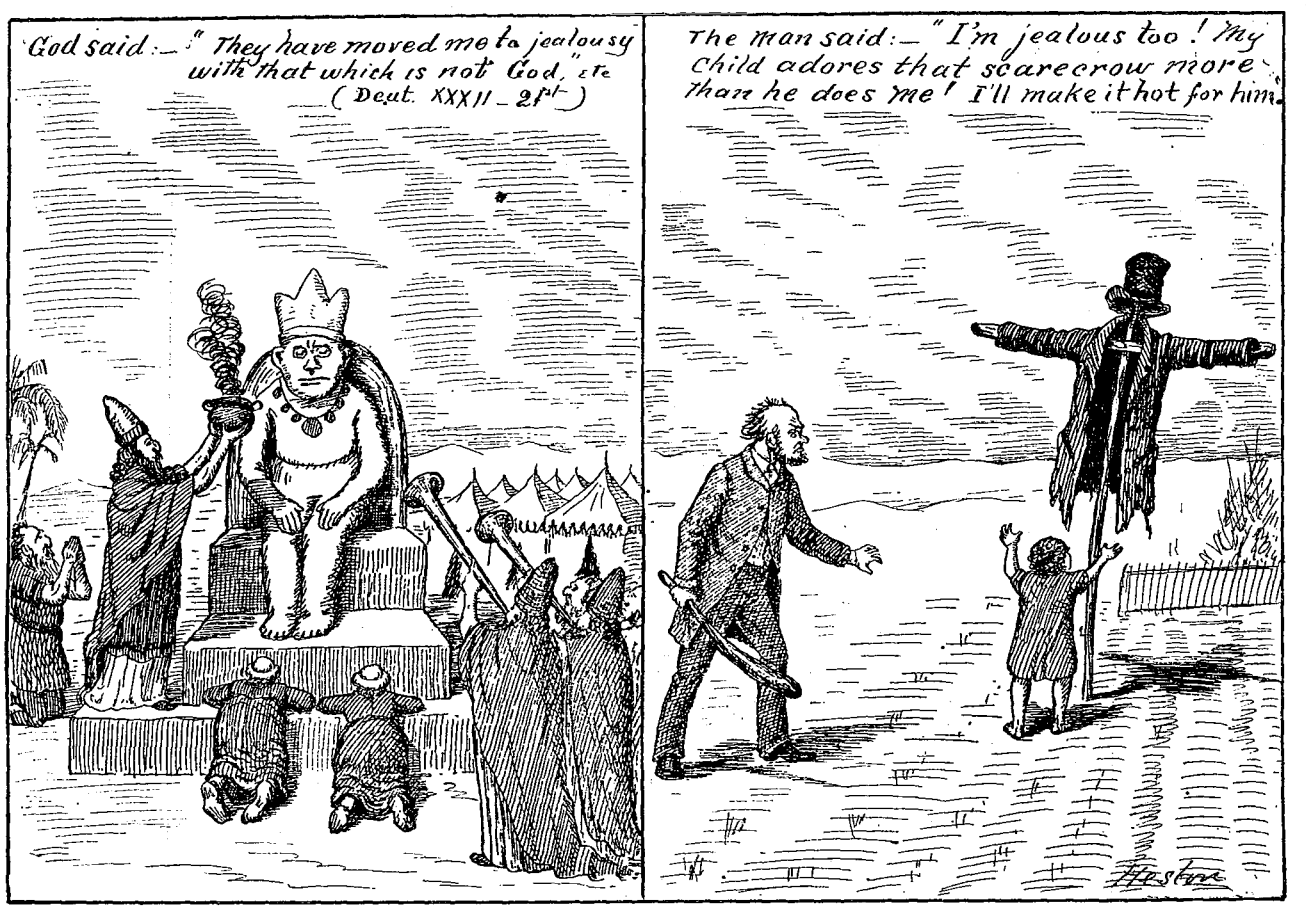
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN

GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.

On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.

CONTENTS:

I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis: A Plea for a Fair Trial By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.



This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Gems of Thought.

From the remnants from his pen which he has graciously vouchsafed to us, we cannot claim for Jehovahjireth commanding talent as a writer. How could he be a writer? The god or man who would write well must know much of the world and much of books. To get a few paces abreast of his fellows, he must hav unconquerable self-respect and immaculate purity of moral aim and aspiration. He must hav the bone and the sinew to work while others rest, to toil while others sleep, the self-consciousness of talent or even genius based upon an indomitable will, a tireless energy, and a lofty but tender humanity. He may make himself sociable; but he has no time to be frivolous. Now, if these be the characteristics of a writer born to lead the straggling files of human opinion, it must be admitted that Jehovah had few or none of them, unless his biographer, the Ghost, has done him grievous injustice. He is jealous, ignorant, and narrow, and quite lacking in that literary turn of the wrist, unteachable, untaught, which distinguishes him who, by an inexorable law of heredity, was born a writer from him who was made a writer, on the principle that you can not make a silken purse out of a sow's ear. And, then, as to frivolity, Jehovah was an incorrigible trifler. He occupied much of his time with patterns for tents and toggery for priests, with fringes and candlesticks and snuffers and tongs. He also turned his attention in the Eugene Rimmel direction, and manufactured a certain kind of holy hair-oil (Exodus xxx, passim), and threatened to put to death anyone who would make a perfume to smell like it—his way of taking out a patent. This is not the sort of trifling in which he who would be a writer can afford to indulge.—Saladin's God and His Book.

PARALLEL CASES.

Can we believe that the real God, if there is one, ever ordered a man to be killed simply for making hair oil, or ointment? We are told in the thirtieth chapter of Exodus, that the Lord commanded Moses to take myrrh, cinnamon, sweet calamus, cassia, and oliv oil, and make a holy ointment for the purpose of anointing the tabernacle, tables, candlesticks, and other utensils, as well as Aaron and his sons; saying, at the same time, that whosoever compounded any like it, or whoever put any of it on a stranger, should be put to death. In the same chapter, the Lord furnishes Moses with a recipe for making a perfume, saying, that whoever should make any which smelled like it, should be cut off from his people. This, to me, sounds so unreasonable that I cannot believe it. Why should an infinit God care whether mankind made ointments and perfumes like his or not? Why should the creator of all things threaten to kill a priest who approached his altar without having washed his hands and feet? These commandments and these penalties would disgrace the vainest tyrant that ever sat, by chance, upon a throne. There must be some mistake. I cannot believe that an infinit intelligence appeared to Moses upon Mount Sinai having with him a variety of patterns for making a tabernacle, tongs, snuffers, and dishes. Neither can I believe that God told Moses how to cut and trim a coat for a priest. Why should a God care about such things? Why should he insist on having buttons sewed in certain rows, and fringes of a certain color?—Ingersoll.

Paine thought the barbarities of the Old Testament inconsistent with what he deemed the real character of God. He believed that murder, massacre, and indiscriminate slaughter had never been commanded by the deity. He regarded much of the Bible as childish, unimportant, and foolish. The scientific world entertains the same opinion.—Ingersoll.

Turn on what side you will, and you will see that preachers hav always encouraged carnage.—Voltaire.

If Jehovah was in fact God, he knew the end from the beginning. He knew that his Bible would be a breastwork behind which tyranny and hypocrisy would crouch; that it would be quoted by tyrants; that it would be the defense of robbers called kings, and of hypocrits called priests.—Ingersoll.

One of the chief arguments in support of Theism is universality of belief in God. We reply: Ignorance is also universal, and the effect of knowledge is always to remove God farther away. Where knowledge ends, God begins; and the more ignorant a man is the nearer he brings God to a connection with present events. The explanation of phenomena by the untaught is, "God did it;" but science finds immediate natural causes, and now has put God away back of the conception of the plan of evolution. The inference is that as God continually recedes before the advance of knowledge, he will reach a vanishing-point.—Robert C. Adams in Pioneer Pith.

We are explaining more every day. We are understanding more every day; consequently your God is growing smaller every day—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

A scarf pin shield that will protect its wearer from entanglement with a girl's hair would be a boon to mankind.—Jeweler's Weekly.

Johnson: "Is there anything new about Anthony Comstock?" Jackson: "Yes; they say now that he actually dreads the approach of night. The bare thought of Eve is too much for him."—Puck.

N. O. Goodbody (coming out of church): "Ah, and what did you think of the 'supply' this morning, Mr. Near?" Mr. N. G. Near: "Supply? Humph! He seemed to me more like an exhaust!"—Puck.

Mrs. de Trop: "I don't think, Mr. de Trop, that your sarcasm, leveled at our decollete ball-dresses, is called for. Your own brother, the captain, takes a much more liberal view of society matters." Mr. de Trop: "Undoubtedly; Captain Bob has just returned from Samoa."—Epoch.

Lionel: "Why do you remain in the ball-room? You are not a guest, sir." Stranger: "I am a detectiv employed to guard Mrs. Van Stump's diamonds." Lionel: "Her diamonds are not worth watching. They are paste!" Stranger: "My presence gives them the appearance of reality."—Chicago Journal.

A young man married a lady whose weight verges closely upon two hundred pounds. During a recent country walk they came to a fence, and it was necessary to climb over. "My dear," said the husband, "shall I help you over the fence?" "Never mind me," was the wise reply, "just hold up the fence."—Pick Me Up.

Courtly gentleman: "May I ask if you were present at the creation?" Elderly maiden (blushing with quick indignation): "Sir? I do not understand what you mean." Courtly gentleman: "Nothing, ma'am, nothing; I simply wished to inquire if you attended the oratorio by the Choral Society, Wednesday."—Lowell Citizen.

Customer: "I tell you I don't want the coat. It's faded and the color don't suit me." Isaacs: "It's vaded and der color don't suit you. Vell take it for seven und a halluf." Customer: "Besides, it's half worn out already." Isaacs: "So much der better, ma shild. If der goat don't suit yer id von't dake you so long to vear it out. Hast du gesehen?"—America.

Teacher: "Can you tell me the population of Wurtemberg?" First scholar: "1,881,506." Teacher: "Very good; still, not quite correct. Does anybody else know?" Second scholar: "1,881,505." Teacher: "That's right!" First scholar: "Why, I know that; but as we got a little sister yesterday, I thought it would make one more."—Fliegende Blatter.

He: "She always goes alone. Won't hav a gentleman attend her anywhere. Her last escort met such a shocking death right before her eyes, you know." She: "I think I remember. He lost his life trying to save her when the theater caught fire, didn't he?" He: "No. He was crushed to death by the ladies at the Easterdudds's Spring Opening."—Munsey's Weekly.

Rosey boy: "Why don't you take a wedding trip, Bloodgood?" Bloodgood: "Well, you see, my wife and I came to the conclusion it wouldn't be much of a novelty, for us. We met first on a steamer on the Atlantic ocean; I proposed in Sweden; was accepted in Russia; obtained her father's permission in England; the marriage settlement was drawn up in this country, and we were married in Algiers."—Once a Week.

"Absalom," called out Mrs. Rambo, in a high-pitched voice, as her husband came lumbering up the stairway at three o'clock A.M., "you hav been getting drunk again! This is the second time since yesterday morning!" "Nanshy," mumbled Mr. Rambo, holding tightly to the balustrade, "you're unzhust, m'love. A man can't giddrunk twice in twenty-four hoursh. I'm—I'm still on the 'riginal drunk, Nanshy!"—Chicago Tribune.

Mabel: "Mother, I hav broken my engagement with Arthur. No woman could be happy with such a brute." Mother: "Horrors! What hav you learned?" Mabel: "Last night I asked him to tack the cover on my work-box, and he hit his finger with the hammer, and, mother, he—said—damn!" Mother: "I see. He danced around the room, and swore a blue streak a yard long, and threw the hammer out of the window, and kicked the work-box to pieces, and called you a gibbering idiot, and——" Mabel: "Why, no, he didn't; he only said damn, and went on tacking." Mother: "What? is that all? Oh, you foolish child! You hav lost an angel."—Philadelphia Record.

It was by chance that I happened to call
And catch Mistress Peg unawares in the hall;
Where, scolding and pouting, as pretty maids do,
She was just pulling on a refractory shoe.

And, oh, how the lace fluttered back to disclose
The highest of heels, the most pointed of toes,
With a smart silken stocking, snug-fitting and trim,
Round the ravishing ankle, seductivly slim!

"From extreme to extreme," says the sage, and the view
Of her exquisit foot in its gay little shoe,
The spark of my passion to flaming so fanned
That I went the next morning and asked for her hand. —M. E. W. in Life.

"In my opinion," said Rev. Mr. Sincrusher to a pretty though pious young woman of his congregation, "the waltz is very, very wicked, indeed." "So I hav always thought," she replied, "and hav never indulged in it." "Yes, yes," he continued, "the waltz whirls its gay kaleidoscope around, bringing hearts so near that they almost beat against each other, mixing the warm breath together, darting the fire of electricity between the meeting fingers, flushing the face and lightening the eyes with a quick language, pulsing every fiber——" "Jerushy, Mr. Sincrusher," she exclaimed, jumping up, "is it anything like that?" "More," he said, solemnly; "much more." "Well, that's enough. I guess I'll go and learn. I never knew before what I was missing."—Washington Critic.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 Cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

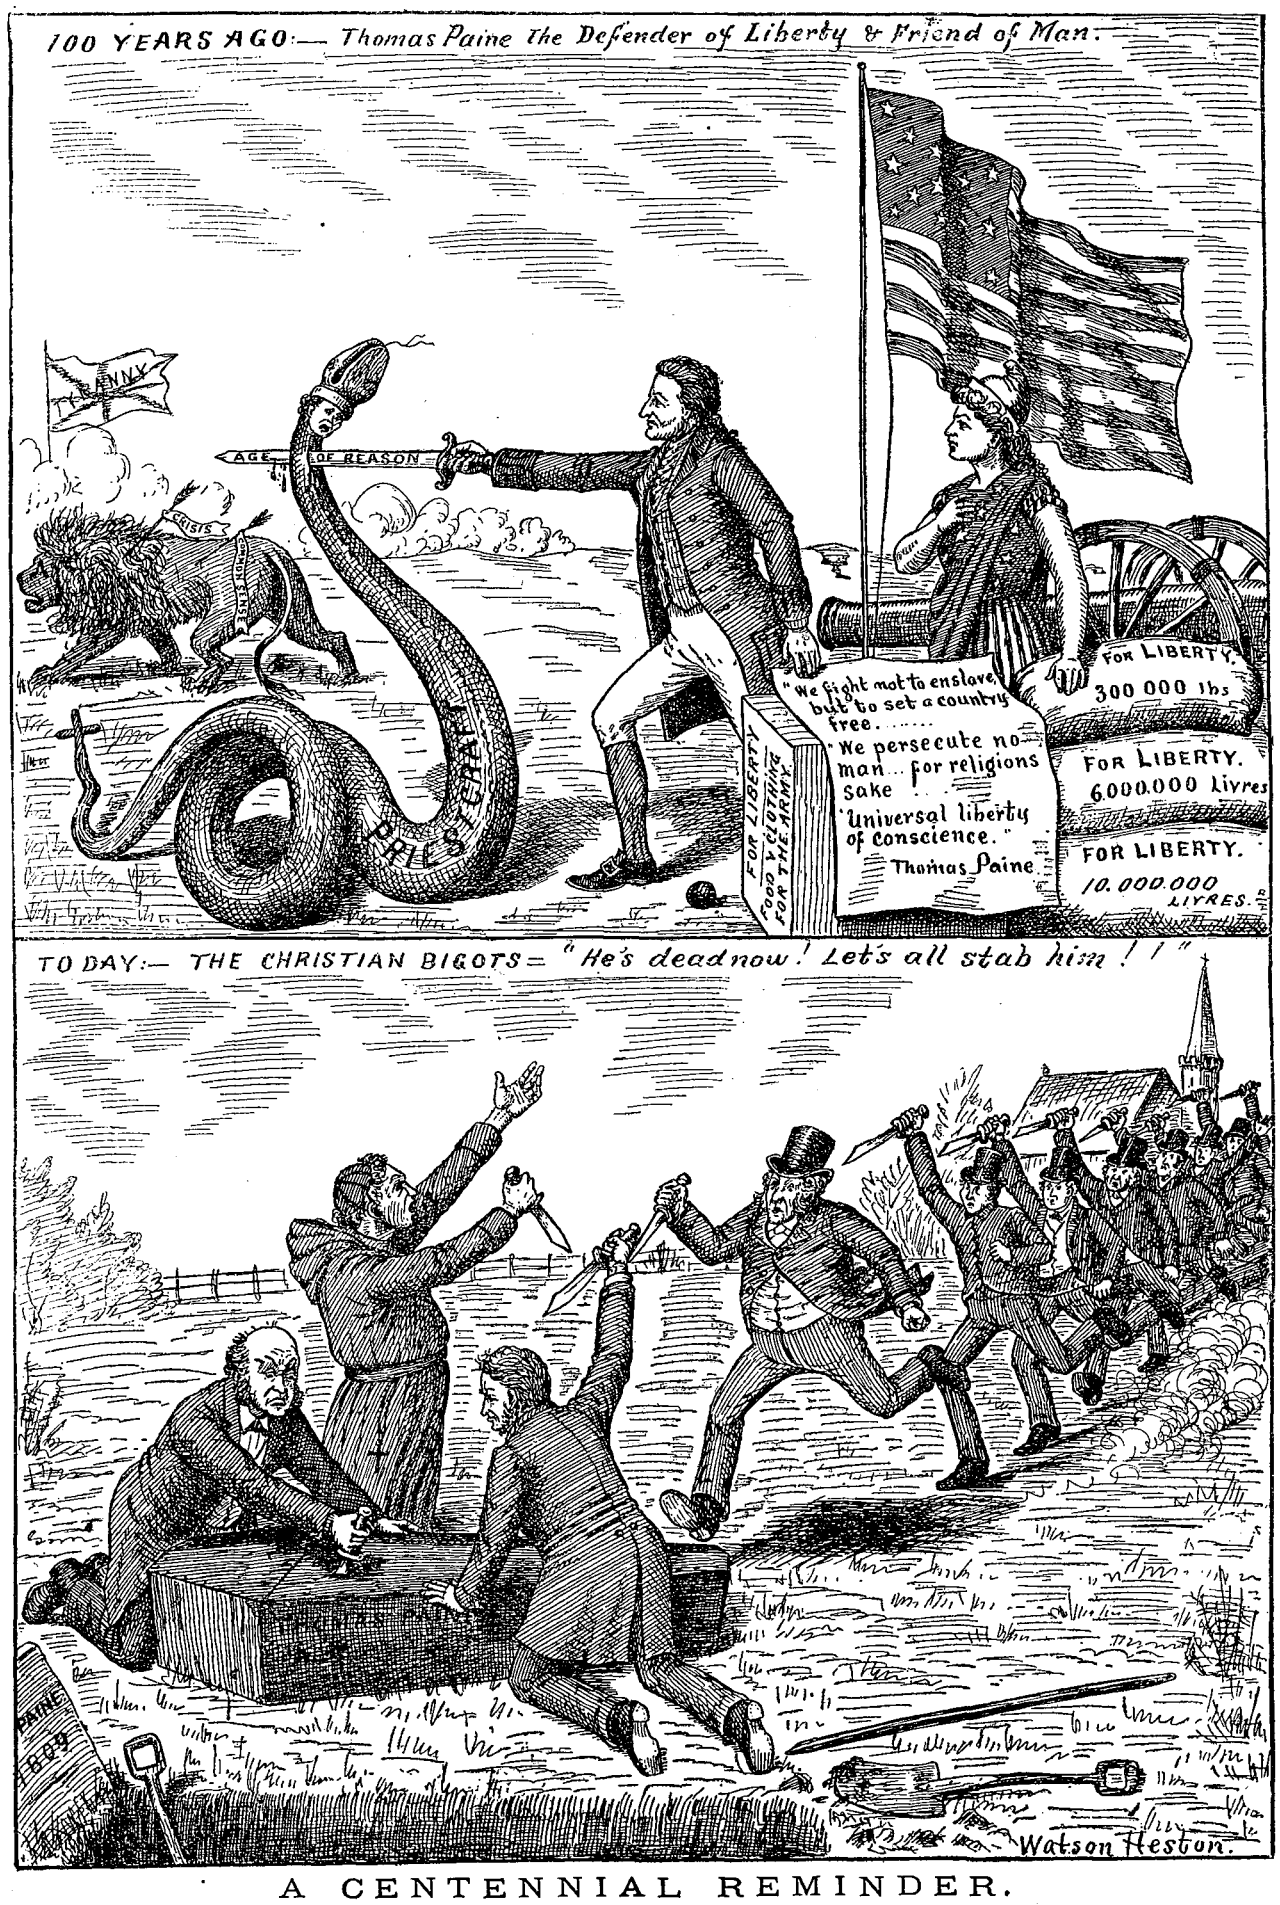
A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 18. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 4, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A CATHOLIC congress assembled in Madrid last week. The pope sent a telegram blessing the congress, which body unanimously adopted a message in reply, declaring that the chief purpose of the congress was to work for the restoration of the temporal power of the pope.



THERE are to be other lands besides those of Oklahoma for claim hunters in the West. In a few days the government commission, headed by General Crook, that has been appointed to negotiate with the Sioux Indians in Dakota for the cession of a portion of their reservation, will be at work. It is a fertil region that will be opened up for settlers by this commission.

THE statistics of divorce in New Hampshire are surprising. It appears that the ratio of divorces to marriages in the Granit state has been larger for some years than in any other state, larger than in Connecticut or California. Within five years fifteen hundred cases of divorce were decreed, or about one divorce to every ten marriages. And yet New Hampshire is one of the most puritanically religious states in the Union!

HERBERT SPENCER has written to a friend in Chicago that he does not think the railroad morals and policy of the United States any worse than those of England. Mr. Spencer has put himself at the head of a railroad reform league in England, as he claims that there has been more corruption by railroads in the House of Commons during the past ten years than has taken place in federal and state legislatures in this country during the entire history of railroads. There are, he says, over one hundred and eighty members of Parliament who are simply the agents of railroads and similar corporations. Most of these are lawyers who owe their election to the influence of the roads they serve. These parliamentary lawyers serve their masters and supporters of new projects, and make no sub-rosa statement of the number of votes they can command in the House, but proclaim it openly.

A FRENCH missionary gives a serious account of the state of slavery in Ecuador. Though it is not a legal institution, yet the law permits an Indian to sell himself as a slave when he is unable to pay his debts, and once a slave he is rarely able to free himself. He may be bequeathed by will. The majority of the interior Indians hav been reduced to this condition.

HUGH O. PENTECOST ought to get acquainted with the Liberals before he writes anything more about them. This is what he says in the last Twentieth Century: "The name Liberal describes a number of persons who are about as illiberal as it is possible for human beings to be. If they had the power, they would persecute Christians as savagely as some Christians would persecute them if they had the power. We dislike the name Liberal because it is assumed by persons who, for the most part, are not liberal." Mr. Pentecost writes this because some one has protested against his excessiv reverential admiration of Jesus Christ. Mr. Pentecost of course is in error, for there are no Liberals who would persecute Christians, and it never has been done. It is, besides, a vicious slap in the face of his friends, for he derives the chief part of his support from Liberals. But if he goes on patting Dr. Hall on the back and hitting Liberals under the ear, we are afraid that his labors for free trade and the single tax will be somewhat restricted among the Infidels of the country.

A CENTENNIAL REMINDER.

IF ever man was metaphorically and indignantly jumped on by his fellows and told in actions rather than words that he was unfit to associate with them, that man is Anthony Comstock, the agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, exclaims the Brooklyn Eagle. For years Comstock has been knocking at the doors of society in New Jersey, New York, and Brooklyn, in the off hours he has taken from expeditions into circles so depraved that the things discovered by him there could not possibly make their owners worse if left with them, and only serve when discovered to needlessly enlighten innocent minds that such things are in existence. It has long been Comstock's ambition to become a Free and Accepted Mason, but the Masons hav not been free in accepting him. Two weeks ago Comstock prevailed on Harry W. Knight, of the Methodist Book Concern, to propose him for membership in U. S. Grant Post, G.A.R., this city. Comstock served in the Seventeenth Connecticut regiment, but of his record as a soldier not much is known in Brooklyn. Nothing much was said of Comstock's proposa for membership at the time, but privately, since his record has been thor oughly canvassed by the members of Grant Post and at their meeting in the Johnston Building, in Flatbush avenue, at which nearly two hundred members were in attendance on the 23d ult., there was an ava lanche of black balls such as no man in any society probably ever received.

THE latest attempt of the Catholic Protectory to get a share of the public school fund has brought to light the fact that in round numbers $100,000 of this fund was divided last year among a dozen or more private institutions, including the Protestant Half-Orphan Asylum, the Methodist Home Missionary School, the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, and the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum. No wonder, comments the Standard, the Protectory is so persistent in its efforts to get something out of the fund for itself. But it would be a great deal more honest on the part of its managers if, instead of trying to get some of the fund, they tried to prevent its diversion to any private institution whatever. To take any part of this fund, raised as it is for a distinct purpose, and apply it as it appears $100,000 was applied last year, is essentially as dishonest an act as it would be to take it for the purpose of opening a private bank account.

THE czar of Russia has issued an edict forbidding members of his family to contrac morganatic marriages. Hereafter they mus take their matrimony straight.

A RUMOR reaches the Dramatic Mirror from over the Brooklyn bridge, that a certain well-known athletic divine of the Delsarte school is to preach from a revolving stage next season, and that the auditorium pews are to be fitted up with drop-a-nickel-in-the-slot-for-the-heathen-and-take-out-a-hymn-book machines

Agnosticism: A Rejoinder.

From the Nineteenth Century.

The concluding paragraph of the bishop of Peterborough's reply to the appeal which I addressed to him in the penultimate number of this review, leads me to think that he has seen a personal reference where none was intended. I had ventured to suggest that the demand that a man should call himself an Infidel, savored very much of the flavor of a "bull;" and, even had the right reverend prelate been as stolid an Englishman as I am, I should hav entertained the hope that the oddity of talking of the cowardice of persons who object to call themselvs by a nick-name, which must, in their eyes, be as inappropriate as, in the intention of the users, it is offensiv, would hav struck him. But, to my surprise, the bishop has not even yet got sight of that absurdity. He thinks that if I accept Dr. Wace's definition of his much-loved epithet, I am logically bound not only to adopt the titles of Infidel and miscreant, but that I shall "even glory in those titles." As I hav shown, "Infidel" merely means somebody who does not believe what you believe yourself, and therefore Dr. Wace has a perfect right to call, say, my old Egyptian donkey-driver, Nooleh, and myself, Infidels, just as Nooleh and I hav a right to call him an Infidel. The ludicrous aspect of the thing comes in only when either of us demands that the two others should so label themselvs. It is a terrible business to hav to explain a mild jest, and I pledge myself not to run the risk of offending in this way again. I see how wrong I was in trusting to the bishop's sense of the ludicrous, and I beg leave unreservedly to withdraw my misplaced confidence. And I take this course the more readily as there is something about which I am obliged again to trouble the bishop of Peterborough, which is certainly no jesting matter. Referring to my question, the bishop says that if they (the terms "Infidel" and "miscreant") should not be so proved to be applicable, then I should hold it to be as unreasonable to expect him to call himself by such names as he, I suppose, would hold it to be to expect us Christians to admit, without better reason than he has yet given us, that Christianity is "the sorry stuff" which, with his "profoundly" moral readiness to say "unpleasant" things, he is pleased to say that it is (p. 370).

According to those "English modes of thought and expression," of which the bishop seems to hav but a poor opinion, this is a deliberate assertion that I hav said that Christianity is "sorry stuff." And, according to the same standard of fair dealing, it is, I think, absolutely necessary for the bishop of Peterborough to produce the evidence on which this positiv statement is based. I shall be unfeignedly surprised if he is successful in proving it; but it is proper for me to wait and see.

Those who passed from Dr. Wace's article in the last number of this review to the anticipatory confutation of it which followed in "The New Reformation," must hav enjoyed the pleasure of a dramatic surprise—just as when the fifth act of a new play proves unexpectedly bright and interesting. Mrs. Ward will, I hope, pardon the comparison, if I say that her effectiv clearing away of antiquated incumbrances from the lists of the controversy, reminds me of nothing so much as of the action of some neat-handed, but strong-wristed, Phyllis, who, gracefully wielding her long-handled "Turk's head," sweeps away the accumulated results of the toil of generations of spiders. I am the more indebted to this luminous sketch of the results of critical investigation, as it is carried out among those theologians who are men of science and not mere counsel for creeds, since it has relieved me from the necessity of dealing with the greater part of Dr. Wace's polemic and enables me to devote more space to the really important issues which hav been raised.*

Perhaps, however, it may be well for me to observe that approbation of the manner in which a great biblical scholar, for instance, Reuss, does his work does not commit me to the adoption of all, or indeed of any of his views; and, further, that the disagreements of a series of investigators do not in any way interfere with the fact that each of them has made important contributions to the body of truth ultimately established. If I cite Buffon, Linnæus, Lamarck, and Cuvier, as having each and all taken a leading share in building up modern biology, the statement that every one of these great naturalists disagreed with, and even more or less contradicted, all the rest is quite true; but the supposition that the latter assertion is in any way inconsistent with the former, would betray a strange ignorance of the manner in which all true science advances.

Dr. Wace takes a great deal of trouble to make it appear that I hav desired to evade the real questions raised by his attack upon me at the church congress. I assure the reverend principal that in this, as in some other respects, he has entertained a very erroneous conception of my intentions. Things would assume more accurate proportions in Dr. Wace's mind if he would kindly remember that it is just thirty years since ecclesiastical thunderbolts began to fly about my ears. I hav had the "Lion and the Bear" to deal with, and it is long since I got quite used to the threatenings of episcopal Goliaths, whose croziers were like unto a weaver's beam. So that I almost think I might not hav noticed Dr. Wace's attack, personal as it was; and although, as he is good enough to tell us, separate copies are to be had for the modest equivalent of twopence, as a matter of fact, it did not come under my notice for a long time after it was made. May I further venture to point out that (reckoning postage) the expenditure of twopence-halfpenny, or, at the most, threepence, would hav enabled Dr. Wace so far to comply with ordinary conventions as to direct my attention to the fact that he had attacked me before a meeting at which I was not present? I really am not responsible for the five months' neglect of which Dr. Wace complains. Singularly enough, the Englishry who swarmed about the Engadine, during the three months that I was being brought back to life by the glorious air and perfect comfort of the Maloja, did not, in my hearing, say anything about the important events which had taken place at the church congress; and I think I can venture to affirm that there was not a single copy of Dr. Wace's pamphlet in any of the hotel libraries which I rummaged in search of something more edifying than dull English or questionable French novels.

And now, having, as I hope, set myself right with the public as regards the sins of commission and omission with which I hav been charged, I feel free to deal with matters to which time and type may be more profitably devoted.

The bishop of Peterborough indulges in the anticipation that Dr. Wace will succeed in showing me "that a scientist dealing with questions of theology or biblical criticism may go quite as far astray as theologians often do in dealing with questions of science" (p. 371). I hav already admitted that vatication is not in my line; and I cannot so much as hazard a guess whether the spirit of prophecy which has descended on the bishop comes from the one, or the other, of the two possible sources recognized by the highest authorities. But I think it desirable to warn those who may be misled by phraseology of this kind, that the antagonists in the present debate are not quite rightly represented by it. Undoubtedly, Dr. Wace is a theologian; and I should be the last person to question that his whole cast of thought and style of argumentation are preëminently and typically theological. And, if I must accept the hideous term "scientist" (to which I object even more than I do to "Infidel"), I am ready to admit that I am one of the people so denoted.

But I hope and believe that there is not a solitary argument I hav used, or that I am about to use, which is original, or has anything to do with the fact that I hav been chiefly occupied with natural science. They are all, facts and reasoning alike, either identical with, or consequential upon, propositions which are to be found in the works of scholars and theologians of the highest repute in the only two countries, Holland and Germany,* in which, at the present time, professors of theology are to be found, whose tenure of their posts does not depend upon the results to which their inquiries lead them.†

It is true that, to the best of my ability, I hav satisfied myself of the soundness of the foundations on which my arguments are built, and I desire to be held fully responsible for everything I say. But, nevertheless, my position is really no more than that of an expositor; and my justification for undertaking it is simply that conviction of the supremacy of private judgment (indeed, of the impossibility of escaping it) which is the foundation of the Protestant Reformation, and which was the doctrin accepted by the vast majority of the Anglicans of my youth, before that backsliding toward the "beggarly rudiments" of an effete and idolatrous sacerdotalism which has, even now, provided us with the saddest spectacle which has been offered to the eyes of Englishmen in this generation. A high court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, with a host of great lawyers in battle array, is and, for heaven knows how long, will be occupied with these very questions of "washings of cups and pots and brazen vessels," which the master, whose professed representativs are rending the church over those squabbles, had in his mind when, as we are told, he uttered the scathing rebuke:

> Well did Isaiah prophesy of you hypocrits, as it is written:
> This people honoreth me with their lips,
> But their heart is far from me:
> But in vain do they worship me,
> Teaching as their doctrins the precepts of men
> (Mark vii, 6–7).

Men who can be absorbed in bickerings over miserable disputes of this kind can hav but little sympathy with the old evangelical doctrin of the "open Bible," or anything but a grave misgiving of the results of diligent reading of the Bible, without the help of ecclesiastical spectacles, by the mass of the people. Greatly to the surprise of many of my friends, I hav always advocated the reading of the Bible, and the diffusion of the study of that most remarkable collection of books among the people. Its teachings are so infinitly superior to those of the sects, who are just as busy now as the Pharisees were eighteen hundred years ago, in smothering them under "the precepts of men;" it is so certain, to my mind, that the Bible contains within itself the refutation of nine-tenths of the mixture of sophistical metaphysics and old-world superstition which has been piled round it by the so-called Christians of later times; it is so clear that the only immediate and ready antidote to the poison which has been mixed with Christianity, to the intoxication and delusion of mankind, lies in copious draughts from the undefiled spring, that I exercise the right and duty of free judgment on the part of every man, mainly for the purpose of inducing other laymen to follow my example. If the New Testament is translated into Zulu by Protestant missionaries, it must be assumed that a Zulu convert is competent to draw from its contents all the truths which it is necessary for him to believe. I trust that I may, without immodesty, claim to be put on the same footing as the Zulu.

The most constant reproach which is launched against persons of my way of thinking is, that it is all very well for us to talk about the deductions of scientific thought, but what are the poor and the uneducated to do? Has it ever occurred to those who talk in this fashion that the creeds and articles of their several confessions; their determination of the exact nature and extent of the teachings of Jesus; their expositions of the real meaning of that which is written in the epistles (to leave aside all questions concerning the Old Testament), are nothing more than deductions, which, at any rate, profess to be the result of strictly scientific thinking, and which are not worth attending to unless they really possess that character? If it is not historically true that such and such things happened in Palestine eighteen centuries ago, what becomes of Christianity? And what is historical truth but that of which the evidence bears strict scientific investigation? I do not call to mind any problem of natural science which has come under my notice, which is more difficult, or more curiously interesting as a mere problem, than that of the origin of the synoptic gospels and that of the historical value of the narrativs which they contain. The Christianity of the churches stands or falls by the results of the purely scientific investigation of these questions. They were first taken up in a purely scientific spirit just about a century ago; they hav been studied, over and over again, by men of vast knowledge and critical acumen; but he would be a rash man who should assert that any solution of these problems, as yet formulated, is exhaustiv. The most that can be said is that certain prevalent solutions are certainly false, while others are more or less probably true.

If I am doing my best to rouse my countrymen out of their dogmatic slumbers, it is not that they may be amused by seeing who gets the best of it, in a contest between a "scientist" and a theologian. The serious question is whether theological men of science, or theological special pleaders, are to hav the confidence of the general public; it is the question whether a country in which it is possible for a body of excellent clerical and lay gentlemen to discuss, in public meeting assembled, how much it is desirable to let the congregations of the faithful know of the results of biblical criticism, is likely to wake up with anything short of the grasp of a rough lay hand upon its shoulder; it is the question whether the New Testament books, being as I believe they were, written and compiled by people who, according to their lights, were perfectly sincere, will not, when properly studied as ordinary historical documents, afford us the means of self-criticism. And it must be remembered that the New Testament books are not responsible for the doctrin invented by the churches that they are anything but ordinary historical documents. The author of the third gospel tells us as straightforwardly as a man can that he has no claim to any other character than that of an ordinary compiler and editor, who had before him the works of many and variously qualified predecessors.

In my former papers, according to Dr. Wace, I hav evaded giving an answer to his main proposition, which he states as follows:

---

* I may perhaps return to the question of the authorship of the gospels. For the present I must content myself with warning my readers against any reliance upon Dr. Wace's statements as to the results arrived at by modern criticism. They are as gravely as surprisingly erroneous.

* The United States ought, perhaps, to be added, but I am not sure.

† Imagin that all our chairs of astronomy had been founded in the fourteenth century, and that their incumbents were bound to sign Ptolemaic articles. In that case, with every respect for the efforts of persons thus hampered to attain and expound the truth, I think men of common sense would go elsewhere to learn astronomy. Zeller's "Vorträge und Abhandlungen" were published and came into my hands a quarter of a century ago. The writer's rank, as a theologian to begin with, and subsequently as a historian of Greek philosophy, is of the highest. Among these essays are two—"Das Urchristenthum" and "Die Tübinger Historische Schule"—which are likely to be of more use to those who wish to know the real state of the case than all the official "apologists," with their one eye on truth and the other on the tenets of their sect, hav written. For the opinion of a scientific theologian about theologians of this stamp see pp. 225 and 227 of the "Vorträge."

Apart from all disputed points of criticism, no one practically doubts that our Lord lived, and that he died on the cross, in the most intense sense of filial relation to his father in heaven, and that he bore testimony to that father's providence, love. and grace toward mankind. The Lord's prayer affords a sufficient evidence on these points. If the Sermon on the Mount alone be added, the whole unseen world, of which the Agnostic refuses to know anything, stands unveiled before us. . . . If Jesus Christ preached that Sermon, made those promises, and taught that prayer, then anyone who says that we know nothing of God, or of a future life, or of an unseen world, says that he does not believe Jesus Christ (pp. 354–355).

Again:

The main question at issue, in a word, is one which Professor Huxley has chosen to leave entirely on one side—whether, namely, allowing for the utmost uncertainty on other points of the criticism to which he appeals, there is any reasonable doubt that the Lord's prayer and the Sermon on the Mount afford a true account of our Lord's essential belief and cardinal teaching (p. 355).

I certainly was not aware that I had evaded the questions here stated; indeed, I should say that I hav indicated my reply to them pretty clearly; but, as Dr. Wace wants a plainer answer, he shall certainly be gratified. If, as Dr. Wace declares it is, his "whole case is involved in" the argument as stated in the latter of these two extracts, so much the worse for his whole case. For I am of opinion that there is the gravest reason for doubting whether the "Sermon on the Mount" was ever preached, and whether the so-called "Lord's prayer" was ever prayed, by Jesus of Nazareth. My reasons for this opinion are, among others, these: There is now no doubt that the three Synoptic gospels, so far from being the work of three independent writers, are closely interdependent,* and that in one of two ways. Either all three contain, as their foundation, versions, to a large extent verbally identical, of one and the same tradition; or two of them are thus closely dependent on the third; and the opinion of the majority of the best critics has, of late years, more and more converged toward the conviction that our canonical second gospel (the so-called "Mark's" gospel) is that which most closely represents the primitiv groundwork of the three.† That I take to be one of the most valid results of New Testament criticism, of immeasurably greater importance than the discussion about dates and authorship.

But if, as I believe to be the case, beyond any rational doubt or dispute, the second gospel is the nearest extant representativ of the oldest tradition, whether written or oral, how comes it that it contains neither the "Sermon on the Mount" nor the "Lord's prayer," those typical embodiments, according to Dr. Wace, of the "essential belief and cardinal teaching" of Jesus? Not only does "Mark's" gospel fail to contain the "Sermon on the Mount," or anything but a very few of the sayings contained in that collection; but, at the point of the history of Jesus where the "Sermon" occurs in "Matthew," there is in "Mark" an apparently unbroken narrativ, from the calling of James and John to the healing of Simon's wife's mother. Thus the oldest tradition not only ignores the "Sermon on the Mount," but, by implication, raises a probability against its being delivered when and where the later "Matthew" inserts it in his compilation.

And still more weighty is the fact that the third gospel, the author of which tells us that he wrote after "many" others had "taken in hand" the same enterprise; who should therefore hav known the first gospel (if it existed), and was bound to pay to it the deference due to the work of an apostolic eyewitness (if he had any reason for thinking it was so)—this writer, who exhibits far more literary competence than the other two, ignores any "Sermon on the Mount," such as that reported by "Matthew," just as much as the oldest authority does. Yet "Luke" has a great many passages identical, or parallel, with those in "Matthew's" "Sermon on the Mount," which are, for the most part, scattered about in a totally different connection.

Interposed, however, between the nomination of the apostles and a visit to Capernaum; occupying, therefore, a place which answers to that of the "Sermon on the Mount" in the first gospel, there is, in the third gospel, a discourse which is as closely similar to the "Sermon on the Mount" in some particulars, as it is widely unlike it in others.

This discourse is said to hav been delivered in a "plain" or "level place" (Luke vi, 17), and by way of distinction we may call it the "Sermon on the Plain."

I see no reason to doubt that the two evangelists are dealing, to a considerable extent, with the same traditional material; and a comparison of the two "sermons" suggests very strongly that "Luke's" version is the earlier. The correspondence between the two forbids the notion that they are independent. They both begin with a series of blessings, some of which are almost verbally identical. In the middle of each (Luke vi, 27–38, Matt. v, 43–48) there is a striking exposition of the ethical spirit of the command given in Leviticus xix, 18. And each ends with a passage containing the declaration that a tree is to be known by its fruit, and the parable of the house built on the sand. But while there are only twenty-nine verses in the "Sermon on the Plain," there are one hundred and seven in the "Sermon on the Mount;" the excess in length of the latter being chiefly due to the long interpolations, one of thirty verses before, and one of thirty-four verses after, the middlemost parallelism with Luke. Under these circumstances, it is quite impossible to admit that there is more probability that "Matthew's" version of the Sermon is historically accurate than there is that "Luke's" version is so; and they cannot both be accurate.

"Luke" either knew the collection of loosely connected and aphoristic utterances which appear under the name of the "Sermon on the Mount" in "Matthew," or he did not. If he did not, he must hav been ignorant of the existence of such a document as our canonical "Matthew," a fact which does not make for the genuinness or the authority of that book. If he did, he has shown that he does not care for its authority on a matter of fact of no small importance; and that does not permit us to conceive that he believed the first gospel to be the work of an authority to whom he ought to defer, let alone that of an apostolic eye witness.

The tradition of the church about the second gospel, which I believe to be quite worthless, but which is all the evidence there is for "Mark's" authorship, would hav us believe that "Mark" was little more than the mouthpiece of the apostle Peter. Consequently, we are to suppose that Peter either did not know, or did not care very much for, that account of the "essential belief and cardinal teaching" of Jesus which is contained in the "Sermon on the Mount;" and, certainly, he could not hav shared Dr. Wace's view of its importance.*

I thought that all fairly attentiv and intelligent students of the gospels, to say nothing of theologians of reputation, knew these things. But how can anyone who does know them hav the conscience to ask whether there is "any reasonable doubt" that the "Sermon on the Mount" was preached by Jesus of Nazareth? If conjecture is permissible, where nothing else is possible, the most probable conjecture seems to be that "Matthew," having a cento of sayings attributed—rightly or wrongly it is impossible to say—to Jesus, among his materials, thought they were, or might be, records of a continuous discourse, and put them in at the place he thought likeliest. Ancient historians of the highest character saw no harm in composing long speeches which never were spoken, and putting them into the mouths of statesmen and warriors; and I presume that whoever is represented by "Matthew" would hav been grievously astonished to find that anyone objected to his following the example of the best models accessible to him.

So with the "Lord's prayer." Absent in our representativ of the oldest tradition, it appears in both "Matthew" and "Luke." There is reason to believe that every pious Jew, at the commencement of our era, prayed three times a day, according to a formula which is embodied in the present Schmone-Esre† of the Jewish prayer-book. Jesus, who was assuredly, in all respects, a pious Jew, whatever else he may hav been, doubtless did the same. Whether he modified the current formula, or whether the so-called "Lord's prayer" is the prayer substituted for the Schmone-Esre in the congregation of the gentiles, who knew nothing of the Jewish practice, is a question which can hardly be answered.

In a subsequent passage of Dr. Wace's article (p. 356) he adds to the list of the verities which he imagins to be unassailable, "The story of the Passion." I am not quite sure what he means by this—I am not aware that anyone (with the exception of certain ancient heretics) has propounded doubts as to the reality of the crucifixion; and certainly I hav no inclination to argue about the precise accuracy of every detail of that pathetic story of suffering and wrong. But, if Dr. Wace means, as I suppose he does, that that which, according to the orthodox view, happened after the crucifixion, and which is, in a dogmatic sense, the most important part of the story, is founded on solid historical proofs, I must beg leave to express a diametrically opposit conviction.

What do we find when the accounts of the events in question, contained in the three Synoptic gospels, are compared together? In the oldest, there is a simple, straightforward statement which, for anything that I hav to urge to the contrary, may be exactly true. In the other two, there is, round this possible and probable nucleus, a mass of accretions of the most questionable character.

The cruelty of death by crucifixion depended very much upon its lingering character. If there were a support for the weight of the body, as not unfrequently was the case, the pain during the first hours of the infliction was not, necessarily, extreme; nor need any serious physical symptoms at once arise from the wounds made by the nails in the hands and feet, supposing they were nailed, which was not invariably the case. When exhaustion set in, and hunger, thirst, and nervous irritation had done their work, the agony of the sufferer must hav been terrible; and the more terrible that, in the absence of any effectual disturbance of the machinery of physical life, it might be prolonged for many hours, or even days. Temperate, strong men, such as the ordinary Galilean peasants were, might liv for several days on the cross. It is necessary to bear these facts in mind when we read the account contained in the fifteenth chapter of the second gospel.

Jesus was crucified at the third hour (xv, 25), and the narrativ seems to imply that he died immediately after the ninth hour (v, 34). In this case, he would hav been crucified only six hours; and the time spent on the cross cannot hav been much longer, because Joseph of Arimathæa must hav gone to Pilate, made his preparations, and deposited the body in the rock-cut tomb before sunset, which, at that time of the year, was about the twelfth hour. That any one should die after only six hours' crucifixion could not hav been at all in accordance with Pilate's large experience of the effects of that method of punishment. It, therefore, quite agrees with what might be expected if Pilate "marveled if he were already dead" and required to be satisfied on this point by the testimony of the Roman officer who was in command of the execution party. Those who hav paid attention to the extraordinarily difficult question, What are the indisputable signs of death?—will be able to estimate the value of the opinion of a rough soldier on such a subject; even if his report to the procurator were in no wise affected by the fact that the friend of Jesus, who anxiously awaited his answer, was a man of influence and of wealth.

The inanimate body, wrapped in linen, was deposited in a spacious,* cool, rock chamber, the entrance of which was closed, not by a well-fitting door, but by a stone rolled against the opening, which would of course allow free passage of air. A little more than thirty-six hours afterward (Friday, 6 P.M., to Sunday, 6 A.M., or a little after) three women visit the tomb and find it empty. And they are told by a young man "arrayed in a white robe" that Jesus is gone to his nativ country of Galilee, and that the disciples and Peter will find him there.

Thus it stands, plainly recorded, in the oldest tradition that, for any evidence to the contrary, the sepulcher may hav been vacated at any time during the Friday or Saturday nights. If it is said that no Jew would hav violated the Sabbath by taking the former course, it is to be recollected that Joseph of Arimathæa might well be familiar with that wise and liberal interpretation of the fourth commandment, which permitted works of mercy to men—nay, even the drawing of an ox or an ass out of a pit—on the Sabbath. At any rate, the Saturday night was free to the most scrupulous of observers of the Law.

These are the facts of the case as stated by the oldest extant narrativ of them. I do not see why anyone should hav a word to say against the inherent probability of that narrativ; and, for my part, I am quite ready to accept it as a historical fact, that so much and no more is positivly known of the end of Jesus of Nazareth. On what grounds can a reasonable man be asked to believe any more? So far as the narrativ in the first gospel, on the one hand, and those in the third gospel and the Acts, on the other, go beyond what is stated in the second gospel, they are hopelessly discrepant with one another. And this is the more significant because the pregnant phrase "some doubted," in the first gospel, is ignored in the third.

But it is said that we hav the witness Paul speaking to us directly in the epistles. There is little doubt that we hav, and a very singular witness he is.

---

*I suppose this is what Dr. Wace is thinking about, when he says that I allege that there "is no visible escape" from the supposition of an Ur-Marcus (p. 367). That a "theologian of repute" should confound an indisputable fact with one of the modes of explaining that fact, is not so singular as those who are unaccustomed to the ways of theologians might imagin.

†Any examiner whose duty it has been to examin into a case of "copying" will be particularly well prepared to appreciate the force of the case stated in that most excellent little book, "The Common Tradition of the Synoptic Gospels," by Dr. Abbott and Mr. Rushbrooke (Macmillan, 1884). To those who hav not passed through such painful experiences I may recommend the brief discussion of the genuinness of the "Casket Letters" in my friend Mr. Skelton's interesting book, "Maitland of Lethington." The second edition of Holtzmann's "Lehrbuch," published in 1886, givs a remarkably fair and full account of the present results of criticism. At page 366, he writes that the present burning question is whether the "relativly primitiv narration and the root of the other synoptic texts is contained in Matthew or in Mark. It is only on this point that properly informed (sachkundige) critics differ," and he decides in favor of Mark.

*Holtzmann ("Die Synoptischen Evangelien," 1863, p. 75), following Ewald, argues that the "Source A" (=the threefold tradition, more or less) contained something that answered to the "Sermon on the Plain" immediately after the words of our present Mark, "And he cometh into a house" (iii, 19). But what conceivable motiv could "Mark" hav for omitting it? Holtzmann has no doubt, however, that the "Sermon on the Mount" is a compilation, or, as he calls it in his recently published "Lehrbuch" (p. 372), "an artificial mosaic work."

†See Schürer, "Geschichte des Jüdischen Volkes," Zweiter Theil, p. 384.

*Spacious, because a young man could sit in it "on the right side" (xv, 5), and therefore with plenty of room to spare.

According to his own showing, Paul, in the vigor of his manhood, with every means of becoming acquainted, at first hand, with the evidence of eye-witnesses, not merely refused to credit them, but "persecuted the church of God and made havoc of it." The reasoning of Stephen fell dead upon the acute intellect of this zealot for the traditions of his fathers: his eyes were blind to the ecstatic illumination of the martyr's countenance "as it had been the face of an angel;" and when, at the words, "Behold, I see the heavens opened and the son of man standing on the right hand of God," the murderous mob rushed upon and stoned the rapt disciple of Jesus, Paul ostentatiously made himself their official accomplice.

Yet this strange man, because he has a vision one day, at once, and with equally headlong zeal, flies to the opposit pole of opinion. And he is most careful to tell us that he abstained from any reëxamination of the facts.

> Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went away into Arabia (Gal. i, 16, 17).

I do not presume to quarrel with Paul's procedure. If it satisfied him, that was his affair; and, if it satisfies anyone else, I am not called upon to dispute the right of that person to be satisfied. But I certainly hav the right to say that it would not satisfy me, in like case; that I should be very much ashamed to pretend that it could, or ought to, satisfy me; and that I can entertain but a very low estimate of the value of the evidence of people who are to be satisfied in this fashion, when questions of objectiv fact, in which their faith is interested, are concerned. So that when I am called upon to believe a great deal more than the oldest gospel tells me about the final events of the history of Jesus on the authority of Paul (1 Cor. xv, 5–8) I must pause. Did he think it, at any subsequent time, worth while "to confer with flesh and blood," or, in modern phrase, to reexamin the facts for himself? or was he ready to accept anything that fitted in with his preconceived ideas? Does he mean, when he speaks of all the appearances of Jesus after the crucifixion as if they were of the same kind, that they were all visions, like the manifestation to himself? And, finally, how is this account to be reconciled with those in the first and the third gospels—which, as we hav seen, disagree with one another? T. H. HUXLEY.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - 16 Union Park Place, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.

An Open Letter to the President of the United States.

To His Excellency, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States:

We, the Secular society of Minneapolis, beg leave to express to you our opinion of your late action in issuing a proclamation under the seal of the United States, calling upon the people to assemble in their respectiv churches on April 30th, to worship God in commemoration of the inauguration of Washington as first president.

You say you do this in response to the "pious and reasonable request of the representativs of the religious creeds, both Christian and Hebrew." We wish to remind your excellency that you are not, by virtue of your office as president of the United States, the president of the Christian church, or the Jewish church, or both. You are not the servant of the church, and however much the advocates of the Blair measure may desire it, the president of the United States is not yet the head of the church.

Whatever is to be said in regard to the religious character of the American people, the American government is not a religious organization.

Less than six years after the first inauguration of Washington, viz., in 1796, he submitted to the Senate for its approval a treaty with Tripoli, in Article 11 of which it is incidentally mentioned as if it were a matter well understood that "the government of the United States of America is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion," and we may assume that if it is not founded on this religion it is not founded on any.

This treaty, indorsed by George Washington, was ratified by a Senate composed in part of some of the men who assisted at the ceremony of the inauguration, the centennial of which you recommend us to celebrate. Our government is a purely political organization for the purpose of attending to the secular business of the nation, and you, as chief executiv of the laws of the nation, hav no duties whatever of a religious or ecclesiastical character; much less hav you any right to allow the office of president to be used by the religious factions of the nation to promote the influence of their dogmas and the importance of the priestly class.

We know, and your excellency knows, that the memorial from the "representativs of the religious creeds," to which you hav listened, has this aim and nothing more. The representativs of the religious creeds could themselvs hav appointed the hour for their religious services if they wanted to, but by making a catspaw of the too willing executiv they seek to obtain for their trade official recognition and national political importance. This religious faction never neglects an opportunity like the present to associate itself with the government, and by all means to familiarize the public mind with such association, to the furtherance of their great scheme—the ultimate union of the church and the state.

It is the right of every individual to set up in his mind the image of an infinit, irresponsible despot residing in a distant part of the universe, and if he thinks it will do him any good he may "bow" himself down to it and "serve" it; but we protest, in the name of history, that "the blessings of liberty, prosperity, and peace," which you so kindly and paternally invoke upon us, never did abide with the nation which permitted this idea to influence the management of their public concerns.

But it is not so much the consideration of public policy to which we invite your attention as your duty as the executiv of the law. We freely admit your right in your private capacity to worship Jehovah, or Baal, or any other idol, but we protest that when you attempt in your official capacity, and under the seal of the United States, to advocate such worship, or any worship, and to recommend your views or those of the "representativs of religious creeds," you hav usurped prerogativs which do not belong to you, prostituted the seal to uses for which there is no legitimate warrant, established a dangerous precedent, and played into the hands of men who hav always opposed mental liberty, and who are at this moment making, both in this country and in Europe, the most desperate efforts to regain their lost prestige by reenslaving the minds of the people, and especially the youth by controling their education.

We close with expressions of the highest respect and esteem for your excellency.

THE SECULAR SOCIETY OF MINNEAPOLIS.

St. Louis on Church Taxation.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 22, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The St. Louis Secular Society, with Dr. Gray as president, Wm. Haskell, W. C. Bohannon, and Alexander Longley as vice-presidents, and S. A. Rendel, financial secretary, was organized yesterday. Meetings and discussions will be held every Sunday, and we will assist the American Secular Union all we can in enforcing the Nine Demands of Secularism. It was agreed by all present that the first Demand should read: "That churches should no longer be exempt from equal taxation," in place of "just taxation," as it now reads, for there can be no such thing as just taxation; but as long as taxation does exist, we ask the churches to pay their part as well as any individual. Taxation, says Webster, is a burden, and any burden is wrong; therefore just taxation is impossible, but equal taxation is what we ask for as long as taxation is needed, and the first Demand should be so changed. We hope to be able to send in some good reports soon of the work the St. Louis Secular Society is doing.

Yours, etc., G. H. SCHEEL.

The Irish Clerics After the Papal Tiara.

It seems characteristic of those having been held in slavery to become the greatest schemers to return the compliment, with interest, on any unfortunate enough to come in range of their grasps. The "downtrodden" Irish Catholics are shining examples of this tendency. The bulldozed become the bulldozers with ease and rapidity. They hav just about captured the United States, and now are anxious to invite the pope to America, hav him die, break the Italian combination which has for centuries so carefully guarded the chair of Peter, and crown in Washington Cardinal Gibbons with the tiara. It is a great scheme, but the Irish, to use an expressiv phrase, generally "get there just the same."

At a recent banquet at Rome, the pope's vicar, Cardinal Parocchi, said that if the pope had to leave Europe, he would find a safe refuge among the American bishops. This is significant, when we take into consideration that a well-known Catholic writer is led to boldly exclaim that "the way to get an American pope is to elect an American cardinal upon the demise of Leo XIII." In fact, a widely diverging chasm has for a long time separated the Irish and Italian clerics. A movement has long been on foot by the Romanists in the rest of Europe to overthrow the Italian coterie which has controled the college of cardinals, and through them the destinies of the Catholic church. The anti-Vatican feeling is widespread among the Irish priesthood. Unless Romanism soon receives a severe check, the successor of St. Peter will sit in royal state at our capital city of Washington. To secure this, the Irish clericals would hav us understand that they do not agree with the retroactiv spirit manifested by the Peccis. They want a more liberal and enlightened pope—they say that to them it is both odious and absurd for Italians to attempt to rule nineteenth-century Americans with their intellectual grasp of the ninth.

This Catholic writer claims that the control of Italian prelates and monks over the destinies of the American church is absolute. Acting in the name of the pope and claiming to use his infallible authority, the Roman curia works its own sweet will with affairs of which it knows extremely little. It convokes councils, and without its sanction councils cannot be held. It reviews, and at its own discretion ratifies or annuls, whatever action a council may hav taken, so that the acts of a council of American bishops in relation to the administration of their own ecclesiastical affairs are inoperativ and void unless the pope nominally, but really unless a committee of Italians, sees fit to giv assent thereto. In like manner the pope nominally, but really the curia, controls the appointment of bishops to American sees; often intermeddles with their administration; frequently overrules their judgments; sometimes entirely supersedes them under a thin pretext of aiding them with a coadjutor, and it can at any time remove them altogether.

It may easily be conceived that this thraldom to a foreign authority, which is only nominally and not really the pope's authority, must secretly chafe the bishops of the Roman church in America. It is only necessary to say that in what we hav of the Irish article, we cannot see any improvement over the Italian.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Biblical criticism is usually keen, clear, and well-defined in lectures of that character given from the Chicago Secular Union rostrum, but that of last Sunday evening, by John M. Stiles, was one of the best we hav had for many a day. The discourse, in which he shook up the "promises of God," and, with reason and satire, proved their utter worthlessness, fairly bristled with points, and was remarkable for the originality of its treatment and construction. Brother Stiles was formerly a licensed preacher of the Methodist denomination, and he has entered into the Liberal work with a zeal and enthusiasm which more than all words shows "the faith that is in him." Earnest Christians hardly believe most Freethinkers are honest, as they do nothing to prove their sincerity in the cause they profess to uphold. These are the real infidels—the unfaithful Freethinkers.

Mr. Stiles has been a member of our Union about a year, and in that short period he and his charming wife hav done valiant service in the Secular cause. They hav instituted a Bible class, which meets every Tuesday evening at the houses of various members, where Christians are particularly invited to participate, and some are always present, though they are growing small by degrees and beautifully less. They are not so fully prepared to expound the "word" when they hav to be followed by the critical analysis of a Dr. Bishop, a Mrs. Holmes, a Mrs. Hewitt, or a Mr. and Mrs. Stiles, to say nothing of Jehu Barr, our treasurer, who can quote scripture by the yard. My sympathies hav been aroused for the poor Christians, and I hav done my best in their behalf. "The agitation of thought is the beginning of wisdom."

While on this topic of what Freethinkers can do for Freethought, I wish to call your attention to the splendid achievement of Brother Marlett, who is a messenger of the American Express Company. Four years ago, anxious to be doing something for Liberalism, and noting the lack of interest his fellow-messengers felt in books and literature, he conceived the idea of starting a library for the employees of the company, the office to be located in Chicago. At first the outlook was hopelessly discouraging, as the men were afraid the company would not like their joining anything like a union, for I believe that is forbidden by their rules. However, a commencement was made with twenty-three volumes, and in a short time the association—which charges only ten cents per month—was self-sustaining. The use of a handsomely furnished room the company formerly rented for $50 per month was donated to the association. The only expense of the association is for books and a librarian, as the company carry them free of charge. The library now boasts of some fifteen hundred well-selected volumes, among which, thanks to Brother Marlett, are a large number of a Liberal character, and he is continually on the watch for the best books of a Radical nature. Bennett's travels, Spencer, Huxley, Darwin, Elmina, all are there, and are continually being sent out over the six adjoining states. It is a regular Freethought library. When it is surmised that such books are never kept in the stores of the small town, we can scarcely estimate the intellectual boon which is being conferred on the messenger boys. They appreciate the library and Brother Marlett's indefatigable labors, for at the last meeting of the directors he was the recipient of a copy of the latest edition of Webster's Unabridged, being the second testimonial of their gratitude he has received. He deserves their gratitude and our honor for the work he has done for Freethought. A few such men would transform the frigid indifference of Liberalism into an activ, aggressiv principle. Everyone can do something, if he will only try. Do like Marlett—make the opportunity for work.

This is not all the Chicago society members are doing, by a large majority, for our Wednesday evening meetings of the Young People's Society and our sociables are attracting attention. We are all getting young again, and what with masquerades and dances we are determined to get out of life something besides trouble. We hav the jolliest lot of activ, intelligent thinkers ever got together, and the more they do the more they desire to accomplish. Work for the cause givs zest and momentum to their aspirations. If you believe in Liberalism, show it, work for it, sustain it, liv it.

E. A. STEVENS, Sec. A. S. U.

The Bruno Statue at Rome.

It will be seen by the account below that the $1,000 promised on behalf of American Liberals to complete this statue is nearly all subscribed, and will be there long before the 9th of June, the day fixed for the unveiling. This gratifying result has come, as the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER said it would, from the Liberals themselvs, and chiefly by the aid of their great organization, the American Secular Union. Its officers, President Westbrook, Secretary Stevens, and Committee Chairman Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., had only to say the word, and the money has come. But not less acknowledgment is due to the generous Liberals whose names hav the figures after them in this Roll of Honor. There is still "room at the top," and those who would like to hav their names and money go to Rome for this permanent and glorious investment should forward them without delay. The committee is confronted with a new question: Shall this money be represented by an American delegation to giv it voice on June 9th, at the great celebration? The following interesting letter just received from the committee at Rome shows how necessary they think it to be. Who of the committee here can go? It consists of Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Daniel G. Thompson, Prof. Thomas Davidson, and myself. Nothing could be more glorious on this earth than to hav Colonel Ingersoll express his sentiments about Bruno in the "Eternal City" under the frown of the Vatican. He said at first that it was out of the question, but finally he has taken the matter under consideration and he may go! Mr. D. G. Thompson, the president of the Nineteenth Century Club, is a busy lawyer and author, and says that his obligations make it practically impossible.

Professor Davidson and myself are the remaining two of the committee, and our colleagues, as well as the committee at Rome, are very desirous to hav us take part in the great event. But we are both dependent upon our personal professional labor, and if all of our business can be laid aside or abandoned, it is not possible for us to bear the whole of the expense, which for two will be at least $1,000. If we can manage to bear one-half of this expense, are there Liberal Americans who will put up the other $500?

Efforts are being made to get our late minister at Rome, Judge J. B. Stallo, to attend, together with other Americans who may be in Europe. But June is too late for visitors at Rome, and it is not certain that America will be represented at all unless special provision is made—and so the question is submitted.

T. B. WAKEMAN, Treas., etc.

New York, April 25, 289.

THE LETTER.

ROME, April 7, 1889.

DEAR SIR: We hav put off answering your very kind letter of February 3d in order to be able to inform you of the precise date of the inauguration of the monument, on which occasion, as we learn with much pleasure, you and your colleagues of the honorary committee intend to be present in person. The inauguration, then, of the monument to Giordano Bruno has been fixed for the 9th of June, prox. In a few days will be printed and sent out into all the world the manifestoes announcing the great event, along with invitations to all Liberals and all scientific men to take part in the celebration. Copies will be forwarded to you in order that you may diffuse the information in those parts, and, along with your colleagues of the committee, may induce a large deputation of Americans to take part in the great festival of liberty and science. But for your aid and that of your illustrious colleagues, Messrs. R. G. Ingersoll, Daniel G. Thompson, and Thomas Davidson, we should not hav obtained for our work the generous contributions of American Liberals, or secured their presence in Rome. We must, therefore, express to you our most hearty thanks, which we shall repeat with much pleasure on the day when we shall hav the honor of grasping your hand and those of your countrymen.

We are sure that the subscription for the monument opened anew after our letter, and, already so nobly headed by the very generous contribution of the illustrious R. G. Ingersoll, cannot fail to produce the best results; so that North America will stand first on the list of subscribers to the monument of the great martyr of the Inquisition.

We expect, therefore, satisfactory information, and as we are urging on the construction of the monument with all speed, we shall be very much obliged to you if you will forward to us at your earliest convenience the sums that hav been collected.

Further, we beg you to let us know as soon as possible the number and names of the persons who will join you on this Liberal pilgrimage.

With sincere gratitude and admiration for you and your colleagues of the committee, I am, believe me,

Yours devotedly, G. AMICI,
Secretary for the Committee.

THE ACCOUNT.

Received through the care of the American Secular Union from:
N. F. Griswold, Meriden, Conn	$100 00
N. Eggleston, Aurora, O	100 00
Drs. E. B. Foote, New York city	20 00
R. B. and H. P. Westbrook, Philadelphia	10 00
E. A. Stevens, Chicago, Ill	10 00
Otto Wettstein, Rochelle, Ill	6 00
F. A. Day, Castana, Ind	5 00
Mrs. S. L. Dingess, Chicago	1 00
Converse Close, Grattan, Mich	1 00
F. P. Spencer, Evansville, Wis	1 00
Unknown, Chicago	1 00
	$255 00
Received also from:
Watson Heston, Carthage, Mo	$11 25
L. Geiger, Hudson, N. Y	5 00
L. K. Derby, Plymouth, Pa	2 00
Mary A. T. Steeper, McLouth, Kan	1 00
C. Schuchart, Belle Plaine, Ia	1 00
R. McDougal, Louisville, Ky	5 00
E. F. Robson, Portland, Ore	2 50
F. C. Mende, Philadelphia	1 00
Thomas Goddard, McQuoin, Ill	1 00
E. Livezey, Baltimore, Md	2 00
W. T. Doty, Butte City, Mont	3 00
Lyman Smith, Selma, Cal	1 00
J. K. McIntire, Greensburg, Pa	1 00
R. S. Perrin, per D. G. Thompson, New York	1 00
	$292 75
Acknowledged heretofore	49 00
" "	84 00
Total on second $500	$425 75

The first $500, including Colonel Ingersoll's $100, was forwarded. Let no time be lost in closing the second $500. Send to

T. B. WAKEMAN, Treasurer.
93 Nassau street, New York city.

Evolution and Buddhism.

If any teach Nirvana is to cease, say unto such they lie!
If any teach Nirvana is to liv, say unto such they err.
—Arnold's Light of Asia.

To those who reject the evidence of any special extramundane revelation, save what is to be found in the phenomena of nature, the various creeds of the world—Buddhism excepted—appear all to resolve themselvs equally into vain attempts to account for the origin of the material universe from the presumption of a special creation of the universe of matter, worlds, suns, plants, men, and animals by divine volition. All these other religions, without exception, ascribe the existence of matter and its genesis to a supernatural power. "Matter," they say, "was created by spirit." Each creed claims its own special revelation to this effect. They hav no credence in the gradual development of worlds, suns, plants, men, and animals as exhibited before our eyes in the phenomena of evolution, and they may be said in this respect, and as regards the origin of things, to hav all alike one common basis and starting-point. If a few advanced minds amongst them are inclined to concede "evolution," they still cling with more tenacity to supernaturalism as its method. Now, science in general—which is but intensified common sense applied with close observation to all physical phenomena—and evolutionary science in particular, has no logical contact with the idea of the creation of matter under any circumstances, or at any period. Indeed, the creativ theory by itself excludes that of evolution altogether. Constructivness is everywhere exhibited in nature, but creativ power nowhere. If creativ power existed in nature, there is no science of evolution possible.

Elementary science calmly demonstrates, beyond question, that matter is indestructible, and, of necessity, therefore everlasting. But by inductiv reasoning it may also be shown that matter must hav existed from all time, for time itself is but relativ to matter, and could hav no existence by itself; for what else is time, save the interval between events, as space is the interval between objects? Now, without matter, there could be no objects, no events, intervals, or time; and events and time itself are alone possible by the existence of the things appertaining to the material universe; that is to say, that to imagin any period antecedent to the existence of a material universe is not only to refer all things under that conception to a void or vacuum, but also to banish time, events, and necessarily consciousness and mind, from this calculation; for even a presumed creator occupying such a theoretical realm of nothingness, to hav been himself conscious must hav had something to hav been conscious of! Again, unless we imagin space to be confined within a boundary of matter of infinit extension and in a fixed condition, which is a mathematical absurdity, space must exist in infinit extension in all directions without limitation. You cannot, so to say, put space in a box, else what were outside such packing-case? Thus time is seen to be a quality of matter and the interval between events, just as space is the interval between objects giving rise to those events in the universe, within the compass of that everlasting trinity-in-unity of gaseous, liquid, and solid forms of matter throughout time and space, "whose motiv center being everywhere, and circumference nowhere," we in our fleeting and transitory lives can see but the reflected shadow of in our conscious journey from the unknown past through the faintly apprehended present, toward the future mystery, which may mean infinit rest; but if not,

Shall any gazer see with mortal eyes?
Or any searcher know by mortal mind?
Veil after veil will lift—but there must be Veil upon veil behind. —Light of Asia.

If, therefore, matter has, with time and space, been eternal and therefore uncreated, all question as to its origin may at once and forever be dismissed from our thoughts, for the universe as demonstrated is without limit in space, and without beginning or end in time, and no creator of matter is possible. Now, science shows us that what we call force exists in due proportion within the smallest molecule of matter, as within the aggregated mass of molecules that form a planet or sun. Existing under three conditions, solid, liquid, and æriform, matter succeeds matter in extension throughout all known stellar spaces, filling the intervals between our world and the most distant stars with its undulating ether through which its more solid bodies sail. As far as we can discern, this extension of matter may be limitless, as space itself is limitless; its indestructibility, its continuity of motion, and persistence of force, its unchanging quantity, its ever changing forms, are the primary truths of synthetic philosophy. "To deify this force as a separate entity, would be to conceive of matter as existing by itself without force, and therefore without qualities, an absurdity requiring no refutation, whilst force and matter in unity leaves no necessity for, or need of, any supernal power."

The material phenomenon of consciousness under the form of feeling in man, or in the lower animals, is transformable, as is well known, into an equivalent of animal motion, and consequently into an equivalent of all the other forces which matter exhibits, yet although from this transmutation of mind into mechanical force, there may reasonably be inferred the existence of an equivalent for consciousness in the forces observable in inorganic substances in their varied physical phenomena, still the spiritualistic conception of a separate entity governing that phenomenon is inadmissible, for, as before pointed out, it would involve the idea of matter, per se, without qualities.

You cannot therefore separate force from matter, or body from mind, in the various transitions from the organic to the inorganic, or in either; nor claim for man more than for brute, or for the intelligent ant a separate entity or soul denied to them also. For, "Behold the lion, when he comes forth from his den to seize the prey which his own wants and those of his whelps demand, with flowing mane, steadfast purpose, and paralyzing gleam of eye. The terror of all beasts and undisputed monarch of the forest, he roams from jungle to jungle and knows no fear. But the skill of the hunter sends a bullet crashing through the organs of thought and judgment in that self-reliant head. A few spasmodic surges, convulsiv tremors, and he stretches himself on the ground an immovable mass of terrestrial matter. What made his voice more terrible than thunder, his spring more fatal than its bolt? Where is it all gone?" The scientific evidence is overwhelming that we hav emancipated ourselvs from the brute world and are not degenerated angels! How then can we deny to the brute any separate entity for the mind that in a higher state of development, together with the five senses that compose it, we still hold in common? Yet what, after all, is this new evolutionary science, and does it tend to a new belief? The unprejudiced student of the maturer thoughts of "Solomon the Wise" will find it all plainly enough discernible in his book of Ecclesiastes. It is the same logical inference we draw from the biological researches of Darwin, though now for the first time proved to be an exact science, and shown to be the universal method of nature in all her activities, by the unanswerable and magnificent arguments and profound analysis of Herbert Spencer.

"There is nothing new under the sun," for, six centuries before Christ, and in the valley of the Ganges, Buddha intuitivly realized and taught evolution's ultimate truth, viz., the absorption of the personal and all other existences into the universal, imparting to the religion he founded, which (knowing no personal or anthropomorphic deity) is even now the accepted belief of two-thirds of the living race of civilized men; that sublime love and benevolence toward the human family and to all sentient beings, which the more recent faith of Christendom but too often delegated to providence as the special prerogativ, as it is also the chief attribute, of the personal god she worships. The garrulous theologian may close his eyes to the phenomena of nature and garble the universe to suit his theory, and for a time will hav many supporters, for superstition dies hard; but the mental revolution now in progress will, nevertheless, produce in due course a social revolution, and social science based on the known physical sciences that will replace those social relations now in force which make of mankind rivals, instead of confederates for mutual good. For all the evolutions of humanity correspond with the evolution and progress of thought; and science is the lamp that lights them on their way.

O race that labors, and seeks, and strives,
With thy faith, thy wisdom, thy hopes and fears,
Where now is the "future" of myriad lives?
Where now is the creed of a thousand years?
Far as the "western" spirit may range,
It finds but the travail of endless change.

"And in my dream I saw an angel who bore in his right hand a flaming torch, and in his left a pot of water. Whither goest thou, I asked? I go, said he, with this torch to burn up paradise, and with this pot of water to quench hell, that men may hereafter love one another without fear, and without hope of reward." A. E. MCCALLUM.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. JAMES A. BLISS desires us to giv notice that he will increase the visible supply of mediums (develop them, he calls it) at 18 Park place, Detroit, Mich., on and after May 7th. People of that place desirous of becoming mediums and of having spirit guides to lay the blame upon, will do well to call on him.

GEORGE H. DAWES, of Pittsville, Wis., will be glad to answer calls to lecture on Freethought subjects during July and August. Mr. Dawes is spoken well of by those who hav engaged him; his terms are low; his services are needed, and he ought to be at work in the vineyard of heresy. The country needs to be instructed in the principles of Secular government, and every lecturer should hav an opportunity to do what good he can.

Communications.

Governments of Men.

I hav read Mr. H. W. Hammond's "Social Economy" and also Mr. A. O. Genung's "Economic Progress," and do hope that the Liberals, contributors and readers of your grand paper, will see the wisdom of such discussions and continue them in THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is always open to a free investigation of any subject, and consequently well deserves the name TRUTH SEEKER.

The governments of mankind hav always been complained of. There never was a time in the history of any country when it seemed that all were satisfied with the laws under which they lived. When was there a time when none complained of unequal burdens and injustice? And the murmurs of the people, the complaints and the grumblings, hav always resulted either in stimulating the lawmaking powers to do the will of the people or to rivet the chains of obedience more tightly upon them. Nevertheless, the complaints of the governed hav generally been justifiable. Let us look at the supposed motivs that moved man to make laws to govern society. It seems when one person wronged another the one suffering from the injury would carry his grievances to his fellows, and they, partly through sympathy and partly through fear of being wronged themselvs, set about making rules or laws restraining those who would not obey the simple rules of justice between man and man. In other words, it was an agreement to coöperate with each other in the suppression of vice and crime—for the protection of the good and the honest against the evil and the designing. But those who are always designing for their own individual interest, and scheming to find what advantage can be taken of their fellows, always seem to be more subtle in power and design than the honest, innocent, and unsuspecting. Hence the bad and designing men hav never been slow to see the advantage which could be gained by getting the lawmaking power in their own hands. And when bad men conspire to get the enactment of laws for their individual interest to the detriment of society in general, there is no law to reach or penalty for such a conspiracy, because there is no limit or bound to lawmaking. Yet such conspirators ought to be commanded to disperse. Strangely enough, the honorable folks at home seem to trust implicitly in their honest representativs, and if they do by chance see the cloven foot of his satanic majesty they may complain and murmur, but they must be cautious and not collect in larger gatherings to discuss their grievances, lest the riot act be read to them and they be commanded to disperse. For the majesty of the law must be maintained. At times a padlock on the mouth of the poor is necessary to the welfare of the rich. The very evils which man has sought to avoid by lawmaking he has fallen prey to through the law. When men violate the laws of health they must suffer. And when men enact laws in plain violation of the natural laws they will suffer. For there are natural laws that govern, or should govern, our body politic. To illustrate what this natural law is—which is so plain the fool need not break it—even the heathen nations must hav discovered it. For if one of their number built a bark canoe he had the undisputed right to the use and possession of it. And he who would take by force from him was a violator of the simple law of right between man and man. And there is but little doubt that he met with just punishment, because even a society of heathens must hav acknowledged that "self-preservation is the first law of nature." So the many could not hav permitted the robbery of one, lest all in turn should be robbed by one. So we should seek to discover law rather than to make law. To illustrate what I mean by the discovery of law, I will say: It would hav been the hight of foolishness for our lawmakers to hav enacted or made laws to govern railroads before there was a railroad made. But after they were made it was discovered to be necessary to make laws to govern them, lest they should rob the helpless and prove a curse rather than a blessing to society. So legislators should seek to discover the necessity of the law which they are called upon to enact. They should enact laws that will protect the weak against the encroachments of the strong and designing. But that is not the spirit of the lawmakers of to-day. They pander to the rich and forget the interest of the poor. The great majority of them violate the confidence that has been placed in them and prove themselvs traitors to the cause of liberty. They enact laws for the classes instead of the masses, and our body politic is a putrefying sore. Those whom we hav trusted and spoken of as honorable hav set bad examples, and society is becoming corrupt, and all the evils and evil influences which hav come upon society at large hav been brought about through a wrong acceptance of law and conception of what it is. Former legislatures hav enacted laws which the following legislature would be called upon by the people to repeal. Why? Because they were found to be unjust between man and man, and consequently were not lawful laws. This, I think, confirms what I hav said, viz., that we should seek to discover law rather than manufacture it. That which conflicts with the rights of one should be the concern of all. Pope has wisely said,

> The proper study of mankind is man.

Then let us giv the study of government a little attention, and find, if we can, why it is that the majority of men are so poor in purse, so poorly clothed, so poorly housed, and so poorly educated. I think we will arrive at the conclusion that a great deal of all this is brought upon us through expensiv government and unjust taxation.

Look, for instance, at the countries of the Old World. They hav been lawmaking and lawbreaking for hundreds of years, and each year their governments are becoming more burdensome to the people. In 1880 Germany had a public debt of $30,000,000, and besides that $3.15 per head as an annual expenditure. Great Britain and Ireland had a public debt of $3 888 907,980 hanging over the heads of their people, and besides that $12.35 per head as an annual expense. France had a debt of $4,695 600,000, with an annual expense per head of $14.07. Now look at our own "free" republic. She had a debt of $2 028,-648,111, and an annual expense per head of $6.13; so that each man in the United States had a debt of something like $50 hanging over his head. The public debt of the United States has been slightly reduced in the last few years. Some men claim that a public debt is a good thing for a nation. How can that be, since the interest must always be paid to the holders of bonds? And the interest gnaws at the very vitals of the wealth producers, and draws from the circulation of the people's money, and by that we are robbed of our just earnings, trade and exchange is injured, industry suffers, and internal improvement is checked. The bond system serves to impede progress, and should be abolished. We hav seen that the nations of the world are in debt, and the few bondholders and money-lenders are able to control the circulating medium of the world.

In the outstart of lawmaking, man has acted as though he knew one-half of society wanted to rob, plunder, and murder the other half, and in order to prevent that has hired nearly one-half to stand guard while others worked for the support of all. And yet those safeguards hav proved insufficient, for we still hav plundering, robbing, and murdering. We might almost as well hav permitted the highwaymen to rob us as to submit to the legalized robbery of supporting a horde of useless officers. I sometimes think that it costs more to make and administer the law than the governments are worth to the people, for we are systematically robbed by the governments, and without the means of redress through the law. Yet I am not one of those who believe we can do without government. After counting the cost of administering the general government, add to that the cost of the state governments, county governments, and municipal governments, and you will not be surprised at the poverty of the people. To me, selfishness is a very strange and mean principle. Nevertheless, under our systems of government, we are compelled to practice it, because we must fence against coming dangers, and, if possible, keep out of the almshouse in our old days. Consequently, we are practicing economy until we are verging on, and are growing into, penury. We will soon lose that good and desirable name of being hospitable. Malthus, the great political economist, has set forth the idea that population presses on subsistence. Under our present system of government such, no doubt, is the case. If Malthus had said with Burns, "Man's inhumanity to man" has caused countless millions to suffer and starve, and many thousands of little children to be born in crowded tenement houses, where for want of food and proper ventilation they die, he (Malthus) would hav told the truth in a better way. The great mistake and misfortune of mankind is this. He has fallen into the error of accepting everything as he has found it. He has failed to question and investigate his forms of government. He has improved in the arts and sciences; he has studied to his wit's end to contrive machines to explore the starry heavens, but he has sadly neglected his own Mother Earth. If he had strived to improve in his government as he has in machinery, he would, no doubt, find a panacea for every social evil. For hundreds of years the human family accepted human slavery as right; now it is considered a crime. If we will investigate, we may find other things which we now accept as right to be crimes against humanity.

> O mighty human brotherhood! why fiercely war and strive,
> While this great earth has ample space for every man alive?
> Broad fields, uncultured and unclaimed, stand waiting for the plow
> Of progress that shall make them bloom a hundred years from now.

But why should it be a hundred years from now? That system which will be good for the people a hundred years from now would be good for the present generation. If human slavery is wrong now, it was wrong fifty years ago. We hav now what is known as the industrial slave. Let us seek for that system of government that will emancipate him. Let us hav another emancipation proclamation, for

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

Coalton, Ky., Feb. 3, 1889. S. P. HERRON.

The Spiritualist Controversy.

McArthur, in the discussion with Baker, repudiates ghosts, but reasons like all believers in spirituality. They claim their belief is based on facts, and, in some cases, this is in one sense true, as their belief is based on certain actual, or alleged, occurrences, for which they arbitrarily assert a spiritual cause.

The only difference, in foundation for belief, between the so-called modern Spiritualists, and the believers in traditional or historical spiritual manifestations, as Christians, etc., is that the Spiritualists' belief is based on personal knowledge of some occurrence or occurrences, for which they know no material cause, therefore they assert the cause is spiritual.

The orthodox Christian, or other religionist, chooses a very sandy, but almost inaccessible, place for his foundation. He says he finds, from information obtained from certain living men and from written records left by other, more or less certain, men, that certain actual, or alleged, occurrences in the past, had a spiritual cause. That the cause is alive and as powerful now; but he usually admits that it does not manifest itself to reasonable men now, as he says it did formerly.

It seems to me that we should all know, by this time, that there are questions that cannot be settled by demonstration or argument, with our present amount of knowledge and degree of intelligence. Any argument asserting the absolute truth or falsity of spirituality carries us back to what we call first causes, that is, beyond the limit of our knowledge of causes.

The Materialist cannot prove that a blade of grass springs into life from inert matter, nor can the believer in spiritual power show that any spirit produces the grass blade.

Whether there are, or are not, spirits in the universe can never be known until we know all things—what is matter? what is spirit? or if there are such things as either? But, although we hav not sufficient knowledge to ascertain original causes, there is a small horizon inside of which we can use our reason, and where we can, and should, take advantage of the experiences of other men. We know by this past experience that spiritual origin for material phenomena has been asserted and believed just in proportion as the asserters and believers were ignorant of material causes and effects. Lightning was once a bolt hurled by a God; pestilence, a direct infliction by a deity; insanity, the bodily capture of the victim by an invisible spirit called a devil. Uncommon ingenuity or intelligence was called witchcraft. We now know, if we know anything, that the immediate cause of these things is simple and material.

We know that spirit-rapping is, or may be, simply toe or knee joint cracking, or other material device. That locked-slate writing can be done without the aid of spirits by almost any parlor magician. It may not be the same mentioned by McArthur, but my recollection is, that Professor Slade has been detected and his method of sleight-of-hand exposed by a reputable newspaper man and experienced investigator of spirits—that is, Henry Guy Carleton.

We know that no Spiritual medium or Spiritual manifestation on record has ever been able to stand the test of contemporary, impartial, and scientific investigation. That the only evidence obtainable by the most complete and searching investigation by scientific men in this country was evidence of fraud.

We know that such reputable and responsible men as Hermann hav offered large sums of money to any spirit-manipulator who could produce any material effect, by spirit power, that Hermann could not duplicate by material means. We know that in all recorded ages the only basis of argument for spiritual advocates has been the ignorance of men.

When some event has occurred, or phenomenon been produced, by some advocate of spirituality that contemporary men could not explain by known material laws or forces, the claim was always made that here was the proof of the existence of spirits. And when by patient investigation the "gross Materialist" has found the real, immediate cause, the spiritual believer reluctantly admits his error and falls back gracefully to his next intrenchment, namely, the ignorance of his fellows about the latest observed phenomena.

For these reasons argument about the truth or falsity of Spiritism is useless. It is not conceivable by me that we should ever see the only convincing argument that either side could giv—that is, that the Agnostic should solve every fact in nature and demonstrate the all to the men who draw such large conclusions from such scant evidence, or that the Spiritualist or Deist should bring his spirits or gods face to face with the Agnostic in the bright light of day.

In the mean time it is silly to call each other names.

The only sensible thing to do is to insist on tolerance and freedom for all, and to remember that we are all brothers stumbling in the darkness and searching for the light. JEROME LYNCH.

Frigid Atheism Again.

I would respectfully ask friend Charlesworth what is the meaning of the term Agnosticism? Also, what is the proper word to be used in designating a person who boldly declares that there is no God? Before Mr. Charlesworth attempts to answer these two simple questions, let him read once more his "Plea for Atheism" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 12, 1889. In my opinion his definition of the term Atheism, as set forth in his "Plea," is also applicable to the word Agnosticism. I am accused of saying that, "Belief in God is necessary as a preventiv to crime," and that "the Atheist may plunder and rob without fear of the consequences." Theists steal. Atheists also steal. Those few savage tribes who are Atheists—that is, "without idea of God"—are composed of thieves. It seems that belief is not necessary to salvation or temptation. Who can knowingly say, who believes there is no God, that Theists are not influenced by fear of hell and hope of heaven? My position is this: Ignorant Theists are prevented from crime by their belief, intellectual Atheists are not induced to crime by their belief.

Does Mr. Charlesworth believe the effect would be salutary if within the next twenty-four hours it were demonstrated beyond doubt, and believed by every man, woman, and child in the universe, that there is no God? We can well imagin the effect on all ignorant Theists. I hav said frequently, and I say again, that ignorance and belief should be inseparable. They certainly are. Mr. Charlesworth claims "Atheism teaches that everyone in society has an obligation to his neighbor, and that he can never be held to be moral if such trust is broken." This saying, simplified, is, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." How foolish it is to plagiarize moral precepts from Christianity, and call them teachings of Atheism. To the extent that Christianity and Atheism proclaim morality, to that extent they are beneficial. But they both extend further—in opposit directions—and insist that there is and is not a God, respectivly. Brother Charlesworth, you are amusing. You hav stolen the fruits of experience and offered them for inspection as the tenets of Atheism. You say: "Atheism would preserve man from lying, stealing, and murdering, not by fear of the anger of God, but because these crimes make this life itself a cause of misery." Substitute reason for Atheism, and all will agree with you. Is it true that "the Theist, who has his thoughts fixed upon heaven, generally regards this life as a vale of tears; . . . . therefore, his only desire is to quit this world as soon as possible?" How many are you acquainted with who are in a hurry to inspect heaven? Can you not see that your statement is as foolish as the belief in the "real presence?" There are undoubtedly many subjects Mr. Charlesworth and the writer can agree upon, but unfortunately our friend has in his "Plea" muddled Agnosticism, Atheism, reason, etc., to such an extent that at present little can be found worth agreeing with or even discussing.

W. M. Lockwood, in this paper, Feb. 2, 1889, furnished a very cute reply to the writer's article, "Frigid Atheism." Mr. Lockwood fails to comprehend the definition of God I gave, viz., incomprehensible intelligence. If friend Lockwood will carefully read once more the article which he attempted to answer, he will ascertain that, when I gave this definition, I simply meant that, if there is a God, he, she, or it must be intelligent, and, as I cannot understand the intelligence portrayed by the universe, I used the words incomprehensible intelligence. I would ask our friend, if it were proved to him that God did exist, and he was confined to present evidence relating to character, etc., of God, would he not say that God was what I claim he is, if he exists?

While all other names are forgotten, millions of ages hence, the name of Lockwood will be heard and his memory cherished, from "Green-land's icy mountains to India's coral strand," from "pole to pole," and, perhaps, throughout the universe, for he is most assuredly the first person in this vale of ignorance who has succeeded in intelligently (though incomprehensibly) stating exactly what is life, electricity, and the attraction of gravitation. Let us see that his "grave's kept green."

C. L. Haskell is the only one who has replied to me who has apparently grasped the full meaning expressed in my article aforesaid. Consequently he has little to say. Let us examin that little. He asks if "Atheism should really come to know some day what is life, electricity, gravitation, would our ignorant (Agnostic) friend be an Atheist at once?" Why does Mr. Haskell ask this question March 9, 1889, when, on Feb. 2, 1889, W. M. Lockwood (another Atheist) emphatically, successfully, and economically, explained to the world precisely what is life, etc.? Mr. Haskell should hav modified his question. In reply, will say that "our ignorant (Agnostic) friend" will believe there is a God when it has been proved, and will believe there is no God when that has been proved. I propose to rely on evidence which proves. I asked, "Why—if there is no God, no immortal soul—perpetuate the human race?" Mr. Haskell replies, "Why, if there is a God?" If there is a God we certainly hav an immortal soul. Therefore, the more children we hav to enjoy in this world the more enjoyment we will hav in the next. It givs me great pleasure to find Mr. Haskell admits that "intelligence is force, life is force." This admission from a professor givs strength to my theory of incomprehensible intelligence. Professor Haskell says, "As long as people are satisfied with the idea that 'God did it,' as the cause of a thing, they never study nature to find out the real cause." This statement is false. Agassiz believed "God did it," yet he perhaps studied nature as closely as has Professor Haskell. I agree with Mr. Haskell that there is no harm—apparently direct—in stealing $5 from a person who will never miss it. But hav we children to whom we should say, "My child, if you ever find an opportunity of taking money from one who will never suffer from losing it, take it?" Professor Haskell knows more than the writer—he has more of "a smattering of philosophy"—he knows there is no God. Talmage and Haskell—two great extremes.

EDWIN N. BEECHER.

A Silly Story About Dr. Franklin.

To hunt through a haystack to find a needle that was never there is an absurd task. Yet that is essentially what is involved in an undertaking to explode the goody-goody story that the final triumph of the American Revolution was due to the magnanimity of Pope Pius VI.

The story is in substance this: For two years Benjamin Franklin strove in vain at the French court for an audience with King Louis XVI. in the hope of obtaining help for the American colonies. One morning he was surprised by the chamberlain announcing that the king had concluded not only to grant him an audience, but to assist the struggling colonies. Franklin immediately knelt in the center of the anteroom, and with streaming eyes thanked God for this change in the heart of the king. At this moment the papal nuncio was announced, and, as he entered the room, the chamberlain informed Franklin that while his thanks were due to God, yet the visible means used was this very nuncio, who, at the express command of God's vicegerent, had informed the king that the colonies ought to be helped.

This story comes from a Catholic source, and is not only inherently improbable, but is doubtless a fabrication, like that of the alleged letter of Bishop Fenwick, portraying a scene at the deathbed of Thomas Paine, first published in the United States Catholic Magazine in 1846, shortly after the bishop's death. The Fenwick letter has been accepted even by Protestants as proof that Paine was not only "afraid to die," but was "ready to call upon God and upon Christ for mercy, and ready, perhaps in the next minute, to blaspheme"—in short that "he died a drunken, beastly, and cowardly death" (see New York Observer, Nov. 1, 1877, or Ingersoll's "Paine Vindicated"). The forged letter of Bishop Fenwick says that Paine denounced Jesus Christ as a "cunning knave and an impostor," and that, growing more furious, he twisted in his bed, "uttering all the while the bitterest imprecations."

Anyone who has read the "Age of Reason" knows that Paine never could hav said that Jesus Christ was a knave and an impostor, and his Christian physician, Dr. Manley, testifies that Paine "never indulged in the practice of profane swearing."

Since the exposure of that fabrication in THE TRUTH SEEKER (reprinted as a supplement to Colonel Ingersoll's "Paine Vindicated"), what Catholic or Protestant has dared to maintain the authenticity of the letter? Counselor Richard H. Clarke, of New York city, who reproduced it in the "Lives of Deceased Bishops," commending it as one of Bishop Fenwick's most noteworthy acts, is silent under the exposure. Nor is there any response to the challenge made in 1883, to produce the original manuscript (said to be in the archives of Loyola College, Baltimore), and prove that Bishop Fenwick wrote it.

The story of little George Washington and his hatchet has had its day. The other one about General Washington going out of his warm winter quarters to pray, kneeling on a snowbank, is still current in Sunday-school literature; but the well-attested fact that Washington would sometimes swear is piously suppressed. And now comes the apocryphal story about Dr. Franklin falling on his knees in the ante-room of the court of Paris, in the presence of the chamberlain, and with streaming eyes thanking God for changing the heart of the king. Credat Cardinal Gibbons!

Not only is the story incompatible with the well-known character of Franklin, but with all the historical records. We hav the letters of Count Vergennes, the French minister, and of Franklin himself in regard to the aid rendered by France, and in none of them is there a hint about the agency of the nuncio or the influence of the pope in the transaction.

Furthermore, we know that, at the instance of Thomas Paine, Congress sent Colonel Laurens, of South Carolina, with a memorial prepared by Paine himself, to be presented to the king of France, imploring aid for the American cause. Colonel Laurens went to Paris in February, 1781, accompanied by Paine. Finding the minister of foreign affairs too dilatory in submitting the matter to the king, Laurens resolved to go directly to the king himself. There was a public levee, and the American officer was there in uniform. He was presented to the king, who only expected the passing formalities of an introduction. But Laurens made a little speech to this effect:

> I am just from the army of Washington. I know well its condition; it is fully set forth in this memorial. Unless speedy succor is sent to my country, the weapon I now wear at my side as the ally of your majesty, may be drawn as the subject of Great Britain against you and France.

The king was dumfounded, but soon rallied and made a favorable reply. The result was that $2,500,000 in silver coin was immediately sent to America as a free gift from the king, with a promis of further aid, which however was rendered unnecessary by the speedy achievement of American Independence.

Further search in this Roman Catholic haystack will not be made until some evidence is presented that there is any needle in it.

Meanwhile, let Catholic churchmen prepare to defend their own system against internal as well as external assaults. The learned Jesuit, Hardouin, who died in 1729, at the age of eighty-three, left a manuscript in Latin, which was published in 1766, in which he solemnly asserted and plausibly maintained that there was absolutely no primitiv church history beyond that contained in the New Testament—that everything else, purporting to emanate from the fathers of the church, was fabricated by the Benedictine monks after the revival of learning.

ANTIC.

Italy's Premier and His Laws.

Florence Correspondence of the Sun.

Unlike his predecessor, Depretis, Crispi is the antithesis of the Italian political temperament, a temperament formed of calculation, flexibility, and ambiguity. The former always sought to efface himself, preferring reality to appearances, whereas Crispi is fond of pomp and effect. Blunt and rough to a degree unusual in an Italian, he likes to make brusque sallies and striking coups. He is gifted with a strong will, audacity, and, what is sometimes a strength in politics, unlimited self-confidence.

With regard to Catholicism and the papacy, his sentiments are strongly anti-clerical. He is a violent sectarian. He hates not only the Vatican and the church, but everything which represents religious sentiment. His organ, the Riforma, has always written with great animosity against religious ideas in every form. The whole thing is, in its eyes, one immense farce to which an end must be put. With many Italian radicals anti-clericalism has served as a lever and a handle, but in Crispi it exists as an intense passion, a fixed idea.

Crispi's first move took the form of a law, which, under the pretext of reorganizing the administrativ elections, was really directed against the influence of the clericals in municipal bodies, and aimed at introducing sectarian and other elements more in accordance with his policy.

This preliminary skirmish was followed by the new Penal Code just approved, which certainly contains some striking provisions. Under the heading of "Crimes Against the Fatherland," we find: "Article 101. Whosoever commits an action tending to subject the state, or one of its parts, to a foreign power, or to alter its unity, is punished by hard labor for life." The wording of this article is so elastic and flexible that, if interpreted literally, the most harmless acts, such as the ordinary criticisms of the press or the protests of political speakers, would render them liable to trial for high treason. What does the expression "tending to" (diretto a) mean? What is considered a "foreign power?" One outside the frontiers, or is the papacy included in this category? Whether this law was expressly devised to chastise the church, as the clericals maintain, we cannot say, but further on we find four articles framed for their especial benefit.

Article 173 provides that ministers of religion who in the exercise of their functions publicly censure or outrage the institutions and laws of the state, or the acts of the authorities, shall be punished by not more than one year's imprisonment and 1,000 francs fine.

Article 174 provides that ministers of religion who, misusing the moral force accruing to them from their ministry, incite to rebellion against the institutions and laws of the state, or the acts of the authorities, or otherwise to trangression of public duties, or who interfere with the legitimate rights of succession, or bring discord into family circles, are punishable with six months' to three years' imprisonment and 500 to 3,000 francs fine, and the temporary or perpetual interdict from their ecclesiastical benefice.

Article 175 provides that ministers of religion who, outside their religion, take part against the government, are punishable with three months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 to 1,500 francs.

Article 176 provides that ministers of religion who, in the exercise or by the abuse of their ministry, commit any crime, are liable to the punishment of the crime augmented by from one-sixth to one-third, save when their position as ministers has already been taken into consideration by the law.

In these articles two points are worthy of notice. An Italian priest falls doubly under the arm of the law, both as a priest in the exercise of his functions and as a simple citizen. He may become liable to a criminal prosecution, not only while fulfilling a function of his ministry, but also, what is much more serious, when he misuses the "moral force accruing from his ministry." As a journalist, a writer, speaking at a public meeting, in fact, whenever as a private individual a priest exercises his rights as a citizen apart from his ministry, he is liable to fall under article 174. Practically, this law excludes the priest from the benefits of the common law and the rights of citizenship.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 4, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The Inauguration Centennial.

While this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is being circulated throughout the country the people in and around New York are engaged in celebrating the one-hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of the first president of the Republic—one Washington, as the French priests teach children, who assisted Lafayette in achieving the independence of the country from British rule. The city is on a three days' spree, or racket, or toot, and all creation is here with the perfectly superfluous purpose of helping the New Yorkers along. Owing to this celebration THE TRUTH SEEKER goes to press three days earlier than usual, though whether that will facilitate its distribution through the mail depends upon how soon the inauguration patriotism attacks the mail clerks.

As before intimated, the celebration has taken a decidedly pious twist. On Tuesday, the anniversary day, the churches will hold thanksgiving services, pursuant to proclamations by President Harrison and Governor Hill. Mr. Harrison will attend St. Paul's chapel (admission by Lavender ticket) where he will listen to a processional hymn, a te deum, the benedicite, creed and prayers, a recessional hymn, and a sermon. The literary exercises in Wall street will open with a Protestant invocation and close with a Roman Catholic benediction. This division will save any hard feeling between the two sects, and the politicians who hav engineered the scheme will keep solid with them both. About the only thing that will not begin with prayer and end with a benediction i s the ball in the evening.

The country is hearing a great deal about George Washington, and all available biographies of his life and histories of the Revolution are being rewritten for the columns of the newspapers. The idea has gained currency among children—ranging in age from six to sixty—that Washington was the only man in the country one hundred years ago, and that by the power of his single arm he made the country free. Until after the celebration it would be cruel to destroy this nursery idea. The people in the worst predicament, however, are the editors of religious journals. Their overburdening trouble is that they cannot prove satisfactorily to any but Methodists that Washington was a church-member and communicant. His ulterior relations were with the Episcopal church, but he never went to communion, and no one seems to know just what he thought of the Thirty-Nine Articles. There is a dim tradition that he once ate bread and wine with a Presbyterian audience, but this story rests on so little direct testimony that it is generally regarded as apocryphal. One of the journals aforesaid, after reviewing the procurable evidence that Washington acquiesced in more than the outward forms of Christianity as exemplified by the Episcopal church—which, Ingersoll says, with a few more ceremonies would be Roman Catholic; with a few less, nothing—consoles itself with the reflection that, while it would be comforting to know positivly that Washington was a member of a Christian church, yet it is something to be able to say that "he was not tainted with the unbelief of Jefferson and Franklin and Paine, or the French Infidelity of this day." But this, in our opinion, is just where the religious journal errs. With the exception of Jefferson, who was a Materialist, the men mentioned were both Deists, and that, too, was all the religion Washington possessed. There is no direct evidence that he believed in the Christian religion at all. He never mentioned Jesus Christ in his state papers, and though he sometimes spoke in complimentary terms of Christianity, it was as a politician, and his words of no more serious import than were Jefferson's pecuniary contributions to the churches. Washington attended church, as was the custom of the time, but he always retired before communion, and never, during the previous services, was known to kneel, as a Christian would. Bishop White, who preached in the church Washington attended, testifies to this, and Dr. Abercrombie, rector of the Philadelphia Episcopal church which Washington frequented, and who knew him intimately and well, bears emphatic testimony that Washington was a Deist. The Rev. Dr. Willson, of Albany, who in 1831 gathered much information as to Washington's religious views from personal friends of the first president, came to the conclusion that "he was a Deist and nothing more." Dr. Ashbel Green, chaplain to Congress during all the time of its sitting in Philadelphia, who was well acquainted with the president, and dined with him nearly every week on special invitation, sorrowfully said after Washington's death, that "while Washington was very deferential to religion and its ceremonies, like nearly all the founders of the Republic, he was not a Christian, but a Deist." Gouverneur Morris, who claimed to be in Washington's secrets, told Thomas Jefferson that Washington believed no more in Christianity than he (Morris) did. There is, therefore, much positiv testimony that Washington was a Deist, and none that he was a Christian. And the absence of any proof that he believed in the Christian system is very strong negativ evidence that he did not. He believed in a God as did Paine and Franklin, and their Deism was also his religion. He was not a Christian.

Of course we are sorry for the religious journals, but truth is of much greater importance than any glory the church can derive from association with illustrious names. There were a good many Christians who helped the Revolution along, and did splendid work in organizing the government, but the cold, stubborn fact sticks out that the four men to whom this country owes its largest debts of gratitude were not of that church—Washington, Paine, and Franklin, Deists; Thomas Jefferson, Materialist. The heresy of the three last named is generally conceded. That of the first must also be granted, if religious historians hav any regard for accuracy of expression.

There is one thing in this great celebration, aside from the useless pageantry and general infantil proceedings, that arouses our indignation. We know as well now as we shall after Mr. Depew makes his great oration, that Washington will be crowned with inimitable glory; that Franklin will be gently commended; that Jefferson's political work will be remembered, but Paine's labors, Paine's sacrifices, Paine's incomparable services to the cause of liberty, will be forgotten and passed in silence because he told the people, and proved it, that the Bible is not the writing of a God, but a composition by ignorant men. The luster of Jefferson's name is dimmed in the eyes of the church by his philosophic writings; there is a haze over Franklin's fame, for the same reason; and Paine, for speaking out boldly, is damned without hope of pardon. Yet Washington might hav been the author of the "Age of Reason," and done no violence to his religious belief. But if he had revealed his real sentiments, as did Paine, we doubt if this Centennial celebration would ever hav been held, so blind, so unreasoning, so unjust, so bigoted, so infamous is Christian prejudice. He would hav been slandered and shunned, and his services forgotten, disparaged, or denied. That is the reward the church givs to the great ones of the earth who cannot accept her false and irrational scheme of religion. Paine's memory has suffered and must yet suffer from this bigotry, though not forever. Reason, knowledge, Liberality, are fast spreading throughout the land, and when this trinity shall triumph, Thomas Paine will receive the honor due him.

The Inspiration of the Bible.

We hav received the subjoined inquiry, which is of sufficient importance to be answered prominently:

"LACON, ILL., April 4, 1889.

"MR. EDITOR: Will you please tell me through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER when and where the Bible, as it now is, was adopted; that is, when and where it was voted to be inspired? In what work may I find an account of the proceedings of that council? J. S. WARREN."

The Bible is a literary patchwork, a compilation of books written when and where and by whom is not known, except in a few instances. Its gathering together went on for centuries, and the two great sects of Christendom do not even now agree as to which books are authentic and inspired. The council of Trent, in 1546, settled the Catholic canon; the Westminster assembly, in 1647, settled it for the Protestants. Previous to these "settlements," a good many councils had also "settled" the matter—the first council of which we hav authentic history being that of Laodicea in 345. This was not a general council, but as its list was subsequently adopted by the church, it was virtually the first general action on the contents of the Bible. The council of Nice, in 325, is thought by many to hav acted on the canon, but this is not sure. The council was called to condemn Arianism, which it did. Tradition also relates that the council considered the Bible, and found which books were inspired by placing them all under the table, when the ones written by the Lord leaped out from under, the others remaining on the floor. The story is not generally believed nowadays. Between the council of Laodicea and the Westminster assembly the canon of the Bible was the subject of much councilary deliberation, and was changed as suited the churchmen voting on it. One council would vote some books in; the next would vote them out and others in. It is a confusing and conflicting history, and shows that if God wrote the Bible he took very little care of it afterward.

The "inspiration" of the scriptures was an afterthought, or "growth in grace," of the early Christian fathers, and the idea was obtained from the surrounding "pagans," who had their inspired writers and speakers. When the books of the Bible were brought into the world no one considered them to be inspired, as we understand the term. Ezra and the scribes who followed him whittled away at the Old Testament books as they thought proper, and did not refrain, says Davidson, from changing what had been written, or inserting fresh matter. The Samaritan Bible, consisting only of the Pentateuch, was the "holiest" Bible of the Jews, yet they did not consider it inspired, but only worthy of special reverence. In compiling the Old Testament, "divine origin" was not the test of admission, but, what are the doctrins of the book? is it orthodox? and so forth. Philo was the first to claim inspiration for the Old Testament, and he followed in defining it as a kind of "ecstasy" in which the prophet speaks only as God directs. But it was not until A.D. 100 or thereabouts that the opinion was generally held that the Old Testament was inspired.

When the books of the New Testament were being written and debated in the latter part of the second century, they were not considered inspired by the churches. The early Christians considered the Old Testament as inspired, but not the New. When Paul spoke of the "holy scriptures" he meant exclusivly the Old Testament, says Westcott. The first instance of the canonization (or authoritativ recognition) of any of the books of the New Testament was about 170 A.D., and that, says Davidson, was simply a brotherly recognition of Paul after the long quarrel between his friends and the friends of Peter. The name New Testament was first given the collection in A.D. 210, or thereabouts, by Tertullian. Irenæus was the real founder of the New Testament canon. Of the gospels, Luke was probably written about 170 A.D.; Mark about 175; John about 178, and Matthew about 180. Irenæus flourished about this time and up to A.D. 200, and it is about the latter date, or a few years after, that the idea of the inspiration of the New Testament became prevalent. The early Christian church, says Dr. T. M. Lindsay, seems to hav simply taken over the Jewish views about the inspiration of the Old Testament, and, when the canon of the New Testament was complete, transferred the same characteristics to the New Testament writings. That is, they first regarded the books as doctrinal efforts, worthy, perhaps, of reverence, and then gradually came to believe that the books were inspired. Since then the idea has grown, and all sorts of schools of theology and sects hav been founded by variously interpreting the scriptures according to their notions of what inspiration is, and of what parts of the Bible are inspired only in spirit or in chapter, word, and letter.

It will be seen from this that voting on inspiration did not take the form which our correspondent imagins. The formation of the canon was accomplished by vote and papal decree. The partisans of a book would bring its claims before the council, hold that it was as much inspired as any other work, and demand its admission into the canon. Then the council would vote to see whether or not it should be admitted. If it was, its claim to inspiration was necessarily admitted. If it was not selected, its claim to inspiration suffered. Scores of books were thus subjected to vote, with the result seen in the Douay and King James's versions. Many books were once in the canon which we do not now find, and of those we hav the early Christians rejected many. The various councils decided variously, and the Christian world submitted, never perceiving the grotesque absurdity of an assembly attempting to decide by vote a fact in the past. Admitting, for a moment, that there exists a God who could inspire books, it follows clearly that these books are either inspired by him or they are not. As this inspiration either took place or not many years before the question was brought up in council, how was it possible for the members of the council to find out? There were no witnesses to the inspiration, and could not be. It is, too, impossible to judge of supernatural events except by supernatural methods. How can man measure God? and what did the council of Laodicea know about what God did three hundred years before? Man has absolutely no way of judging of God's doings, and to vote whether God did or did not do such a thing is certainly a "grotesque absurdity."

Histories of these councils can be had in almost any public library, in any considerable work treating of the canon of the Bible. As good a small book as any on the history of the Bible is Bronson Keeler's.

Desire a Slight Rectified.

The National Reform Association (God-in-the-Constitution party) held last week a conference at Pittsburgh, Pa. Among the resolutions passed was one requesting President Harrison to mention Christ in state papers, particularly in thanksgiving proclamations.

If the "reformers" could hav their way, our state and national officers would hav to cite as authority God and Christ and Sts. Peter and Paul and Timothy and some of the Christian fathers and a few ministers every time they drew up a proclamation or vetoed a piece of legislation. Then they would force the Bible into the Constitution of the states, make the rules of the Jewish theocracy our common law, and transfer the statutes of Moses to the penal codes. They did this once up in the New England colonies, and these "reformers" are trying to do it again not only there, but in all the states and in the general government as well.

The Christian religion seems to inevitably make people tyrants. Christians cannot be content with believing what they choose for themselvs; they must force everybody else to follow them. They think that they are commissioned to run the world—to poke their noses into everyone else's affairs—to dominate and dictate and swell around as as close imitations of the Lord almighty as their means permit. This would be a very fine country indeed if the Christians could only work their pure sweet will with our statute books.

Railroad Hypocrisy.

What the daily papers call a Vanderbilt Sunday law goes into effect May 1st on the railroads controled by that family. Beginning on that day a great proportion of their Sunday freight trains will cease to run, and will be laid up for twenty-four hours wherever they happen to be. This will reduce the number of Sunday workers on the roads from 33 1–3 to 50 per cent. As the train hands are paid by the trip, it will also reduce the amount paid out in wages on this class of trains the same amount. The reasons for the new order are stated by Chauncey Depew to be religious.

This may be so, but it looks as though there was a large and very dark-colored African in the woodpile. The order goes into effect only on the roads where the competition is insignificant. West of Chicago, the trains will desecrate the Sabbath as usual, for the reason, as Mr. Depew states it, that competing roads cannot be brought into the arrangement. "The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern," he says, "is so surrounded by competitors that it would lose half its business if we should try it there, and we can't afford that, you know." That is to say, religion is all very well when it costs nothing, but cannot be afforded when a pecuniary penalty is attached. Then again, Mr. Depew will employ no more train men, but will move all freight with the same number of crews, forcing them of course to work harder and longer on week days. That is, he will do the same business, and save one-seventh of the wages. Thus do religion and economy work together for the good of those who love the Lord.

It is a long time since a plainer piece of hypocrisy came to public notice. No religion, or regard for Sunday, is shown where it will cost a cent, but only where money can be made by it. The sincerity of religious motivs exhibited in this way is certainly open to question, and the other roads which hope to follow the Central's example are just as hypocritical as the Vanderbilt crowd. They will respect Sunday, they say, if they find it economical to do so; otherwise, not. If the Christian devil were around nowadays, how he would grin at the Sabbatarianism of these people!

Address the Senators.

The bill to review the commitment by police justices of children to religious institutions has passed the assembly by a large majority. It now goes to the senate, where Gerry and the managers of the eleemosynary institutions which subsist on public money and are conducted in the interest of private religious purposes are supposed to hav strong influence.

To assist in getting the bill through this pious and conservativ body, those who favor it should write to the senators from their districts urging its passage.

A Heretic in Missouri.

The Rev. Henry Truro Bray, pastor of the Christ Episcopal church at Boonton, Mo., has apostatized from the Christian sect, and intellectually rejects all the creeds and dogmas promulgated by that sect. In a letter to his bishop asking to be deposed from the ministry, Mr. Bray makes a confession of *un*faith. He says:

"1. I cannot believe for an instant in a special creation for mankind.

"2. I do not accept the story of the fall of man.

"3. I do not for an instant believe in the doctrin of vicarious atonement.

"4. I do not believe in eternal punishment, nor in a fixed state after death.

"5. I do not for a moment believe that Christians possess an exclusivly divine revelation, nor that their scriptures are perfect or complete.

"6. I do not believe in a literal resurrection of the dead.

"7. I protest against making belief in the deity of Christ an essential part of the faith."

Mr. Bray's present religious belief is simple Theism, with a belief also in immortality. He explains his Theism thus: "God fills the universe. Force is the measure and the ultimate of matter—the measure and the ultimate of all existence. God is universally extended, conscious force. He fills the whole. There can be no point in space, nor spirit, essence, nor atom of matter, which is not full of deity. If God is not everywhere, then you hav something greater than God—space. And to acknowledge anything greater than God is to acknowledge that there is no God." Probably it will not be many years before Mr. Bray confesses that his Theism is based on as slim a foundation of fact as was his Christianity. A great many preachers hav left the church, clinging to "God" as to a sheet anchor, only to later abandon their belief as a chimera equally false as the theological doctrins of the church.

But Mr. Bray does not, he says, stand alone in his heresy. His new views are substantially those held by the "Broad" churchmen of England. And, outside of that sect, he finds unbelief to be widespread. "I know this of my own knowledge," he told a reporter. "I hav had many ministers admit their unbelief to me. I hav had avowals of doubt from preachers of many denominations, even from a Catholic priest. In all the places where I hav been I hav found some man preaching the gospel who, when I took him to task for certain utterances, confessed that he did not himself credit what he preached. There is one man who is now a bishop, with whom I was intimate, who told me candidly that he did not believe the doctrins of which he was an exponent."

This is a very encouraging state of affairs. Let the good work go on.

Editorial Notes.

We learn from La Tribuna of Rome, by way of Mr. Bradlaugh's National Reformer, that the date for the inauguration, or dedication, of the monument to Giordano Bruno has been positivly fixed for Sunday, June 9th. The postponement was determined on to avoid clashing with the opening of the Paris Exhibition. The inaugural discourse is to be pronounced in the Campo de Fiori—the spot where Giordano Bruno was burnt—by the eminent professor, Giovanni Bovio. On March 31st a deputation from the Bruno Committee was received by the Marchese Guiccioli, the syndic of Rome, who has promised to facilitate in every possible way the work of the committee. This postponement will giv America time to make up her share of the expense—$1,000. All but $74.25 of this amount has been sent in, in response to appeals by Mr. Wakeman and Mr. Stevens, and the balance will undoubtedly be speedily forthcoming. It will be a great day that sees this monument dedicated, and the Roman Catholic church must be blind indeed if she does not see in this honoring of one of the victims of her brutal fury the nearness of the end of her power. Only a few years ago the conception of such a monument was considered a dream impossible of realization. Two years ago, though the statue was nearly completed, the church could prevent its erection. Now, in this year of her lord and savior 1889, she must stand by and see the world honor a man whom she put to death, and she cannot command power to prevent it. Rome of to-day is not the Rome of A.D. 1600.

A man and his wife are in jail in Jackson, Mo., for killing their seventeen-months-old infant in response to orders from the Lord. They are religious fanatics and the man belongs to the Baptist church. He told a reporter: "We thought we must giv up our child in order to show what was the true church. I expect I had better go back a little further and tell you something else first. About a week before our child's death I commenced praying, and went out one night in the field and got on my knees and prayed, and felt that God had heard my prayers. A night or so afterward I went a little farther out in the field and got down on my knees and prayed again, and while I was praying there appeared to me a star in the west, which looked like it was as big as the moon. It lit up the way for me. I came back to the house and went to bed, and my mind was still to God. A day or two after this I was out in the field and the sky was cloudy. I asked God to move the clouds from the sun that I could see it, and while I was praying with my face toward the south, and kept looking for the sun, it came out bright in the west. I turned to look at it, and felt like I was called of God to go and preach, and tears filled my eyes. I got up and went to the house and told my wife I was satisfied, and that I was called to preach, and then I prayed that a reformation might take place to the ends of the earth by the outpouring of God's holy spirit." In answer to the question why he killed his child, he said they both felt it to be a religious duty, and believed that Christ would raise him again. The mother committed murder by hugging the babe while the father was on his knees praying. It is a sad and shameful case, the result solely of religion.

The San Diego Union and Daily Bee prints this oracular paragraph: "As age creeps on and Bob Ingersoll approaches the span of years allotted to the life of man, he appears to be less blasphemous. He is heard less often on the rostrum, and much of his old-time virility is lacking. Age brings wisdom, even to the chief Agnostic." This is the latest echo of a cry that resounded from all the Christian pulpits about a year ago, and was taken up by all the Christian journals. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll (the person we suppose the Union and Bee means) was reported weak and feeble physically, and it was asserted that there was a growing disposition on his part to lay down his arms, and even to join the church. The subject was brought to Colonel Ingersoll's attention by the Editor of The Truth Seeker, and the great Agnostic had this to say: "I do not think the Christian press has been very solicitous about my health. Neither do I think that my health will ever add to theirs. The fact is, I am exceedingly well, and my throat is better than it has been for many years. Anyone who imagins that I am disposed to lay down my arms can read my Reply to Dr. Field in the November number of the North American Review. I see no particular difference in myself, except this: that my hatred of superstition becomes a little more intense; on the other hand, I see more clearly, that all the superstitions were naturally produced, and I am now satisfied that every man does as he must, including priests and editors of religious papers." The editor of the Union and Bee ought to be satisfied with that reply, but if he is not we might say to him this much: That whatever blasphemy the colonel may hav uttered, if there is such a thing as blasphemy, he stands to a little more strongly than ever; that if he is heard less often on the rostrum, he is heard more frequently and widely in the magazines and papers; and if he lacks any of his former virility Dr. Field and Mr. Gladstone and Cardinal Manning and the rest of the Christian world hav not found it out. Age brings its wisdom to Colonel Ingersoll as to other men, and the wisdom is shown in a more and more intense hatred of superstition, which superstition, if we are not mightily mistaken, includes the larger part of the Christian religion.

Letters from Friends.

DuBois, Pa., April 3, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I made a mistake in the cattle question. I will giv the answer 144. W. I. Kirk.

Milford, Mass., April 15, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I would not be without your paper. Particularly, its articles against contemptible Catholicism are grand, and deal with the matter (for it is only matter) as it should be dealt with. I just love to see you handle those narrow-minded dupes who delight in practicing the Roman Catholic fizzle (not faith) without gloves, so to speak.

L. T. Tougas.

Eau Claire, Wis., April 14, 1889.

Mr. Editor: Mr. J. H. Wood's letter in reply to me shows clearly that he is "almost persuaded" to be an Anarchist. He believes in no taxes. So do I. But he wants government to issue all the money. Why would it not be simpler, cheaper, and better, for every individual to issue his own money, to circulate at actual value, as ascertained by free competition? C. L. James.

Clinton, Kan., April 15, 1889.

Mr. Editor: For the inclosed twenty-five cents please send me the Truth Seeker Annual for 1889. I know of no Liberal publication that I could accept in preference to The Truth Seeker. I am not as yet a subscriber, but expect to be soon. Through the kindness of Dr. E. G. Macy, a subscriber, I hav been reading it for some time. I not only enjoy reading it, but feel as though every Liberal should do what he can to help the cause. I would hav been a subscriber ere this, but circumstances financially prevented. When I become a subscriber you will hear from me occasionally, if my contributions prove worthy of publication. I had a short discussion with the Rev. D. White, of Lawrence, Kan., in the daily Tribune, published in Lawrence. Mr. White assailed the character and doctrins of Colonel Ingersoll, to which I replied by way of vindication. He replied only once. I tried my best to get him to stay with me, but he was not built that way. It all started out of an effort of the university students to hav Colonel Ingersoll address the institute. C. V. Williams.

South Butte, Mont., April 1, 1889.

Mr. Editor: Please send me three copies of The Truth Seeker containing an editorial in regard to the new states, showing how we could introduce a resolution taxing church property, at the constitutional convention, to be held on the Fourth of July. We are trying to do a little work in that direction. I also succeeded in getting a petition of 127 names against the Blair bill, and received a letter from Mr. J. H. Carter, our representativ. Thinking that it may encourage others to do good in that direction if it was published, I will send you an exact copy of it. Trusting you will send me the three back numbers by return mail, I am,

Very respectfully, C. A. Lindsay.

House of Representativs, Washington, D. C.,
March 21, 1889.

C. A. Lindsay, Esq., Butte City, Mont., Dear Sir: Your favor of recent date, inclosing petitions directed to the Senate of the United States, is at hand, with two petitions inclosed, as stated. I will take great pleasure in presenting the same to the Senate and urging careful consideration therefor. I will be glad to hear from you and your fellow-workmen of Montana with reference to any matter with which they may be concerned. I will always take pleasure in serving you. Very truly yours, T. H. Carter.

Salina, Kan., March 11, 1889.

Mr. Editor: "Shoulder arms; forward march." I am in favor of "opening the museums on Sunday." Let the Liberals use their best endeavor to organize literary societies all over the country, and keep those from adjourning that are running, and just change the time of meeting on Sunday. It makes no difference whether you can get a building or not. A grove meeting will draw better anyway. Recollect that if the majority of any society is in favor of adjourning that will make no difference, if you can get a quorum of from five to seven; seven is the usual number that it takes to constitute a quorum. You need not be a bit uneasy that such a scheme will not draw. Now, it will be impossible to even interest the young men and women on our side unless we hav a regular place for them to meet on Sunday during the summer season. We cannot even interest our own children, much less the public, without this step. In this is what makes the church such a lively corpse. The young folks don't care how dull the sermons, so they can meet together and hav a good time. Now is a good time to make such a move, while the Blair "Sunday Rest bill" is being agitated.

John W. Abbott.

Welland, Can., April 20, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I am in the eighty-fourth year of my age. I hav been a subscriber to The Truth Seeker for the last ten years. The mental benefit I hav received from the reading of the many able and instructiv articles that hav appeared in its columns is not to be computed in money. Though not wealthy, I will send you another year's subscription, and hope many of our Liberal friends who are able will do as much.

It would be a sorry sight to see such an able advocate of science, sense, and reason go to the wall at this time for want of friends. Then let us who hav in a measure been emancipated out of some of the traditions of the past do what we are able to enlighten our less fortunate brothers and sisters. I hav been deterred from buying books of you, for the reason that a book from the United States by mail to Canada finds its way to our custom house, and the duty is often out of proportion to the price of the book. I hav had to pay twenty cents custom dues on your twenty-five cent Annual or Almanac. I am an advocate of unrestricted freedom of trade and friendship between Canada and our (not cousins) brothers and sisters in the United States.

John Ray.

Cleveland, O., April 16, 289.

Mr. Editor: Last Sunday the local Union had the pleasure of listening to an interesting lecture by Mrs. F. C. Reynolds, on, "Woman: Past, Present, and Future," which was presented in an attractiv and convincing manner. Mrs. Reynolds seems thoroughly in earnest, and draws a lifelike picture of what woman has been, is, and may be. In the first place she showed what an obstacle the Bible and its teachings had been to the progress of that sex, and how they had been degraded under its influence, and that in spite of it she (woman) had made her way upward and onward in the scale of being. In illustrating what woman might be she gave many common-sense suggestions for the guidance of her sisters. Her pat remarks brought out frequent applause, and the audience seemed much pleased with the lecture, its treatment, and with the lecturer. We understand that she and her jovial other half of domesticity are on their way to settle in Washington territory, and apprehend it will be a fortunate neighborhood which gets them for neighbors.

F. S. Merrill, Secretary.

Monument, Ore., March 31, 289.

Mr. Editor: Thanks for your friendly letter and information it contained. The people in this country are ripe for the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and a man capable of teaching and defending them could organize auxiliary leagues and find many subscribers to the Liberal press in this part of the country, extending from Fossil, which contains about seventy-five families; Lone Rock, containing about fifty families; Hay Stack valley, containing about thirty families; Monument, twenty families; Hamilton, thirty families; Long Creek, one hundred families; Fox Valley, eighty families; John Day and Canyon City, one hundred families, and Prairie City, one hundred families. Could you find a competent man who would be willing to come here to labor for the cause among these people, I think he would find it profitable to himself, the press, and the cause.

His best way to reach these places would be to come to Arlington by rail, and take the stage from there to Fossil, which is about sixty miles from Arlington. From Fossil to Lone Rock, twenty miles; from Lone Rock to Hay Stack, fifteen miles; from Hay Stack to Monument, eighteen miles; from Monument to Hamilton, nine miles; from Hamilton to Long Creek, twelve miles; from Long Creek to Fox Valley, twelve miles; from Fox Valley to John Day, eighteen miles; from John Day to Prairie City, twelve miles.

An agent for the Liberal press and authority from the Secular Union could make a home among these people and Americanize the whole country. Henry Burstow.

Sulphur Springs, Tex., April 11, 1889.

Mr. Editor: While working against the Blair bill, why not substitute something for the reading of the Bible and prayer in our schools? I propose physical culture. Instead of a chapter from a volume musty with age, listened to in stupid silence, bring a glad light to the eye and a smile to the lips by telling these embryo men and women of the laws of nature, of the joy caused by the strict observance of the laws of health, and of the suffering and death by slighting them. Tell this pale youth, with narrow chest and stooping shoulders, who is constantly poring over his books, to throw aside his books a few hours every day—to run, ride, practice gymnastic exercises, tend the horses and cattle, or plow. Hav the slender girl, with consumptiv, flushed cheeks, throw off her corset, tight shoes, and heavy skirts. Let her romp with her brothers. There is not much danger of her getting too much fresh air. Teach boys and girls the importance of deep breathing; that paints, powders, and cosmetics only fill up the pores of the skin, making it sallow and inactiv; that narrow-toed and high-heeled shoes are not only positivly ugly, but deforming as well. The most of us learn these all-important truths only after we are grown—when age begins to slacken our step, or disease has fastened upon us.

We are responsible for the rising generation. Shall we not do our work well? Everywhere are mute, appealing faces. Are they not saying:

Train us, try us! days glide onward—
Save us, save from our undoing,
Save from ignorance and ruin,
Make us worthy to be men!

Giv us light to cheer our darkness,
Let us know the good from ill;
Hate us not for all our blindness,
Save us, lead us, show us kindness!
You can make us what you will!

I hav only touched on this vast subject, and should like to hear from others. Very truly yours, Annie H. Park.

Cleveland, O., April 8, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I hav noticed, from time to time, that some of the readers of The Truth Seeker are opposed to having articles on Spiritualism published in the columns of your paper, and, although being a Spiritualist, I hav had nothing to say, but when I read Hiram Wentworth's article in the issue of April 6th, in which he says, "I could get you a few subscribers here without much trouble, but I do not propose to encourage either Spiritualism or female suffrage, which means God-in-the-Constitution," I feel that I must retaliate, as I am Spiritualist, and the man who first called my attention to The Truth Seeker was also a Spiritualist, and out of five whom I know that take The Truth Seeker, four are Spiritualists. I believe that the majority of your readers are Spiritualists, and I, for one, cannot see how the Infidels can well get along without their help, as there is not one worthy of the name but what will work against orthodoxy with as much vim as an Infidel, and some of them with more vim than Mr. Wentworth, for, Mr. Editor, if I knew where I could get you a subscriber, I would not rest until I had sent you the name, for I think your paper worthy of patronage, and hav done all I could for it in the way of distributing all the copies I get where I think they will do the most good. I think anyone a little off in the upper story who could be a stumbling-block to The Truth Seeker all because Mother Grundy wrote you a letter, and you showed her a courtesy by giving it a place in the columns of your paper. Yours for justice, E. C. Moore.

Trenton, Tex., April 10, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I send my renewal for subscription another year, and just put me down as a lifetime subscriber to your most valuable paper. I hav been reading it for years, and there is no literature that I hav ever seen that so completely satisfies my intellectual taste. Heston's cartoons first excite the liveliest curiosity to know what Christian absurdity is going to be exposed. They truly are a rare treat, not to be found anywhere else. The ludicrous features enable me to enjoy a good, hearty laugh, and think what fools we mortals hav been to ever hav believed such horrid stuff as we hav been taught from our infancy. The contributions from the bright minds of those who hav thrown off priestcraft and ancient barbarism and recognize the light of the nineteenth century civilization, certainly are refreshing to an intellect seeking for truth. Then your editorials, reviewing and agitating timely topics in furtherance of the progress of the age, show your Editor equal to the task. Not the least good feature of your paper, either, is the correspondence page, where you hav the views of the many level-headed fellows who fearlessly giv their views on all subjects. Even the children show common sense in their views expressed in their "Corner," and always get my entire attention. And, finally winding up with wit and humor and pure gems of thought, certainly The Truth Seeker is a magazine of good things, that will blow up superstition, priestcraft, and hypocrisy too, in another period of its existence. The Liberals who are on the enthusiastic list hav much to be proud of, and at the same time much to do. Our lecturers are too few and far between, and then, in most cases, the "faithful" will not attend the lectures. Our cause will progress very slowly in consequence, but there is one thing we can do—push it.

Dr. W. C. Holmes.

Franklin Co., Ark., April 1, 1889.

Mr. Editor: I would like to relate what religion has done for me. I am one of seven sons of an honest old farmer, who, until two years ago, adhered to the divinity of Christ and the Bible. During a stay from home some Freethought literature had fallen into my hands. This and the origin of the Bible, as found in an encyclopedia, shocked my father's faith. Then but one skeptic in the family, now five; five doomed to the Christian's hell—the curse of God is upon us.

The above is a source of consolation to me—but now to the point.

Four years ago this spring the neighborhood in which my father livs organized a Sunday-school, and it was left to a vote of the house what literature they should use. Here being a tie, it was agreed to leave it to one Mrs. Brown, who was absent and who was elected teacher, a who said: "Use Union literature." But her choice was treated with contempt, and Presbyterian was ordered instead. This the Baptists did not like, and a disgraceful contention ensued, which was carried into all their associations, and for three years the literary school was rent asunder by it. Two Sunday-schools at the same hour; two protracted meetings each summer; two distinct elements in the neighborhood; yet each was guided by divine grace, such as: "Suppose ye that I am come to bring peace on earth: I tell you nay; I am come to send the sword. I am come to set a man at variance against his father," etc. Such is characteristic of an adherent to orthodox Christianity.

The brain was stinted to save the soul. Among those who lost this timely opportunity for a start for an education was a sister, in whose hands books seem now to weigh heavily. The one great longing of our mother was that her children should be educated. I had determined to educate this sister; but no. And I shall always treat as unfriendly the prime cause of this. Lewis Lawrence.

Dwight, Ill., April 17, 1889.

Mr. Editor: If there is any class of people on this earth—whether it is God's, man's, or the devil's, but I guess it belongs to man—that needs arousing, rallying, and organizing, why, it is the Liberals or Freethinkers of this country, or, as the churches would say, the "Infidels." Well, we care but little what name the church givs us; her appellations don't alarm us. And why arouse, rally, and organize? Because we hav vast fields of labor and exploration before us. We want to establish and teach the best humanity and ethics. Our place of investigation is at the front. Therefore, it behooves our people to organize in every community so as to accomplish the greatest amount of labor and good. Oh, look at a well-trained army! Compare with raw recruits, and note the contrast. Well, now I reckon you will say, in union and organization there is force, a ten-fold double-twisted action or lever purchase not to be obtained single-handed. But some one may inquire if an Infidel or Liberal is not competent to take care of himself. I reply, Yes, if he is really an activ, live man, and can reconnoiter his whole neighborhood, too, and sometimes raise Beelzebub and hell with the nearest church. Now, an organization of such persons may not be as dangerous to the church as a Western cyclone, but such an organization would soon reform and Liberalize the church, and make it better by doing away with its superstition and bigotry.

Ah! methinks I hear some one else exclaim that we hav a plenty of Freethinkers now, if they would only speak out fearlessly, and show themselvs in the community in which they liv, move, and hav their being. Ah, yes, my dear friend, you are partially correct! But we must recollect that little word "if" is a poser—a little giant to some, perhaps to many. Then, again, some are quite timid. Now, we must not expect such persons to speak, except in a low whisper, when the enemy is around; but of course these persons become intrepid when the enemy (the church people) disappear. I think we should hav a little compassion for this pusillanimous class. They need a cordial—our assistance. Educate them, yes, let the rallying cry of this Freethought agitation and education proceed till we gain the universal victory over bigotry, superstition, and ignorance. T. J. JOHNSON.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., April 21, E.M. 289.

MR. EDITOR: I appeal to the friends of humanity for aid, in behalf of an aged and worthy couple, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Casey, of Seneca, S. C. Doubtless you hav read of them in THE TRUTH SEEKER or other Liberal papers. The old lady is on a dying bed and really suffers for nourishing and palatable food. Mr. Casey is crippled in his right hand, and they hav no income at all, and depend on friends for means to liv. They hav been lifelong Liberals, and we ought to help them all we can. I want each one who reads this letter to make two copies of it, and send them to two friends who he thinks will send ten cents each to the aged couple. Let every friend of humanity and lover of mental liberty keep these letters moving among friends. Send all remittances to Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Virginia, with a few lines from donor, and she will credit each one with the amount sent. With love to all good people, be they pagan, Jew, Christian, or Infidel, I am,

A friend to humanity and George Washington,
WILLIAM THORPE.

STURGIS, MINN., April 16, 289.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed clippings from the Omaha Republican are one of many straws showing which way the wind is blowing that I hav noticed since the Blair bill was presented for Congressional action. My last letter to you contained the following: "The Blair bill is all that is now needed to furnish Liberalism a formidable auxiliary." This editorial would seem to confirm my opinion. I hav several more from different papers, not quite as emphatic as this, but equally as useful.

I hav sufficiently recovered my health to be able to devote some time to the public again. I had the pleasure of making a short address under the auspices of the Farmers' Alliance at the Opera House in this city last Saturday night. This was my first public appearance since the fall of 1887. My talk was upon economic questions, and my time limited on account of the number of speakers present. However, I hav been invited to speak at five different points already. I can afford to feel encouraged with such a result, and I do—not on account of myself, however, but because this and similar incidents evidence a demand for Radical speakers. That public opinion is favorable to the encouragement of progressiv ideas is a hopeful sign. That preachers can no longer keep their flocks from listening to "cranks" is demonstrated by the applause which follows every truthful statement reflecting upon their stupidity and hypocrisy. A public speaker is no longer obliged to sugar-coat and pander to the church element to be respected.

I notice the Liberals of Hay Springs, Neb., are of the proper mold and mettle. I know nothing of Messrs. Tripp & Mattley, but the county is all they claim for it. It is equal to the best—good water, timber in abundance, and good soil. If Liberals desirous of procuring lands locate there I hav every reason to believe they will be satisfied with the country. They will find but few places in Nebraska or Dakota where orthodoxy does not control. Within the past month twenty-four lots scattered throughout the city of Sturgis, Dak., hav been donated to a Catholic sisters' academy. Many of the donors were Protestants. The local papers favored and encouraged the scheme. These lots will be held exempt from taxation, to the detriment of taxpayers, until the increase of population makes them valuable. Then some one—perhaps some one not yet born—will be obliged to make an appropriation to Pope Leo's successor before they can be of any use to the community.

I cannot understand why Liberals, without exception, do not work, write, and talk for the single tax. When the single tax becomes a fact, neither churches nor individuals will care to hold lands or lots out of use until communities make them worth a fortune, which the owners do nothing to create.

Truly yours, FRANK GREENE.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., April 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: D. W. Milk has soured on Colonel Ingersoll because he can't stop thinking when he so desires. Colonel Ingersoll's thinking machine is not built that way, hence the controversy.

Mr. Milk accuses Colonel Ingersoll of tearing down and not building up. This idea is not original with Mr. Milk. It originated with insurance agents—who insure souls against future fire—because Colonel Ingersoll had torn down the walls of hell. He did damage their business materially. Is that the institution which Mr. Milk would like to see rebuilt? Are the comforts of his religion gone with the annihilation of sulphurous flames? The homes made happy "over here" by Ingersoll's words are more than counterbalanced by the loss to the said insurance agents.

The "batch" of questions propounded by Mr. Milk concerning Voltaire, Paine and Company indicate that he was having one of his unthinking fits when he wrote them. If he will put on his thinking cap and carefully read the works of the writers named, he will find that they hav given the world something better than the items named in his "batch"—viz., truth, honesty, and common sense.

Without disputing Mr. Milk's ability to stop thinking ad libitum, it is safe to affirm that he would be more useful to himself and the world if he would not let the time be so long between thinks.

As to his batch of prophecies, we leave priests and their dupes to worry over the puzzles of Jewish mythology. Life is too short and there is too much useful work to be done, to waste time speculating on the vague utterances of Daniel, Isaiah, and Jeremiah. The grass that Nebuchadnezzar ate when he was an ox, the dialect in which Balaam's animal addressed his master, with other problems of a like nature, do not interest the thinking people of this age. They are more concerned in bettering the conditions of life here and now, than they are in what is supposed to hav been said about Babylon, and the "satyrs" that dance in its palaces, and the Arabs, who don't pitch their tents there.

If we should try our hand at prophesying, and there was as much money to be made by fitting our words to coming events as is now made by dealing in "gospel," there would be a plenty of exegetists and learned commentators who would see the connection and make it plain, even though we joined the unthinking fraternity and talked at random. It could even be claimed, as a last resort, that "God had put a lying spirit in the mouth of his prophet, to deceive the people"—as he had promised aforetime that he would.

There is nothing in "the word" so stretchy as the prophecies, and we leave those who hav nothing better to do to hunt up their hidden meaning. But as long as there are millions in it, new revisions and the imaginations of the divinely inspired will endeavor to keep these old myths before the people. "'Tis a pity, but 'tis true."

One of the thinkers, MARY A. WHITE.

PELL CITY, ALA., April 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I do not know when I hav had such a treat as I hav had to-day, which came to me on the 11 A.M. mail train, in the shape of "Pioneer Pith," by Robert C. Adams.

Mr. Adams certainly has got the pith or marrow of Rationalism to perfection in his little pamphlet. I will hand it round to my Christian friends for their perusal, and await results. "Pioneer Pith" ought to be in the hands of all Freethinkers. It will enable them to answer many questions of Christians that heretofore may hav been a puzzle to them as well as myself.

"Did Man Fall?" by Israel W. Groh, was read with interest, and will also be loaned to some of my Christian friends in order that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward offered by Mr. Groh.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's debate with Hon. Frederic Coudert and Hon. Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford is a one-sided argument. The two Christians advanced nothing new. They just simply exemplified and proved that Colonel Ingersoll told the truth when he stated that we cannot help our thoughts. Mr. Coudert further showed that same old spirit of the church. If he had the power, such men as Colonel Ingersoll would expiate their free speech on the gibbet or at the stake.

I am living in a community of Christians of various creeds. Hav attended Sunday-school regularly ever since I came here in January. I am in a class of grown men, and recite my catechism with the rest. I hav been told by a friend that I hav rendered myself odious by reciting verses from the Bible. Now, I did not aim to do anything wrong. Each Sunday-school scholar is required to recite a verse every Sunday from the Bible, and there is a reward or prize offered to the scholar who misses the fewest questions, and has his lessons well and has a verse ready at roll call. And I only went in for the prize. It seems they took exceptions to my selections from holy writ, but I hav avoided discussion so far with any of them. The truth is, I quoted scripture that was new to both teachers and scholars, and some of the most intelligent of the scholars asked me for more of the same sort. I hav distributed tracts on Freethought where I think it will take root. I am as poor as the dickens, with a large family on my hands, and my wife fell a short time back and broke her arm, rendering her a burden instead of a helpmate. I am not able to purchase the necessaries of life, much less literature to giv away. If any readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will send Freethought literature to me, I will drop it around loose so that the people can read for themselvs. By the way, I think a splendid plan to teach the Bible is for Freethinkers to attend Sunday-schools and repeat choice selections from the Old Testament. Teachers soon get a surfeit of it, and the children enjoy it. AMOS L. GRIFFITH.

ST. CATHERINES, April 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER that some of its friends are surprised, and use rather strong language, because Miss Collier is equally surprised to see words in a reformed paper, that is published in the greatest city of America, that hav not all the letters as is the custom generally. But they should consider that custom is very powerful, and, no matter how wrong (rong) it may be, it seems to root itself so firmly in some people's (pepol's) mind that it is not only hard, but almost impossible, to eradicate it, and of this there is overwhelming proof. An English preacher here once sermonized thus: "God's hall-seeing hies—the air of your ead—an hold sinner—the hair of the hatmosphere his unelthy," and of course must hav thought those words were very nice; but they were offensiv to his hearers, and they told him so, and his answer was: "I use not honly the holdest, but the best and most refined, Hinglish, therefore I will never giv hit hup. If I were to pronounce those words as his your custom, they would not honly be very hoffensiv to me, but they would av no power, and I would av to quit preaching again." An aristocratic German once ordered his boy to take wheat to the mill, and it was the custom, there and then, to put the grain in one end of the bag, and a stone in the other end to balance it on the horse's back. The boy put the wheat in the bag, but forgot to put in the stone, and when he put the bag on the horse, about half of the wheat went to the opposit end, and he at once saw that the bag was balanced without the stone, and was so elated that he exclaimed, "Father! father! just see here! we don't hav to put the stone into the bag any more," but his father, instead of lavishing praise on the boy for his great discovery, shook his fist at him, and, in a loud, threatening manner, said, "John! do you want to know more than your father and grandfather? I tell you to put the wheat in one end of the bag, and the stone in the other end." Such ludicrous scenes prove conclusivly that some people cling so stubbornly to customs that they will neither learn nor be taught. When I dropped the mute e in (Moote) my name, it caused a furor among others of that name, and they said it was awful that I had changed my name; but they would cling to the e because their grandfather had it in his name. But the most of them hav now dropped it. Complaints hav been made to me that the words hav, giv, and liv in THE TRUTH SEEKER had not the accustomed e, but when asked why they should hav it, they could not tell me. It certainly is strange that lexicographers, who understand the different languages, and use just letters enough to pronounce words correctly, wā, nō, rīt, nolej, lēg, tisik, should still cling to and use the same words with all the dumb letters in them; and hundreds of words hav the dumb k, p, w, or x prefixed to them, and the dumb b, n, e, s, or w affixed to them, and hundreds of words hav the dumb letters interspersed, evidently just to perplex and hinder the learner. The same letters should not be hard and soft, and f should take the place of ph and gh. If rough is ruf, then plough is pluf, not plow. Editors plead for short communications, then why should they be made longer with so many nonsensical letters? Miss Collier's letter shows that she is well versed in English, therefore I think she will readily see that silent letters are futil. Therefore it is obvious they should never cumber words, not even for custom's sake; and further, she will see many old words that hav dropped their silent letter or letters, and if she would omit two silent letters in her name, it would be shorter and just as nice, and would be Lizze Colier still.

A. MOOT.

OTTAWA, ONT., April 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav always been an admirer of Mr. E. A. Stevens, because of his untiring efforts to promote the noble cause of Freethought. I am therefore sorry to remind the unselfish gentleman that the foremost quality of a Liberal should be a love of justice. In an article lately published in THE TRUTH SEEKER entitled, "Rome Dominates the Dominion," Mr. Stevens, I think, displays a deplorable prejudice toward a nationality that never injured him. I know that in this he is inspired by reading the unjust articles published in the Ontario Francophobe press, viz., the World, the Orange Sentinel, and the Mail. Now, these papers are published and read by a class of people that so hate the French Canadians that they would gleefully breakfast on stewed Frenchmen every morning. I am even inclined to think they would gladly dine on roast Freethinker. Mr. Stevens should therefore hav studied both sides of the question before making the sweeping charges of ignorance he does against the French Canadians. He should, for instance, hav read the defense of this nationality uttered by Mr. Ross, minister of education for Ontario. Mr. Ross is a Protestant, and cannot therefore be accused of partiality for or fear of the French element, as his constituents are English. He, however, in his speech in parliament, refuted the charges of ignorance hurled by the Orange press against the French Canadians. Mr. Stevens should also hav studied Mr. Colby's speech in the house of commons. Mr. Stevens would hav then learned that it is quite easy to make charges and accusations, but another thing to prove them. Mr. Stevens, in the article in question, proves himself a little inconsistent; for instance, he reproaches us French Canadians with "being bound together by strong ties of race, religion, and laws to which they cling with the tenacity of ignorance." Now, it may be a crime to love one's nationality—a greater one, perhaps, to cherish one's mother tongue—but I am so made that I would not giv a raw peanut for a man of whatever nationality that did not love both. I am not generally accused by those that know me best of having a very great love for the priests, yet I must admit that I am thankful to them for "sternly punishing infanticide," for which Mr. Stevens would hold them up to the world's contempt. I may be selfish in my approval of the priests in this, but the readers will, I hope, forgiv me this act of selfishness, when I tell them I was born of a French Catholic mother, and, as Pat would say, "I would hate to hav died before I was born."

In closing, I hope Mr. Stevens will forgiv me if I take upon myself to giv him advice. It is this: When you do not know the elementary principles of a language, never quote anything in that language. I do not pretend to be proficient in the English vernacular, but I think I know French; and what you mean by Le bas Canadiene pere is one of the riddles I hav to giv up. Whether it means a mammal, a fish, or a house, I do not know; so that accusing people of ignorance without knowing them, and by hearsay, is making use of a gun that is liable to go off at the butt. Believe me, the French Canadians will not obstruct the passing of the Nine Demands of the American Secular Union, when they come before Congress, and Freethought will in no way gain by your shouting that the French Canadians are ignorant. Continue your good work for the grand cause of Freethought in another way. Stick to your text, and to facts—facts!

Respectfully, L. F. MATHÉ.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Little Wheedler.

"There never was a grandma half so good!"
He whispered, while beside her chair he stood,
And laid his rosy cheek,
With a manner very meek,
Against her dear old face, in loving mood.

"There never was a nicer grandma born!
I know some little boy must be forlorn
Because he's none like you;
I wonder what I'd do
Without a grandma's kisses night and morn!

"There never was a dearer grandma—there!"
He kissed her and he smoothed her snow-white hair;
Then he fixed her ruffled cap
And nestled in her lap,
While grandma, smiling, rocked her old arm-chair.

"When I'm a man, what lots to you I'll bring!
A horse and carriage, and a watch and ring.
All grandmas are so nice!
(Just here he kissed her twice)
All grandmas giv a boy most anything!"

Before his dear old grandma could reply,
This boy looked up, and with a roguish eye,
Then he whispered in her ear,
That nobody might hear:
"Say, grandma, hav you any more mince-pie?"

Little.

Selected by Jennie Vose Graham.

Everything is beautiful when it is little, except souls; little pigs, little lambs, little birds, little kittens, little children. Little martin-boxes of houses are generally the most happy and cosy; little villages are nearer to being atoms of a shattered paradise than anything we know of. Little fortunes bring the most content, and little hopes the least disappointment. Little words are the sweetest to hear, and little charities fly the farthest and stay the longest on the wing. Little lakes are the stillest, little hearts the fullest, and little farms best tilled. Little books the most read, and little songs the best loved. When nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dews. Everybody calls that little which they love best on earth. We once heard a good sort of man speak of his little wife, and we fancied she must be a perfect bijou of a woman. We saw her; she weighed two hundred and ten. We were surprised; but then it was no joke—the man meant it. He could put his wife in his heart, and hav room for other things besides; and what was she but precious, and what could she be but little? We rather doubt the stories of great nuggets of gold we sometimes hear of, for nature deals in littles almost altogether. Life is made up of littles. Death is what remains of them all. Day is made up of little beams, and night is glorious with little stars.—Herald of Health, 1864.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

"Father," said the lad, "I grant you
Your parental right to whale,
But ere you begin proceedings
Please remove the shingle nail."

It was at the breakfast table, and the principal article of food that morning was shad. Little Charlie, aged five, notwithstanding his portion had been carefully prepared for him, was having a pretty hard time of it, for he kept finding bones, some as sharp as needles and some sharper than ordinary pins, but all sharp, as shad bones always are. Finally the little philosopher astonished the table with the remark: "'Mamma, I don't see how a shad wiggles without pricking himself."

A little Adams street boy had been extremely naughty at dinner, and had been sent away from the table just as his favorit dessert—cabinet pudding with butter sauce—was being served. About 9 o'clock that evening, as his parents were alone in the sitting-room, a tear-stained little face and a white-robed figure appeared at the door. "Mamma," he said, between sobs, "you told me never to go to sleep when anything wrong had been done until it was all fixed right, so I came down to tell you that—that—I forgiv you and papa for what you did to me at the dinner table."

The study of mathematics is especially recommended as a means of developing the reasoning faculties. No doubt it is adapted to accomplish that very desirable end; but it seems to fail in some cases. "Six and four are how many?" asked the teacher. "Eleven!" shouts a little boy, who has worked hard to learn by rote as much of his arithmetic as possible. "Hum," says the teacher, shaking his head; "think a moment." "Twelve." "No." "Thirteen." "Now what makes you think it could be thirteen? Suppose you had guessed a smaller number—ten, for instance?" "Oh, no," said the boy, confidently, "it couldn't be ten." "Why not?" "Because five and five make that."

Correspondence.

OAK MILLS, KAN., April 3, 1889.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Kind Friend: As I hav a few leisure moments, I will occupy them by writing you a letter. Since I last wrote to you I hav been reading some good literature. I commenced reading lately Helen H. Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and I find it very interesting, and I say in the words of Colonel Ingersoll: "No human being can answer her arguments. There is no answer. All the priests in the world cannot explain away her objections. There is no explanation. They should remain dumb, unless they can show that the impossible is the probable—that slavery is better than freedom—that polygamy is the friend of women—that the innocent can justly suffer for the guilty, and that to persecute for opinion's sake is an act of love and worship." Our teacher, Miss Schiffbauer, has read Miss Gardener's book, and she speaks of it in the highest terms, as I think everybody will who reads it. I hav also been reading Edgar C. Beall's great book, "The Brain and the Bible," and, like Miss Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," it is unanswerable. I wish everybody in the world could read these two valuable books. Both of them contain an introduction by Colonel Ingersoll, which adds still more to their merits. Colonel Ingersoll, in the introduction, says of "The Brain and the Bible:" "This book is written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world."

Before me on the table lie copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Investigator, and Freethinkers' Magazine—three of the grandest journals published in this country. I would rather hav them than Harper's, Scribner's, Leslie's, Lippincott's, and Don Piatt's publications. They are far more valuable. Their beautiful pages contain the richest gems of wit, wisdom, and eloquence, from the minds of the world's greatest, purest, and noblest men and women. Their pages are not filled with sickening nonsense and fiction, but from the first page to the last your eyes rest upon "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Their highest aspiration is to serve humanity, and free the minds of the people from the dogmas of superstition, priestcraft, and the church. Eugene Macdonald, Horace Seaver, and H. L. Green should be counted among the world's bravest and noblest men. They hav stood brave and firm in battling against the three great evils which I hav already mentioned. Superstition is fading from the minds of the people; priestcraft is beginning to howl with fear; the church is sinking in the mires of ignorance, and Freethought and humanity, with their brave and tireless leaders, are destined to a glorious triumph. With best wishes to you and the readers of the Corner, and with a hope that you will all see the time when Freethought becomes triumphant, I will close my letter, ever remaining,

True to the cause, GEO. J. REMSBURG.

RAINIER, ORE., March 21, 1889.

SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: You will please excuse me for troubling you again. Since reading your lecture, "The Church and Women," I wanted to tell you we thought that lecture could not be beat. How heartily we laughed over some of the witticisms! Even eight-year-old Lou enjoyed it and laughed over poor dusty old Adam and his hunt up and down for a conjugal partner. I hav been filling a scrapbook of three hundred pages with Children's Corner articles from the Boston Investigator and TRUTH SEEKER. Aunt Elmina has sent at different times THE TRUTH SEEKER. She sent the one with my letter in. I was so surprised when I got a letter from a Liberal in New York, saying he had read my letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I should never hav thought of sending such a crazy mess for publication. But if you considered it worthy I hav nothing to say. I will put it in the Children's Corner book, and my children can read a page of their early life probably when I am gone. I will send you a little article my mother read to me when a child. I always liked it, and it will hold a sweet memory of the past for me as long as I liv. I did not know but it would be suitable for the Corner. But if not, it is all the same. I shall not care. And if it suits you I shall be glad. You could giv it to some little friend if you do not want to make use of it. I send also "The Goat and the Swing," by J. T. Trowbridge. We hav had a good deal of sport over it. It is so applicable to people. When Gertie—True we call her—could just talk, she and a little cousin six months younger would get into spats, and we would tell them they must not be such nasty goats, or call them quarrelsome goats. And they soon got so they would say, "Me ain't nassy doat—Minnie nassy doat." Or if the other way, "Tuie nassy doat." And if we scolded them, "Mamma nassy doat." If I ask True now who is a "nasty goat," it is always Lou.

We are having lovely spring weather. I hav been making flower-beds in the wilderness, as we are the first to break the soil here in the woods. I hav sweet mignonet, portulacca, zinnia, pinks, lupinus, larkspur, elyseum, dianthus, pansy, mimosa, pudica, sensitiv plant, and carnation pinks, besides odds and ends. I expect the desert will blossom like the rose. I hear the children's voices laughing and talking down the path. They are playing hide-a-stick, and True laughs "loud and long" when she hides it so Lou can't find it. I wish you could see her get upon a big stump in front of the house and make a speech. She went to a school exhibition here and saw them make a bow before and after speaking, so she bows between every word and jerks the words out so: "I had—a little—hobby—horse—his name—is doppy day. Head—a made—o pea—taw tao o—made o hay—I sodid—him and bide—him—and wode him fo a town, up town—a dusus—vin—and bowed my hobby—down." I don't know that you can make this out. You certainly can't see the bright eyes and pink cheeks of the baby girl on the old mossy stump. She will speak lots of little pieces one right after the other. She learns them easily. The other day I read about the gypsies carrying the baby in a carpet-bag, and she looked up and said: "Did him cry? You carry me in sotie (satchel) when me lit e bit baby, ma." We went into a neighbor's to see a new baby, and when True came home her grandpa asked her how big the baby was. She held her hands about three inches apart, and kept getting them farther apart, and said: "He be so wide—littie bit e tute sin (thing)."

The children hav been studying snails, and I read the article on snails in the Children's Corner, and they collected a lot of various sizes and corraled a big slug, and wanted me to come out and look at them. And we could see their eyes plainly. The slug has a cap or hood and holes in the sides as large as a small pea. I do not enjoy handling them, but True will carry them around. She left one on the floor yesterday and I stepped on it, and she said: "Oh, my; dot's too bod!"

We hav reading every day in the Children's Corner, or some book on natural history and questions. Lou is fond of stories, and is very anxious to go to school and learn to read herself, so as to be able to write to the Children's Corner. I am very much interested in our Children's Corner, and I hav been thinking that some one ought to write an article on the effects of corsets for the girls. They giv boys good advice on the tobacco and temperance questions. And if, as Alice B. Stockholm—I think is the name, author of "Tokology"—claims, corsets hav done more harm to present and future generations than rum, the girls ought to be warned. Fashion is a craze almost incurable. It seems to me women think they cannot go without corsets and bangs and bustles, puffs and puckers. I think if women want to be free, they will hav to step out of some of the superfluous filagree. Your friend and admirer,

JENNIE VOSE GRAHAM.

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

JUST PUBLISHED!

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book.

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

PRICE, . . . $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Bible Temperance:

LIQUOR DRINKING

ommended, Defended, and Enjoined by the Bible.

BY E. C. WALKER.

This is a companion book to Remsburg's "Bible Morals." 48 pages; price 10 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

By W. S. BELL.

Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Advancement of Science

BY PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Portrait, Biographical Sketch, and Articles on Prayer.

Paper, 12mo, 105 pp., 25c.; cloth, 50c.

It is in many respects one of the most extraordinary utterances of our time.—N. Y. Tribune.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

FAITH OR AGNOSTICISM?

—o—

Two Letters from Dr. Field, D.D., editor of the Presbyterian Evangelist, to Colonel Ingersoll, and two Replies thereto. Dr. Field is one of the exceedingly few Christians who hav opposed Colonel Ingersoll kindly and courteously, and the Great Agnostic has used him accordingly. Dr. Field's arguments, however, are broken in pieces.

THE ONLY AUTHORIZED EDITION.

Price, 50 cents in paper; $1.00 in cloth.

The Antiquity of Christianity.

By JOHN ALBERGER, Author of "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues."

Paper, 12mo, 61pp., 25 cents.

Contains testimonies of the early Christian Fathers and others, and cases of striking similarity to Christianity in many ancient religions.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig, or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo, 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $1.50; paper covers, $1. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THOUGHTS ON SCIENCE, THEOLOGY, AND ETHICS.

BY JOHN WILSON, M.A.

The object of the book, as expressed in the preface, is to giv a correct sketch of the main lines of modern thought in small compass, and in language simple enough to be easily understood. In other words, it is a condensation of more voluminous writers, and classification of their definitions of science, theology, and ethics, and a statement of what belongs to each. As a text-book to clear thinking and logical reasoning, and a guide in forming scientific conclusions, this book is invaluable. The Literary Guide ranks it as "one of the foremost works of the present century;" while the Freethinker, in "heartily recommending it" as "simple and lucid in style, correct in thought, and ample in information," declares that it "is just the thing to put in the hands of a plain man who desires the best ideas on evolution in relation to science and ethics in a moderate compass."

Price, $1; address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, 3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only 1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
ohn Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any ther like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	28
James Parton,	32
Helen H. Gardener,	33
S. P. Putnam,	36
Charles Watts,	37
E. A. Stevens, Sec. A. S. U.	41
Parker Pillsbury,	42
Robert C. Adams,	44
J. D. Shaw,	46
F. M. Holland,	47
E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.,	50
Lucy N. Colman,	51
J. H. Burnham,	53
L. K. Washburn,	63
Ella Gibson,	64
Susan H. Wixon,	67
John Peck,	71
W. S. Bell,	78
E. C. Walker,	80
Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	84
Dr. Juliet H. Severance,	87
Mrs. E. D. Slenker,	89
Col. J. R. Kelso,	91
G. H. Dawes,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LIFE OF Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist,

BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 25 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

LIBERALS SUPPLIED

With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 335pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM

Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O, N.Y

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM

By DR. FREDERIC R. MARVIN, Professor of Physiological Medicin and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Paper, 12mo, 68pp., cloth, 50 cents.

His analysis of nervous and mental phenomena is sharply scientific; his pathological theories are rational, clear, and modern.—Medical Review.

His language is strong and well chosen, his style admirable in its directness and brilliancy, his thought clear and logical.—Liberal Christian.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,

OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

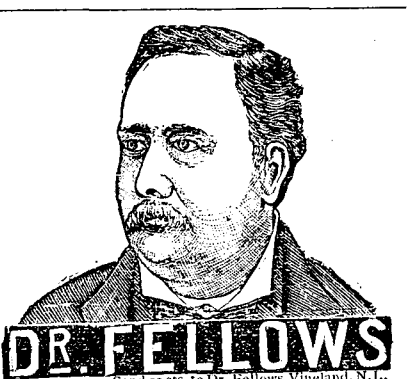
For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.

DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

FATHER, SON & HOLY GHOST.



BY T. E. LONGSHORE.

5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen; $1 for 25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

DR. FELLOWS

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a staunch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

Poetry.

"Elsmeria Clericorum."

As man ascends in nature's rising scale—
  As brain grows larger, nerves grow more refined—
New maladies, unnamed before, assail
  His higher instincts and more reasoning mind.

One of the new-born ills, now widely spread,
  The Boston D.D's. call "Elsmeria."
Its symptoms are "ideas in the head,"
  A reasoning, logical "hysteria."

When clergymen this dread "Elsmeria" take,
  And reckless quit the pulpit for the forum,
Preach the whole truth for truth's and conscience's sake,
  'Tis called, "Elsmeria Clericorum."

Few die of this, if doctored with decorum.
  A draft, 'tis said, upon the troubled brain,
If of the proper size and ad valorem,
  Has magic power over theologic pain—
  Especially over Unitarian strain.

It givs the brain abnormal power to see
Through the dark problems of the trinity—
How one are three, and three the same as one;
How father is not older than the son;
How a "begotten son" a God can be,
While holding "nothing born is deity;"
How, when no part of God on Calvary died,
Still God, in Christ, was truly crucified;

To see how deep heaven's great salvation plan;
How God must be "incarnated in man;"
That God, as man, might know man's nature more,
Than he, as God his maker, knew before.

How best to treat this logical disease
Is now the problem of the world's D.D's.
Some think it wisest to revise the creeds,
Think argument still more "Elsmeria" breeds;
Some deem it best the novel to ignore,
As preaching only spreads the views the more.

In balmy days of medieval times,
When heresy was deemed the crime of crimes,
The doctors used a more heroic pill
When unrepentant skeptics they might kill.
Then orthodoxy taught the earth was flat,
Bright Bruno taught 'twas round! Bad doctrin that—
'Twas rank "Elsmeria." Then a sweat they tried.
Their fagots were too dry—brave Bruno died.

Professor Calvin to arrest a schism,
And cure a case of Unitarianism,
Tried blistering on Servetus's skeptic skin—
To draw the clericorum from within,
Through fiery zeal he fanned his coals too hot,
And broiled his patient dead upon the spot.

Inquisitorial pills hav ever failed.
Truth will survive, though oft to crosses nailed.
No torturing rack, no seething flame it fears;
On, on it livs through God's eternal years!

The stars roll on serene and bright on high,
Though bigots forced Galileo to lie;
Before all books and Bibles brains were made;
In reason God religion's basis laid;
Only by God-given reason can man know
Bibles from heaven or lying fiends below;
The master dared to trust man's "inner light"—
"Judge ye yourselvs," said Jesus, "what is right."
Cheer up then, brothers, trust your master's word,
Fear not that magic pen of Mrs. Ward.
Woman and Satan man to ruin led,
'Tis meet that woman "bruise the serpent's head."

Fox Lake, Wis., Jan. 25, 1889. S. L. TYRRELL.

Reward and Merit, the Daughters of Charity.

From whence comes the dark mantle that enwraps our nature in idle vanity and makes turbulent the intellect in its misty dreams of selfishness?

Prone to seek the death of antagonistic ideas, we suffer only those to liv which giv evidence unsurmountable, and giv battle to those who honestly differ from us with opinion most sacred to them, but to us unfounded. How grand, sublime, and beautiful will be the day of reconciliation, when the topmast of inspiring thought will loom up above the fog of superstition, to kiss the sun of development—when the bigot will cease to be selfish and beat upon the heartstrings of sympathy such chords of harmony as will strike joy to the souls of each! What can be more beautiful than to see the softening rays of benevolence shedding splendor upon the mirrored countenance of another? What will reclaim the debased and ragged beggar of selfishness better than the sun of charity? The egotist, dreaming of his self-aggrandizement, sleeps only to awake in the morning of disappointment to see the goddess of investigation being crowned with the wreath of wisdom. Merit claims only such reward as naturally falls to the true and noble. He who fights for an honest opinion, although it may be an error, will by charity be allowed to wed the maiden of reward. The noble son who defends a mother's name, although she may not be deserving, should gather the sheaves of public approval. Charity is the brightest star in the galaxy of human achievements, the richest diamond in the crown of virtue.

When charity meets her reward, the red stain of oppression will grow green in the spring-time of benevolence. Ignorance, in absence of charity, has perfumed the air of ages with the burning flesh of martyrs, who now merit a seat in the uppermost temple of our memory. The bloody stain of intolerance has disinherited the throne of reason and besmeared the otherwise beautiful carpet that charity would hav spread to soften the tread of advancement. Unmerited superstition has received the merit due the chained warriors of intellectual thought, who hav been imprisoned in the dark recesses of mythology.

The progressiv intellect that dared look forth from its enslaved environments to breathe the air of liberty, has been speedily driven back and strangled with the chains of persecution, while authority has often been clothed in saintly garb.

Such proud and yet dismal clouds of intolerance hav stifled the spirit of charity, until the upas of oppression has lost its poisonous infection, and its fast-decaying substance is now fostering the germs of liberty and progression.

Each of these can now be seen rising above the horizon of superstition, and will eventually obtain their reward in the more glorious noonday of enlightenment, when knowledge and worth shall fellowship together in the lap of Freethought, and light up the darkness of the now unknown mysteries, and reason will revel, unrestricted, in the bosom of development. Nature will be acknowledged and trusted as the guardian of our existence, and all will learn to love and not fear the great first cause.

To-day is the time to cultivate the spirit of tolerance and charity, that their blossoms may scatter sweet perfume to be inhaled by the children of the future.

The bigot should not be found in the Freethought ranks. But every lover of truth and liberty should cultivate the spirit that will render unto others what they would wish in return. Man's inhumanity to man is only equaled by man's inhumanity to self.

A. D. SWAN.

What He Got For His Arm.

From George Standring's Radical.

SIR: For some time past I hav been familiar with the appearance in the streets of London of a one-armed man in a white blouse, with a white board before him, bearing on it an inscription, and engaged—the man, I mean, not the board—in the lucrativ occupation of selling lights. Last Friday night, August 31st, I came across him again; this time in Kentish Town road. I stopped to read the inscription on the board, and this is what I saw:

Mr. W. Spotti woode L.L.D. F.R.S.
Gave Me A Sovereign After I
Lost My Arm At the Bible
Works Saying That Is All I
Can Do For You And I
Am Trying To Sell These Lights.

Now, Messrs. Spottiswoode are, as most people know, the queen's printers, and they are also great Bible manufacturers. One would hav thought that so wealthy a firm as theirs would do something more than pay nine hundred and sixty farthings for an arm lost in their employment. Only imagin, one pound sterling for a limb! What need for fencing in machinery and other safeguards, when you can buy human flesh and blood at that price? I don't care whether this occurred before the passing of the Employers' Liability act or not. In either case the very fact that a man should, by a misfortune happening to him when engaged in honest labor, be compelled to try for a livelihood by selling matches in the street, is a shame and a disgrace to employers and employed alike, and could not occur were the workers organized.

—Charles J. Garcia.

Intolerance.

From the Denison, Tex., Gazetteer.

The following are some of the laws made in the dominion of New Haven, one of the general divisions of Connecticut, at its first settlement:

No one shall be a freeman, or giv a vote, unless he be converted, and a member in full communion of one of the churches allowed in this dominion.

No man shall hold any office who is not sound in the faith, and faithful to this dominion; and whoever givs a vote to such a person, shall pay a fine of one pound. For a second offense he shall be disfranchised.

Each freeman shall swear by the blessed God, to bear true allegiance to this dominion, and that Jesus is the only king.

No Quaker, or dissenter from the established worship of this dominion, shall be allowed to giv a vote for the election of magistrates, or any officer.

No food or lodging shall be afforded to a Quaker, Adamite, or other heretic.

If any person turns Quaker, he shall be banished, and not suffered to return, but upon pain of death.

No priest shall abide in the dominion. He shall be banished, and suffer death on his return. Priests may be seized by anyone without a warrant.

"Similar laws were made in several of the American states; and they were not merely to be suspended in terrorem over the heads of the guilty; they actually came down in all their vengeance on many hapless victims" (History of Intolerance, by Thos. Clarke).

"The framers of the federal Constitution, remembering the persecution of dissenters and nonconformists in the mother country and in several American colonies, cut the poisonous tree of persecution by the root, and substituted for specific religious tests a simple oath or solemn affirmation" (Church and State in the United States).

Are we drifting back to the days of Puritan intolerance? The efforts being made to establish the Lord's day as a national Sabbath, and to make the teaching of the "principles of Christianity" in the public schools compulsory, looks like it.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MATERIALISM:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON SOCIETY.

By DR. LOUIS BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Reminiscences of a Preacher.

A RADICAL ROMANCE.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL,

Author of "Exeter Hall," "Heathens of the Heath," "Family Creeds," "Beautiful Snow," etc., etc.

The story is used by the author to teach Freethought, to remove superstition from the minds of those who would not read a polemical essay, and to urge facts against the various churches, believing which their supporters will desert them. The book is an argument as well as a novel, but the serious predicaments of the hero are skilfully used to lure the reader along, and to induce him to take the antidote to theological poisoning without knowing it. Mr. McDonnell writes effectivly and convincingly, and always braces his romances with facts on one side and figures on the other. Those who hav read his previous works need not be advised to purchase this they will probably do so at once.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.

PRICE, - - - - - - - - 15 CENTS.

Your treatment of the "Conflict" is excellent.—Harry Hoover.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI-PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which each point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Industrial Slavery of To-Day.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

Vital, inspiring, hopeful, convincing.—[Literary World.

This astonishing book, how it haunts one, like a grown-up "Alice in Wonderland!" The mind follows entranced.—[Boston Gazette.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A glowing prophecy and a gospel of peace, where the pleasures of this world are free to all, to cheer but not enslave.—[The Nation.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MIRACLES AND MIRACLE WORKERS.

By JOHN PECK.

"The miraculous is the impossible. Anything within the realm of the possible is no miracle."

Price, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Paper, 50c.; cloth, $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

Great Centennial Oration

ON THE

Declaration of Independence,

ALSO THE

Immortal Document,

And the National Anthem entitled:

"LAND OF LIBERTY."

Price, 6 cts; 5 copies, 25 cts; 25 copies, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Christian Absurdities.

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

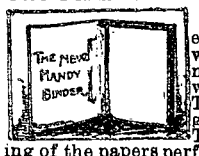
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257.

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c.

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right,

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - - 15c

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 190 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorite. 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

MINNESOTA has adopted a law regulating executions similar to the law of New York. To prevent the criminal's being made a hero of by the low classes, he is to receive only necessary visits in his cell, and the papers may publish but a very brief account of the execution.

CONNECTICUT will submit Prohibition to popular vote.

PENNSYLVANIA will hav a popular vote on Prohibition on June 18th.

THE lower house of the Canadian parliament has passed an extradition bill.

MANY artillery officers concerned in the plot to kill the czar hav been arrested.

VIENNA has had a street-car strike attended with extensiv rioting and loss of life.

BOULANGER has left Belgium by orders of the government there, and gone to London.

THE czar is suffering from extreme nervous excitement, being in constant dread of attempts upon his life.

AT the time of the Paris exposition the celebration will be joined in by Frenchmen wherever they are the world over.

THE Salvation Army is after an ex-member who has written a book exposing its money-getting and other tricks.

ON the 21st ult. there was a street-car strike at Minneapolis, Minn., in which much violence was used and many wounds were inflicted.

THE interstate commerce regulations are proving powerless to check the railroad corruptions and extortions at which they were aimed.

SINCE the procuring by labor unions of the stoppage of convict contract labor, several convicts hav been driven crazy by solitary confinement.

WANAMAKER'S Sunday-school class has 685 pupils, against 288 for last year before he had received office for raising a $400,000 fund to use in election.

THE Texas Christian Advocate, organ of the Southern Methodist church, reprehends "the social crime" of a bishop in accepting the hospitality of a colored elder.

SEVERAL advanced thinkers connected with the National Club of Boston are trying to form branch clubs in other cities to propagate "the principle of the brotherhood of humanity."

AT Hayti the war continues between the two nativ generals claiming rule, Legitime, who seems to hav the best right and is president of the republic, and Hyppolite, the revolutionary leader.

ENTERPRISING Americans will open up Persia to civilization, replacing primitiv water tunnels with artesian wells, tallow candles with electric lights, and lack of traveling facilities with railroads.

AT Dedham, Mass., the burial of Mrs. Carpenter, Catholic, is giving rise to a great fight between her relativs and her Protestant husband, who says that unless she is laid in what he calls "consecrated ground" he cannot be laid beside her.

THE czar has brusquely refused to attend the Paris exposition, and has ordered his embassador to France to remain absent from his post during its holding. Naturally the despot dislikes the principles of 1789, which the exposition is to commemorate.

OKLAHOMA is overcrowded, there being several claimants to each lot. Many murders hav occurred. As the men are without food, and it will be long before they can raise any, great suffering will ensue. They ask that the Cherokee strip, four times as large as Oklahoma, be given them, and are already spreading into it.

THE
ORDER OF CREATION.
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
CONTENTS:
I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis: A Plea for a Fair Trial By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.
This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

JOSHUA'S SPIES SEEK CONGENIAL COMPANY.

And Joshua the son of Nun sent out of Shittim two men to spy secretly, saying, Go view the land, even Jericho. And they went, and came unto a harlot's house, named Rahab, and lodged there.—Joshua ii, 1.

Gems of Thought.

RULERS infallibly decide the religion of the people. The true religion is always the religion of the prince; the true God is the God to whom the prince desires his people to adhere; the will of the priests, who govern the prince, always becomes the will of God. A wit justly observed, that the true religion is always that on whose side are the prince and the hangman. Emperors and hangmen long supported the gods of Rome against the God of Christians; the latter, having gained to their interest the emperors, their soldiers, and their hangmen, succeeded in destroying the worship of Roman gods. The god of Mohammed has dispossessed the God of Christians of a great part of the dominions which he formerly occupied.—D'Holbach.

IT will be seen that among theologians heretics are those of their number who are not backed with a sufficient array of battalions to render them orthodox.—Voltaire.

ONE set of preachers make salvation to consist in believing. They tell their congregations that if they believe in Christ their sins shall be forgiven. This, in the first place, is an encouragement to sin, in a similar manner as when a prodigal young fellow is told his father will pay all his debts, he runs into debt the faster, and becomes more extravagant. Daddy, says he, pays all, and on he goes. Just so in the other case, Christ pays all, and on goes the sinner.—Paine.

THE doctrin of forgivness—the idea that somebody else can suffer in place of the guilty—the notion that just at the last the whole account can be settled—these ideas, doctrins, and notions are calculated to fill penitentiaries. Nothing breeds extravagance like the credit system.—Ingersoll.

THE entire claim for the inspiration of the Bible on the score of its prophecies is completely overthrown by their examination. It requires no scholarship to trace the alleged prophecies of Christ; anyone with a reference Bible can do it, and will find that most of the prophecies hav no reference to Jesus, or, where they seem to hav such, the probability is that the event has been recorded so as to fit the prediction.—Robert C. Adams in Pioneer Pith.

MR. TALMAGE now says that he knows all about the Old Testament, that the prophecies were fulfilled, and yet he does not know when the prophecies were made—whether they were made before or after the fact. He does not know whether the destruction of Babylon was told before it happened, or after. He knows nothing upon the subject. He does not know who made the pretended prophecies. He does not know that Isaiah or Jeremiah or Habakkuk or Hosea ever lived in this world. He does not know who wrote a single book of the Old Testament. He knows nothing on the subject. He believes in the inspiration of the Old Testament because ancient cities finally fell into decay—were overrun and destroyed by enemies, and he accounts for the fact that the Jew does not lose his nationality by saying that the Old Testament is true.—Ingersoll.

NOT without astonishment can we look back at what in those times were popularly regarded as criteria of truth. Doctrins were considered as established by the number of martyrs who had professed them, by miracles, by the confession of demons, of lunatics, or of persons possessed of evil spirits.—Professor Draper.

THE fathers laid down as a distinct proposition that pious frauds were justifiable, and even laudable; and if they had not laid this down, they would nevertheless hav practiced them as a necessary consequence of their doctrin of exclusiv salvation. Immediately all ecclesiastical literature became tainted with a spirit of the most unblushing mendacity. Heathenism was to be combated, and therefore prophecies of Christ by Orpheus and the sibyls were forged, lying wonders were multiplied, and ceaseless calumnies poured upon those who, like Julian, opposed the faith. Heretics were to be convinced, and therefore interpolations of old writings or complete forgeries were habitually opposed to the forged gospels. The veneration of relics and the monastic system were introduced, and therefore innumerable miracles were attributed to the bones of saints or to the prayers of hermits, and were solemnly asserted by the most eminent of the fathers. The tendency was not confined to those Eastern nations which had been always almost destitute of the sense of truth; it triumphed wherever the supreme importance of dogmas was held. Generation after generation it became more universal; it continued till the very sense of truth and the very love of truth seemed blotted out from the minds of men. —Lecky's History of Rationalism.

IN all the histories of those days there is hardly a single truth. Facts were considered unworthy of preservation. Anything that really happened was not of sufficient interest or importance to be recorded.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

A MAN in a West Virginia city goes about with a handcart distributing daily newspapers. He must be the Wheeling Intelligencer.—Lowell Courier.

PROFESSOR FLUNKEM: "Mr. Post, define the binomial theorem." Mr. Post: "Not prepared." Professor Flunkem: "Really, Mr. Post, I would expect more from a man who does such good work in the rush line."—Yale Record.

THE careful farmer: "What, man, are you going to let your son serve his year in the infantry and not in the cavalry?" "I hav only one son, my Isaac. Do you think I can trust his life to an unreasoning animal?"—Fliegende Blatter.

NEPHEW: "Hold up, uncle! People'll think you're screwed!" Uncle (the wedding breakfast had been hilarious): "Screw'd! No, no, Sheorgsh! No' sh' bad 'sh that! 'Shame time—don' le'sh be [lurching heavily] osht'ntas'hly shober! Can't bear osht'ntash'n!"—Punch.

DRUGGIST: "Who was that man you just fired out of the store?" Clerk: "Longjaw, salesman for Tarabie and Co. He sold us a carload of flypaper last year, and we got stuck on it. I told him so, and he said that was what it was for." Druggist: "You did right to kick him out. I'll pay your fine if he makes any trouble."—Burdette.

YOUNG brother: "I've had a hard tussle to keep in good health sometimes. Why, one year I drank nothing but milk, and ate no solid food whatever." Elder brother: "Blessed if I hav not known you ever since you were born, and I hav been with you all the time, but I can't remember any such year." Young brother: "My first." —Harper's Bazar.

ELDER CROSSROADS: "So, deacon, ye've got back from livin' in the city, hev ye?" Deacon Carryall (who has lost the back farm in speculation): "Humph!" Elder Crossroad: "Purty fine place, I s'pose. Make much money in Wall street, deacon?" Deacon Carryall: "Humph!" Elder Crossroads: "No 'fense, deacon, but which was you, a bull or a b'ar?" Deacon Carryall: "Neither; I was a blarsted, long-eared, unharnessed jackass."—Drake's Magazine.

"I AIN'T eggsactly what ye might call a wimmen's righter," said old man Flint the other day as he sat with his heels higher than his head in a cross-roads grocery, out in Missouri. "Naw, sir; I ain't a wimmen's righter, an' yit there ain't many men'll go ferder'n me in givin' wimmen her natchrel privileges. Now, there's my wife—that woman sets at the same table with me, an' if she wants to run over to a neighbor's once in a month or so an' set awhile, why, she kin go 'thout sayin' a word to me 'bout it, pervided she gits home in time to milk the cows an' slop the peegs an' carry in the coal an' git hay fer the critters, an' do little chores like that. I often giv her a whole quarter to do as she's a mind to with. I let her go to town as often as twicet a year an' her vittels is good as mine, an' take it all in all, I reckon she's 'bout as many rights as any woman 'round here. I hate a mean man, gintlemin; speshly one that's mean to his wife. Giv the wimmen their rights as wimmen, says I, giv 'em their rights!"—Time.

"EXPLANATORY: Last week we announced that we were going on the trail of J. B. Davis, the Apache avenue grocer, and that this week's issue would contain an expose calculated to startle the community. We had over a column of it in type when Mr. Davis called at the Kicker office and subscribed for the paper, and gave us a column 'ad.' for a year. Mr. Davis is not only a genial, wholesouled gentleman, worthy of a place in our best society, but an enterprising, go-ahead citizen who is a credit to the whole state. When you want the best of goods at the lowest prices, call on him."—Arizona Kicker in Detroit Free Press.

A TEACHER was giving a natural history lesson. "Children," said she, "you hav all seen the paw of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?" "Yes, mum." "And you hav seen the paw of a dog?" "Yes, mum." "Well, although the cat's paws seem like velvet there, there is nevertheless, concealed in it, something that hurts. What is it?" No answer. "The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger, but what does the cat do?" "Scratches," replied the boy. "Quite right," said the teacher, nodding her head, approvingly; "now what has the cat got that the dog hasn't?" "Kittens!" exclaimed a boy in the back row.—Pick Me Up.

"YOU will observe," remarked John Adams to Marquis de la Fayette, "that, unlike too many other nations, this broad land, from boundary to boundary, holds none but freemen—that no slave of tyranny——" "Excuse me," politely interrupted the marquis, "but I had understood that it contained some six hundred and ninety-seven thousand, eight hundred and ninety-seven slaves, according to the last cens——" "Pardon me, sir," broke in the American statesman, with dignity; "exclusiv of negroes?" "No." "Ah, I thought so. As I was remarking, this broad land, from boundary to boundary—but, as you say, marquis, a glass of Madeira is a pleasant stimulus to congenial conversation." And they stimulated.—Puck.

J. H. RYLEY, of the Casino company, has met his namesake, James Whitcomb Riley, the poet, very often during the past season. In fact, their routes seemed to be almost identical, and the poet's name was always the first to greet the comedian on the hotel registers out West. "Occasionally this led to complications," said Mr. Ryley, in speaking of the matter to a reporter. "In Buffalo, for instance, my wife was summoned to the office to answer a telephone call. 'Hello! Hello!' she answered back in response to the ring. 'Hello!' said a female voice; 'Is that Mr. Ryley?' 'No. He is out.' 'What time will he return?' 'At three. But who is this speaking?' 'Never mind that. Tell him a lady from Rochester, and he'll know. Say she'll call at the Genesee at 6. Don't forget!' 'I'll not forget,' said Mrs. Ryley, and she didn't. 'A lady from Rochester,' said I, amazed, when I heard the story. 'Ah! of course, it's the other Mr. Riley. I must go and hav the massage sent to him.' 'It would be discourteous not to—very,' was the sarcastic rejoinder. Mr. Riley was not in, but I saw the telephone clerk and made things all right." "And was it the other Mr. Riley who was wanted?" asked the reporter. The comedian spake him nought, but his glance was worthy of a recall.—Dramatic Mirror.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 19. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 11, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

WHAT WE MAY EXPECT FROM ROMANISM.

Notes and Clippings.

BELVA LOCKWOOD sent this dispatch to a New York paper during the centennial celebration: "Three cheers for the inaugural centennial! Twenty-five years hence we will inaugurate a woman."

THERE are Russian Nihilists living in New York, says the Sun, who discredit the recent dispatches from St. Petersburgh about a new Nihilist plot to assassinate the czar. They say that such reports are always set afloat by the secret police whenever it is desired to enforce extraordinary measures of repression, or to make arrests of persons obnoxious to the government. Yet they admit that the Nihilist societies of Russia always stand ready to seize an opportunity of destroying the czar.

A PENNSYLVANIA judge has decided that a man who was fined $5 and costs for standing in front of the Arch street Presbyterian church, Allegheny, and offering religious tracts to persons coming out of the church, was guilty of disorderly conduct, and that the fine must stand. The Pittsburgh Post concludes from this that if it is an offense to offer religious tracts to Christians, it is an offense to offer them to pagans. This, it says, is the logic of the law as laid down by the court. If it were applied in heathen lands the missionary work of the Presbyterian church would soon come to an inglorious end. If the policy pursued in this case typifies the spirit of the church, it must be accepted to mean that the church is willing others shall read its tracts, but a for itself it must be excused from reading the tracts of others. On the principle, of course, that "it is more blessed to giv than to receive," you know.

BISHOP POTTER said to a World reporter last week: "I tell you, Mr. World, that I hav heard the corrupt use of money in elections and the sale of the sacred right of the ballot openly defended by ministers of the gospel. Can I name names? Indeed I can; and I may find it necessary to put such men of the sacred office in the public pillory by the side of their less-to-be-blamed professional politicians and professional heroes. In dead earnest? Why, I hav had to listen to an argument intended to demonstrate that it was a citizen's right to cast his vote on the side of his highest 'personal' interest, even though that 'interest' were one of dollars and cents."

THE Tribune says: "The Christianity of to-day is less earnest and sincere in many ways than that of a hundred years ago. It is seriously weakened by the spirit of doubt and speculation so largely fostered by modern science. It has lost its hold on large numbers of people, either because of tendencies outside of itself, for which it is not responsible, or because of tendencies and defects within itself, for which it is responsible. It is either its misfortune or its fault that it is more or less out of harmony with a great deal that is regarded as of paramount importance in modern life. It fails in many things to attain a large and comprehensiv outlook. It continues to run in many worn-out ecclesiastical grooves, cut out for it by the fathers and schoolmen, and so in a measure is unable to understand the busy pulsating life of this age. And it therefore comes to be looked upon by many people as a moribund institution of the past, with no vital message of hope or love for the men and women of to-day."

THE Christian Inquirer says: "It is to be hoped that the race of the present legislature of New York is nearly run. The attempt to pass bills by which the public school funds will be devoted to sectarian institutions demands rebuke. The Evangelical Alliance has done well in preparing petitions against this great wrong. Under the lead of Bishop Potter, the managers of the Sheltering Arms, an institution of the Protestant Episcopal church, hav refused to accept the sop proposed to be extended to them; but the Romish ecclesiastics hav an open maw for all they can get, and hope to receive a large appropriation for their protectory. Only a very emphatic protest from all parts of the state will prevent the diversion of our school funds to sectarian uses." The Protestants are given too much credit on account of the act of Bishop Potter. Dozens of their institutions are receiving state aid, and only protest against dividing the school fund because the public schools are now practically Protestant, and to let the Catholics hav any of the money would be to lessen the amount devoted to Protestant training. A Freethinker whose child attends New York's public schools has to watch sharp that the youngster is not indoctrinated with religious superstition.

THE effort to repeal the English laws against blasphemy has been unsuccessful. The bill for this purpose came up on Friday evening, April 19th. Mr. Bradlaugh thus tells the story of his fight: "Friday was an evening of trouble. The Blasphemy Law Repeal bill originally stood first after Supply, and I hoped that it might hav been reached about 8:30 or 9. But it was not till about twenty minutes to 11 I was called on. Unfortunately for the measure, great prejudice was excited, even amongst members favorable to the bill, by the production of a large number of illustrations from the Freethinker, a bundle of which had been brought down to the House by Mr. Samuel Smith, and the sight of which brought member after member to me, saying that unless I repudiated such publications they could not vote for the repeal of the blasphemy laws. The feeling was so strong that the government, which had not issued any whip, directed the government tellers to tell against me, and thus deprived the bill of any possible chance of support from the Conservativ ranks. The division list is printed in another column. To the forty-seven who, against great pressure, voted with me, I on behalf of those yet outlaws tender my earnest thanks. Now some of the battle must be taken up outside. If Freethinkers desire the repeal of the Blasphemy law, they must bring it forward at every election, and urge it not only on the members who were hostil, but still more on those who stayed away. I thank, too, the branches of the National Secular Society, and the friends who hav petitioned in favor of the bill. I regret that there are many branches which hav done nothing, and many friends who hav made no sign. Specially thankful acknowledgment is due to the Guild of St. Matthew and to its warden and secretary. The rejection of the bill by three to one shows that the fight for repeal will be a very uphill one."

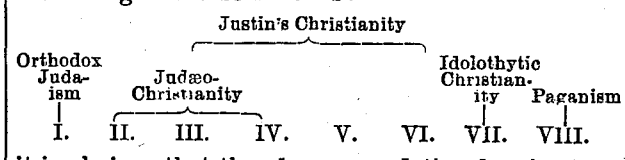
Agnosticism: A Rejoinder.—Concluded.

From the Nineteenth Century.

Until these questions are satisfactorily answered, I am afraid that, so far as I am concerned, Paul's testimony cannot be seriously regarded, except as it may afford evidence of the state of traditional opinion at the time at which he wrote, say between 55 and 60 A.D.; that is, more than twenty years after the event; a period much more than sufficient for the development of any amount of mythology about matters of which nothing was really known. A few years later, among the contemporaries and neighbors of the Jews, and, if the most probable interpretation of the Apocalypse can be trusted, among the followers of Jesus also, it was fully believed, in spite of all evidence to the contrary, that the emperor Nero was not really dead, but that he was hidden away somewhere in the East, and would speedily come again at the head of a great army, to be revenged upon his enemies.

Thus, I conceive that I hav shown cause for the opinion that Dr. Wace's challenge touching the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's prayer, and the Passion was more valorous than discreet. After all this discussion, I am still at the Agnostic point. Tell me, first, what Jesus can be proved to hav been, said, and done, and I will tell you whether I believe him, or in him,* or not! As Dr. Wace admits that I hav dissipated his lingering shade of unbelief about the bedevilment of the Gadarene pigs, he might hav done something to help mine. Instead of that, he manifests a total want of conception of the nature of the obstacles which impede the conversion of his "Infidels."

The truth I believe to be, that the difficulties in the way of arriving at a sure conclusion as to these matters, from the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's prayer, or any other data offered by the Synoptic gospels (and à fortiori from the fourth gospel), are insuperable. Every one of these records is colored by the prepossessions of those among whom the primitiv traditions arose and of those by whom they were collected and edited; and the difficulty of making allowance for these prepossessions is enhanced by our ignorance of the exact dates at which the documents were first put together; of the extent to which they hav been subsequently worked over and interpolated; and of the historical sense, or want of sense, and the dogmatic tendencies, of their compilers and editors. Let us see if there is any other road which will take us into something better than negation.

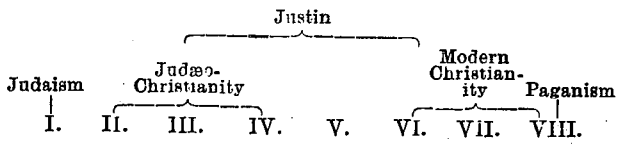


There is a widespread notion that the "primitiv church," while under the guidance of the apostles and their immediate successors, was a sort of dogmatic dovecote, pervaded by the most loving unity and doctrinal harmony. Protestants, especially, are fond of attributing to themselvs the merit of being nearer "the church of the apostles" than their neighbors; and they are the less to be excused for their strange delusion because they are great readers of the documents which prove the exact contrary. The fact is that, in the course of the first three centuries of its existence, the church rapidly underwent a process of evolution of the most remarkable character, the final stage of which is far more different from the first than Anglicanism is from Quakerism. The key to the comprehension of the problem of the origin of that which is now called "Christianity," and its relation to Jesus of Nazareth, lies here. Nor can we arrive at any sound conclusion as to what it is probable that Jesus actually said and did without being clear on this head. By far the most important and subsequently influential steps in the evolution of Christianity took place in the course of the century, more or less, which followed upon the crucifixion. It is almost the darkest period of church history, but, most fortunately, the beginning and the end of the period are brightly illuminated by the contemporary evidence of two writers of whose historical existence there is no doubt,† and against the genuinness of whose most important works there is no widely admitted objection. These are Justin, the philosopher and martyr, and Paul, the apostle to the gentiles. I shall call upon these witnesses only to testify to the condition of opinion among those who called themselvs disciples of Jesus in their time.

Justin, in his dialog with Trypho the Jew, which was written somewhere about the middle of the second century, enumerates certain categories of persons, who in his opinion, will, or will not, be saved.‡ These are:

1. Orthodox Jews who refuse to believe that Jesus is the Christ. Not saved.
2. Jews who observe the Law; believe Jesus to be the Christ; but who insist on the observance of the Law by gentile converts. Not saved.
3. Jews who observe the Law; believe Jesus to be the Christ, and hold that gentile converts need not observe the Law. Saved (in Justin's opinion; but some of his fellow-Christians think the contrary).
4. Gentile converts to the belief in Jesus as the Christ, who observe the Law. Saved (possibly).
5. Gentile believers in Jesus as the Christ, who do not observe the Law themselvs (except so far as the refusal of idol sacrifices), but do not consider those who do observe it heretics. Saved (this is Justin's own view).
6. Gentile believers who do not observe the Law except in refusing idol sacrifices, and hold those who do observe it to be heretics. Saved.
7. Gentiles who believe Jesus to be the Christ and call themselvs Christians, but who eat meats sacrificed to idols. Not saved.
8. Gentiles who disbelieve in Jesus as the Christ. Not saved.

Justin does not consider Christians who believe in the natural birth of Jesus, of whom he implies that there is a respectable minority, to be heretics, though he himself strongly holds the preternatural birth of Jesus and his pre-existence as the "Logos" or "Word." He conceives the Logos to be a second God, inferior to the first, unknowable, God, with respect to whom Justin, like Philo, is a complete agnostic. The holy spirit is not regarded by Justin as a separate personality, and is often mixed up with the "Logos." The doctrin of the natural immortality of the soul is, for Justin, a heresy; and he is as firm a believer in the resurrection of the body, as in the speedy Second Coming and the establishment of the millennium.



This pillar of the church in the middle of the second century—a much-traveled nativ of Samaria—was certainly well acquainted with Rome, probably with Alexandria, and it is likely that he knew the state of opinion throughout the length and breadth of the Christian world as well as any man of his time. If the various categories above enumerated are arranged in a series thus:

it is obvious that they form a gradational series from orthodox Judaism, on the extreme left, to paganism, whether philosophic or popular, on the extreme right; and it will further be observed that while Justin's conception of Christianity is very broad, he rigorously excludes two classes of persons who, in his time, called themselvs Christians; namely those who insist on circumcision and other observances of the Law on the part of gentile converts; that is to say, the strict Judæo-Christians (II) and, on the other hand, those who assert the lawfulness of eating meat offered to idols—whether they are Gnostics or not (VII). These last I hav called "idolothytic" Christians, because I cannot devise a better name, not because it is strictly defensible etymologically.

At the present moment, I do not suppose there is an English missionary in any heathen land who would trouble himself whether the materials of his dinner had been previously offered to idols or not. On the other hand, I suppose there is no Protestant sect within the pale of orthodoxy, to say nothing of the Roman and Greek churches, which would hesitate to declare the practice of circumcision and the observance of the Jewish Sabbath and dietary rules, shockingly heretical.

Modern Christianity has, in fact, not only shifted far to the right of Justin's position, but it is of much narrower compass.

For, though it includes VII, and even, in saint and relic worship, cuts a "monstrous cantle" out of paganism, it excludes not only all Judæo-Christians, but all who doubt that such are heretics. Ever since the thirteenth century, the Inquisition would hav cheerfully burnt, and in Spain did abundantly burn, all persons who came under the categories II, III, IV, V. And the wolf would play the same havoc now, if it could only get its blood-stained jaws free from the muzzle imposed by the secular arm.

Further, there is not a Protestant body except the Unitarian, which would not declare Justin himself a heretic, on account of his doctrin of the inferior godship of the Logos; while I am very much afraid that, in strict logic, Dr. Wace would be under the necessity, so painful to him, of calling him an "Infidel," on the same and on other grounds.

Now let us turn to our other authority. If there is any result of critical investigations of the sources of Christianity which is certain,* it is that Paul of Tarsus wrote the epistle to the Galatians somewhere between the years 55 and 60 A.D., that is to say, roughly, twenty, or five-and-twenty years after the crucifixion. If this is so, the epistle to the Galatians is one of the oldest, if not the very oldest, of extant documentary evidences of the state of the primitiv church. And, be it observed, if it is Paul's writing, it unquestionably furnishes us with the evidence of a participator in the transactions narrated. With the exception of two or three of the other Pauline epistles, there is not one solitary book in the New Testament of the authorship and authority of which we hav such good evidence.

And what is the state of things we find disclosed? A bitter quarrel, in his account of which Paul by no means minces matters or hesitates to hurl defiant sarcasms against those who were "reputed to be pillars:" James, "the brother of the Lord," Peter, the rock on whom Jesus is said to hav built his church, and John, "the beloved disciple." And no deference toward "the rock" withholds Paul from charging Peter to his face with "dissimulation."

The subject of the hot dispute was simply this. Were gentile converts bound to obey the Law or not? Paul answered in the negativ; and, acting upon his opinion, had created at Antioch (and elsewhere) a specifically "Christian" community, the sole qualifications for admission into which were the confession of the belief that Jesus was the messiah, and baptism upon that confession. In the epistle in question, Paul put this—his "gospel," as he calls it—in its most extreme form. Not only does he deny the necessity of conformity with the Law, but he declares such conformity to hav a negativ value. "Behold, I, Paul, say unto you, that if ye receive circumcision, Christ will profit you nothing" (Gal. v, 2). He calls the legal observances "beggarly rudiments," and anathematizes everyone who preaches to the Galatians any other gospel than his own—that is to say, by direct consequence, he anathematizes the Jerusalem Nazarenes whose zeal for the law is testified by James in a passage of the Acts cited further on. In the first epistle to the Corinthians, dealing with the question of eating meat offered to idols, it is clear that Paul himself thinks it a matter of indifference; but he advises that it should not be done, for the sake of the weaker brethren. On the other hand, the Nazarenes of Jerusalem most strenuously opposed Paul's "gospel," insisting on every convert becoming a regular Jewish proselyte, and consequently on his observance of the whole Law; and this party was led by James and Peter and John (Gal. ii, 9). Paul does not suggest that the question of principle was settled by the discussion referred to in Galatians. All he says is that it ended in the practical agreement that he and Barnabas should do as they had been doing in respect of the gentiles; while James and Peter and John should deal in their own fashion with Jewish converts. Afterward he complains bitterly of Peter, because, when on a visit to Antioch, he at first inclined to Paul's view, and ate with the gentile converts; but when "certain came from James," "drew back, and separated himself, fearing them that were of the circumcision. And the rest of the Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that even Barnabas was carried away with their dissimulation" (Gal. ii, 12, 13).

There is but one conclusion to be drawn from Paul's account of this famous dispute, the settlement of which determined the fortunes of the nascent religion. It is that the disciples at Jerusalem, headed by "James, the Lord's brother," and by the leading apostles, Peter and John, were strict Jews, who objected to admit any converts to their body, unless these, either by birth or by becoming proselytes, were also strict Jews. In fact, the sole difference between James and Peter and John, with the body of disciples whom they led, and the Jews by whom they were surrounded, and with whom they for many years shared the religious observances of the Temple, was that they believed that the messiah, whom the leaders of the nation yet looked for, had already come in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.

The Acts of the Apostles is hardly a very trustworthy history; it is certainly of later date than the Pauline epistles, supposing them to be genuin. And the writer's version of the conference of which Paul givs so graphic a description, if that is correct, is unmistakably colored with all the art of a reconciler, anxious to cover up a scandal. But it is none the less instructiv on this account. The judgment of the "council" delivered by James is that the gentile converts shall merely "abstain from things sacrificed to idols, and from blood and from things strangled, and from fornication." But notwithstanding the accommodation in which the writer of the Acts would hav us believe, the Jerusalem church held to its endeavor to retain the observance of the Law. Long after the conference, some time after the writing of the epistles to the Galatians and Corinthians, and immediately after the dispatch of that to the Romans,

---

*I am very sorry for the interpolated "in," because citation ought to be accurate in small things as in great. But what difference it makes whether one "believes Jesus" or "believes in Jesus" much thought has not enabled me to discover. If you "believe him" you must believe him to be what he professed to be—that is, "believe in him;" and if you "believe in him" you must necessarily "believe him."

†True for Justin; but there is a school of theological critics, who more or less question the historical reality of Paul and the genuinness of even the four cardinal epistles.

‡See Dial. cum Tryphone, § 47 and § 35. It is to be understood that Justin does not arrange these categories in order as I hav done.

*I guard myself against being supposed to affirm that even the four cardinal epistles of Paul may not hav been seriously tampered with. See note 10 above.

Paul makes his last visit to Jerusalem, and presents himself to James and all the elders. And this is what the Acts tells us of the interview:

> And they said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands (or myriads) there are among the Jews of them which hav believed; and they are all zealous for the law: and they hav been informed concerning thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the gentiles to forsake Moses, telling them not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs (Acts xxi, 20, 21).

They therefore request that he should perform a certain public religious act in the Temple, in order that > all shall know that there is no truth in the things whereof they hav been informed concerning thee; but that thou thyself walkest orderly, keeping the law (ibid., 24).

How far Paul could do what he is here requested to do, and which the writer of the Acts goes on to say he did, with a clear conscience, if he wrote the epistles to the Galatians and Corinthians, I may leave any candid reader of those epistles to decide. The point to which I wish to direct attention is the declaration that the Jerusalem church, led by the brother of Jesus and by his personal disciples and friends, twenty years and more after his death, consisted of strict and zealous Jews.

Tertullus, the orator, caring very little about the internal dissensions of the followers of Jesus, speaks of Paul as a "ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes" (Acts xxiv, 5), which must hav affected James much in the same way as it would hav moved the archbishop of Canterbury, in George Fox's day, to hear the latter called a "ringleader of the sect of Anglicans." In fact, "Nazarene" was, as is well known, the distinctiv appellation applied to Jesus; his immediate followers were known as Nazarenes, while the congregation of the disciples, and, later, of converts at Jerusalem—the Jerusalem church—was emphatically the "sect of the Nazarenes," no more in itself to be regarded as anything outside Judaism than the sect of the Sadducees or of the Essenes.* In fact, the tenets of both the Sadducees and the Essenes diverged much more widely from the Pharisaic standard of orthodoxy than Nazarenism did.

Let us consider the position of affairs now (A.D. 50–60) in relation to that which obtained in Justin's time, a century later. It is plain that the Nazarenes —presided over by James, "the brother of the Lord," and comprising within their body all the twelve apostles—belonged to Justin's second category of "Jews who observe the Law, believe Jesus to be the Christ, but who insist on the observance of the Law by gentile converts," up till the time at which the controversy reported by Paul arose. They then, according to Paul, simply allowed him to form his congregation of non-legal gentile converts at Antioch and elsewhere; and it would seem that it was to these converts, who would come under Justin's fifth category, that the title of "Christian" was first applied. If any of these Christians had acted upon the more than half permission given by Paul, and had eaten meats offered to idols, they would hav belonged to Justin's seventh category.

Hence, it appears that, if Justin's opinion, which was doubtless that of the church generally in the middle of the second century, was correct, James and Peter and John and their followers could not be saved; neither could Paul, if he carried into practice his views as to the indifference of eating meats offered to idols. Or, to put the matter another way, the center of gravity of orthodoxy, which is at the extreme right of the series in the nineteenth century, was at the extreme left, just before the middle of the first century, when the "sect of the Nazarenes" constituted the whole church founded by Jesus and the apostles; while, in the time of Justin, it lay midway between the two. It is therefore a profound mistake to imagin that the Judæo-Christians (Nazarenes and Ebionites) of later times were heretical outgrowths from a primitiv, universalist "Christianity." On the contrary, the universalist "Christianity" is an outgrowth from the primitiv, purely Jewish, Nazarenism; which, gradually eliminating all the ceremonial and dietary parts of the Jewish law, has thrust aside its parent, and all the intermediate stages of its development, into the position of damnable heresies.

Such being the case, we are in a position to form a safe judgment of the limits within which the teaching of Jesus of Nazareth must hav been confined. Ecclesiastical authority would hav us believe that the words which are given at the end of the first gospel, "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," are part of the last commands of Jesus, issued at the moment of his parting with the eleven. If so, Peter and John must hav heard these words; they are too plain to be misunderstood; and the occasion is too solemn for them to be ever forgotten. Yet the "Acts" tells us that Peter needed a vision to enable him so much as to baptize Cornelius; and Paul, in the Galatians, knows nothing of words which would hav completely borne him out as against those who, though they heard, must be supposed to hav either forgotten or ignored them. On the other hand, Peter and John, who are supposed to hav heard the "Sermon on the Mount," know nothing of the saying that Jesus had not come to destroy the Law, but that every jot and tittle of the Law must be fulfilled, which surely would hav been pretty good evidence for their view of the question.

We are sometimes told that the personal friends and daily companions of Jesus remained zealous Jews and opposed Paul's innovations, because they were hard of heart and dull of comprehension. This hypothesis is hardly in accordance with the concomitant faith of those who adopt it, in the miraculous insight and superhuman sagacity of their master; nor do I see any way of getting it to harmonize with the other orthodox postulate; namely, that Matthew was the author of the first gospel and John of the fourth. If that is so, then, most assuredly, Matthew was no dullard; and as for the fourth gospel—a theosophic romance of the first order—it could hav been written by none but a man of remarkable literary capacity, who had drunk deep of Alexandrian philosophy. Moreover, the doctrin of the writer of the fourth gospel is more remote from that of the "sect of the Nazarenes" than is that of Paul himself. I am quite aware that orthodox critics hav been capable of maintaining that John, the Nazarene, who was probably well past fifty years of age when he is supposed to hav written the most thoroughly Judaizing book in the New Testament—the Apocalypse—in the roughest of Greek, underwent an astounding metamorphosis of both doctrin and style by the time he reached the ripe age of ninety or so, and provided the world with a history in which the acutest critic cannot make out where the speeches of Jesus end and the text of the narrativ begins; while that narrativ is utterly irreconcilable in regard to matters of fact with that of his fellow-apostle, Matthew.

The end of the whole matter is this: The "sect of the Nazarenes," the brother and the immediate followers of Jesus, commissioned by him as apostles, and those who were taught by them up to the year 50 A.D., were not "Christians" in the sense in which that term has been understood ever since its asserted origin at Antioch, but Jews—strict orthodox Jews—whose belief in the messiahship of Jesus never led to their exclusion from the Temple services, nor would hav shut them out from the wide embrace of Judaism.* The open proclamation of their special view about the messiah was doubtless offensiv to the Pharisees, just as rampant low churchism is offensiv to bigoted high churchism in our own country; or as any kind of dissent is offensiv to fervid religionists of all creeds. To the Sadducees, no doubt, the political danger of any messianic movement was serious, and they would hav been glad to put down Nazarenism, lest it should end in useless rebellion against their Roman masters, like that other Galilean movement headed by Judas, a generation earlier. Galilee was always a hotbed of seditious enthusiasm against the rule of Rome; and high priest and procurator alike had need to keep a sharp eye upon nativs of that district. On the whole, however, the Nazarenes were but little troubled for the first twenty years of their existence; and the undying hatred of the Jews against those later converts whom they regarded as apostates and factors of a sham Judaism was awakened by Paul. From their point of view, he was a mere renegade Jew, opposed alike to orthodox Judaism and to orthodox Nazarenism, and whose teachings threatened Judaism with destruction. And, from their point of view, they were quite right. In the course of a century, Pauline influences had a large share in driving primitiv Nazarenism from being the very heart of the new faith into the position of scouted error; and the spirit of Paul's doctrin continued its work of driving Christianity farther and farther away from Judaism, until "meats offered to idols" might be eaten without scruple, while the Nazarene methods of observing even the Sabbath or the Passover were branded with the mark of Judaizing heresy.

But if the primitiv Nazarenes of whom the Acts speaks were orthodox Jews, what sort of probability can there be that Jesus was anything else? How can he hav founded the universal religion which was not heard of till twenty years after his death?† That Jesus possessed in a rare degree the gift of attaching men to his person and to his fortunes; that he was the author of many a striking saying, and the advocate of equity, of love, and of humility; that he may hav disregarded the subtleties of the bigots for legal observance, and appealed rather to those noble conceptions of religion which constituted the pith and kernel of the teaching of the great prophets of his nation seven hundred years earlier; and that, in the last scenes of his career, he may hav embodied the ideal sufferer of Isaiah, may be, as I think it is, extremely probable. But all this involves not a step beyond the borders of orthodox Judaism. Again, who is to say whether Jesus proclaimed himself the veritable messiah, expected by his nation since the appearance of the pseudo prophetic work of Daniel, a century and a half before his time; or whether the enthusiasm of his followers gradually forced him to assume that position?

But one thing is quite certain: if that belief in the speedy second coming of the messiah which was shared by all parties in the primitiv church, whether Nazarene or Pauline; which Jesus is made to prophesy, over and over again, in the Synoptic gospels; and which dominated the life of Christians during the first century after the crucifixion—if he believed and taught that, then assuredly he was under an illusion, and he is responsible for that which the mere effluxion of time has demonstrated to be a prodigious error.

When I ventured to doubt "whether any Protestant theologian who has a reputation to lose will say that he believes the Gadarene story," it appears that I reckoned without Dr. Wace, who, referring to this passage in my paper, says:

> He will judge whether I fall under his description; but I repeat that I believe it, and that he has removed the only objection to my believing it (page 363).

Far be it from me to set myself up as a judge of any such delicate question as that put before me; but I think I may venture to express the conviction that, in the matter of courage, Dr. Wace has raised for himself a monument ære perennius. For really, in my poor judgment, a certain splendid intrepidity, such as one admires in the leader of a forlorn hope, is manifested by Dr. Wace when he solemnly affirms that he believes the Gadarene story on the evidence offered. I feel less complimented, perhaps, than I ought to do, when I am told that I hav been an accomplice in extinguishing in Dr. Wace's mind the last glimmer of doubt which common sense may hav suggested. In fact, I must disclaim all responsibility for the use to which the information I supplied has been put. I formally decline to admit that the expression of my ignorance whether devils, in the existence of which I do not believe, if they did exist, might or might not be made to go out of men into pigs, can, as a matter of logic, hav been of any use whatever to a person who already believed in devils and in the historical accuracy of the gospels.

Of the Gadarene story Dr. Wace, with all solemnity and twice over, affirms that he "believes it." I am sorry to trouble him further, but what does he mean by "it?" Because there are two stories, one in "Mark" and "Luke," and the other in "Matthew." In the former, which I quoted in my previous paper, there is one possessed man; in the latter there are two. The story is told fully, with the vigorous homely diction and the picturesque details of a piece of folklore, in the second gospel. The immediate antecedent event is the storm on the lake of Gennesareth. The immediate consequent events are the message from the ruler of the synagog and the healing of the woman with an issue of blood. In the third gospel the order of events is exactly the same, and there is an extremely close general and verbal correspondence between the narratives of the miracle. Both agree in stating that there was only one possessed man, and that he was the residence of many devils, whose name was "Legion."

In the first gospel, the event which immediately precedes the Gadarene affair is, as before, the storm; the message from the ruler and the healing of the issue are separated from it by the accounts of the healing of a paralytic, of the calling of Matthew, and of a discussion with some Pharisees. Again, while the second gospel speaks of the country of the "Gerasenes" as the locality of the event, the third gospel has "Gerasenes," "Gergesenes," and "Gadarenes" in different ancient MSS.; while the first has "Gadarenes."

The really important points to be noticed, however, in the narrativ of the first gospel are these—that there are two possessed men instead of one; and that while the story is abbreviated by omissions, what there is of it is often verbally identical with the corresponding passages in the other two gospels. The most unabashed of reconcilers cannot well say that one man is the same as two, or two as one; and, though the suggestion really has been made, that two different miracles, agreeing in all essential particulars, except the number of the possessed, were effected immediately after the storm on the lake, I should be sorry to accuse anyone of seriously adopting it. Nor will it be pretended that the allegory refuge is accessible in this particular case.

So, when Dr. Wace says that he believes in the synoptic evangelists' account of the miraculous bedevilment of swine, I may fairly ask which of them does he believe? Does he hold by the one evangelist's story, or by that of the two evangelists? And having made his election, what reasons has he to give for his choice? If it is suggested that the witness

---

* All this was quite clearly pointed out by Ritschl nearly forty years ago. See "Die Entstehung der alt-katholischen Kirche" (1850), p. 108.

* If everyone was baptized as soon as he acknowledged Jesus to be the messiah, the first Christians can hav been aware of no other essential differences from the Jews (Zeller, Vorträge (1865), p. 216).

† Dr. Harnack, in the lately published second edition of his "Dogmengeschichte," says (page 39), "Jesus Christ brought forward no new doctrin;" and again (page 65), "It is not difficult to set against every portion of the utterances of Jesus an observation which deprives him of originality." See also Zusatz 4, on the same page.

of two is to be taken against that of one, not only is the testimony dealt with in that common-sense fashion against which theologians of his school protest so warmly; not only is all question of inspiration at an end, but the further inquiry arises, After all, is it the testimony of two against one? Are the authors of the versions in the second and third gospels really independent witnesses? In order to answer this question, it is only needful to place the English versions of the two side by side, and compare them carefully. It will then be seen that the coincidences between them, not merely in substance, but in arrangement, and in the use of identical words in the same order, are such, that only two alternativs are conceivable: either one evangelist freely copied from the other, or both based themselvs upon a common source, which may either hav been a written document, or a definit oral tradition learned by heart. Assuredly, these two testimonies are not those of independent witnesses. Further, when the narrativ in the first gospel is compared with that in the other two, the same fact comes out.

Supposing, then, that Dr. Wace is right in his assumption that Matthew, Mark, and Luke wrote the works which we find attributed to them by tradition, what is the value of their agreement, even that something more or less like this particular miracle occurred, since it is demonstrable, either that all depend on some antecedent statement, of the authorship of which nothing is known, or that two are dependent upon the third?

Dr. Wace says he believes the Gadarene story; whichever version of it he accepts, therefore, he believes that Jesus said what he is stated in all the versions to hav said, and thereby virtually declared that the theory of the nature of the spiritual world involved in the story is true. Now I hold that this theory is false, that it is a monstrous and mischievous fiction; and I unhesitatingly express my disbelief in any assertion that it is true, by whomsoever made. So that, if Dr. Wace is right in his belief, he is also quite right in classing me among the people he calls "Infidels;" and although I cannot fulfil the eccentric expectation of the bishop of Peterborough, that I shall glory in a title which, from my point of view, it would be simply silly to adopt, I certainly shall rejoice not to be reckoned among the bishop's "us Christians" so long as the profession of belief in such stories as the Gadarene pig affair, on the strength of a tradition of unknown origin, of which two discrepant reports, also of unknown origin, alone remain, forms any part of the Christian faith. And, although I hav, more than once, repudiated the gift of prophecy, yet I think I may venture to express the anticipation, that if "Christians" generally are going to follow the line taken by the bishop of Peterborough and Dr. Wace, it will not be long before all men of common sense qualify for a place among the "Infidels." T. H. HUXLEY.

Cannot Expel nor Punish the Heretics.

From the Christian Advocate, Methodist Organ.

But the most serious infirmity is the helplessness of the state church against the ingrowth of skepticism. When Colenso, bishop of Natal, left his real calling as a maker of arithmetics, and entered the more hazardous domain of attacking the writings of Moses, his open skepticism became a serious question for the ecclesiastical authorities in London to handle. He was tried for his vagaries; but it was all a farce. The mighty state church was powerless to defend its own creed. There was much protesting against the writers of the "Essays and Reviews," but Oxford learning was stronger than the state church whip. But suppose the state church itself is heretical, what then? The spiritual interests of the whole land is at the mercy of the unbelieving machinery.

The most notable present illustration of the defenseless condition of the state church which we hav recently seen can be found in Germany. Bremen, with its one hundred thousand people, has long been a Hanse or free city. But its clergy are paid out of the general treasury, so that the conditions are quite the same as though the support came from Berlin.

Now for about twenty years there has been a pastor of one of the large churches there who is an outright Infidel. The Reformirte Kirchenzeitung publishes extracts from some of his printed sermons which are simply outrageous. His name is Schwalb, and here are some of his utterances: "Yes; we do not agree with the confessions of the Protestant church." "We do not believe in the great, holy, venerable things held before us, and which we are told that we, as Christians and Protestants, must believe." "We do not believe in the impregnability of the Bible." "We do not believe in the trinity." "We do not believe in the God-man." "We do not believe in the sinless man Jesus." "We do not believe in the scriptural miracles." "We do not believe in your facts of redemption; and so far we are totally at variance with the Reformation." "Many of us believe ourselvs impersonal, hardly distinguishable from the world." "If I could, I would do away with baptism and the Lord's supper." "The doctrin of the trinity is an antiquity."

Think of such expressions in a Christian pulpit! Imagin such words spoken in the city made memorable by the labors of the saintly Menken! But how can the matter be helped? All over Germany there are skeptics in the pulpits, and the state pays for their support.

The Best Handbook.

From the British-American.

"Pioneer Pith" is the title given to "the gist of lectures on Rationalism," by R. C. Adams, of Montreal, published by the Truth Seeker Co., New York. This is perhaps the best handbook of its size for introducing the general reader to the principles and the data on which the structure of Rationalism is based. As a compendium of scientific and critical lore useful to the inquirer it forms a very handy book of reference. A list of the standard works it draws upon would hav been a valuable addition.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - 16 Union Park Place, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.

The St. Louis Secularists.

At their meeting, April 28th, the St. Louis Secular Society adopted the following resolution by a unanimous vote:

WHEREAS, In the words of the illustrious and honored George Washington, first president of the United States, this government is not, in any sense, founded on the Christian religion; and,

WHEREAS, This nation owes nothing either to God or to his servants as such, but everything to the noble, Freethinking patriots of Revolutionary times; and,

WHEREAS, President Benjamin Harrison was not elected to his high office as a pope or bishop for the regulation of religious observances and prayer, but to attend to the administration of a purely secular and democratic form of government, which derives its power not from above, but entirely from the consent of the governed; and,

WHEREAS, Said Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States, has overstepped and prostituted the power of the high office intrusted to his charge, in his proclamation regarding the centennial commemoration of the inauguration of the first president of the United States, by "recommending the people of the entire country to repair to places of worship at 9 o'clock, April 30, 1889, to thank God for his assistance in the past, and to implore his favor, blessing, and leadership in our political affairs for the future;" therefore,

Resolved, That while we are willing for Christian people to spend all or such part of their time as they see fit in serving or imploring the imaginary king of that foreign country called heaven, we, as Americans, as citizens of this earth, as admirers of the Declaration of Independence, as defenders of the Constitution of the United States, as lovers of liberty in thought and speech, and as free men and women who would truly honor the sacred memories of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Thomas Paine, Benjamin Franklin, and others of that noble band of Freethinkers who caused the successful institution of this Republic; we, the members of the St. Louis Secular Society, do hereby proclaim our indignation and record our sorrow at the aforesaid unconstitutional conduct of Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States; and,

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be entered on the records of the society, and that a copy be transmitted to the public press.

R. M. STENDER, Sec.

Our Celebration.

It was the desire of the Chicago Union to appropriately commemorate the centennial, but as James Abbott, Esq., who was to hav lectured Sunday evening the 28th, was unable to make the necessary preparation, owing to absence from the city, as usual the president had to become his substitute. So instead of carrying out the intended services for Tuesday morning, we held it Sunday evening. Coming just prior to the avalanche of distinguished orators who held the public attention on Tuesday, the address received more attention from the press than it would otherwise hav done, and all the papers had more or less mention of it, some coming out with flaming headlines of interrogation, "Was Washington a Freethinker?"

We had a regular service of song. Some twenty voices, under Mrs. Piper's leadership, with her daughter Bertha as accompanist, rendered patriotic airs and an ode to Thomas Paine in a way to demonstrate that we hav not failed to appreciate the vocal talent existing among our members. The voices of Mesdames Moore, Stiles, and Wineman, as well as those of their daughters, were of excellent timbre, and a delightful surprise to the audience.

Mesdames Gruber and MaDau, of the quartet, sang a duo in their usual effectiv style.

Vice-President Gruber was in the chair.

Of the report of the address I prefer to quote from the reliable Sunday-school organ, the daily News:

WAS WASHINGTON A CHRISTIAN?

At the meeting of the Chicago Secular Union last evening E. A. Stevens, the president, fired a broadside into the centennial celebration. He had been very much disturbed at the implication by clergymen, and laymen, too, in their references to the centennial, that George Washington was a Christian, and he entered the lists with great energy and a harang of two hours' duration to claim the father of his country as the Freethinker's own friend and fellow.

"The successor of Washington and Jefferson," he announced with much vigor and indignation, "has issued a proclamation insulting to the intelligence of the American people, degrading to the Secular principles of our society, and a slur on the memory of those Freethinkers most prominent in founding a state without a church, by directing a religious observance by the Christian sects. So I take this occasion to protest and to giv the views of the four greatest characters of the Revolution, and show that there was not a Christian among them."

It developed in the course of the evening that Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Paine were the other three of Mr. Stevens's big four, but he devoted most of his time to attempting to reclaim General Washington's memory from the stigma which he thought had been attached to it. He referred sarcastically to the Union League Club's circular calling upon Chicagoans to subscribe and celebrate as giving the impression that that organization also had become an annex of the Young Men's Christian Association, and then, to get a comfortable basis to work on, recited from history instances of religious persecution and intolerance. Thomas Jefferson, Bishop White, of Philadelphia, an acquaintance of Washington and an eminent Episcopal clergyman, and the Rev. Dr. Wilson, of Albany, were quoted at length to show that General Washington was a Deist but not a Christian; that, although he attended church, he was never a communicant, and that he never gave the slightest expression of his religious faith. Altogether Mr. Stevens was of the opinion that the churches hav no business to take part in the celebration of General Washington's inauguration as president.

The only thing I wish to add in correction to the report is that I hav too much of the milk of human kindness in my composition to inflict myself for two hours on any audience.

Anyone who read the poem in Puck on the centennial must hav been struck with its merit, so I adapted it considerably and gave it at the conclusion of the lecture. With that the audience were delighted.

A FORTUNATE CONJUNCTURE.

Our people had felt that the unexpected change in the program was almost a fatality, but it proved otherwise.

D. L. Moody is holding revival services this week in the Tabernacle. Dr. Driver, of Portland, Ore., is here to assist him in calling sinners to repentance. Dr. Driver has made it a specialty, he claims, to answer the arguments of Infidels and all skeptics. A public invitation was extended the latter unfortunates to come and get their mental cobwebs driven away by the doctor from Portland, and Tuesday morning designated as the time. The invitation was clipped from a paper, and pasted on a courteous communication to D. L. Moody, notifying that gentleman that a delegation from the Secular Union were anxious to ask some questions which appeared to stand in the way of their accepting their scheme of salvation. Of those present were Mr. and Mrs. Stiles, Mrs. Holmes, Professor Milleson, Jehu Barr, Drs. Bishop and Lewis, and the writer. Brother Barr handed up our letter, and soon Mr. Moody announced its contents, and said that as it was sprung on them rather suddenly they would hav to try and make room for the questions that evening. Rev. Joe Cook, of Boston, was passing through the city, and he had been invited to speak that morning.

Joe Cook took three-quarters of an hour to abuse the Infidels, calling them "cancer-breeders" and similar pet names. He told the interview he had at Lake George with Colonel Ingersoll, stating that it was the first time he had mentioned the matter from a public platform. That the proprietor of the hotel was anxious to introduce him, but he, "Joe," said he did not care to become acquainted with the great blasphemer, but as the hotel man desired it, he submitted, when the colonel met him with filthy abuse. The language he attributed to Colonel Ingersoll was: "You're a coward, a liar, and a dirty dog," and the opinion was unanimous among our delegation that if the colonel ever told the truth in his life it was on the occasion he met Rev. Joe Cook. I had to use more than words to prevent some of our friends from giving him their opinion in open meeting. Professor Milleson said, "Why, he's a patent liar! He lies like a trip-hammer."

Pretty soon there was a scene. Mr. Moody got up and stopped Cook, and told him plainly that he did not want any more of that kind of talk. Moody said there are honest Infidels as well as honest Christians. "I would giv more to convert one of those than a hundred others. These people hav been invited here and I don't want them abused. It is not right. Had I been an Infidel, I would not hav sat and listened to such abuse." To the credit of the Christians, this sentiment was applauded.

Joe Cook dropped his jaw and innocently inquired, "Was I abusing anybody?" This was followed by derisiv laughter, and if Joe Cook and Moody did not come as near having a set-to as any men I ever saw, I don't know myself. What kind of a time they had after meeting, the reader may imagin.

Mr. Moody invited us on the platform and we were introduced to the brethren.

Promptly at eight Mr. Stiles and the writer ascended the Tabernacle platform, prayers were offered up for us, and the exhortation was worked to the highest pitch, when Brother Moody thought he might venture to trot out his champion.

Not being allowed to debate, we had to formulate our points into questions.

Am sorry the questions were not saved, but as a reporter seemed to want them so much, I gave them to him, thinking that they would do a little Liberalizing of the community.

Dr. Driver is somewhat wordy and adroit, but it was evident the questions I was delegated to ask him he did not come within a thousand miles of answering. Although I was not expected to speak, I managed to get a word in edgewise and show where he had contradicted himself and the scripture on each occasion. Brother Stiles was on the lookout for the scripture argument, and his finding the apt contradictions did splendid service for our cause.

Everything was perfectly orderly, decorous, and dignified, and I am satisfied we created a good impression and left a sediment of doubt among the audience. At the conclusion, I thanked Mr. Moody and the congregation, and he is to come up to the Secular Union. I cited the fact that over twenty ministers of the city had declined to meet Mr. Watts in debate, and if could make arrangements for Dr.

Driver to remain we should endeavor to hav such a debate.

I am satisfied that Dr. Driver was never more relieved than when Mr. Moody announced, "That will be the last question to-night."

Whether it was owing to the extraordinary press of matter in their columns, or in compliance to an urgent request to suppress the report, not a newspaper had a word in regard to the great field-day at the Tabernacle, notwithstanding that reporters were present and kept busy. They seemed to enjoy it as much as the Infidels. E. A. STEVENS.

"Ingersoll Knows"

Just about as much upon subjects he discusses as others who disagree with him. Juliet H. Severance travels widely apart from respectful intellectual attitudes to characterize as assumptiv and arrogant Colonel Ingersoll's eloquent statement "that no person has come back from the unseen world, no authentic message has been delivered. Through all the centuries not one whisper has broken the silence that lies beyond the grave. Countless millions hav sought for evidence, hav listened in vain for some word." Certainly no truer, sublimer, or more beautiful or respectful words hav ever been spoken or written by either tongue or pen. No carpenter ever hewed closer the line, nor marksman ever struck nearer the bull's-eye than the valiant colonel when he uttered those sentiments. Of course, they are his opinions, based upon his own observations, upon his own learning, his own senses, sustained by those of others whom he has held intercourse and association with in the social, professional, and political spheres in which he has moved and mingled. He attacks no one's creed, no one's standard, no one's personal, moral, or religious conviction. When our professors meet with a real relic it is bought and placed in a museum, gallery, or cabinet; when scientific investigators produce a not-to-be-mistaken phenomenon, they nurture and value it, and possess it if they can. But the phenomenon must not be as the luring, deceiving mirage, ever fleeting and eluding. The phenomenon must be tangible, real, and cognizable not only by me but by all men whose senses and brains and comprehensions are normal, balanced, and activ. Not subject-matter of faith, clothed in spirit. Not the mental projections of religiously excited imaginations thrown from the whirling mind as sparks of steel flying from a revolving grind-wheel. Science requires not only the evidence of the senses, but such a combination, confirmation, and association of testimony as to forever remove all doubt and cavil. And certainly the supernatural must suffer itself, with all of its isms and ologies, to be kept out of the workshops and laboratories, the brains and the hearts, of this material world's analysts and dissectors, and categoried with delusory subjects of its kind. The colonel is right, and no evidence or testimony, living or dead, upon the subject of spirit existence or of "one whisper that has broken the silence that lies beyond the grave," would be taken in any court of law—barring our lower courts, where bribes, prejudices, and bigotries prevail with single judges—or could run the gauntlet of the professors in any primary school of our fair land.

The colonel is certainly fully justified in denying the authority of unscientific, unusual, and extraordinary evidence, if the phenomenon claimed to exist cannot be produced and furnished on call, or supplied in manner and on occasion, where it may be thoroughly analyzed, as could any known scientific datum or point, or as a mathematical problem, which, while intricate, complicated, and profound, is yet capable of the fullest and completest demonstration, proof, and conviction. It is so easy to be deluded and delude one's self; and, a delusion once possessed, so natural to husband and hug it, and so difficult to rid one's self of the incubus. As a great writer has put it: "There are circumstances in which a series of imaginary events inserts itself in the series of real events. We then attribute to ourselvs what we hav not experienced and hav not done. If we do not undeceive ourselvs by a rigid analysis, we fall into metaphysical illusion." To declare that no person has come back from the unseen world is not backing down from Agnosticism, but, instead, still further confirming that position. For an Agnostic is simply "one who holds that we know nothing of the supernatural." So one who, without claiming to know himself, disputes others' claims of knowledge, as much as to say, "While I don't know or claim to know, I deny your knowledge, and the proof lies first, last, and always with you to establish a right to claim to know upon matters the world has ever been heretofore silent upon, save in a spluttering, blubbering, driveling way." Of course another may hav had an experience he has not, as, for instance, a vague and indefinit dream of a people clothed in sunshine somewhere beyond the nowhere, or an ecstatic vision of a world where eternal summer prevails, and sorrow, pain, and trouble are suffered not. But unless this people and world can be reproduced to the sensuous vision to be analyzed, and countenanced by being brought within the realm of physical and material knowledge, they will ever remain a fantasy of the brain—a creation sweet, perhaps, but nevertheless of the imagination and fancy. Your vision and dream, while they may remain, as I hope they will, a treasured and rapturous morsel in your life, will not disturb, distress, or embarrass the earnest, throbbing heart of the great and mighty humanity, who are ever struggling and striving onward and upward in mournful and silent march toward the eternal fate and truth, which, like cold and brilliant stars at night, ever blink and beckon the weary, toiling wanderer on and ever on, at last to woo him into a peaceful, eternal slumber, and then resolve so kindly his all into themselvs forever. FRED. HEBARD.

Rochester, N. Y.

Does Dr. Severance Know?

Dr. Severance berates Colonel Ingersoll for his "arrogance and bigotry," for merely denying what no man can affirm without fear of successful contradiction—the existence of a spiritual world.

If a man is to be denounced because he antagonizes that which is in no sense susceptible of scientific demonstration, then the only means to escape censure is not to think at all. Thus Christianity, the father of Spiritualism, says, in the same breath, If you cannot disprove, shut up! Yet, in support of this grand discovery, the same logic suffices Christians and Spiritualists. As Dr. Severance says in substance: "If a man testifies, and is honest, believe him. Credulity should always take precedence of doubt when the relater is of known integrity. Common justice demands this." Thus, of two men, one of undoubted veracity, the other a trifle inexact, what the first says is far more likely to be scientifically true (because he is honest) than what the second says (because he is dishonest sometimes). This is what Spiritualists call scientific evidence. They hav a strange idea that multitude, in some way, strengthens theory. That if you can get ten men to testify to the same occurrence, the collectiv testimony of all is stronger than that of any one. They imagin that it must be a great deal harder, and require much stronger proof, to convince one hundred men of equal intelligence, than to convince one; while in fact the exact reverse is the rule.

In proportion to the increase of adherents, the necessity for the presentation of scientific evidence decreases. Numbers command silence, respectability, but are fearfully detrimental, in this age, to the clear propagation of truth, and never render more exact or truthful any theory. Spiritualists should be ashamed to forward this barbarous relic of Christianity as a proof of their theory. And it is beyond all doubt that among Spiritualists there is found more genuin superstition to the square inch than among any other sect of theorists.

I hav had considerable experience in this line of investigation. I hav seen dozens converted to Spiritualism by "evidence" the disproof of which I had then and there at my disposal, and, afterward, these same persons were referred to as being eminently worthy of testifying to the "faith of Fox."

For each case of actual benefit having been derived from this belief, there are certainly two of injurious import to balance it.

It is certainly a strange axiom in scientific discovery "to accept an honest man's word as exact until we hav reason to doubt." Who is to judge of his honesty? Himself? Some very honest men and great philanthropists hav been petty rascals. The great Calvin was not above murdering a fellow-man, yet he was eminently honest, and said it was good.

Now, according to the quotation above, from Dr. Severance, what difference is there between the "faith" of the Christian and the credulity—in the honest man—of the Spiritualist? One is human testimony; the other, testimony of humanity—birth, hearsay.

The most helpless object to my knowledge is a Spiritualist outside of a séance room vainly endeavoring to convey, intellectually, to another an idea of what he calls "mediumship." Witness the helplessness of McArthur. It is a pity that this theory of immortality and spirit return is based upon, and may be maintained only by, the evidence of the senses. If there were evidences derived from natural laws, from common, every-day experiences, something palpable, intellectual, scientifically demonstrable, anything, in fact, to emancipate struggling thousands from chains of "sense" and the "testimony of honest men," then there would be a means of reaching those who are mentally incapable of such investigation, but who now fluctuate between the clever, the cleverest, and the most clever of spook manipulators.

Of what value is the testimony of a man who can pen this: "For one to unqualifiedly deny their claim, without being able to satisfactorily explain the phenomena upon which it is based, upon any other hypothesis, shows the person making such denial is afflicted with compound ignorance, i.e., he is ignorant of the subject, and ignorant of his ignorance."

That is Christianity; and if Dr. Severance had lived in ancient times, he would hav been "unqualifiedly" a believer in miracles. Why? Oh, because that which you cannot disprove is worthy of belief, especially if supported by "honest men."

It is a good thing to be ignorant sometimes; notably, to hav that kind of ignorance described by Dr. Severance. Whatever it is, it is not ignorance of the principles of logic, the value of evidence, the knowledge of human nature, nor the useful learning called psychology.

One would think that to an M.D. such a belief would be peculiarly disagreeable, for obvious reasons. But perhaps Dr. Severance has succeeded in locating and vivisecting this "thin, theoretical thing" called "spirit." If so, well may Professor Haskell inquire: "How many can dance on the point of a cambric needle?" Study psychology, doctor; get down a little deeper into the rules and principles of scientific discovery. Never mind what "honest men" say or do. Tell them that on their shoulders lies the onus probandi, and that the most scientific answer to an unproved theory is a flat and absolute denial. You admit that it is, in a rigid sense, a hypothesis. Then do not qualify it with such irrelativ adjectivs as "scientific," etc. H. W. HAMMOND.

Orange, Mass.

Paine's Deeds Recalled.

From the New York Sun

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN, Sir: I had the honor of an invitation to the various displays in New York, and occupied a seat on the platform at the literary exercises that took place in front of the sub-treasury building in Wall street. I heard the eloquent oration of Mr. Depew, and I was surprised that a man who is usually so just and correct in his views and remarks should hav omitted the name of Thomas Paine, and should hav said nothing of the important part which he acted in the war of the Revolution. That Mr. Depew made no allusion to the political writings of Paine is indeed surprising.

Thomas Paine was one of the master-spirits in the great struggle, and helped as much as any man to bring it to a successful and triumphant conclusion. This was admitted by his most distinguished contemporaries. In a letter to Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, Washington says:

That Paine's "Common Sense" and many of his "Crisis" were well-timed and had a happy effect on the public mind, none who will turn to the epoch at which they were published will deny.

Major-Gen. Charles Lee, when "Common Sense" first appeared, wrote as follows to Washington:

Hav you seen the pamphlet, "Common Sense?" I never saw such a masterly, irresistible performance. It will, if I mistake not, in concurrence with the transcendent folly and wickedness of the ministry, giv the coup de grace to Great Britain. I own myself convinced by the arguments of the necessity of separation.

General Lee, speaking of the wonderful effect of Paine's writings, said that "he burst forth on the world like Jove in thunder."

Dr. Benjamin Rush, a member of Congress and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, said:

"Common Sense" burst from the press with an effect which has rarely been produced by types and paper in any age of this country.

George Washington wrote to Paine:

ROCKY HILL, Sept. 10, 1783.

DEAR SIR: I hav learned, since I hav been at this place, that you are at Bordentown—whether for the sake of retirement or economy, be it for either or both, or whatever it may, I shall be exceedingly happy to see you here.

Your presence may remind Congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them, command my best exertions with freedom, as they will be rendered cheerfully by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and who, with much pleasure, subscribes himself,

Your sincere friend, G. WASHINGTON.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Paine, said:

You express a wish, in your letter, to return to America in a national ship. Mr. Dawson, who brings over the treaty and who will present you this letter, is charged with orders to the captain of the Maryland to receive and accommodate you back, if you can be ready to depart at such short warning. You will, in general, find us returned to sentiments worthy of former times. In these it will be your glory to hav steadily labored, and with as much effect as any man living. That you may liv long to continue your useful labors, and reap the reward in the thankfulness of nations, is my sincere prayer. Accept the assurance of my high esteem and affectionate attachment. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

John Adams, in a letter to Paine, said:

It has been generally propagated through this continent that I wrote the pamphlet, "Common Sense." I could not hav written anything so manly and in so striking a style. JOHN ADAMS.

George Washington again writes to Paine:

A few more such flaming arguments as were exhibited at Falmouth and Norfolk, added to the sound doctrin and unanswerable reasoning contained in the pamphlet, "Common Sense," will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation. GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Again Thomas Jefferson writes:

No writer has exceeded Paine in ease and familiarity of style, in perspicuity of expression, happiness of elucidation, and in simple and unassuming language.

James Monroe says, in writing to Paine:

It is not necessary for me to tell you how much all your countrymen—I speak of the great mass of the people—are interested in your welfare. They hav not forgotten the history of their own Revolution and the difficult scenes through which they passed. The crime of ingratitude has not yet stained, and I trust never will stain, our national character. You are considered by them as not only having rendered important services to our own Revolution, but as being, on a more extensiv scale, the friend of human rights. To the welfare of Thomas Paine the Americans are not, nor can they be, indifferent. JAMES MONROE.

Thomas Paine was always on the side of human freedom. He spent the greater part and the best part of his life in defense of the rights of man. If he committed errors in life, they were on the side of humanity. Read the history of his life, and the part he took in the war of the Revolution, and you will concur with me that the man never lived to whom we are under greater obligations for the success of our glorious independence, and the liberty which we now enjoy.

The American Revolution was a great epoch in the history of human freedom, in which Thomas Paine took such a conspicuous part. It elevated man to a higher, nobler, and surer plane of liberty. And the history of our country can not be written with the name of Thomas Paine left out.

Mr. Depew did great injustice to the memory of Thomas Paine when he left his name out of his great centennial oration. A. SOHELL.

Albany, May 4.

The Best Edited Liberal Paper.

From the Denison, Tex., Sunday Gazetteer.

The price of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a large illustrated weekly, is $3 a year. It is the best-edited Liberal paper published. It is Liberal, for it gives all sides a hearing, the only honest way of treating any question laying claim to public consideration.

Communications.

The Church—Its Moral Status.

In our last article we proved by Christian evidence that the power of the church for evil was not confined to the old mother at Rome, but that her Protestant daughters were as corrupt and depraved as the source whence they emanated.

We wish to impress upon the mind of the reader that evil causes cannot produce good effects, neither can good causes produce evil effects.

The doctrins of the Bible as taught in our Sunday-schools and churches are unquestionably most pernicious in their influence on the morals of mankind; and as long as the church adheres to these doctrins she cannot ascend a single degree in the scale of moral excellence. Whenever and wherever the cardinal doctrins of the church hav been taught and practiced, then and there hav men been vicious, bigoted, cruel, and depraved. In stating this we are not putting it in the least degree too strong. Who ever knew a man to be better and purer by believing that he was a "child of wrath sold under sin," and that he had "a heart desperately wicked above all things;" and that out of it "proceeded false witness, theft, murders, and adulteries?" Is anyone but a priest-deluded idiot silly enough to believe that a firm and unwavering faith in one's own "innate vileness" is the first step toward angelic purity? We don't care a straw for the loud profession, and the glitter and glamour, of church worship and church society, for beneath it all lies a selfishness, hypocrisy, and meanness, that the non-professing worldling does not possess.

We cheerfully bear testimony to the fact that there are honest and conscientious men and women in the church, but this does not prevent them from being most mischievous and injurious in their attitude toward their fellow-man.

Conscientiousness simply prompts to right doing, but it has no power to giv its possessor a correct definition as to what is right. John Calvin was, no doubt, conscientious when he signed the death-warrant of the Spanish physician and had him burnt at the stake for his religious opinions. Cotton Mather of our own country and his pious devotees were, no doubt, distressingly conscientious and honest when they hanged men and women for witchcraft—a Mosaic or Bible crime not recognized in science—and bored the tongues of the Quakers through with red-hot irons for the unpardonable offense of saying thee and thou, and stripped a mother's back bare to the waist and whipped her through the streets of Salem on Monday morning at the tail of a cart for the offense of kissing her baby on Sunday, she owing all her love to God on that day. These parties were all honest, but honesty did not make them safe citizens. Many good men and women are in the church because they hav never heard the other side and do not know any better. But they are not good from church influence, but from inherited predisposition—good not by the aid of the church, but in spite of it. If the church made men good, then all church members would be upright. That they are not, proves that goodness is derived from some other source.

We deny that the church exerts any reformatory influence whatever. The minister may by his dire threats of hell and future endless torment lay a restraint on the evil-disposed person. But he is simply restrained, not reformed. If a man refrains from stealing because he fears the penitentiary, he is nevertheless a thief all the same.

Luther, as quoted in our last article, confessed, even on his deathbed, that his religious reformation, so far as morals were concerned, was a lamentable failure, and that he had spent his time "for naught." And we will now add to his testimony that of the notorious John Calvin, the Protestant inquisitor and co-worker with Luther. In his "Livre-sur-les Scandales," page 28, in referring to the loose morals of the laymen in the church, Calvin made the following complimentary reference to the clergy of his time in the following language: "There remains a wound still more deplorable. The pastors—yes, the pastors themselvs, who mount the pulpit, are, at the present time, the most shameful examples of waywardness and all other vices; hence their sermons obtain neither more credit nor authority than the fictitious tales told by strolling players on the stage." Just think of it, the pastors away back in the sixteenth century given to "waywardness and all other vices." But a class of men who accept such old lecherous reprobates as Lot, Judah, David, and Solomon as their religious exemplars, are prone to waywardness, and it is a contradiction of the eternal fitness of things to expect anything else of them. With such shepherds, woe to their flocks, and especially to the innocent, unsuspecting lambs of the feminin gender! Like causes produce like effects, and centuries seem to hav produced but little change for the better with this clerical class. The Rev. J. M. Peebles gave to the public some very interesting statistics on this point, proving that there were more Christian clergymen in the penitentiary in New York state than of any other class or profession according to the number, and an undue proportion of them for offenses against the purity and innocence of woman. But these clerical convicts, no doubt, spent much of their time meditating on those precious little episodes in the history of "righteous Lot" and his daughters, Judah and his daughter-in-law, and David, the man after the Christian "God's own heart," and Solomon, the wise, with his modest number of a thousand wives and concubines. And reflecting on these episodes, they no doubt experienced a deep sense of religious consolation that lightened the burden of their confinement. Nothing like the Christian religion, with its illustrious examples of vice and its sweet provisions of atoning grace, to help a clerical crook out when he gets caught in his own meanness.

The Rev. Sam Jones, in a sermon preached at Chicago, March 12, 1886, did not state that there were more ministers in the penitentiary than any other class; but he did say that as "many preachers go to hell as any other people on God almighty's earth." (Cries from the congregation, "That's so!" and applause.) Sam ought to know, and yet, in the face of this damaging testimony exclusivly from Christian witnesses, the religious training of society is placed in the hands of this class of moral reprobates.

In dwelling on the unsavory record of the church we feel that a contrast would be a relief, and we turn to the heathen to procure it.

Mr. William Horniday, of the Smithsonian Institute, spent several years in foreign wilds, and he givs the following testimony as to the morals of the heathen before they had been corrupted by the degrading influences of Christian missionary teachings. In speaking, among others, of a tribe called the Dyaks, he says: "We see in these strange children of nature all the cardinal virtues without a ray of religion and a high state of morality without ministers. They keep no Sabbath, say no prayers, build no temples, worship nothing. The Dyaks are, perhaps, the most contented people under the sun. In hospitality, humanity, sympathy, and charity they are not outranked by any people living, so far as I know." And yet the church, with its foul record of war, persecution, slavery, oppression, and murder, presumes to send missionaries to a people like those above described. From intercommunication between Christian and heathen, morally the heathen is always the loser. The Rev. Mr. Murray, in a lecture given in Springfield, O., Oct., 1873, stated that on board one ship leaving Boston harbor for heathen lands there were three missionaries and three hundred barrels of rum. Mr. William Horniday, in his work, "Free Rum on the Congo," states that, "We hav opened the rivers of Africa to commerce, only to pour down on them the raging plegethon of alcohol; no river of Inferno is more accursed." And yet the clergy continue to prate to their silly dupes what great things the church has done for the heathen, and continue to collect money to support in foreign lands one of the most useless, worthless, and pestilent class of men and women that ever preyed on the well-being of the human race. W. S.

Nashville, Tenn.

God—Religion—Evolution.

It is high time that we turn the tables on the "Heaven-accredited Holy Apostolic Church, mother of the Holy Roman Universal Inquisition," and so relieve mankind from the degrading necessity of donning the sackcloth and ashes of the "sinner," putting the odium of "coming short of the glory" on the real offender—the God of the Christian church, the Noachic dispenser of the waters of the deluge and hailer of fire and brimstone on Sodom and Gomorrah, the supreme botch of the universe—not as builder of the material structure, for with that he had nothing to do—but as ruler and governor of mankind; the regulator and controler of human affairs; the demented Moses-created lawgiver of the tramping Jews; inspirer of the horrors of the Inquisition and the cruelties of the modern tenement system, etc.

Giving our august subject his dues, we start on our genial task with the admission that as an executiv officer he has at all times been A No. 1, bearing the gree abune them a', but as a legislator a poor stick; so much so, indeed, that his system is fast becoming in these days of "reform of abuses" a byword and a reproach among men, stamping him as the great failure of the centuries, the bankrupt par excellence of the pantheons.

It is quite unnecessary to seek for details to sustain our charge of incompetency—or malevolence, shall we call it?—of the great I Am as a director, the proofs lying along the highways of time "thick as the leaves of Vallambrosa;" from the grand initiativ escapade in the mythic garden of Eden to the last rent-theft of the stews inclusiv—a period presenting a ceaseless series of punishments without the palliation of criminality; a long season of merest wantonness; showing not only a contemptuous disregard of human interests but an activ devilishness, the result of innate wolfish depravity. Such is the Great Director the ages are made to present in history; such the great fetich of the centuries as he is drawn from the inspired chronicles of the altar and handed down by saint, by prophet, and by teachers of the pulpit generally; eternally "in flaming ire, taking vengeance," "for they shall know I am the Lord."

Guizot says: "Human history opens on inacessible morasses and vast forests, altogether uncleared, given up to the chances of primitiv vegetation, peopled with wolves and bears and with great herds of swine, and with humans but little removed above them in habits. Inclosed in dwellings dark and low, the best of them built of wood and clay, covered with branches or straw, people lived a beastly life; their never-ending dread being the war-cry, often enough heard—men living grossly and idle being prone to quarrel and fight."

The drama of civilization changing the scene, they are made to witness the rush, the crush, and the havoc of invading armies; masses of demoniac spoilers, "made in the image of God," sweeping from the "swarming east," on errands of butchery and plunder, laying waste whatever of fertility came in their fearful warpath. Europe was so settled after hundreds of years of anarchical turmoil. Where the first batch of marauding miscreants came from, nobody knows; all the information vouchsafed being that temporary settlements were established on the route, then broken up by succeeding eruptions; the agriculturists changing localities when forced by the exigencies of the advance of new-comers, or, yielding to the impulse of adventure, adopting the haphazard life of the barbaric depredators.

And thus the early struggles went on, men swaying from hunger to gluttony, from activ violence to short seasons of repose, rapacious, bloodthirsty, predatory. But a few centuries before the advent of Christianity, indeed, the same rude conditions prevailed; flourishing settlements changing to deserted houses, the dispossessed taking to their ships in a body, transferring their homes elsewhere; some, preferring the sea to the land, becoming pirates; but, whether on land or on sea, at all times meeting the same degree of struggle, suffering, and death.

So, through all the ages we find the mass of mankind occupying the desperate outposts of existence—either struggling as armies of invasion or driven by fire and sword from the lands they had ravaged from others—while in more modern times men are found in ignoble rivalry of personal interests, seeking in commercial and business competition the success that ruins others, or the ruin that others visit on them.

The worst horrors of activ turbulence in the struggle for life, however, hav been endurable when compared to the ever-present terrors imposed by superstition; rendering people in their helpless ignorance victims to mysteries embraced in the word "religion;" the priesthood, pointing to simplest natural phenomena as proofs of heaven-delegated power; demanding human sacrifices to avert the anger of the God of the thunder, the lightning, and the tempest. Thus, involving horror in all its categories, man's life has been a continued series of violence till now; its degradations only slightly lessened with the fall of the Bastile and the close of the Inquisition; checks to the long reaching despotism of church and state; checks imposed by the people, not the Lord, as against the "Lord's anointed," for only with the consent of the governing few could systematic law-supported atrocities be practiced—a partnership again sought to be established—a partnership, the papers to which hav already been drawn up, and which can be averted only by the force resident in the intelligence of the Secular brain. "Up guards and at em!" Wait not for drum, or trumpet note; but, rallying in force, strike at the advance guard, sending them back upon Rome's massing cohorts with the message of Science: "Your teachings are false. We brand you as knaves and haters of mankind. Your aim is rule or ruin, using the wrath of a mythic God to inspire your played out followers of the Old World, and trusting to the added numbers of your victims who hav sought refuge in the New, to gain the victory of the spoiler. We hurl defiance at your feeble combination, promising them the welcome the invaded givs the invaders. Led by Truth, we will disarm your cruel and malignant God and send him packing with his sainted relics, crucifix, and altars to where the early gods of the pantheons lie; where he will find 'none so low as to do him reverence.'"

And here let me say that the question underlying the accumulated horrors that make up the history of our race is not so much to gather proofs that man is not the moral delinquent the church insists on representing him as being, as to show that religion, starting from false premises, has sought to establish conditions antagonistic to truth—giving to ridiculous postulates the potency of facts. Taking the question in its simplest form and stripping it of all verbiage clustering around it from theological and other interested pens, it stands briefly thus: Man, originally starting from a purely animal basis, has presented through all the ages the distinguishing characteristics of his origin, but modified by the tendency to moral and intellectual development which inheres in the constitution of his being; a quality which, by the mysterious processes of evolution, will yet invest society with just social relations and the highest conditions attainable on earth.

Representativ in himself of all the distinctiv attributes of the animal kingdom, man, from his environment, became molded into the being we find him in the dawn of the historic period—essentially a man-brute. What modifying agencies existed in prehistoric times preparing him as an actor on the stage of history we are unable to speak of but in conjecture. In the savage state, we find in him a wild, selfish, demi-devil; houseless and but partially clad in skins torn from animals of the forest; eating raw flesh, sucking the marrow from bones, frequently human, and drinking the hot blood of his victims. In the barbaric state he is an easily excited semi-savage, reducing to cruelest servitude all he conceives to be his enemies. In the partially civilized—our own times—we find him still clinging to the distinctions of the barbarian, but rich in promis of a noble future. So much so that, notwithstanding the fearful exhibits the history of mankind discloses, together with the story of his habitat presenting so many drawbacks to progress, steady advances in kindly treatment and geographical security hav marked the passage of the centuries. Society is fast unfolding the truth as it is promised in science and sought for by Liberalism. There are certainly but few atrocious kings or chiefs now to be found. The hour of the imperious priest is fast passing away. The conqueror has fallen into disrepute. Arbitration in national disputes has been inaugurated. Above all, the sponge of science is fast cleansing the slate of society of the stains of ignorant piety, preparing mankind for the new regime. History no longer will be a jumble of horror and bloodshed—cities blasted by war, countries laid waste by fire and pillage, populations mixed up in agonized confusion, with but here and there passages in the story where nobles reveled in sumptuous profusion, and serfs, ready to die with vulgar loyalty, surfeited for short seasons on plunder; the whole supervised by gods worse in character than their worshipers.

Let us not forget, however, that great evils are still at work with us. Strong in popular regard and lusty of growth, they claim ancient usage, and heaven-accredited missions to perform, as warranty for their stay. Hanging around the framework of society, as parasitic vines invest the oak, they liv on the juices of thoughtless labor, finding protection among the prejudices born of far-reaching observances of the past. Liberalism is activly at work to relieve the state of such parasites. The protests everywhere heard are assurances that society is gravitating to revision in all its parts; a new framework in which no vestige of our incongruous systems will be found. Not merely renovated, but new in all its adjustments, providing conditions squared by the sharpest equity. The animus of its founders, having the warranty of science, will be found in the cry: "Away with ancient caste of whatever sort!" sweeping down the wind all absurdities of aristocracy as well of all disabilities of individual claims, whether arising from infirmities of intellect or incapacities from natural tendencies. If a man be born the intellectual superior of another, let his reward be his greater usefulness as a contributor. A fine intellect is the boon of society. We are the inheritance of each other. A poem is written to be read, a picture painted to be seen, an invention completed to increase the general efficiency. Put the book in the common library, the picture in the public hall, the improvement in the workshop and the centers of labor; and so the great heart of humanity, made thankful by gifts and stimulated to kindred benevolencies, may be made activ in good deeds. What greater reward to the poet, the artist, the inventor, than the admiration their works inspire—granting their lives to be unencumbered by wants? The needs of the man whose ambition is satisfied by sweeping the streets are quite as great, for food and clothing, as are those of the genius. Then, usefulness in the scavenger is above all art. Then again, to what are men indebted for the distinctions that come of individual accomplishments? Simply to differences in cranial structure—phenomena, as far as heard from, outside of all cognizable interference, though claimed to be embraced in stirpiculture—a feature in science as yet but hinted at. Thus we find that in the general economy the true test of the individual is utility.

We are at present about entering on the "good time coming, boys" of the poet, not the lackadaisical "sweet by-and-bye" of the salvationist, and on our onward march we listen only to the inspirations born of earth. Let us be faithful even unto death.

In the ever onward, resistless march of progress there are no soft, verdant spots as camping-ground for man to dally with the hours.

Halt is a word unknown to the legions of advanced thought. Nothing can resist the primal edicts, the authority that has swayed the cycles. Supreme at all times in this: that when priests or rulers, by any trick, device, or effort of power, hav sought to circumvent the eternal forces, they hav perished in the grasp of violated justice. Society has learned that no institution of man, honored though it may be by its defense of religion, and venerable, too, by the dust of centuries, can stand, save by brute force, unless founded on the eternal principles of justice. Nationalities hav passed away, systems of theology and philosophy hav become extinguished in the light of brighter truths, but the integrity of justice has ever been, without shadow of turning, the divinity of nature. Let the demand of humanity, then, be justice. Not the limited justice meted to the bondman—food, clothes, and shelter—but also that soul-pabulum, the claim of all by the right of common origin and inheritance; a claim whose products are the gentleness of culture and the sweet freedom of discussion. The world is preparing to "ring the fuller minstrel in," and he not the harbinger of an idiotically conceived theological millennium, but of an attained period in a series of developments incident to planet life, Evolution. 74.

Le Roy, N. Y.

Notes of Travel by W. S. Bell.

Mr. T. H. Terry, secretary of the Secular Union of Batavia, Kan., invited me to lecture at Batavia under the auspices of that society; and April 15th, in the school-house, the only place for public meetings in the place, I spoke upon "Liberty and Morality." Two ministers were present to steady the Ark. One of them explained sacred history from a long chart that he had put up across the school-house. The chart contained the exact dates of lives of great men, and great events, as far back as the garden of Eden. His long and pointless talk, and blundering reading, made the people tired, and I could not, though the temptation was great, riddle everything he said.

I pitied the audience. Before me sat two young mothers with babes in their arms, and after they had sat there three hours I concluded the meeting with a few pointed remarks, which rendered the sky-pilot somewhat unhappy. I find that when I am replying to ministers they cannot keep silence. They always interrupt me by throwing in a contradiction, when they find the facts and logic pinching them. It is hard for preachers to be courteous to their opponents. They hav had things all their own way so long that it seems hard for them now to listen to any back-talk.

April 17th I was introduced to a large and enthusiastic audience in the Turn Hall in Denver, Col., by Mr. Robert Hilgard, an earnest worker in the Liberal cause. After my lecture I was waited upon by two gentlemen from the audience, who urged me to stop over a few days longer in Denver, saying that they would procure the Tabor Opera House for a Sunday night lecture, but my dates were all fixed for several weeks ahead and I could not entertain their generous and complimentary offer.

On my return I am to hav an ovation in Denver.

A good measure of success attended my lecture at Canon City. Mr. John Locke, a Liberal Spiritualist and a subscriber and admirer of THE TRUTH SEEKER, made the necessary arrangements for my lecture. The armory hall was entirely too small to contain all who came. I am to giv two or three lectures there on my return, in a large hall. I had a very enjoyable time staying with Mr. Locke and family.

There is a fine mineral spring here. As I stood beside the ever flowing fountain, I wished I could dip up a cup of this delicious water and hand it to every Freethinker in the land, but as I could not do that I drank to their health.

Leaving Canon City, I was soon in the Grand Canon, the grandest sight that ever greeted my eyes. In a few days I am to pass through the Black Canon, which is almost as wonderful as the Royal Gorge of the Grand Canon.

I am now in Leadville. I gave my first lecture last night to a small audience. On the 24th and 25th I am to speak in the city hall, and am promised a large audience. Mr. A. L. Heister is president of the Union, and Mr. D. A. Collins is treasurer.

Leadville, Col., April 22 289. W. S. BELL.

A Unique Tripartite Partnership.

James A. Spivey, a well-to-do farmer and stock-dealer of Henry county, Ill., purchased a large number of growing swine, and corn enough to fatten them. Then he promised the Lord in prayer that if he would prosper the speculation he would divide up the profits fairly, thus: Spivey one-third, the Lord thy God one-third, and Spivey's son one-third. This was last summer, and as there was a strong blaze from the sun and no condensation of aqueous vapor, the supply of water fell short and Spivey was compelled to stay at home from church one Sunday and carry water and throw over the hogs to keep them from melting down. In due time the stock was marketed, showing about $420 profit, of which the Lord's share would be $140. But in consequence of there not being rain when needed, he cut God's share down to $100, which amount he sent to God's agent in Nebraska to help build God a house.

This is a simple statement of fact. Mr. Spivey is neither a lunatic nor an idiot; he is a fanatic, the big gun in the Methodist church of New Windsor. His operations as a stock-dealer are not of a pronounced philanthropic character. In fact, there are men so depraved as to think that he deceived them for his own profit.

It was in my humble opinion a rather thin dodge for Jim to cabbage $40 of the Lord's money under the pretext he did. Had he made excuse for retaining the swag that the Lord had not given him beauty as well as grace, I should hav justified him in it. Though serenely pious, Jim is not handsome.

REV. GEO. ENDERTON,
Pastor Church of the Redeemed.

An Answer to An Important Question.

From the Denison, Tex., Sunday Gazetteer.

"Did Man Fall?" is the title of a pamphlet which discusses the locality and topography of the garden of Eden, and answers the question, "Is the garden of Eden a fact?" The author is Israel W. Groh, author of, "Is the God of Israel the True God?" Price, ten cents.

They Interest the Editor.

From the Butte City, Mont., Daily Miner.

Some new and decidedly interesting publications hav lately been issued by the Truth Seeker Co., at 28 Lafayette place, New York. One is the ALMANAC, or ANNUAL, which this concern has of late years been issuing; another is a work headed, "Was Jesus Insane?" Another, "Pioneer Pith, the Gist of Lectures on Rationalism," by Robert C. Adams. Another is entitled, "Did Man Fall?" in which it is inquired if the garden of Eden is a fact. "The Limitations of Toleration" is a small work by the same concern, containing a discussion by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the Hon. Frederick R. Coudert, and Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford.

Possesses Dash and an Impromptu Character.

From the Open Court.

This discussion ["The Limitations of Toleration"] was held before the Nineteenth Century Club, of New York, at the Metropolitan Opera House. It is now printed in pamphlet form from a stenographical report, and comprises forty-four pages. The remarks of the late Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, who presided at the meeting, are likewise included. The debate between these three gentlemen, for such it was, is well worth reading, and although from the colloquial form in which it is cast, it has not the literary charm that marks the written compositions of either of the eminent speakers, its dash and general impromptu character afford a pleasing substitute.

Much More Valuable Than the Bible.

From San Francisco Freethought.

Robert C. Adams's "Pioneer Pith" is a book of one less than a hundred pages, but it contains more of value than the Bible from Genesis to Revelations, and more than numerous other books of many times its size. It is the author's aim to condense the main facts of Rationalism into a small compass, and he has succeeded within the limits of twenty brief chapters. Captain Adams has previously distinguished himself as a writer on Freethought subjects, and the present pamphlet does not detract from his reputation. (Published by the Truth Seeker Company. Price twenty-five cents.)

The Magnitude and Drift of the Discussion.

From the Tyler, Tex., Leader.

"The Limitations of Toleration" is the subject of a triangular discussion on the limits of free speech and free thought, between Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford, Hon. Frederick R. Coudert, and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Protestantism is represented by the first, Catholicism by the second, and Agnosticism by the third speaker.

The magnitude and general drift of the discussion may be indicated by the following points which were submitted to the speakers in advance:

1. Thought is a necessary natural product—the result of what is called impressions made through the medium of the senses upon the brain, not forgetting the fact of heredity.
2. No human being is accountable to any being—human or divine—for his thoughts.
3. Human beings hav a certain interest in the thoughts of each other, and one who undertakes to tell his thoughts should be honest.
4. All hav an equal right to express their thoughts upon all subjects.
5. For one man to say to another: "I tolerate you," is an assumption of authority—not a disclaimer, but a waiver, of the right to persecute.
6. Each man has the same right to express to the whole world his ideas, that the rest of the world hav to express their thoughts to him.

The discussion is printed in pamphlet form and is sold at ten cents a copy.

The Abandoned Sinner and His Profane Poetry.

From the Ironclad Age.

The Rev. Samuel Jones has been crowding the mourners and rescuing the damned over on the Pacific coast. The most abandoned sinner on the coast is George E. Macdonald. The most abandoned sinners are generally the first to fall under a fusillade of gospel artillery: but it appears that George came through the holocaust of gospel hail unscathed. It would seem, however, likely that he was knocked down and "stepped onto," for the following from his Freethought of April 6th sounds like the defiant utterance of a boy who has just been let up from use as a mop and who hasn't yet got the sand and mud out of his mouth and nose and ears. Says he:

The Rev. Samuel Jones has got through with San Francisco. H received $1,200 for his services, and claims to hav converted twelv hundred people. If lies were feathers, he might put wings on a of them.

And after the holy man of God was well out of the country, the dauntless G. E. M. fired the following injurious, not to say deadly, piece of poetry after him:

FAREWELL TO THE REV. SAMUEL JONES.

O Jones, when first you came to preach to us
From Sacramento and Los Angherlus,
We knew your fame as a religious liar
Was great as your supporters could desire.

We knew your mastery of dialect
Was all that any critic could expect;
We were familiar with your repertoire,
And the inherent powers of your jaw.

But when we heard you we were all surprised—
Our highest hopes are more than realized.
You are a sample of that vaulting pride
Which, missing saddle, 'lights the other side.

Perhaps you really do more good than harm,
And we hav viewed your pranks without alarm.
Yet, Jones, good-bye—if say good-bye we must;
We shall not see your like again we trust

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 11, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Changing Sunday Laws.

It is cheering to note that one state has, this spring, shown a desire to still further soften its Sunday laws. For Texas to do this in the face of the efforts of the Sabbatarians to hav enacted a national Sunday law may be considered a substantial victory for progressiv ideas.

We learn of this step ahead from the Denison Sunday Gazetteer—a journal owned and edited by a brave man and a Liberal—which is combating the preachers, who are necessarily angry at the legislature for amending the Sunday law so as to require business houses to close only between the hours of 9 A.M. and 4 P.M. on Sunday. The ministers contend that this curtailment of the previous business suspension is "stealing seventeen hours from Jehovah." The Gazetteer observes, however, that the preachers, as usual, are wrong. The legislature has deprived Jehovah of no time at all. It leaves every man and woman at liberty to rest and worship as many hours on Sunday as they please. If a Christian believes Sunday has been set apart to be used exclusivly as a day of rest and worship, all he has to do is to obey the dictates of his conscience. But if he does not think this is necessary he can carry on any lawful avocation up to 9 in the morning and after 7 in the evening. The legislature no doubt aimed to make a fair compromise on this Sunday question, and those who consider the day holy ought not to complain, certainly, for they hav seven hours of the day, proper, out of the twelve, as they want it. So far as the religious aspect of the question is concerned the legislature has really nothing to do with that, further than to protect all the people of the state in the right to worship in accordance with the dictates of their consciences. The Gazetteer humorously concludes: "If our Christian preachers will stop their fault-finding with the legislature, and go to work and convert the people to their way of thinking, there will be no necessity for civil laws to enforce Sunday observance, or religious observances of any kind."

While we can congratulate the Texas legislature in thus yielding to the changing sentiment of the country, we hav to reprimand the legislature of our own state for the probable cutting off of another slice of liberty. The judiciary committee of the Senate reported favorably and the Senate has passed an amendment to section 266 of the penal code as follows:

"All trades, manufactures, agricultural or mechanical employments, upon the first day of the week are prohibited, except that when the same are works of necessity they may be performed on that day in their usual and orderly manner so as not to interfere with the repose and religious liberty of the community; but no barber shops shall be kept open after 12 o'clock noon on said day."

The words in italic are the addition to the section. The amendment was introduced by Senator O'Connor at the request of the barbers, who desire to shut off competition as to Sunday opening of the shops. The tonsorial artists cannot agree among themselvs as to how long to keep open on Sunday, nor can they trust each other to keep any compact they make in the matter, and so they hav gone to Albany to get a law to help them out. The amendment in itself is of small importance, but the principle is all wrong and tyrannous. A barber has the same natural right to shave his customers on Sunday afternoon that he has to shave them Saturday afternoon or Sunday forenoon. It is a matter of individual liberty of choice, and the only persons interested are the shaver and the shavee. The people of the country, however, seem to hav law on the brain, and run to the legislatures as children run to their parents when a playmate "nigs" at marbles or makes faces at them. If a person had time to study the penal code, he will find that he has been and probably will continue to be a lawbreaker till about one-half the code shall be repealed. To come down to bedrock facts, the people break the Sunday laws all to flinders every first day of the week. An enormous amount of unnecessary labor is performed every Sunday in this city. Horse-cars are run, excursion trains and boats are operated, thousands of people go fishing, we hav public exercises and shows, and in the million or two households of the state three-fourths of the labor performed is wholly unnecessary. We hav laws against all this, but they are not observed, and it is nowise probable that the barbers will keep the new law any more strictly than they do the old. Those who desire to accommodate their customers after noon will pull their window-shades up a little, lock the door, and go ahead as of old. The barber knows his trade, and he is not going to lose it by refusing to shave a man five minutes after twelve. This law, like all Sunday laws, should be entitled, An Act to Promote Hypocrisy.

The Ministers.

The Omaha Republican is a paper of sense and spirit. Recently the clergy of the city hav been attacking the Sunday papers, in their usual untruthful and bigoted manner, and the Republican retorts with an editorial, the vigor and spirit of which entitle it to a prominent place right here in these columns:

"Dean Gardner writes an article for the Excelsior on Sunday newspapers. There is something amusing about a minister attempting to consider the practical side of life—fortunately there is never anything at all serious about it. If there is one thing in the world that the world gets along without it is the minister. Really, the minister isn't a part of society. He is something to be looked at, like a horse; to be listened to, like a hand-organ; to be supported, like a pauper—but never anything to be considered gravely. Every Sunday he preaches a lot of things which he hasn't lived and doesn't intend to liv—and his sermons are attended by people who hav no more idea of trying to be real Christians than they hav of throwing themselvs in front of a rushing locomotiv.

"But we may as well be good-natured about the divine, because he is quite too listless to incite the opposition of any man of sense. When the dean says that seven papers in the week are too many, he is right. There is no reason why a newspaper man should not hav one day of rest out of seven. But some fool fellow—some natural-born minister who had drifted into journalism—began the Monday morning paper, and that settled it. We all had to follow. The Republican would be glad not to publish a Monday morning edition. Even the best newspapers of that day are stupid, there being little to print but the sermons of the day before. But there is no use of discussing the matter; we can't stop, because the rest of the publishers won't—and the great world is so far from the influence of poor, mild persons like the dean, that it would absolutely refuse to patronize us if we did not get out seven papers a week. You see what a discount there is on what you call Christianity. There isn't a Christian in Omaha who, if the Republican should strictly observe the Sabbath, would patronize it on that account; we don't believe there are ten of its patrons who, if it should strictly observe the holy day, would not withdraw their favors and bestow them upon the paper which had desecrated it. This country isn't Christian—it's business.

"The newspaper is in need of reform. We admit it. It isn't serious enough. It often fails to hav an honest, earnest meaning. It is more or less haphazard. It is nearly always the friend of money and the foe of penury. It is part of the great world of Dives. It lies and cheats, and has gleams of glory and spasms of pure ambition—briefly, it is a chameleon that takes a color from the objects which surround it.

"But journalism can never be reformed by a ministry besotted in hypocrisy. There is yet virtue enough, it may be, in the newspapers to reform the clergy, but as for the other thing, it is what the Dutchman called 'one of de unpossibilities.'"

The pious ones, when they read this, held up their hands, aghast with horror at its "blasphemy." The Omaha World said that it was a "disgraceful vilification of churches, religion, and ministers of the gospel," and demanded of the Republican an apology. But the Republican will not apologize. It would much rather assail the churches again, it says, than apologize. It meant every word it said, and still holds that the average minister is a very poor stick. He is a poor weakling standing in the pulpit preaching the gospel of the rich. He no more dares to say to Dives, sitting in his cushioned pew, that he, Dives, is, in his besotted selfishness, a most promising candidate for hell, than he dares to leap into the falls of Niagara. Dives pays his pew rent, and Dives patronizes the preacher, and Dives purchases stained glass for the cathedral windows, and Dives's presence in the congregation is a lodestone drawing inferior worshipers of Mammon toward the altar. And when some one, aggravated by the shams of the world, and most of all by the infinit and awful sham of the church, raises a voice to speak the truth, the weakling cries out that blasphemy has been perpetrated; that a horrible skepticism has been revealed; that the sanctity of the religion of Jesus Christ has been wantonly invaded. The reputed follower of the communistic Nazarene, confronted with the truth, turns upon the man who has been brave enough to present it to him and accuses him of sacrilege. "Attack me," he cries, "and you assail almighty God! Accuse me of hypocrisy and you vilify religion!"

For these and other reasons, the Republican positivly refuses to apologize for its attack upon the pulpit hypocrits. We congratulate it upon its courage.

Christian Promis and Performance.

Will the Christians never learn to be honest in action? to do as they would be done by? to never accept a trust unless they will fulfill its conditions?

The flagrant violation of the terms of Stephen Girard's will is known to everybody who has read upon the subject. The magnificent charity which he founded is in the hands and under the management of the church. That James Lick's donations to science are fast going the same way will be a cause of surprise to Freethinkers, who depended upon the well-known Liberality of the people of the West to keep those vast sums of money from being used to further the spread of a superstition which James Lick cordially detested.

When James Lick died he scattered his benefactions with a lavish hand. The greatest monument to his memory is, of course, the Observatory. This has somehow got into the charge of a corps of Christians who, while discovering facts that destroy Christian theology, are writing articles to prop up the declining faith. This is certainly an indirect misuse of the dead man's money. Mr. Lick believed in what he knew. He had a great admiration and love for science. He desired to add to the knowledge of the world, and that is why he built the Observatory. He would, if alive, be exceedingly angry at seeing his salaried observers working to inculcate faith instead of increasing knowledge.

Another of Mr. Lick's gifts to science was a donation to the San Francisco Society of Pioneers. With this money a large brick building, costing several hundred thousand dollars, was erected in San Francisco. This building contains a hall of a seating capacity of six hundred, which the builders fitted up with the regardlessness of expense which usually characterizes the handlers of other people's money. The will of Mr. Lick provided, it is understood, that regular lectures of a scientific, literary, or historical character should be given in this hall, but that it should never be used for religious meetings. Three or four weeks ago the members of the San Francisco Freethought Society were casting about for a permanent meeting-place, and it naturally struck them that no more appropriate hall could be found than the one built with the money of the Freethinker James Lick, who has shown his admiration for the great apostle of Freethought, Thomas Paine, by building him a Memorial Hall in Boston. The secretary of the Pioneer Society was therefore waited upon by Professor Miller, the lecturer of the Freethought Society, who stated his object in calling and gave the name of the organization that desired to hold its meetings in Pioneer Hall. The secretary expressed doubts that the hall could be engaged by a Freethought society. It had been refused the Spiritualists. He would, however, consult the committee. The next day Professor Miller called again and received the ultimatum of the said committee, which was that Pioneer Hall would not be leased on Sunday night for such a purpose!

This action of the committee has caused considerable surprise to the heretics of the Pacific coast,

Some of the members of the Pioneer Society are indignant, and aver that were their wishes consulted the Freethought Society should hav the hall for the cost of gas and janitor. But the Christians are in power, and continue to exhibit the bigotry usual to people of their kind. But while considering this matter settled, Freethought asks several interesting questions of these pietists. Why, it queries, did the Pioneers accept the money of James Lick if they had not sufficient respect for his opinions to allow them to be advocated in the hall which that money built? Do the Pioneers object to receiving the money of Freethinkers now? and if so, why did they take it then? What has brought about the change of sentiment? Do they think they hav received all the money from such a source that their consciences will allow them to accept? Finally, do they for a moment suppose that they would ever hav had a hall built with James Lick's money if he had suspected that so soon after coming in possession of it they would close its doors against the advocates of a cause which James Lick did so much to promote?

The next thing the Pioneers will probably do will be to let the hall for religious services. They hav already allowed a saloon to be established in the building, wherein a Sunday night concert is regularly conducted, and a church seems to be the next thing needed.

There is a moral in this as big as a mountain. And it is, that no matter what a Christian promises, he will perform nothing if such performance should run counter to his religious ideas. We hope the Freethinkers of San Francisco will put the question squarely to every member of the Pioneer Society, and see if a majority sustain the Christian committee's action.

Governors' Proclamations.

On April 30th, we were instructed by the justly respected governor of our state, we were to assemble in our places of worship and "make prayer to God for our guidance as a republic in the future." Now, we are not altogether so churlish and unconformable in things religious as some would say; in fact, we are not indisposed to help in consulting the God-given book of guidance for said instructions upon national conduct. We are now in the place where we do all the worshiping we hav to do, and will proceed at once.

The department of justice, in particular that of the administration of punishment, will find given a model for imitation upon which it would be hopeless for fallible man to expect to improve:

"I the Lord thy God, . . . visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation" (Ex. xx, 5). "Prepare slaughter for his children for the iniquity of their fathers" (Isa. xiv, 21). "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation" (Ex. xxxiv, 7).

Erring generations hav strayed from these judicious practices; we now iniquitously cherish the notion that the better way is to punish the guilty and not the innocent. But there seems little doubt that by making over all government to God's friends we might be reclaimed unto that practice which is right.

The following would seem to fall likewise under the head of directions for the judiciary:

"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv" (Ex. xxii, 18).

This should be attended to at once. If necessary, the clergy must be given full discretionary powers in the enforcement of this doubtless very wholesome statute.

On the question of slavery we are not left in doubt:

"Of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, . . . they shall be your bondmen forever" (Lev. xxv, 45, 46). "Then his master shall bring him unto the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door-post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him forever" (Ex. xxi, 6).

The problem of religious tolerance is one that we can hardly hope to dispose of, through human wisdom merely, in so neat, simple, and effectual a way as the one given thus:

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; . . . thou shalt surely kill him; thy hand shall be first upon him to put him to death" (Deut. xiii, 6-9).

Even regulations for sumptuary and health inspectors are not neglected:

"These ye shall not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the cloven hoof; as the camel and the hare and the coney; they are unclean unto you. And the swine, because it divideth the hoof, yet cheweth not the cud, it is unclean unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh" (Deut. xiv, 7, 8). "Ye shall not eat anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt giv it unto the stranger that is in thy gates that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God" (Deut. xiv, 21).

The latter would hav been an excellent law to practice in this city during the centennial. Our visitors would hav valued us highly for the legislation.

Our Sabbath laws are too lax:

"Whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death" (Ex. xxxv, 21).

We hav not been able to perceive the harm in a man's marrying the wife of a deceased brother; but all our legislatures must immediately rectify our laws on this point:

"If a man shall take a brother's wife, it is an unclean thing" (Lev. xx, 21).

Divine "guidance" enlightens us upon the propriety of having more than one wife. Legislatures should attend to:

"If he shall take another wife, her food," etc. (Ex. xxi, 10). "If a man hav two wives, . . . then it shall be," etc. (Deut. xxi, 15, 16). "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel: . . . I gave thee . . . thy master's wives unto thy bosom. . . . Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will . . . take thy wives before thine eyes, and giv them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives" (2 Sam. xii, 7-11). "And Joash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoida the priest. And Jehoida took for him two wives" (2 Chron. xxiv, 2, 3).

Our "national guidance" on divorce, it will at once be seen, is eminently sapient and just:

"When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and giv it in her hand, and send her out of his house" (Deut. xxiv, 1).

Further changes in our marriage laws are required, conformably to:

"When thou goest forth to war against thine enemies, . . . and seest among the captivs a beautiful woman, and hast a desire unto her, . . . then thou shalt bring her home to thy house, . . . and after that thou shalt go in unto her and be her husband, and she shall be thy wife" (Deut. xxi, 10-14).

As our governor (as aforesaid, justly respected), in his wisdom (which it would be presumption in us to impugn), informs us that "to God" we owe all "blessings upon our country in the past," it is reasonable to suppose that we should hav been vouchsafed more blessings if we had kept more laws. It must be a source of regret to every thoughtful man that the preceding law was iniquitously left in neglect during our late war. How pleasing to hav seen North and South selecting each other's fair wives and daughters unto whom they had a desire!

This leads us to other instructions for the department of war. Clearly Secretary Proctor will best please the Lord by eschewing peace and inviting hostility wherever practicable:

"Cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood" (Jer. xlviii, 18). "The Lord is a man of war" (Ex. xv, 3). "Blessed be the Lord, my strength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight" (Ps. cxliv, 1). "The Lord mighty in battle" (Ps. xxiv, 8). "The Lord mustereth the host of the battle" (Isa. xiii, 4). "With us is God, to fight our battles" (2 Chron. xxxii, 8). "In battles of shakings will the Lord fight" (Isa. xxx, 32).

The same officer must substitute for present international rules of truce, treaty, etc., the following:

"When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it. And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee. And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it. And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it unto thy hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword. But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the Lord thy God hath given thee" (Deut. xx, 10-14).

Here is touched upon the disposition of prisoners; further national guidance on this point, which it is desirable that the United States of America immediately adopt, is as follows:

"Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth giv thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth. But thou shalt utterly destroy them; namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee" (Deut. xx, 15-17). "Thus saith the Lord. . . . Slay both man and woman, infant and suckling" (1 Sam. xv, 2, 3). "Slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children, and women" (Ezek. ix, 6). "I will not pity, nor spare, nor hav mercy, but destroy them" (Jer. xiii, 14). "And Moses said unto them, Hav ye saved all the women alive? . . . Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him. But all the women-children that hav not known a man, keep alive for yourselvs" (Num. xxxi, 15-18). "David saved neither man nor woman alive, . . . And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws and under harrows of iron, and made them pass through the brick-kiln. . . . I hav found David . . . a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfill all my will. . . . Who followeth me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes" (1 Sam. xxvii, 11; 2 Sam. xii, 31; Acts xiii, 22; 1 Kings xiv, 8). "Joshua left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel commanded" (Josh. x, 40). "The Lord said, . . . Slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children" (Ezek. ix, 4, 6).

Finally we come to the duty of the people themselvs toward their ruler:

"Submit yourselvs to every ordinance of man" (1 Pet. ii, 13). "The powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinances of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselvs damnation" (Rom. xiii, 1-6). "I counsel thee to keep the king's commandments" (Eccles. viii, 2).

And if still sinful persons will rebel against kings and priests, we are, fortunately, left in no doubt as to the manner of disposing of these men setting themselvs against God and his rightfully ordained ministers:

"The Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel" (Num. xxv, 4).

We shall close with an appropriate selection from that book which we know, on the assurance of those who ought to be able to tell if any ought, i. e., our political rulers, to be the basis on which our government is founded:

"Blessed is the man"—as our kind and careful governor (justly respected) so well remarks—"that delighteth greatly in the Lord's commandments. The mercy of the Lord is to those that remember his commandments to do them."

The Worst.

Some incline to think that while religions generally are bad, Christianity is at least not so bad as the others. In what is it not so bad as the others? Is it not worse?

It surpasses other faiths, even Buddhism, in its antinatural doctrins—contempt of reason, of accumulation of property, of physical well-being, of all earthly welfare.

It surpasses other faiths in inculcation of the nonresistance doctrin, that infamous device in aid of tyranny.

It originated expressly, and for the distinct purpose of supporting despots, the doctrin of the divine right of kings.

It surpasses other faiths in laying stress upon the future torture of unbelievers—belief in which is the inevitable parent of persecution.

It actually has, by records, persecuted far more than any other faith.

It surpasses other faiths in hostility to, and suppression of, freedom of thought.

It surpasses other faiths in inimical influence on morality, through the introduction of a vicarious atonement and absolution system.

Why not call Christianity the worst?

Mr. H. L. Yessler, one of the leading citizens of Seattle, Washington, and a prompt-paying subscriber of The Truth Seeker, has given to the city a valuable plot of ground upon which to erect and maintain a public library. The land is deeded to trustees under the following conditions: First. The land shall not be mortgaged or otherwise encumbered for any other purpose than for the construction of buildings upon it. Second. The rents and revenues of the building shall be applied only to the payment of its cost of construction and taxes, and not to any other purpose, until the entire indebtedness is cleared up. No books shall be purchased with this money until the entire debt is wiped out. Third. The library shall at no time be under the control of any religious sect. Fourth. The selection of books shall never be made with regard to any religious belief or dogma. The trustees hav accepted the conditions, says the Seattle Times, and the building will be at once begun. As soon as the preliminary arrangements are completed the ladies of the Library Association will take steps to raise funds by subscription and by various kinds of entertainments. They hav a number of plans in view for this purpose, and will inaugurate a series of events, says the Times, which will not only materially add to the library fund, but will furnish society with a great deal of pleasure.

Letters from Friends.

OLD RIPLEY, ILL., April 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am anxious to do something for the cause of Freethought, and hav hit upon the idea of having a great number of handbills struck and posted up in public places to attract the attention of obstinate orthodoxy and church people. I would be glad if some of our ablest co-workers would criticise and offer such modifications as seem to them suitable. REV. JOSEPH N. MAXEY.

CENTER CITY, NEB., April 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Heston's pictures are great, each one a sermon in itself. I was amused, however, at his picture on the front page in the issue of the 20th instant. He placed his name under one of the "images," thus making it appear that it was his photograph and that God had created man in his (Heston's) image and the rest were all impostors.

Wishing you unbounded success, and assuring you of my hearty good will in your struggle, CHAS. A. STITZER.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., April 16, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The last production from Colonel Ingersoll's pen, copied into the last issue of your paper from the North American Review, is, as regards critical analysis and unanswerable logic, the most powerful one that has yet emanated from that distinguished champion of mental liberty. It should be put in pamphlet form at once; and, that it might obtain the widest possible circulation and do the greatest possible good, should be sold cheap, say at five cents a copy. Please send me twenty copies of the last issue of your paper for distribution. You will find inclosed $1 to pay for them.

Yours truly, S. F. SMURR.

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 24, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: When I first arrived in this city I found no society of English-speaking Infidels and sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER for the names of some of its subscribers. I am glad now to be able to report that we hav one, or rather a revival of an old one. Secretary Stevens was here a few weeks ago, and as a result last Sunday saw the organization of the St. Louis Secular Society completed—R. F. Gray, M.D., president; C. L. Haskell, Mr. Bohman, A. Longley, vice-presidents; R. M. Stender, secretary; Mr. Wendal, financial secretary; Eli Giclos, treasurer. We hope to do much to advance the welfare of man, woman, and child.

C. L. HASKELL.

LEON, IA., April 20, 289.

MR. EDITOR: Please say in "Letters to Friends" that Lucinda B. Chandler advocates in the Iowa Tribune the cultivation of small farms and the building of cheese factories with a laundry in connection; and we add also, the use of the building as a public hall in the winter season. By so doing one could dedicate the building to Science and Industry. There are several reasons for so doing. In our township heretofore the land has been held in large tracts, and our schools hav been reduced to a small attendance. Mrs. Chandler claims women's labor could be lessened by say six families conducting a cheese factory, and paying for their washing from the sale of milk. Men must do the milking, of course. We hav as fine a grass land here as one could wish, with but three cheese buildings and one creamery building in the county; while in Jones county, this state, they hav thirty-two, and claim all are satisfied. Things are in the best shape now that they hav been here for such an enterprise. Will some live, able Liberals respond to the call?

T. W. LONG.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Apr. 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3, and please contribute on my behalf two of the dollars toward the Bruno statue fund. The poor fellow was certainly the most remarkable man, considering his time. It is a matter of wonder that a few more didn't come out and think some thoughts similar to Bruno's, which must surely now and then hav been present to their minds. Even preachers of to-day insist upon pounding away at the same ancient and absurd theories and nonsensical stories, from their pulpits, and people foolish enough to swallow them go to listen or to sleep in their pews. Oh, what fools these mortals be! I sincerely hope that the necessary funds for the Bruno statue will reach the last dollar of the second $500 before the end of the month. For the balance of the inclosed money you will please send me "Blasphemy," by Ingersoll in the trial of Mr. Reynolds; "The Order of Creation," "Paine Vindicated," and "The New God," by Samuel Putnam. I was very much pleased with your ANNUAL AND FREETHINKER'S ALMANAC, "The Limitations of Toleration," and "On the Word God." Let the good work go on. A. FRANTZ.

April 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Could you be persuaded to giv us a Freethought story? It would make a change for us, and you may say what you please but there are a great many of your readers who hav an emotional nature and love for the ideal that we can find in a good story. I see Secular Thought does not hesitate. Would it be out of order to print us "Gottlieb" from Mr. Putnam's writings? I like his stories. The women folk would seek more after THE TRUTH SEEKER. J. W. L.

[It has been our experience that Freethinkers care comparativly little for novels. We hav published several, but few readers seem to appreciate them. Mr. Putnam's "Gottlieb" first appeared in these columns. If "J. W. L." desires some good novels for his women folks he can procure Wm. McDonnell's "Exeter Hall," "Family Creeds," and "Heathens of the Heath," Frederika Macdonald's "Nathaniel Vaughan," Olive Schreiner's "African Farm," Susan H. Wixon's "All in a Lifetime," Voltaire's "Romances," S. P. Putnam's "Golden Throne" and "Waifs and Wanderings," Winwood Reade's "Outcast," Mrs. Deland's "John Ward, Preacher," and others of the same sort. These are all advertised in our catalog, which will be sent free upon application.—ED. T. S.]

MOUNT FOREST, ONT., April 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5, for which please annex me to THE TRUTH SEEKER for another two years, as I see by the tab on my paper that the time expires on May 1st, and I do not want to be behind with my reading matter, for I consider that a man or woman that will sponge his reading, or run on tick for his reading in a paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER, should be gently or roughly reminded that the clock does not go expressly for such readers. I cannot see for the life of me how a person can take the paper out of the post-office week after week and not pay for it and then call himself a Liberal. Liberal in what? Liberal on an editor's generosity. Why, if such Liberals would join the church and pay some ten or twenty dollars for a pew, and all the other etceteras, the better it would be for our cause. Why, where is there a person that does not spend five, ten, or twenty times more than would pay for his paper, and a good book or two besides, in tobacco, or something else perhaps worse? And then to whine out, "I can't afford to take a paper!"

Yours truly, WM. LEWIS.

BOULDER, COL., April 24, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER for April 20th, Mr. Carlton Rice offers to become one of five hundred to each put up $5 to hav the proof furnished of the existence of a personal, living God, or Jehovah, as represented in the Bible, provided an equal number of believers in this God will each put up $5—the whole to go to the Christians if they so prove by miracle, answer to prayer, or other conclusiv evidence, or, failing in which, the Christians then to surrender their money to the other party. Put me down for $5, and if the unbelievers in such a God do not hurry up and take the chances, please put me down for a few more of like amount. I do not know a way to get money so easily. It is a "dead sure thing" on our side.

If the alleged believers in a live God are honest in their faith, or hav any faith at all in the existence of their God, now is the time to show it. If they do not promptly respond to this challenge, you can set them down as cowardly hypocrits. I would like to see this challenge transferred to the editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with an urgent invitation to orthodox people to show the courage of their convictions, if they hav convictions on the subject. If the matter is properly pushed, and they do not respond, it will do more to advance Secularism than any other move that can be made. Make the proper call and it is safe to predict enough $500 chances will be taken on our side to make the aggregate $5,000,000. What a splendid Freethought university this sum would build and endow! JOS. WOLFF.

BOSTON, IND., April 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: We hav just returned from the beautiful village of Hagerstown, this state, where we had the pleasure of hearing a debate between Hon. Charles Watts, of Toronto, Can., editor of Secular Thought, and Rev. Wm. Dillon, of Dayton, O., editor of a paper of the United Brethren persuasion. In substance the question debated was, "Secularism vs. Christianity, or which is the better adapted to the needs and wants of humanity?" It was a three days' discussion in four meetings, Watts appearing for Secularism and Dillon for Christianity.

From the village came "her beauty and her chivalry," but most of the audience were from a distance, and, with the exception of a few "divines," the assembly presented a pleasing spectacle of "fair women and brave men."

Upon the stage sat the hale, happy Secularist beside the pale, puny Christian. It reminded me of one of those pictorial advertisments wherein, by means of contrasted physiognomies, shrewd venders are wont to praise their ware. A Christian might hav said:

> I oft admire
> How Nature, wise and frugal, could commit
> Such disproportions.

But now the music of debate arose, and soft eyes looked love (?) to eyes which spoke again. The contrast intellectual was even greater than the physical. It was light against darkness; Ormuzd wrestling with Ahriman. Mr. Watts understands the art of debate, and he laid down the Secular philosophy in clear and elegant language, confining himself strictly to the principles at issue. He eloquently proved the great superiority of Secularism over Christianity by setting forth the glorious triumphs of the one against the miserable failure of the other to benefit mankind. After hearing Watts, no thinking man could halt long between the two opinions. The Rev. Mr. Dillon spoke in sepulchral tones "long drawn out." He left the arguments of his opponent untouched throughout the debate. At first he attempted to amuse his Christian admirers by rehearsing some pulpit chestnuts of a humorous nature, but failed to "bring down" the house. After this he spent most of his time either in petty side issues, or in venting his spleen upon his opponent and other Infidels. But Watts caught him nicely at every turn. Dillon undertook to defend or twist about (the straight shall be made crooked and the crooked straight) the vilest and most loathsome of biblical barbarisms, but,

> In religion
> What damned error but some sober brow
> Will bless it and approve it with a text?

The reverend gentleman closed his "arguments" with the hope that Mr. Watts would some time backslide from his present sublime faith to the damning dogmas of Christianity. And you can imagin the disgust and contempt that Watts felt for this "kind" exhortation, especially as it was tagged with a few hearty Amens by some of the "meek and lowly." Even the Christians admit that Dillon was unhorsed, and his plume lost in the dust; but he fought to the finish, to be sure. Why is it that so many otherwise intelligent people can swallow Christianity—a thing that hardens the heart and softens the head, enslaves the body and fetters the mind, fills life with gloom and death with fear? We want more discussion, more boldness, and more faith in our success. Magna est veritas et prævalebit. How much hav we already accomplished! How many fields and groves once sacred to Jehovah and the devil, and guarded by the deadly dragon Christianity, are now happy playgrounds for the children of Science! Let us hope that ere long Truth, the white-robed daughter of Time, will touch with her magic wand the sleeping millions, and wake them from this awful nightmare of the ages. J. CLEM. STARR.

WATERLOO, IND., April 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5.25, for which giv me credit for two years' subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER and the ANNUAL for 1889. I had thought of dropping the paper because I did not feel able to spare the money, but the more I thought of dropping the paper the more I felt that we needed it. One thing, I think it a great educator for the children, and I do not want my children to grow up with their heads full of superstition. Myself and wife both like the paper very much. We are both fearless and outspoken Liberals, and intend to do all we can to promote the great cause. It may be that there are a few Christians that do not like me very well on that account, but I think I can mention quite a number of warm friends among the followers of the meek and lowly in this place, notwithstanding the difference of our opinions. There are quite a number of Liberals in this place. We would like to hav a good lecturer here this summer. Our town has been blessed with a howling mob, calling themselvs the Salvation Army, for the last year and a half. Their motto was "Blood and fire," but our citizens got disgusted with them and treated them to a shower of stale eggs, and they folded their tents like the Arabs and silently stole away, leaving our people in peace once more.

I am afraid there are a great many people who style themselvs Liberals to whom the name of tyrant would be more appropriate. For instance, the man who tells you to stop his paper because you print a letter for a Spiritualist, or the man or woman who boasts of how they gave a pulpit-pounder a send-off. Politeness costs nothing, and no one ever gains a point by abuse. Such people never make any converts to Liberalism. But they bring odium on the cause. I seldom go to town but I hav a verbal battle with some Christian, but I do not insult him because he does not think as I do. I always leave all that for them to do.

Hurrah for R. G. Ingersoll! I am a Democrat, but I will vote for him when he runs for president. Good luck to Heston and THE TRUTH SEEKER. Long may she wave.

Yours fraternally, JACOB SALTSMAN.

LEXINGTON, KY., April 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The presence of "gall-flies" and other ill-planned existences disturbs a dream of the "goodness of God," born amid the heathenish mists of theology, under filthy scraps of the veil cast over the sweet brow of nature.

The Christian is one who makes up his mind to believe certain things on these topics. His reason is stultified, and he is, to all intents and purposes, a monomaniac.

The secret of the universe is this: an automatic force works blindly in nature, until a living being arrives at the helm. The nervous system is the bridge thrown across the gulf which separates mind from matter. The human organization is a whirlpool which draws in various elements, for use. The animus of this process is activity, is dynamic, or all life and motion would cease at once. Bodies and spirits combined, are parts of the great order of nature, and from this it follows that the conception of "spirit" outside of nature is baseless. "A desire for happiness is a dynamic force," for that yearning which brings about a new application of powers is the cause of progress. Habits of effort and struggles at betterment "harden a man," as Carlyle says; while the Christian weakly mumbles his prayers, and sinks in the scale. Could a man in a frenzy, kneeling before a heathen filagree god, drag up by its roots a living principle?

A thoughtful man is a god, not a slave. He chooses and refuses, and is the master of his thoughts—unless you call the divine hunger which impels him a god which drives him to a higher sphere!

Argyle says that there is no hope for us but the help of God. But that fails so often that it is supposed to be a myth; and our greatest glory consists in loving and improving ourselvs. "Our only superiority is an aptitude for virtue," and this is derived from some goodness of our ancestors, which we must turn to the best account.

Who says that there is "a force behind nature" which is pure spirit? A slave asserts this, crawling at the feet of some pompous declaimer, who deepens old ruts of orthodoxy for a precarious living; not as reliable even as the wicked statesman who offers premiums for crime. Pray on, he says, until the fury of God is satiated by earthquakes and floods; until he has left the helpless at the mercy of the monopolist a little longer, until his appetite is glutted with the blood and tears of the innocent. Wait till his feast is over. Remember the holy Cotton Mather who said, "Agitate, keep up the witchcraft question"—with its fierce accusations and bloody, fiendish tortures; they are necessary evils; the excitement benefits the churches! Such a precedent is offered to the people by the divine clergy, joined with the politician. They are yoked together to drag forward the Juggernaut of the union of church and state. By their example the honest principle of the whole nation is weakened; its manliness, its power for good, is out of joint; its generous hopes for the triumph of justice blasted, humbled, trailed in the dust.

Religious tyrants and their helpers hav stifled the voice of reason and poured contempt upon the unanswerable arguments of women, whose logic is practical, humane. Civilization has languished for centuries, and will continue to do so until women consent to forget their Gods, take the reins in their own hands, and reform the world. ALHAZA.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., April 16, 289.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space to answer the questions submitted to Infidels in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 6th, by D. W. Milk. His first difficulty is in not being able to understand Colonel Ingersoll's logic on thought. He says he and others can stop thinking. But I will venture the assertion that some cannot stop thinking, while others never begin. Perhaps Colonel Ingersoll gave him the start.

"If the great teacher of the nineteenth century were in harmony with the teacher of the first century," the Christian populace of this country would be divided into gypsy squads, with divine tramps for leaders, who would steal heretics' coin on Sunday and "take no thought for the morrow," and their "pure" and "elevating principles" would be: Belief in the leader makes you safe; do every good deed and if you do not so believe you are doomed, but commit as many crimes as you please if you say, I believe. If you say this on your deathbed or the gallows, you can skip right into glory and dine with Guiteau and repose in Abraham's bosom.

Let us look at the consistency of your religious system. If the source is corrupt, the stream cannot be pure. God commands mortals to love their enemies, while he dooms his to hell. He says to mortals, "Believe or be damned," while commanding them to love their enemies. Did he make them more charitable than himself?

Infidels founded and built up one of the grandest governments under the sun. Thomas Paine was the first to say, "The United States of America." Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin were also unbelievers in the inspiration of the Bible, and what troubles you now is the fact that they left your God out of the grandest document ever written in the name of liberty and justice—which God you are trying to get in by way of the Blair bill, so as to keep "Ingersoll and Company" from "manufacturing" the "buds" from which "we are reaping a wonderful harvest" of intelligence "at the present day."

And efforts of Christians to pass this bill call forth critical remarks from these "buds," and should. A religious editor of Salina, Kan., said that there ought to be a law against circulating a petition against it; and a reverend said that had he the power of mayor he would giv the man circulating it a peremptory order to leave the city. This is the spirit that held sway in the Dark Ages. And I will venture a prophecy and tell you what I see behind such expressions. I see the deadly monster of Superstition and his twin brother the Inquisitor. Giv them the power they ask for in the name of law and the masses will again be enslaved by religious tyrants, and from the hilltops of this "land of liberty" will blaze forth bonfires which will hav for their fuel bodies of living men and women who dare investigate in opposition to fixed religious rules, and giv the result of their investigation.

I will say in regard to Babylon that the predictions hav not been fulfilled. It has a population of nine thousand, and Mr. Layard, who recently visited the place, says in his work "Nineveh and Babylon" that the Arab's settlement showed the activity of a hive of bees.

We are building up a purer, higher system of morality than is taught in the Bible. We teach that each one is responsible to his fellow-man for his or her deeds, and repudiate the doctrin that the innocent must suffer for the guilty. The laws of "pure" morality are just being discovered. They always existed. They are as old as the universe. They will stand on their own merits, without the props of seventy thousand priests and clergy, which "Christian morality" must hav. And these, not being able to support it, are asking Uncle Sam to incorporate it in the state.

I am of the opinion that superstition is in her death throes, but she has deluged in the name of God many a fair land with human gore. Are you satisfied? If so, I am ready for another "batch." MRS. FLORA A. ABBOTT.

HAMILTON, April 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith is a slip I this morning observed in the daily Tribune. Before Mr. Mallock says anything more about "cowardly Agnostics," let him and his sort of folks accept my challenge and find if there is such a being for a God as is represented in the Jewish history book called holy Bible, for cowardice is chargeable to Mr. Mallock and his people until they through their Evangelical Alliance meet the proposition to discover if there is such a being as a personal God. And if they neglect or refuse to unite with Agnostics in this discovery, then let them forever hold their prayer and peace as far as this God is concerned, and ask our government to put a stop to hiring chaplains to pray to a myth.

CARLTON RICE.

COWARDLY AGNOSTICISM.

Under this caption, Mr. W. H. Mallock, in the current number of the Fortnightly Review, attacks Professor Huxley—and through him the whole school of Agnostics—in a trenchant and closely reasoned review of his position. No better presentation has thus far been made of the weak points in the Agnostic creed, and it deserves to be noticed, not only because of its intrinsic force and cogency, but because Professor Huxley's rejoinder will be awaited with a great deal of interest and curiosity. Mr. Mallock accuses Agnosticism of cowardice, "not because it refuses to believe enough, but because, tried by its own standard, it refuses to deny enough." He proposes to show that Professor Huxley's Agnosticism is cowardly, "not because it does not dare to affirm the authority of Christ, but because it does not dare to deny the meaning and the reality of duty." He then cites Professor Huxley and Mr. Herbert Spencer as holding the position that the sense of duty "ought" to guide and govern men, notwithstanding their acceptance of the dictum of science that nothing can be known of God, or of the meaning of the universe, or of any future state of existence. Mr. Mallock pertinently asks what, in the circumstances, the Agnostics mean by saying that the sense of duty "ought" to control the world.

Professor Huxley admits that the denial of the bases of religion "affects man's whole conception of life;" that through such denial "the beauty of a life may be destroyed and its energies paralyzed." Precisely so; and among the conceptions affected and changed and the energies paralyzed, is the conception of a life beyond this, and the energy which is expended in the performance of duty. The Agnostics, indeed, assert that "some substitute" for the Christian religion, "gennin enough and worthy enough to replace it, will arise." So far the only religion proposed is the so-called religion of Humanity; but that is almost fiercely assailed by Professor Huxley himself, for he has written: "When the Positivists order men to worship Humanity—that is to say, to adore the generalized conception of men, as they ever hav been, and probably ever will be—I must reply that I could just as soon bow down and worship the generalized conception of a wilderness of apes." What, then, is to be the Agnostic religion? Mr. Mallock says, and goes far toward proving, that it consists in dependence upon that duty which Christianity alone has made influential and reasonable, and which, upon the denial of God and a purpose in life, ceases to possess any significance, and obviously can no longer be appealed to as the motiv of conduct. Moreover, the idea of duty is not derivable from Agnosticism, with which doctrin it has no affiliations. For if there be no God, and necessity is the final law of life, to what conceivable end should men devote themselvs to self-denial, self-sacrifice, and thought for others in any way?

Part of Mr. Mallock's interesting paper is occupied in demonstrating the impossibility of basing a religion upon contemplation of the Unknowable—the mysterious All. He argues that no sense of devoutness can spring from such contemplation. Neither awe, nor fear—perhaps not even wonder—would result, he thinks, "and if there is any wonder involved in the matter at all, it is nothing but wonder at our own ignorance." There are other troublesome questions for Professor Huxley to answer. For instance, how can an Agnostic aim to "play his right part in the world," seeing that from his point of view it is impossible for him ever to know what his right part in the world is—or even whether there is any right part in the world for him to play? The professor cannot derive his conception of duty from human experience, for, according to him, men hav always been doing the very worst things in the worst possible ways, and they are in the aggregate no more worthy of respect than "a wilderness of apes." But the fact is that the Agnostics practically admit the impossibility of deriving any rule of conduct from the negations they hold by, and in talking of duty at all they are borrowing spiritual conceptions from the religion they affect to contemn. This is certainly a strong point, and Mr. Mallock presses the argument home with characteristic vigor and ability. No doubt Professor Huxley will hav an answer, but it is not probable that he or any of his school will succeed in showing that Agnosticism is capable of affording any other rule of life than that which the "spirit who always denies," as Goethe puts it, represents and illustrates.

ALABAMA, April 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I once more want to write to you and the friends to the cause of Freethought. I read every letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Many of them are sanguin. Other writers tell how they are kicked and cuffed, as it were, which is my condition. Our complaining will do no good, and unless we organize we had better never hav spoken our honest thoughts. If each Liberal, though scattered, will speak out what he will do, and pledge his account in some bank for a lecture fund, we shall get one which will do more good than books and papers, for the masses won't read them. As for me and such as I am, books, papers, and lecturers won't make it any stronger; but it had been better that I had held my peace if we can't do more. We are ostracized, held in contempt, hav no show at law, etc. A good lecturer in the South would do more good than all the papers and books you can circulate. I hav seen the courage of one man lead hundreds to death as though it was a feast. Some Christians hav asked for the explanation of certain of their spiritual manifestations. The Christian asks me to explain the phenomena of his conversion. He tells me what he once loved he now hates, and vice versa. He says the way he knows he has got religion is, he felt it. I tell him the Mormon, the Mohammedan, the Buddhist, and the Catholic all feel it. They felt good when they were burning their victims. They had a manifestation to them that they were right. I must think there is no reality in either. One tells me he saw God hanging on a tree; another tells me heard a low, still voice saying, peace. That they believed, no man will doubt. Too many hav sealed their belief with their blood. Will the believer in Spiritualism explain the phenomena of religion? I think one explains the other—that slate-writing is legerdemain. Some say they are nearly jerked down when trying to hold on to the spirit. A spirit that could do that could do more. He could avenge his death, if murdered. And what one could do, all could do. Why won't people think? Why won't they let reason rule?

A religion that is founded in the belief of an angry and vindictiv God, one that persecutes for opinion's sake, will make its votaries persecute. It will make hypocrits. A man must not breathe an honest thought. If he does, he has no rights. When the Catholic had the power, the Protestant had to dissemble, and vice versa. Such a religion dwarfs the manhood of man.

On the 13th inst. I had a little suit in the justices' court. I proposed to affirm, and was denied my testimony; and of course lost the suit. If R. G. Ingersoll lived here, he could hav no showing if he did not conform to Christianity—then he would hav to be a dissembler. Two men in the above suit swore to a lie, yet they believe in a hell. "Why, man," says the Christian, "if I did not believe in rewards and punishments I would do anything." I would hav no objections to a hereafter that would punish everyone that did wrong, and not allow them to miss that punishment by simply believing a God. A religion that would remit it for one's belief is damnable. It makes a fiend out of the human animal.

When I present my paper to some to let them see some pungent article, they answer that: Some damned rascal is just printing that for his bread to keep from work. He don't believe anything of it. He is pretty sharp, though; he just studies that for a living, etc.

Will you state whether an Agnostic has any rights or not? Can he sue? If anyone should rob him, can he hav any redress in this state? Can he affirm, or must he take an oath for self-protection? If he is refused his testimony by a justice of the peace in a suit at law, what is his remedy? Is there any? I was told by one, after he had refused my testimony on affirmation, that if I did not conform to the law of the state, I could hav no protection. ALA.

[The constitution of Alabama says "that no religion shall be established by law; that no preference shall be given by law to any religious sect, society, denomination, or mode of worship; that no one shall be compelled by law to attend any place of worship, nor to pay any tithes, taxes, or other rate, for building or repairing any place of worship, nor for maintaining any minister or ministry; that no religious test shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the state; and that the civil rights, privileges, and capacities of any citizen shall not in any manner be affected by his religious principles." The statutes provide that "all testimony, except as otherwise directed, must be given in open court, on the oath or affirmation of the witness." It is very plain that our correspondent has been wronged by some ignorant justice, and his remedy lies in an appeal on the facts. A higher court would undoubtedly order the case to be retried with the excluded testimony admitted. This statement answers all the questions asked.—ED. T. S.]

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Man is evidently not self-made, and should hav inherited all his properties from his progenitors, in whom they should hav been preëxistent, or they could not hav been transmitted. Hence, man being an offspring of nature, and an intelligent designer, it should logically follow that nature is an intelligent designer also, and is obviously a very good imitation of an intelligent designer. The instinctiv properties in nature being sufficient for all the requirements of nature, an intelligent personal creator were obviously a superfluity whose existence is ignored by nature. Man being an offspring of nature, it should be his filial duty to honor his parentage and do likewise. If that is Atheism, you may write me down a confirmed Atheist of an unyielding type; for I shall not "go back a peg" on Mother Nature, but shall award her all the honor that is justly due.

I think it obvious that those ancient philosophers, some of whose writings are compiled in the Bible, applied the term God or Gods to those instinctiv properties in nature, or they could not logically hav inferred that man is made in the likeness of God. For that inference could not logically hav been drawn from any other known source than the fact that man is liberally endowed with those properties. Therefore, having found that the fundamental principle of the Bible, as a philosophy, is more in harmony with rational Atheism than with popular theology, I shall not reject or revile the Bible fables and allegories, but shall investigate them in a like spirit of fairness that I do the fables and allegories of other writers.

To my view, the Bible presents a mystery, or mystic philosophy, that is appropriately termed "the mystery of God," whose solution requires more intelligence than is usually applied, even by those who pretend to investigate the Bible with a special view to elucidating the mystery of God. Unless prepared to offer a rational solution of the mystery, we had as well say but little about God and the Bible, for we should obviously know but little about them that will be worth saying; and, like the average pulpit orator, we shall be likely to say but little about them that will be worth listening to.

We are informed in the book of Revelations that when certain events begin to transpire "the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." That is equivalent to saying that the mystery was devised by the prophets.

The first of those events is described to be the destruction of an institution that is called "the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," about whose identity there appears to be a misunderstanding that is obviously not the result of ignorance or accident; for the church has not the reputation of enriching the merchants of the earth through the abundance of her delicacies, but of a tendency to impoverish everybody through her beggary, fraud, and extortion. Ownership is the only institution whose extinction will be likely to cause the merchants of the earth to weep and mourn. It is also stated that in her (the mother of harlots) "was found the blood of the prophets, and of the saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." That cannot possibly apply to the church, for that institution is not old enough. But ownership is old enough and wicked enough.

Thus, I hav found (1) that the ancients did not apply the term God to a myth, but to a well-known reality; (2) that "the mystery of God" is not a superstition, but a social philosophy that is now called Socialism, whose advocates hav not the reputation of being a superstitious or even a religious people, but are sat down upon hard by pious hypocrits and mammon worshipers generally; (3) that the mystery of God is Secularism of the highest order—a Secularism that desires nothing and promises nothing but the material well-being of the whole human race on this planet. Hence, the mystery of God is Materialism pure and simple. Being neither a Christian, Jew, nor Infidel, but simply an Atheistic Materialist and advocate of a universal brotherhood of man, I cannot well afford to reject and revile the Bible just now, for I think it inexpedient to spike the guns of an enemy when they can be conveniently turned against himself.

I recognize no infidelity but of man to his fellow-man. There are two kinds or classes of such infidels, viz.: The insidious hypocrit who promises a monopoly of an imaginary spirit-world to those who will uncomplainingly submit to be robbed of their natural and inalienable right of possession in this; the other arrogantly demands that we shall submit to the robbery without even the delusiv hope of recompense in an imaginary spirit-world, and would persuade us that the robbery is "the best, the greatest, truest attribute of freedom." What miserable absurdities will not people uphold with fanatical zeal under the name of freedom and liberty

J. A. TUTTLE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

" Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Goat and the Swing.

A vicious goat one day had found
His way into forbidden ground,
When, coming to the garden swing,
He spied a most prodigious thing—
A ram, a monster to his mind,
With head before and head behind.

Its shape was odd, no hoofs were seen,
But, without legs, it stood between
Two upright lofty posts of oak,
With forehead ready for a stroke.

Though but a harmless ornament
Carved on the seat, it seemed intent
On barring the intruder's way,
While he, advancing, seemed to say,
" Who is this surly fellow here?
Two heads, no tail—'tis mighty queer;
A most insulting countenance."
With stamp of foot and angry glance
He curbed his threatening neck, and stood
Before the passiv thing of wood.

" You winked as I was going by.
You didn't? What, tell me I lie?
Take that." And at the swing he sprung.
A sounding thump it backward swung,
And, set in motion by the blow,
Swayed menacingly to and fro.

" Ha! you'll fight? A quarrelsome chap
I knew you were. You'll get a rap;
I'll crack your skull." A headlong jump,
Another and a louder bump.

The swing, as if with kindling wrath,
Came pushing back along the path.
The goat, astonished, shook his head,
Winked hard, turned round, grew mad, and said:
" Villain! I'll teach you who I am!"
(Or seemed to say), " You rascal ram,
To pick a fight with me, when I
So quietly am passing by!
Your head or mine." A thundering stroke,
The cracking horns met crashing oak.
Then came a dull and muffled sound,
And something rolled along the ground,
Got up, looked sad, appeared to say,
" Your head's too hard," and limped away
Quite humbly, in a rumpled coat,
A dirtier and a wiser goat. —J. T. Trowbridge.

Correspondence.

Sulphur Springs, Tex., April 10, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I inclose a letter to Prof. J. H. Cook, which, if you see fit, you may publish.

I send you pleasant greetings from our summer-land of birds and flowers, and wish you well always. Truly yours,

Annie H. Park.

Austin, Ill. April 12, 1889.

Miss Susan H. Wixon, My Liberal Friend: Believing it the duty of every Liberal to assist in the diffusion of knowledge, I send you my humble offering, which you may dispose of as you choose.

I hav read the letters in the Corner and am very glad to see that there are so many young Liberals in the United States; but one thing puzzles me, and that is, there are so few boys that write to the Corner, while here, in Chicago, young lady Liberals are a scarce article.

Hoping to see an increase in the Liberal correspondents, I am,

Your Liberal friend,

Albert F. Wineman.

[Boys like playing better than writing; nevertheless, we hav some remarkably bright boys among our correspondents.—Ed. C. C.]

Highland Home, April 6, 1889.

Miss Susan H. Wixon, My Dear Friend: I cannot begin to tell you how much we enjoy the letters in the Corner. And now I hav time to write a letter, too, which I hope will interest your readers. I was out in papa's shop making a weather-vane. I had a drawing-knife shaving down one of the fans, when the knife slipped and cut my leg just below the knee, and then I hobbled into the house and got my cut bandaged up, and here I lie writing to you. Papa says that he thinks I will hav to stay out of school for at least a week. I am very sorry that I hav to stay out so long, but my sisters are going to bring my books home, and I am going to study hard so as to keep up with my classes. We hav a long way to go to school—two and a quarter miles down a steep mountain. There are many beautiful flowers and plants on the road, and there is also a very beautiful spring of clear mountain water from which we drink. Are you interested in natural history? My sisters and myself are very much interested in the study, and hav quite a collection of curios. We hav quite a fine orchard and it is all in bloom, and there is a large cherry-tree which is spread out in great glory before grandma's window. There are many gophers in the orchard, and I am trapping them at five cents apiece, but will hav to let them hav the orchard until my leg gets well. It is pretty bad to be hurt, but it is quite amusing and comforting to see how the little two-year-old baby, and everybody, even our little dog, Purley, and Tabby, the cat, came to help to comfort. Perhaps all this is not very wise, but papa says that people are supposed to know more at forty than at eleven. So good-bye.

From your little friend,

Elwin D. Rodgers.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Sulphur Springs, Tex., April 10, 289.

Prof. J. H. Cook, Friend: As I read this sentence from your letter of March 2d, "At seventy, and in poverty, pains, and loneliness, I am here, not able to work, teach, or lecture, but I can still think and feel for humanity," my eyes were filled with tears. I wept to think of so noble a soul suffering the torments of pain and loneliness. I thought, why should Poverty's lean grasp be on him now when the shadows are deepening? Our world is bright and beautiful, and would giv alike to all, were it not for the greedy selfishness of the few. Are we not happier in proportion as we make others happier? Must it be always thus? Must those who hav devoted their lives to the amelioration of others' lives always suffer in old age? Ought not we who are younger to do all in our power to help these brave veterans in a noble cause?

I can giv you only words and best wishes, dear friend; but your sweet verses and kindly words hav helped me, at least, to rise above the sordid cares of life; and if these poor lines from a stranger will bring a little ray more of happiness into your life, I shall feel a thousand times repaid.

Sincerely yours, Annie H. Park.

Lawrence, Kan., April 13, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: It is a long time since I hav written to you; a great many things hav happened between now and then. I am now in the junior grade of the high school. I study Latin, algebra, rhetoric, and elocution. I hav three teachers, namely, Professors May, Oliver, and Murphy. Prof. W. S. Bell, of Chicago, has been making a very pleasant visit at our house. I attended a dance three weeks ago to-night at Bond, Kan. The funds were to help pay for Professor Bell's lectures. The dance was at the residence of Mr. R. Hellstrom, a very pleasant place. They hav the most beautiful flowers I hav ever seen in a private house. I also attended one of Professor Bell's lectures given April 9th, at Bond. It was very eloquent and convincing. A new church has been built there, and they are trying hard to get members. A preacher and a few of the good church were at the lecture; they seemed to be greatly impressed with the truth of his statements. Professor Bell was at our house the 8th and 12th, and we all greatly enjoyed his visit. If nothing happens, he is to lecture again at Bond, on his return from the West. I will not occupy any more of your precious space, and will close, hoping you success with the Corner. Yours affectionately, Annetta C. Palm.

Science Column.

Attraction.

The word "attraction" denotes that invisible force by which all bodies of matter, whether of the size of atoms or of worlds, are drawn toward one another. The law of attraction is indispensable to the existence of the present order of things. It is easily shown that the suspension of this law, even with respect to a single star, would spread disorder and anarchy throughout the universe. But as it is, the operation of this law is unfailing. Without its unchangeableness philosophy, if it still existed, would be a doctrin of chances. But in consequence of this certainty eclipses for years to come, for instance, can be calculated without fear of mistake, almost to a second of time.

There is no law of nature more universally and continually presented to our sight than attraction. We see it drawing to the earth the stone which we hav thrown into the air. We see it rounding the little drop of dew which hangs like an appropriate gem on the leaf of the frail flower. Or we see two drops on the same spray, when brought near to each other, but still situated at a distance sufficient to be seen, rush together and become one. How simple, and yet how grand, is this law, which exercises a power over the smallest atoms around us, and which is, at the same time, guiding the immense and numberless orbs that revolve throughout the universe!

Attraction is separated into two chief divisions. These are, first, the attraction which is exercised by masses of matter situated at sensible distances from one another; and second, the attraction exerted at insensible distances. The latter exists among the atoms constituting bodies.

Attraction at sensible distances is separated into two parts: First, the attraction of gravitation, and second, magnetic, diamagnetic, and electrical attraction.

The attraction of gravitation acts at all distances. This kind of attraction defines the quantity of matter by weight, not by quality or condition. It is said that Newton conceived the idea of universal attraction. May not, he reasoned, the power which draws bodies to the ground with unerring certainty be the same as that which regulates the movements of the celestial systems? He followed up this idea and made a series of discoveries which are the most brilliant that adorn the annals of philosophy. He proved satisfactorily that what we term "weight" is nothing more nor less than universal attraction. The attractiv force decreases in intensity as we recede from the earth in distance. It is now well known that a body weighs less on the tops of mountains, and in balloons, than at the level of the sea. What weighs a thousand pounds on the sea shore weighs several pounds less on the tops of mountains of a certain hight. This has been proved experimentally. And we also know that this attraction will decrease as we descend from the earth's surface toward its center. At one-half the distance from the earth's surface to its center, a body will weigh only half as much as it will at the surface. The attraction of gravitation is also the cause of the roundness of the earth, and of the other heavenly bodies. It is well known that the earth was at one time in a fluid state, and when in that state it was by this quality of attraction that the atoms were impelled to a common center, and thus the congregated mass assumed a globular form. An illustration of this may be seen in a drop of water, which always assumes a globular form.

Very little can be said here about magnetic and electric attractions. They act on particular bodies and under particular circumstances, and constitute a distinct class of phenomena. So far as they operate on bodies at sensible distances, they coincide with gravitation. If we submit certain bodies to friction, they will show electrical attraction. By our rubbing a stick of sealing-wax upon a piece of silk and then holding it near a light body, such as a piece of paper or straw, the latter will be attracted to the stick of wax. And it is universally known that a magnet possesses the property of attracting steel.

We now turn to the other chief division of attraction, namely, that existing among the atoms constituting bodies. Under this division are included cohesiv, adhesiv, capillary, and chemical attraction.

Cohesion binds together atoms of the same kind in one uniform mass. This force holds together the atoms of masses of iron, wood, stone, liquids, and other substances. And when two drops of water are placed near to each other, as was remarked at the beginning of this article, they will rush together and form one drop. This attraction causes the roundness of the drop. If two drops of quicksilver on a smooth surface be brought near each other, they will be attracted to each other and unite in a similar manner.

Adhesiv attraction, which is sometimes defined separately, but which is really one of the divisions of cohesion, is the attraction between unlike atoms, or bodies of matter, when in contact with one another. For instance, when we paste two pieces of paper together, it is the adhesiv attraction between the paper and the paste that unites them. When we write on the wall with a piece of chalk or charcoal, the particles that are worn off stick to the wall through the force of adhesion.

The species of attraction called capillary exists between liquids and the interiors of solids that are tubular or porous. Thus, when we wet a sponge at one end, the capillary attraction will cause the water to creep through its entire interior. If we hang a rag over the rim of a basin, with one end in the water, the water will rise or soak up above its level, and after a time will drip off the end that is out of the basin.

Chemical attraction or affinity is perhaps the most important and interesting manifestation of the attractiv force. This is exercised between particles of dissimilar bodies which unite and form a new substance possessing properties different from those of its ingredients separately. On being heated, common sea sand and soda will combine and form glass. By the action of this property of matter the endless diversity in the composition of terrestrial substances has arisen.

The great extent of this subject forbids giving more than this general idea of it in the Corner. But it is hoped that this sketch will induce our young readers to feel interested in this branch of scientific knowledge, which will repay a lengthened study.

John T. Reed.

Questions.—What does the word "attraction" denote? What would be the result of the suspension of attraction? Is this law unfailing? How is this law presented to our sight? What are the two chief divisions of attraction? Into how many parts is attraction at sensible distances separated? What are they? What is said about the attraction of gravitation? Who discovered universal attraction? What did he prove? Where is a body the heaviest—at the level of the sea, or above it? Does the attraction of gravitation decrease as we descend from the earth's surface? What is the cause of the roundness of the earth? What is said about magnetic and electric attractions? Do they coincide with gravitation? By what experiment may we show electrical or magnetic attraction? What is said of attraction at insensible distances? How many parts under this division? What are they? What does cohesion do? Tell what is said of cohesion. What is adhesiv attraction? What illustration is given of this? What do we know of capillary attraction? Giv an illustration. What is said of chemical attraction? What has the action of this property of matter caused?

Miss Wixon's Works.

All in a Lifetime. A Liberal Romance. 12mo, 300pp., $1.50.

Apples of Gold. And Other Stories for Boys and Girls. 12mo, 383pp., $1.25.

Story Hour. An Exceptionally Handsome and Interesting Book, Without Superstition, for Children and Youth. The Only Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page illustrations and 25 smaller; large type, heavy, toned paper, broad margins, illustrated covers; 4to, 224pp., boards, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Industrial Slavery of To-Day.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

Vital, inspiring, hopeful, convincing.—[Literary World.

This astonishing book, how it haunts one, like a grown-up "Alice in Wonderland!" The mind follows entranced.—[Boston Gazette.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A glowing prophecy and a gospel of peace, where the pleasures of this world are free to all, to cheer but not enslave.—[The Nation.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.

PRICE, - - - - - - - 15 CENTS.

Your treatment of the "Conflict" is excellent. —Harry Hoover.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI-PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which each point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Reminiscences of a Preacher.

A RADICAL ROMANCE.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL,

Author of "Exeter Hall," "Heathens of the Heath," "Family Creeds," "Beautiful Snow," etc., etc.

The story is used by the author to teach Freethought, to remove superstition from the minds of those who would not read a polemical essay, and to urge facts against the various churches, believing which their supporters will desert them. The book is an argument as well as a novel, but the serious predicaments of the hero are skilfully used to lure the reader along, and to induce him to take the antidote to theological poisoning without knowing it. Mr. McDonnell writes effectivly and convincingly, and always braces his romances with facts on one side and figures on the other. Those who hav read his previous works need not be advised to purchase this they will probably do so at once.

Price, in paper, 50 cents; in cloth, 75 cents.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By Halsey R. Stevens.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
ohn Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3.706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1889.

(E. M. 289.)

✣WITH✣ ILLUSTRATIONS.✣

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	28
James Parton,	32
Helen H. Gardener,	33
S. P. Putnam,	36
Charles Watts,	37
E. A. Stevens, Sec. A. S. U.	41
Parker Pillsbury,	42
Robert C. Adams,	44
J. D. Shaw,	46
F. M. Holland,	47
E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.,	50
Lucy N. Colman,	51
J. H. Burnham,	53
L. K. Washburn,	63
Ella Gibson,	64
Susan H. Wixon,	67
John Peck,	71
W. S. Bell,	78
E. C. Walker,	80
Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	84
Dr. Juliet H. Severance,	87
Mrs. E. D. Slenker,	89
Col. J. R. Kelso,	91
G. H. Dawes,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

LIBERALS SUPPLIED

With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.

THE EDISON MIMEOGRAPH.

Patented by
THOS. A. EDISON.

Manifolds Autographic and Type-Written Letters, Drawings, Music, etc., etc. 3,000 copies from one original.

Send for circular and sample of work.

A. B. DICK COMPANY,
32 Liberty St., New York. 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.

144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculativ, each proved affirmativly and negativly by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.
By W. H. BURR. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O, N.Y.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days.

Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order.' Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,

FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.

DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

FATHER, SON & HOLY GHOST.

BY T. E. LONGSHORE.

5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen; $1 for 25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

DR. FELLOWS

STARVE HOPE

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

Rebekah.

A TENDER ROMANCE OF A SWEET YOUNG LIFE.

Dramatis personæ.

REBEKAH, a daisy.
FATHER BETHUEL, } her parents.
MOTHER BETHUEL, }
LABAN, her brother, and noble soul.
Abraham's steward, servants, camels, etc.

Scene.—Nahor, over against Mesopotamia, wherever that was.

Time.—Prior to the invention of the bustle.

ACT I.

Scene 1.—Fountain outside Nahor city. Camel train approaching; also maid, from the opposit direction, with best Sunday pitcher on her shoulder.

(Enter Rebekah.)

Reb. (solus) I dreamed a dream last night when fast asleep—
I'm sure I was asleep, although maids dream
Such dreams quite often when they're wide awake—
I hav, I know, and lots of times ere now.
I dreamed that I was married—my! how nice!
And to a man as rich—well, not quite
As rich as Vanderbilt, perchance, or that
Jay Gould, but yet a man whose cattle browse
On many hills, whose camels number thousands,
Whose asses are galore, and sheep until
You couldn't count 'em! shekels, too, in bank—
Just barrels of 'em!—much spot cash about
The house, sufficient for contingencies.
Now, wouldn't that be just delicious?—my!
I mean, of course, if I should marry one
Of such exceeding much spondulix, eh?
But then, dreams go by contraries, they say,
If so, then I shall get some chump without
An ass, an ox, a camel, sheep, or goat,
Perchance without sufficient scads to buy
A Waterbury watch, not mentioning
Piano or a sealskin sack. 'Twould be
Just my confounded luck to get a chump
Like that—but I won't hav him, now, I vum!
My pigs shall to a better market go,
If yet the court do know herself, and she
Do think she do. Now, I am handsome—just
As handsome as they make 'em anywhere—
Don't all the fellers say so, and don't I
Just know it quite as well? Who carried off
The beauty prize at our last beauty show?
Rebekah, if my memory doth serve
Me truly—maidens' memories of such Occasions rarely play them false, I ween—
Rebekah, daughter of Bethuel of Nahor, and, if I know myself, I am
That same Rebekah! Ha! who's that Mugwump
Down at the well, with camels gayly decked,
And serving-men? Dear me! what if my dream
Were to eventuate, as 'twere, and that
Mugwump—he isn't any slouch that travels
With such a train of camels as I see—
Should prove my fate?—oh, my! I'll just put on
My sweetest smiles—the fellers all declare
They're awful sweet—the smiles, of course—and do
My dandiest to mash and capture that Same Mugwump!

(Trips gracefully toward the well.)

(Enter Mugwump, bowing and scraping.)

Mug. Daughter of the Orient,
And fairest flower that mine eyes hav yet
Beheld, allow me to salute thee, and
With all the reverence and homage that
Rare beauty doth compel. If I may dare,
When thou hast filled thy pitcher at the well
(Why didn't the galoot fill it himself?)
To ask thee for a drink——

Reb. Oh, certainly,
My lord. Most happy I shall be to serve
Your highness. I will quickly fill the pitcher,
My lord—it's lovely weather, isn't it?

(Proceeds to fill the pitcher.)

He's just a high Jim Dandy, that man is,
And if my beauty does not mash him silly,
With all my smiles thrown in, and all my taffy,
Then beauty, smiles, and taffy are played out.
(To Mug.) Now, if my lord will honor me, here is
The water, cool and sparkling from the well.
I hope my lord will find it nice—'tis held
To be most excellent.

Mug. (taking pitcher) Most excellent
It must be, fair one with the golden locks,
Since thy fair hands hav held the pitcher which Contains the liquid.

Reb. My! you flatter me,
My lord. While you are quenching thirst, I'll water
Your camels—oh, I'd just as lief as not.
How splendid are their trappings, and how fine
The animals themselvs—they're thoroughbreds,
Of course? I always did so much admire
A thoroughbred, and you—dear me, how I
Do talk—I mean your camels are—there, now
I'll water them—oh, yes, I do insist;
'Twill be a pleasure, I assure my lord,
To serve unto such splendid animals
The which that thirst assuages.

(Waters the ungainly brutes, the serving-men not objecting. "Mugwump" looks on admiringly. The camels watered, he throws off the glamour with which Rebekah had invested him, he encouraging the delusion; comes down to the hardpan of serving-manism, where he belongs, and, dropping hifalutin, addresses the maiden.)

Serv. Now, my maid,
Whose daughter, pray, art thou? Take these, my dear.

(Hands her a gold earring and rich bracelets.)

Reb. Oh, my! are these for me for keeps, my lord?
O ain't they just too splendid, now? my stars!

(Gazes admiringly at the gauds.)

Serv. No lord am I, my child, as you hav thought,
But serving-man of Abraham the Great.
The ornaments are thine for keeps. Accept
Them from my master.

Reb. (aside) There, my milk is spilled
Already—oh! and here I hav been trying
To mash a servant—my! No matter, it
Has paid, and so my sweetness was not wasted
Wholly upon the desert air. (To Serv.) O thanks!
I do accept these ornaments from thy
Great master. (Loq.) I'd accept much more, you bet!

Serv. Now tell me if thy father's house affords
The room for us to lodge in?

Reb. (counting on further gains) Room? oh, lots
Of it, make no mistake. There's room enough
And fodder, too; and paw and maw—me, too—
Would just delighted be if you would stop
With us. And now I'll run right home and tell
Them you're a-coming, and get things in shape.
You'll come, now, won't you? Anyone will show
You where Bethuel son of Milcah, which
She bare unto Nahor, doth liv—you'll find
Us easily, and I will make kid stew
For you—you bet I'll show a dandy dish!
Well, au revoir, till we meet later.

Scene 2.—The Bethuel headquarters.

(Enter Rebekah, excited.)

Reb. Oh, paw and maw, just look at these gold bracelets,
And earring sweet—they're solid gold, I know,
And just too lovely—ain't they, maw?

Maw. Why, child,
Where did you get them? Goodness gracious me!

Reb. Well, don't go off the handle, maw, pray don't!
I drew some water for a great man's camels,
And lo, his serving-man presented me
With these sweet ornaments—oh, ain't they splendid?

(Laban, Rebekah's brother, becomes interested.)

Lab. Squeezix! why didn't you get him to—say,
How many in the gang, you Becky, eh?
Ten camels and six men; and they must stop
Somewhere to-night and pay for grub and lodgings.
Great Scott! why didn't you invite the gang
To stay with us? we might as well catch on
To their spondulix——

Reb. Labe, now you cork up.
Say, are there any flies on me, think you?
The man—I s'pose he is the great man's steward—
Is coming—I invited him. Again,
My brother, are there any flies on Becky?

Lab. No, nary fly; but I must see to't that
They don't—your friends—get roped in by our neighbors,
Who'd skin 'em, sure. We'll charge a fair price only—
Some extra for the trouble, to be sure.
I'll out and after them.

(Exeunt the philanthropist.)

(Rebekah and her "maw" set about getting up the kid stew. Labe, in due time, lands the camel train where it won't be roped in and skinned by his neighbors.)

Scene 3.—Dining-room in the Bethuel mansion. Supper ready when the guests are.

(Enter Abraham's steward. Becky presents him to "maw," who invites him to feed.)

Stew. I will not eat until I tell mine errand.
I am the steward of great Abraham—
You may hav heard of him—a man of most
Exceeding much cattle of divers kinds,
And crop of shekels bounteous, make note.
Blest is my master of the Lord my God,
Who hath unto him given flocks and herds,
And gold and silver, man-servants and maid-
Servants, and camels, asses, sheep, and goats
And things till one can't count. And said my master:

(Becky, her "maw" and people, are now on the eve of a very large surprise party.)

Unto my kindred go and take a wife
Unto my son, my Isaac dear to me.
Unto the well I came this day and said,
O Lord God of my master Abraham,
Now let it be, as stand I by the well,
That when the virgin cometh forth to draw
Of water from the well, and ask I for
A drink, and she shall say, Drink thou, and I
Will also for thy camels draw, let her
The woman be appointed by the Lord
For him, my master's son!

Reb. O mercy, maw—
My dream! my dream! it's coming true—oh, my!

(Faints "dead away"—well, not quite "dead away," but most "dead away.")

Maw. My goodness gracious, mister, what great luck
For Becky! But she well deserves it, you,
For she will make a splendid wife—my soul!
You'd oughter taste of her kid stew, you had—
Now do set up and hav some, dear—she made
It specially for you. Dear me, how things
Does happen, don't they, you? There's Becky, who,
We didn't know this mornin' as we'd ever
Git her well off our hands, is quite as good
As married now, and splendidly, that's better!
But, mister, that dear child—oh, how I dread
To part with her—is wuth just any man's
Good money, I tell you. Why, sir, there's nothin'
That she can't do, from sweet pianer playin'
To milkin' goats, from crazy quiltin' work
To darnin' stockin's; and, sir, when it comes
To cookin' up a fricassee of kid—
Kid stew, for short, we call it—why, she is
A ragin' house afire, don't you forget!
Dear me! I don't know as we'll let her go—
I wouldn't, you, for any other man
But Abraham—on sech a second-handed—
Third-handed really—way of courtin'——

Reb. (recovered) Maw,
It's proxy courting, that's just what it is—
King folks quite often court and marry so.
Two noted Puritans there were—John Miles
And Alden Standish—vice versa, maybe—
One sent the other out to court for him
Priscilla Jenkins—some such name as that—
I havn't read the story since I went
To school, and so I may somewhat hav mixed
The names—I'm queer on names and ever was—
Well, anyhow, the one that courting went
For t'other one, the business for himself
Did he, his friend thus getting left, you see—
O I hav read the classics, maw, you bet!
(Sotto voce) this fellow needn't hope to work that racket!

Stew. And now my most esteemed good gentleman,

(To Rebekah's father and brother.)

If you will kindly deal and truly with
My master, say so, and if not, say so,
That I may turn to right or left, as 'twere,
And go about my business, see?

Beth. I see,
My man; and see a job both cut and dried
By Jahveh, and I've nothing pro or con
To say, save this: Her father, seeking for
His son a wife, will do the handsome, I
Suppose—my girl is worth the dowry of
A queen!

Lab You bet she is, my man; and then
Her relativs should be remembered, too—
For one, I hav done everything for that
Dear girl—now, Becky, havn't I?

Reb. (with mental reservation) O lots,
Dear Labe. How I shall hate to tear myself
Away from you, my dear (aside), in a pig's eye!

Stew. Esteemed good gentleman, my master, who,
Under the Lord his God and mine, has waxed
Most mighty, he, in this world's goods, will with
This woman deal most royally, her people
Forgetting not.

Reb. Now, that's real nice; and you, Maw, oughter hav, at least, a shawl of camel's
Hair—my! that would be just too splendid, maw!

Lab. And me, my sister Becky—don't forget
Your brother Laban

Reb. Never, dear, good soul!
(aside) The hypocrit and mercenary crump!

Stew. What says the mother of this maid?

Mother. Behold,
Rebekah is before thee, sir; take her
And go, and let her be the wife of thy
Great master's son, as hath arranged the Lord—
I s'pose you brought the presents with you, sir?

Reb. Why, maw, of course he did; and lots of 'em;
I know. On every camel was a pack——

Stew. Depend upon it, mother of Rebekah,
That empty-handed came I not—what, ho!

(Enter one of his underlings.)

Bring in the pack, thou caitiff—see to it
That all are fetched within, and quickly, sirrah!

(Exeunt caitiff. Enter all the caitiffs and sirrahs with the boodle.)

Then commenced the unpacking, and when
It was completed, there was a "sight to behold!"
It looked like an "opening day" at Tiffany's.

Bijouterie of gold, bijouterie of silver, and gems that were not brummagem, but of the "purest ray serene," were displayed in profusion before the gloating optics of the Bethuel family. Costly bric-a-brac and "articles of virtue" were shown up, and the useful was not wanting, silks, satins, cloth of gold, camel's hair shawls, sealskin sacks, etc., etc., being trotted out until you couldn't rest. Overcome at the sight of all this luxury of wealth, Rebekah again went into a "dead away" swoon—well, as nearly so as she cared to make it—recouping, as it were, in time to receive jewels and raiment enough to stock a first class queen; the old lady getting a camel's hair shawl of the first water, jewels galore, "Pompadour frizzes," set of store teeth, etc., etc.; the old gentleman coming in for a meerschaum pipe, of grand proportions and beautifully carved, together with a "pocket pistol"—blunderbuss size—of silver, and loaded with the vintage of six decades; the son getting a box of cigarets and a pair of cowhide boots, with which he went out and kicked himself, most appropriately. After the distribution, and the steward had opened a basket of Veuve Cliquot, the kid fricassee was served up, and all had sailed in and made a night of it, having the jolliest kind of a time, Laban feeling pretty good, he having swiped a full-jeweled watch, chronometer balance and independent second hand—just the thing he wanted, to time camels with, you know, on the race-track.

Scene 4.—The Bethuel parlor next morning after breakfast. Enter Steward and the family, saving Rebekah, all showing signs of the night's revel, the old man and son with indisputably large "heads on."

Stew. And now, my worthy people, send me on My way unto my master.

Old Lady. Let me ask,
That the dear damsel shall abide with us
For a few days, good man.

Lab. Ten days let her
Remain with us, dear friend—I cannot part
With her at once.

(The slide wanted a chance to wheedle her out of some jewels, or swipe some.)

Stew. Hinder me not, but send Me now away, I pray, that I may go
Unto my master.

O. L. We will call the damsel,
And at her mouth inquire, good man, at once.

(Calls out for her daughter, who enters.)

Rebekah, wilt thou with this man set off
To-day, or tarry yet awhile with these Thy loving kindred?

Reb. Nary tarry, maw,
You bet! I'm ready just as soon as he
Is, for the start. Delays are dangerous,
My dearest maw, especially in marriage,
O doncher know?

O. L. Yes, yes, my darling daughter,
Delays are dangerous in matters mat-
Rimonial. 'Tis better that you go
To-day, than tarry here and take the chances.
Things happen, doncher know? I'll help thee, dear,
To pack thy trunk. Dear me! to think you're married,
Or just as good, if nothing breaks. (Whispers.) Don't let Your man walk over you, dear Becky—do
The bossing all yourself. You know how I
Hav done, and how things go—as smooth as oil!

Reb. You bet I'll do the bossing, maw—don't you Forget it, dear! And now let's pack.

(Exeunt both.)

An hour later and the camel train set out in the direction over against Lahai-roi, Becky, robed in splendor, seated on the noblest camel of them all, and looking every inch a queen.

Those of our readers wishing to follow the career of our heroin are referred to Genesis. There they will learn that Isaac didn't "walk over" her to any great extent, but that she did the "walk over" business, especially in the Jacob-Esau matter. But with that the writer has nothing to do. His to deal with the tender romance of a sweet young life! Selah!

SI SLOKUM.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MATERIALISM:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON SOCIETY.

By DR. LOUIS BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Christian Absurdities.

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

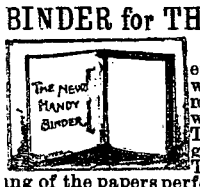
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257.

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular, Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $5.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c.

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right,

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

SUNDAY trains hav been discontinued on the Dakota division of the Chicago & Northwestern railway.

AT Sayreville, N. J., on the 5th, a fight occurred between railway construction hands and brickmakers in which life was lost.

THERE are seventy-one Jesuits in Canada.

CAVALRY will eject squatters on the Cherokee strip.

FIFTY colored men are studying for the priesthood in Rome.

HENRY GEORGE'S success in England is great and increasing.

MEXICO has riots over attempts at punishment of priests delivering seditious sermons.

IT is said that the czar's mind is becoming unbalanced from continual anxiety and fear.

THE Cherokee strip people say they hav a standing offer of $3 per acre for their land.

BOULANGER has summoned a council of his supporters to meet him in London on the 16th.

POPE LEO has rebuked Father Agastino for invoking blessings on King Humbert and the Italian army.

NEW HAMPSHIRE leads in divorces, having had one to every ten marriages in the last five years.

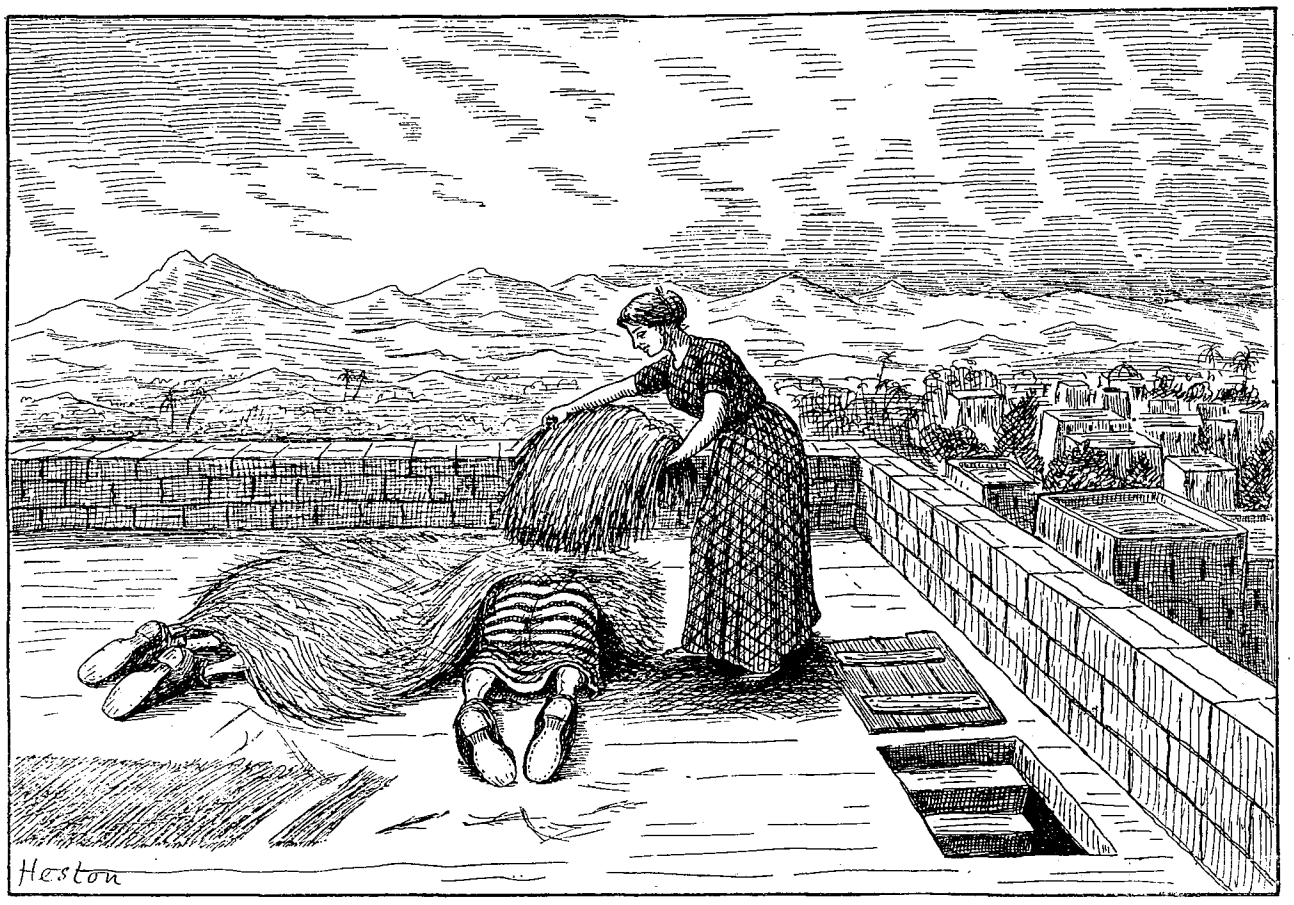
AT Raleigh, N. C., on May 2d, the Lord destroyed two of his buildings, a church and a seminary, by a storm.

FROM its successiv defeats by popular vote in New England states, Prohibition is thought to be politically dead.

EXPOSITION ceremonies at Paris were opened on the 5th by commemorativ celebration of the meeting of the states-general on that day of 1789.

MANY Oklahoma settlers are disappointed, the land being often steril. Water is scarce, the nights are cold, the days hot, and dust-storms frequent.

CONNECTICUT has been added to the states which hav adopted the Australian ballot system. In New York it has passed the legislature and awaits the governor's signature.



AT Demarara, British Guiana, S. A., there has been three days' rioting between Portuguese and negroes, the latter claiming that their race had been discriminated against in a legal decision.

ARBOR DAY, a state holiday for the planting of trees by school-children and the impressing upon them of the necessity of preserving our forests, was observed on the 1st in New York and elsewhere.

M. CARNOT, the French president, was fired at in the streets on the 5th. The would-be assassin says that his cartridge was blank and that he intended merely to draw attention to injustice done him by the minister of marine in sending him to Senegal, he being steward on a government cruiser. But it appears that the cartridge contained ball, and his story is doubted.

THE Washington celebration was a success throughout the country. New York received half a million visitors each day. At Chicago many people were trampled to death or seriously injured by a rush of a great crowd frightened by being struck with rockets irregularly discharged. Poor Paine was not mentioned. The religious mummeries were abundant and fulsome. The chief exercises, those held Tuesday morning over Harrison before he started to review the military parade, opened with an invocation by Storrs, Protestant, and closed with a benediction by Mike Corrigan, Catholic. While Harrison was in church Bishop Potter, Episcopal, rebuked plutocracy in a way that has offended many Republicans, and politicians generally.

THE
ORDER OF CREATION.
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
CONTENTS:
I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis; A Plea for a Fair Trial By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.
This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

RAHAB HIDETH THE SPIES.

But she had brought them up to the roof of the house, and hid them with the stalks of flax, which she had laid in order upon the roof.—Joshua ii, 6.

Gems of Thought.

THE multitude of voices is no authority; a thousand voices may not, strictly examined, amount to one vote. Mankind in this world is divided into flocks, and follow their several bell-wethers. Now, it is well known, let the bell-wether rush through any gap and the rest rush after him, were it into bottomless quagmire. Nay, so conscientious are sheep in this particular, as a quaint naturalist and moralist has noticed, "If you hold a stick before the wether so that he is forced to vault it in his passage, the whole flock will do the like when the stick is withdrawn; and the thousandth sheep will be found vaulting as impetuously over air as the first did over an otherwise impassable barrier," a further peculiarity, which in consulting acts of Parliament and other authentic records with many other matters, you will find curiously verified in the human species also.—Carlyle.

MAJORITIES are not necessarily right. If anything is known—if anything can be known—we are sure that very large bodies of men hav frequently been wrong. . . . There is no nation in which a majority leads the way. In the progress of mankind, the few hav been the nearest right. There hav been centuries in which the light seemed to emanate only from a handful of men, while the rest of the world was enveloped in darkness. Some great man leads the way—he becomes the morning star, the prophet of a coming day Afterward, many millions accept his views. But there are still hights above and beyond; there are other pioneers, and the old day, in comparison with the new, becomes a night.—Ingersoll to Cardinal Manning.

CIVILIZATION is nothing but the knowledge and observance of natural laws.—Supernatural Religion.

Odds and Ends.

So long as Ireland was silent under her wrongs England was deaf to her cries.—Irish Newspaper.

THE church belle in the choir often brings more people to church than the bell in the steeple.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

JOLLYFELLOW (after an absence): "Hello, Meak! Married yet?" Meak (sadly): "No; not married yet." Jollyfellow (after another absence): "Hello, Meak! Married yet?" Meak (sadly): "Yes; married yet."—New York Weekly.

A BANNER of one of the Irish societies depicts George Washington clasping the hand of some ancient Hibernian king, with the legend, "United we stand, divided we fall." The United States, however, hav managed to get along, although not yet entirely annexed to the kingdom of Ireland.—Puck.

"WILL you vote for my bill?" inquired the lobbyist of the legislator. "No, sir," replied the latter; "your bill is a swindle." "Why, man, you must hav the wrong bill in mind. I mean this fifty-dollar bill!" "Well, this appears to be a good bill," said the legislator, after examining it critically. "I'll vote for it, of course."—Puck.

"ELIJAH!" "Yes, sir!" "The country has apparently heard of the appointment of the great Irish patriot, Mr. Patrick Egan, to the Chilean mission." "Yes, sir; it has, indeed." "It will be a long time, Elijah, before Grover Cleveland can distance us, if he did attend the last anniversary meeting of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, I flatter myself."—Puck.

"Is it true, Angelina," said a young lady addressing an acquaintance, "that there has been a rupture between you and Clarence De Johnes?" "It is quite true." "Gracious! What was the cause?" "He was addicted to the use of slang." "Oh!" "Yes, I begged him to discontinue the habit, but he persisted in it." "And the result?" "The result is, he is in the soup."—Boston Courier.

EDITOR of the New York Mail and Express (to assistant): "How many really first-class appointments yet remain to be filled by President Harrison?" Assistant: "I don't know of any that I consider half-way first-class." Editor: "Then run in a strong, empbatic, unmistakable announcement that under no consideration would the editor of this paper accept any office within the gift of the president."—Chicago Tribune.

AT the weekly prayer-meeting.—The Rev. Mr. Wilgus: "And now I would be pleased to know if any of the brethren or sisters hav tried the plan of infusing a little more affection into their daily home life, as I so earnestly recommended last Sabbath?" Brother Marks: "I did, but it was hardly a success. I followed your directions, Brother Wilgus, and kissed my wife as soon as I got home, and as quick as she got her breath she wanted to know what mischief I had been up to." Sister Sampson: "And when I greeted my lord and master with a loving salute—I believe that is the way you recommended, Brother Wilgus—he wanted to know whether it was a pair of shoes or a new bonnet I was after."—Terre Haute Express.

PATIENT man: "Suppose a woman makes it so hot for her husband that he can't liv with her, and he leaves her, what can she do?" Lawyer: "Sue him for support." Patient man: "Suppose she has run him so heavily into debt that he can't support her, because his creditors grab every dollar as quick as he gets it, besides ruining his business with their suits?" Lawyer: "If for any reason whatever he fail to pay her the amount ordered, he will be sent to jail for contempt of court." Patient man: "Suppose she drives him out of the house with a flat-iron, and he's afraid to go back?" Lawyer: "She can arrest him for desertion." Patient man: "Well, I don't see anything for me to do but go hang myself." Lawyer: "It's against the law to commit suicide, and if you get caught attempting it you'll be fined and imprisoned. Ten dollars, please. Good-day."—New York Weekly.

IN a certain church in Ireland a young priest was detailed to preach. The occasion was his first appearance, and he took for his text "The Feeding of the Multitude." He said: "And they fed ten people with ten thousand loaves of bread and ten thousand fishes." An old Irishman said: "That's no miracle; begorra, I could do that myself," which the priest overheard. The next Sunday the priest announced the same text, but he had it right this time. He said: "And they fed ten thousand people on ten loaves of bread and ten fishes." He waited a second or two and then leaned well over the pulpit and said: "And could you do that, Mr. Murphy?" Mr. Murphy replied: "And sure, your reverence, I could." "And how could you do it, Mr. Murphy?" said the priest. "And sure, your reverence, I could do it with what was left over from last Sunday."—Dublin News.

WE counted them over. "The Spanish coins
[She laughed] and the silver heart are Joe's.
My cousin Tom had the dagger made.
And this was for birthday, and so were those,
A fan, a crescent, and grandma's ring;
And isn't the banjo a darling thing?

"Oh, this!" she said, and I saw her blush
Red as a rose on its sun-swept spray,
"Hav you forgotten it, stupid Jack?
This was a stud—you—dropped one day.
I found it afterward, so you see
It really and truly belongs to me."

"It really and truly does," I cried,
"And all things else that ever were mine.
Then can't you make room on your bracelet, dear,
For a living bangle of—five foot nine?"
She clasped her hands round my bended head,
"Oh, not on my bracelet, Jack!" she said.

—M. S. Bridges in Judge.

The Antiquity of Christianity.

By JOHN ALBERGER, Author of "Monks, Popes, and Their Intrigues."

Paper, 12mo, 61pp., 25 cents.

Contains testimonies of the early Christian Fathers and others, and cases of striking similarity to Christianity in many ancient religions.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

THE world has been amused with the term revealed religion, and the generality of priests apply this term to the books called the Old and New Testament. The Mohammedans apply the same term to the Koran. There is no man that believes in revealed religion stronger than I do; but it is not the reveries of the Old and New Testament, nor of the Koran, that I dignify with that sacred title. That which is revelation to me exists in something which no human mind can invent, no human hand can counterfeit or alter. The word of God is the Creation we behold; and this word of God revealeth to man all that is necessary for man to know of his creator. Do we want to contemplate his power? We see it in the immensity of his creation. Do we want to contemplate his wisdom? We see it in the unchangeable order by which the incomprehensible whole is governed. Do we want to contemplate his munificence? We see it in the abundance with which he fills the earth. Do we want to contemplate his mercy? We see it in his not withholding that abundance, even from the unthankful. Do we want to contemplate his will, so far as it respects man? The goodness he shows to all, is a lesson for our conduct to each other. In fine, do we want to know what God is? Search not the book called the scripture, which any human hand might make or any impostor invent; but the scripture called the Creation.—Paine.

THE sciences are not sectarian. People do not persecute each other on account of disagreements in mathematics. Families are not divided about botany, and astronomy does not even tend to make a man hate his father and mother. It is what people do not know that they persecute each other about. Science will bring, not a sword, but peace.—Ingersoll.

APPARITIONS: Supernatural visions permitted to him or her gifted by God with the special grace of possessing a cracked brain, a hysterical temperament, a disordered digestion, but, above all, the art of lying with effrontery.—Voltaire.

THE more men are deficient in knowledge and reason, the more zealous they are in religion. In every religious faction, a mob of women, assembled by their directors, display immoderate zeal for opinions, of which it is evident they hav no idea. In theological quarrels, the populace, like ferocious beasts, fall upon all those against whom their priest is desirous of exciting them. A profound ignorance, boundless credulity, weak intellect, and warm imagination, are the materials of which are made bigots, zealots, and saints.—D'Holbach.

UNIVERSAL obedience is universal stagnation; disobedience is one of the conditions of progress. Select any age of the world and tell me what would hav been the effect of implicit obedience.—Ingersoll.

WE hav no national religion and no national God; but every citizen is allowed to hav a religion and a God of his own, or to reject all religions and deny the existence of all gods.—Ingersoll.

WE should all remember that to be like other people is to be unlike ourselvs, and that nothing can be more detestable in character than servil imitation. The great trouble with imitation is, that we are apt to ape those who are in reality far below us.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 20. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 18, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

SUNDAY AS THE SABBATARIANS WANT IT.

Notes and Clippings.

THE street-car drivers who hav been on strike in Vienna, and who hav finally succumbed, average about sixty cents in wages for a day beginning at 7 in the morning and ending at midnight or 1 A.M.

BROOKLYN is falling in line on the Sunday question. The Rembrandt Club is to open its doors on Sunday afternoon next for the free exhibition of its pictures, and there is a formidable movement under way to hav band concerts in Prospect park on Sunday afternoon.

THE mental fossils who yet control the Metropolitan Museum of Art hav decided not to open its doors evenings until next fall. The excuse is that no facilities for lighting it hav been afforded by the city. The museum will also be closed during the summer. It seems to need a new board of directors as badly as it needs anything.

Two elephants belonging to a circus broke loose in the streets of Chicago one night last week, and a frightened policeman turned in an alarm to a station-house and then ran around shouting that a mob of Anarchists were coming, burning the town as they came. The police of Chicago hav used the Anarchist scare so long that they are crazy on the subject.

TALMAGE says: "The church, if it would do its duty, could convert the world in ten years. It has the men and the money." "Perhaps so," says the Independent, "but it must turn over a new leaf of generosity very soon if it is going to undertake so great and speedy a task. The Brooklyn Tabernacle last year, with 4,126 members reported, gave $151 to home missions, and $138 to foreign missions."

SAYS the Nashville American: "If, the next time a preacher rises up in his pulpit and begins to homilize on 'Robert Elsmere' or Emma Abbott or the tariff or prohibition, the entire congregation should rise up and yell 'Rats!' they would no doubt be held guilty of disturbing public worship; but we should be bound to commend them to the mercy of the court, on the ground that if they had greatly sinned they had been greatly tempted."

THE Rev. Henry Frank of the Independent Congregational church of Jamestown, N. Y., has caused a sensation in the religious community by publicly proclaiming that the Bible is not inspired, and therefore is not infallible. He is a converted Jew, still young. Socially Mr. Frank stands well, while his congregation in numbers will compare with any in town. In his denial of the divine origin of the Bible Mr. Frank says: "The higher criticism now proves that the gospels were not written at all by any of the authors to whom attributed. Criticism compels us to admit that we cannot take every statement in the Old or New Testament to be absolute, but that the entire story of Jesus must be examined elsewhere, and only that accepted as true which history does not force us to declare is untrue. Therefore the statement that the Bible is an infallible book of divine revelation to humanity, an unqualified and absolute guide to faith and practice, and the only book in all the world containing a so-called revelation, is unhistorical, uncritical, and unqualifiedly false."

THE murdering Bald Knobbers, David Walker, William Walker, and John Matthews, were hanged on the 10th inst. The three prisoners expressed decided hope in the hereafter. Bill Walker requested to be baptized by immersion, and as the sheriff would not allow the prisoner to be taken out of the jail a bathtub was taken inside of the prison and filled with water. Rev. V. T. Horn, of Ozark, a Methodist, accompanied by two other ministers and a number of Christian men and women of Ozark, performed the ceremony. The scene, it is said, deeply affected Dave Walker and John Matthews, as well as all the spectators. The scoundrels are all in heaven now if Christianity be true, and decent men will hav their predilections for the other place strengthened by their going.

THE Universe, of Paris, says: "The Romanists of the United States are pledged to maintain and defend the temporal power of St. Peter, and if it be necessary to prove this by their actions, they are ready to do so." An American bishop is quoted also as saying: "As soon as (Roman) Catholics hav obtained a preponderating majority, and this will soon be the case, there will be an end to religious liberty in the United States. Our enemies say this and we agree with them." Quoting these words, the churchman adds the words of the Catholic Review, "Protestantism of whatever form has not and should not hav any rights where (Roman) Catholicism is in the ascendant," and says: "These are remarkable and even treasonable utterances, and they point to a spirit of intolerance and persecution among American Ultramontanes which only waits opportunity to result in action. Yet the Roman Catholics are governing New York city and, there is some cause for thinking hav a pretty strong 'pull' at Albany. They hav more power in New York than they hav in Rome, and more influence among our legislators than they can pretend to either in London, Paris, or Berlin. Pretty soon our only hope will be either in an Edict of Nantes or a Protestant emancipation."

THE writ in the case of the Jesuits against the Toronto Mail was returned in court in Montreal on the 25th ult., and an appearance was filed by the defendant. Mr. Lafamme, who was minister of justice under the Mackensie régime, has been retained by the defense. The first proceeding on the part of the defense was the taking of an exception to the form of the complaint. It was held that the statute under which the Jesuits were incorporated is illegal and ultra vires, inasmuch as it is beyond the power of the Quebec legislature under the British North America act to enact such legislation, and furthermore that by said incorporation the local legislature has recognized the authority of the pope, a foreign potentate, to interfere in legislation of the province, and in counter-authority to that of her majesty the queen. The exception to the form was taken for the purpose of widening the issues in the case, as by declaration the defense is said to be the issue whether the oath published by the Mail is taken by the Jesuits or not. By the exception to the form the whole question of constitutionality and the status of the Jesuits in Canada will be raised. It is thought probable that under French law and before the French court the exception may be thrown out, in which case an appeal will immediately be instituted and taken to the privy council for final decision.

The Case Against St. Mary's School.

IN THE APPELLATE COURT OF ILLINOIS.

FIRST DISTRICT, MARCH TERM, A.D. 1889.

EDWARD A. STEVENS ET AL., Appellants, vs. ST. MARY'S TRAINING SCHOOL ET AL., Appellees. — Appeal from Circuit Court, Cook County. — In Chancery.

ABSTRACT OF RECORD.

Bill filed January 12, 1889.

(2) Sets out: For that the said St. Mary's Training School, its said board of management and officers, propose and intend to procure out of the public funds in the custody of said county treasurer divers large sums of money in aid and for the use and benefit of said St. Mary's Training School, which is a school and institution under church control within the sense and meaning of Section three (3) of Article eight (VIII) of the Constitution of said State of Illinois, and said Board of Commissioners and divers members thereof, sufficient to govern its action, propose and intend to aid and abet the said church school by contracting to pay said sums of money, and by approving, quarterly, claims on that behalf and ordering the same to be paid, and said county treasurer intends to pay such approved claims—all of which proposals and intentions involve violations of the public trusts reposed in said Board of Commissioners and in said county treasurer, in that the same are contrary to the form and effect of the aforesaid constitutional provisions.

(4) II. The complainants allege and show that they are citizens and taxpayers of and in said county of Cook.

(5) IV. The complainants further allege and show that not long after the going into force of that certain act of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois entitled—An Act to provide for and to aid training schools for boys, approved June 18, 1883; in force July 1, 1883—thirty gentlemen of prominence in said county and all recognizing the paramount authority of said Roman Catholic Church in all matters involving religion did organize under the legislativ act last mentioned and pursuant to its provisions and did become duly a body corporate under the laws of the State of Illinois subject to all the valid parts of said act, which said body corporate was designated as and is the same as the aforesaid St. Mary's Training School, which said corporation as complainants allege and show was instituted and always had been maintained and is now maintained, and while it exists is to be and will be maintained as a Roman Catholic Church instrumentality. That one of the main purposes inducing the incorporation of said St. Mary's Training School and governing its whole conduct is its fitness for effectuating the religious objects of said Roman Catholic Church. That said Roman Catholic Church deems itself specially and exclusivly commissioned to teach religious truth and to administer the offices of religion. (6) That said Roman Catholic Church has an elaborate scheme of religious doctrins and religious offices which it insists upon as of an importance paramount to all else and whose acceptance and observance said Roman Catholic Church, its priests of all orders, and its earnest adherents with universal accord, strive zealously to promote. That in this effort, purpose, and design, said Roman Catholic Church, its priests and earnest adherents are combated by divers other religious sects, societies, and individuals, who respectivly adhere to beliefs, doctrins, and religious offices, all more or less diverse from those of said Roman Catholic Church, and from each other, or who altogether repudiate and contemn the beliefs, doctrins, and offices of said Roman Catholic Church in common with all the rest. (7) That to prevail in due time over its said opponents and contemners, and to substitute its own doctrins, disciplin, and offices, as much as possible, in place of those diverse from them, the said Roman Catholic Church by its organized priesthood, constituting its government, has definitly resolved upon a certain policy of effort, to be earnestly championed by its entire following, and in fact regarded by that following with substantially one accord, as obligatory upon them, which policy is to govern and control the education of the young to withdraw them as much as possible from the environment that would, without such special effort naturally encompass them, and to surround them with influences, controled as much as possible by the Roman Catholic Church. That this said policy is the chief inspiration of the incorporation and maintenance of the St. Mary's Training School. (8) That said school is intended to be, and in point of fact is, governed and controled in accordance with said policy, by priests and laymen devoted to said Roman Catholic Church, zealous to promote its design and policy, and obeying its expressed and tacit wishes without dissent.

That the intended and effectual consequence of sending a minor child to said St. Mary's Training School is to put him in training to become a Roman Catholic churchman, unless he is already such, in which latter case he is put in training to be confirmed as such. In all cases the governing purpose and intent to be effected by said St. Mary's Training School is to mold the inmates thereof as much as possible into Roman Catholic Church members. That no religious teaching other than that inculcated by said Roman Catholic Church is tolerated at said St. Mary's Training School, and all of the teachers and officers of said school are faithful members of said church, most of them being Roman Catholic ecclesiastics.

(9) V. And complainants further show that for a number of years last past the board of commissioners of said Cook county hav agreed and contracted with St. Mary's Training School for the reception into said school of divers boys sent thereto as provided by said act, for their subsistence, clothing, shelter, instruction, and training during their residence in said school and for the payment to St. Mary's Training School out of the public funds in the custody of the county treasurer of said Cook county, various graded sums per month for each of said boys so sent respectivly, by means whereof divers large sums of money hav been unwarrantably and in contempt of said constitutional provisions misappropriated. Said complainants further show that the most recent of said contracts expired by its terms on December 31, 1888. (10) Said complainants further allege and show that by a decision of the Supreme court of Illinois, on a case in all essential respects identical with the case of said St. Mary's Training School, the public and the members of the present board of commissioners of said Cook county and the governing board and officers of said St. Mary's Training School, were well advised of the illegality of such misappropriation of the public funds as these hereinbefore described and such contracts in relation thereto as are also above mentioned, yet in despite thereof the said St. Mary's Training School, its officers and management, hav presented for allowance to said board of commissioners a claim in aid of said school pursuant to said contract expiring December 31, 1888, and for the quarter at that date terminating, amounting to the sum of twenty-three hundred and thirteen dollars ($2 313), and hav applied to said board of commissioners to renew their contract on the old terms for another year.

(11) And complainants further allege and show that they hav made diligent and candid inquiry in the premises with the end of ascertaining the probability of the allowance by said county board and the payment by said county treasurer of said claim of twenty-three hundred dollars, as also the probability of the renewal of said contract, with the result that they hav been informed concurrently from various sources, and verily believe that unless enjoined therefrom said county board will affirm and order paid said claim, and renew said contract. And complainants feel warranted in averring that the probability that said claim will be approved and paid, and that said contract will be renewed on the old terms (unless enjoined), approaches to certainty as nearly as any events possibly can that are to transpire in the future and are dependent upon the volition of men. (12) That in point of fact there can be no reasonable doubt that said portended events will be actualized unless enjoined.

And the complainants further show and allege that the individual names of the persons comprising the present Board of County Commissioners are as follows: Henry C. Senne, the president of said board, Frank M. Blair, Thomas Brenan, Nelson A. Cool, John M. Dahl, George Edmonson, Henry Englehardt, Arnold P. Gilmore, Jefferson Hodgkins, Michael M. Hayes, Spencer S. Kimball, Anton Pluckebaum, Jacob Stainer, George W. Spencer, and John C. Schubert; (13) that while complainants are unable to specify which ones of said individuals will by their suffrage, as members of said county board, aid and abet the illegal intents and designs aforesaid of said St. Mary's Training School, yet the complainants from their said inquiry in that behalf, and the consequent information they hav acquired, feel warranted in averring that the members in number sufficient to approve said claim and said contract, and to order the same paid and executed, are already pledged in secret to the promoters of said claim and contract.

And complainants further allege and show that the management of said St. Mary's Training School has, from the very first, refrained as much as possible from permitting the constitution, rules, by-laws, and operation of said corporation from becoming known, that a secrecy or reticent discretion has governed the entire conduct of those interested in the management of said school, that although complainants hav made sufficient endeavor they hav been unable to learn the rules, organic and administrativ that order the conduct of said school, or whether such rules exist at all. (14) And complainants allege and show that this singular reticence is observed by design, and for the reason that the real rules by which said school is organized and administered could not be expressed with any definitness without manifesting the fact and truth that said St. Mary's Training School has the character of a purely Roman Catholic Church institution—and so it will appear if its promoters and managers shall truthfully discover said rules in answer to this bill of complaint.

And the complainants further allege and show that the principal officers of said St. Mary's Training School are as follows: The president, James T. Cunningham; the vice-president, Peter Conlan, and the joint secretary and treasurer, Bernard P. Murray, all three of whom are made parties defendant to this bill of complaint as such officers.

(15) VI. Yet, nevertheless, in the hope that said St. Mary's Training School may appear in the eyes of non-Catholics as a non-sectarian institution, and for the purpose of obtaining in its aid payments out of the public funds, the promoters of said St. Mary's Training School pretend and claim that it has not a church or sectarian character, and point out that there is nothing in its charter that stamps it as such, and represent that its Roman Catholic aspect is accidental and not designed or essential—that it is a charity of a very meritorious kind and worthy of the applause of all right-feeling men.

But the complainants allege and charge that while in the charter of said St. Mary's Training School there is nothing that marks it out as a church institution they deny that its Roman Catholic aspect is accidental or undesigned, and say that the charge and control of said institution has been from the first, and is intended to be, throughout retained sedulously in the care of those who hav special favor for the Roman Catholic Church and its religious interests, and (16) who will allow the wishes of said church to govern their conduct in reference to said school; that there are great numbers of citizens and tax payers who on the claim being established that said St. Mary's Training School is a Roman Catholic Church instrumentality would deny with much vigor its merit and worth as a charity.

Wherefore the complainants pray the interposition of the equitable jurisdiction of this court, to the end that the defendants, being personally by summons duly made subject to the jurisdiction of this court, may upon their several and respectiv corporal oaths full, true, direct, and perfect answers make to all and singular the matters hereinbefore stated and charged, not only as to the best of their respectiv knowledge and remembrance, but also as to the best of their several and respectiv information, hearsay, and belief; (17) and that upon the final hearing hereof all contracts of said St. Mary's Training School with reference to the payment to it out of any of the public funds of said county, of any claim for aid or compensation for the subsistence, shelter, clothing, care, or instruction of any of its wards or inmates, and especially the contract aforesaid mentioned as expiring December 31, 1888, may be decreed and adjudged wholly void and of no binding effect.

And that the defendants may be forever enjoined and restrained as follows, to wit:

(18) That the said St. Mary's Training School, its managers, officers and agents, be enjoined and restrained from setting up or prosecuting against the county of Cook any claim for aid or for compensation for the subsistence, shelter, clothing, care or instruction of any of its wards or inmates, and from making any contract with said county or any of the administrators of its public affairs with reference to such aid or compensation, and that the said board of commissioners of Cook county and its individual members, and all its agents be enjoined and restrained from appointing or ordering paid any such claim for aid or for compensation, and from making any contract with reference to the same, and from doing anything as the administrators of the public affairs of the county of Cook to promote or abet the payment of any such aid or compensation, or to promote the making of any such contract. And the said George R. Davis, as county treasurer of said Cook county, be enjoined and restrained from paying out of any public funds in his custody any sum of money whatever on any claim of said St. Mary's Training School or for its aid or for compensation to it for subsistence, shelter, clothing, care or instruction of any of its wards or inmates.

(19) And that said complainants may hav such other and further relief in the premises as the nature of their case shall require, and to your Honor shall seem meet.

And that the injunctions hereinbefore prayed for on final hearing, may be at once ordered by the court pending this suit or until the further order of this court.

And that the usual statutory writ of summons in such cases be issued against the following named defendants, to wit:

St. Mary's Training School, James T. Cunningham, president; Peter Conlan, vice-president; Bernard P. Murray, secretary and treasurer; Henry C. Senne, Frank M. Blair, Thomas Brennan, Nelson A. Cool, John M. Dahl, George Edmonson, Henry Engelhardt, Arnold P. Gillmore, Jefferson Hodgkins, Michael M. Hayes, Spencer S. Kimball, Anton Pluckebaum, Jacob Stainer, George W. Spencer, John C. Schubert, the board of commissioners of Cook county in the State of Illinois, and George R. Davis, county treasurer of said Cook county.

And the complainants will ever pray, etc.

(20) Affidavit to bill. (21) Order for injunction. (23) Injunction bond. (29) Appearance of defendants by Smith & Pence. (30) Demurrer by all defendants. (32) Final order sustaining demurrer, dissolving injunction, and decree for costs. Appeal prayed and allowed on condition of bond, etc. (34) Appeal bond.

(38) ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

I. That said Circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrer of the defendants and appellees.

II. That said Circuit court erred in not overruling said demurrer of the defendants and appellees.

III. That said Circuit court erred in dissolving the temporary injunction ordered in this case in said Circuit court.

IV. That said Circuit court erred in dismissing the bill of complaint of said complainants and appellants.

V. That said Circuit court erred in rendering a decree for costs against these complainants and appellants.

FRANCIS C. RUSSELL,
Solr. and of Counsel for Appellants.

BRIEF AND ARGUMENT FOR APPELLANTS.

This is a suit in chancery for an injunction, brought in the court below to restrain the defendant, St. Mary's Training School and its management, the Board of Commissioners of Cook county and its members, and the county treasurer of said county from causing the public funds to be paid to said St. Mary's Training School, on the ground that the said St. Mary's Training School is for sectarian purposes, and under church control.

A temporary injunction was granted, whereupon the defendants demurred to the bill of complainant, and on the hearing of the cause upon said demurrer, the court below held that said bill showed no equity, dissolved the temporary injunction and dismissed the bill.

I.

The constitution of Illinois, its supreme law, explicitly and unqualifiedly forbids the appropriation or payment of any portion of any public funds to any school or institution controled by any church, or for any sectarian purposes in the following words, viz:

"Neither the General Assembly, nor any county, city, town, township, school district, or other public corporations, shall ever make any appropriation or pay from any public fund whatever, anything in aid of any church or sectarian purpose, or to help support or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other literary or scientific institution controled by any church or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of land, money, or other personal property, ever be made by this state or any such public corporation, to any church, or for any sectarian purpose.

Const., Sec. 3; Art. 8.
County of Cook v. Chicago Industrial School for girls. 125 Ill., 540.

This constitutional provision needs no legislation in its aid. It executes itself and operates at once to forbid and nullify all acts and efforts that are inconsistent with its unqualified and unmistakable precepts. It needs no interpretation or construction, for there is no obscurity in its import, and being the supreme law, it overbears all statutes that may be enacted, and all municipal action inconsistent with it. Nor does it need to be harmonized with any statutes, for there are none existing that in anywise, in themselvs, contravene any part of its prohibitions. The act under which the St. Mary's Training School was organized, and its amendments, are in nowise contradictory of said constitutional provision. Any case like the present one givs, not an occasion for interpretation or construction, but for application only. The doubt or question, if any, arises from uncertainty as to the facts, not from the phraseology or language of either the constitution or statute, whether separately or in combination.

II.

The bill of complaint in this cause alleges: That St. Mary's Training School is a Roman Catholic Church instrumentality. (Rec., 5, 14.)

That it was organized and is maintained for the promotion of the objects of said church. (Rec., 7, 8, 15, 16.)

That it is governed and controled by said church. (Rec., 7, 8–15, 16.)

That Catholicism is taught at said school exclusivly. (Rec., 8.)

That up to the date of filing of said bill for years payments hav been made to said school periodically out of the public funds of Cook county, in aid of said school, and contracts therefor hav been made by the County Board year by year. (Rec., 9.)

That at the time of the filing of said bill, a claim for payment in aid of said school of $2,313, and the making of a new contract were being prosecuted before the County Board. (Rec., 10.)

That in default of injunction, immediate success in both of said objects was morally certain, in which case the amount of said claim would be paid by the County Treasurer. (Rec., 11, 12.)

III.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ARE TRUSTEES IN RESPECT TO THE FUNCTIONS WHICH THEY EXERCISE.

High on Injunctions, 2d Ed., Secs. 1236, 1237 and 1238, and cases cited.
Schumm v. Seymour, 9 C. E. Green, 143
Sherlock v. Village of Winnetka, 59 Ill., 398.
Spence Eq. Jur., 32–35.

IV.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS MAY BE ENJOINED WHENEVER IT BECOMES NECESSARY TO PREVENT THEM FROM BETRAYING THE PUBLIC TRUSTS CONFIDED TO THEM TO THE INJURY OF PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS.

High on Injunctions, 2d Ed., Secs. 1,236 et seq., and cases cited.
Dillon on Mun. Corp., 2d Ed., Secs. 727, 734–736.
Perry v. Kinnear, 42 Ill., 160.
Beauchamp v. Kankakee Co., 45 Ill., 276
Sherlock v. Village of Winnetka, 59 Ill., 398.
Chestnutwood v. Hood, 68 Ill., 132.
Springfield v. Bishop, 88 Ill., 302
Fitzgerald v. Harms, 92 Ill., 372.
Board of Ed. of Galesburg v. Arnold, 112 Ill., 11.
Brown v. Concord, 56 N. H., 375.
English v. Smock, 34 Ind., 115.
Smitt v. Appleton, 19 Wis., 468.

V.

THE ILLEGAL APPROPRIATION OF PUBLIC FUNDS AS WELL AS THE INCURRING OF AN ILLEGAL DEBT OR LIABILITY BY A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION MAY BE ENJOINED AT THE INSTANCE OF EVERY TAXPAYER.

High on Injunctions, §§ 1236 et seq., and cases cited.
Perry v. Kinnear, 42 Ill., 160.
Beauchamp v. Kankakee Co., 45 Ill., 274.
Chestnutwood v. Hood, 68 Ill., 132.
Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill., 626
Wright v. Bishop, 88 Ill., 302.
Board of Education of Galesburg v. Arnold, 112 Ill., 11.

To recapitulate: The County Board of Cook County and the County Treasurer at the time of the filing of this bill had been pursuing for years an established custom of paying and contracting to pay St. Mary's Training School, a school under church control and for church purposes, large sums of money out of the public funds in aid of said school, and was about to renew a contract of the sort in view, and about to pay a large instalment of money, which payment, as well as the making of said contract, was morally certain to be done unless enjoined, which actions and everything which could contribute to promote or effect them were positivly forbidden by the constitution—utterly illegal and void, and violations of the trusts confided in the county board—illegal in the managers of said school to prosecute—illegal in the county board to allow, and illegal in the County Treasurer to pay. The appellants, as taxpayers, prompted principally it would appear by a patriotic interest for the public good, but also by reason of the special injury resulting to them as taxpayers, filed this bill to prevent the illegal diversion of the public funds. Their procedure was according to the doctrin laid down in the text-books, and numerous closely parallel cases in our own state, and yet their complaint has been adjudged wanting in equity.

It is said that an injunction in this case would constrain the discretion vested in the county board. The plain answer to this claim is that the County Board has no discretion in the premises. That the Board will act illegally if not enjoined is evidenced by their past and long-continued misconduct, and their attitude in the present litigation is in effect admitted by the demurrer interposed by them. Now it is a legal absurdity to hold that any person or public corporation are vested with any discretion as to whether or not they shall act illegally.

Does such a plain legal proposition as this need any argument?

To speak of this case strictly: How can it be contended that the county board are given any discretion in respect to obeying the law? The board depends upon the law for its very existence. Its sole cause of being is grounded in the law. There is no motiv whatever for it to exist unless for its usefulness in subserving the purposes of the law. To say that it may obey the law according to its discretion is but to say that if it decides such obedience to be indiscreet, it may disobey, and to say that it must decide to obey is only to say that it has no discretion in the matter. Can anything be clearer than this? Discretion is the exercise of a choice between alternativs, and where there is no right to reject one of the alternativs, there is no discretion. Here the only alternativs are either to obey the law or to disobey it, and the board must either obey or its action is wholly unlawful.

One thing alone is apt to obscure the certainty of our contention. Before any item of conduct can be governed in accordance with law, its character as to legality or illegality must be ascertained. We must find out what is lawful and what unlawful in the premises in order to follow the lawful course. Hence a certain confusion of thought may take place in assimilating the act of inspection with the exercise of discretion. But these are entirely distinct. We exercise no choice whatever when we seek to learn the character of what is proposed. But it is of the essence of discretion to make a choice. In the one case our inquiry is: What is this proposed action? In the other we must be supposed to hav ascertained the character of the action, and to ask ourselvs: Shall it be done?

One is a pure matter of intellectual comprehension, the other is principally a matter of expediency and choice.

This case stands without involving any matter of fact. By the demurrer the facts are all admitted; and this court must either say that the court below erred, or else on the other hand, that the defendants were pursuing a lawful course, that the appellants hav mistaken their remedy, and that a positiv unmistakable prohibition of the constitution is utterly without remedy, and may be treated with contempt.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANCIS C. RUSSELL,
Solr. of and Counsel for Appellants.

Both Editors Refuse to Travel to the Holy Land.

From San Francisco Freethought.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is working the business end of a boom, the object of which is to land the undersigned in a far distant country. Here is a letter published in the last issue of that paper received up to date.

[G. E. M. here reprints the letters which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER from Messrs. Terrill, Doebler, and Young, and Mrs. Denton.]

It is quite safe to liken my feeble attempts at amusing the public to the uproariously solemn mirth of the late Mr. Ward, since that writer is dead, but I am not very sure of political quietude during the next year. If the piety of our administration continues to increase as it has been doing since inauguration day, the country is likely to be surprised by the spectacle of several Washington politicians ascending into heaven in a pair of Postmaster-General Wanamaker's ready-made pants. In such event I should like to be present.

Leaving out the unmerited praise contained in these letters, I most heartily thank the writers for the compliment they pay me in thinking that my correspondence from abroad would be worthy the large outlay of money involved. Published letters from the Old World are always read with interest, but I doubt if mine would hav the value set upon them. Besides, my absence would call Mr. Putnam from the field to the sedentary life of an editor, printer, and proof-reader, relieved only by such outdoor work as is included in the function of porter and errand boy. In the lecture field Mr. Putnam earns not far from $100 per month, which he devotes—I might say sacrifices—to the publication of Freethought. I am not sanguin enough to suppose that my letters from abroad would be worth that sum to this paper or any other. Indeed, I do not think they would be of any greater help to the paper or the cause, if as much, than are Mr. Putnam's "News and Notes" from the places he visits in this country. Add to these the work he is doing as a lecturer, which he could not do as an editor, and the balance is largely in favor of the present writer letting well enough alone, and standing by the Freethought ship as long as the united efforts of both officers at the pumps can keep her afloat. My first reference to a trip to Palestine was not made with the expectation that anything practical would come of it. Since it has now taken that aspect I must point the movers to the above obstacles, which seem to me insurmountable. Nothing, however, can diminish my gratitude to the Longmont friends and to the others who hav seconded their motion, or for equally flattering reasons opposed it.

G. E. M.

Dr. Monroe in the Ironclad Age.

There is a movement on foot, albeit a faint and feeble one, to get a brace of Infidel editors out of the country that has somewhat the appearance of a conspiracy. There is no direct charge made against either of them and why the Infidels of the United States of America should want them Danmarked is hard to conjecture. G. Washington Macdonald of the 'Frisco Freethought is one of the selected martyrs and exiles, and as he has a great deal stronger backing than his yoke-fellow culprit and victim, the presumption is that his offenses, whatever they be, are correspondingly more heinous than those of his less conspicuous collaborator. G. Washington M. once wrote a book entitled, "New England and the People up 'Thar.'" He admits that an edition of near one hundred copies of that work has been sold since its first appearance in 1879. A copy of this book lies near where this is written, and the writer views it regretfully for the reason that there are so many more on a shelf near by. Having read it when it first appeared and being enthused by its drollery and quaint style the writer hereof was carried off his feet (this is hoss talk) and ordered a job lot, seeing no reason why the demure and staid passengers on his craft might not relish and be allowed a little dry humor after their return from church on Lord's day. But the unappreciativ crowd had been so long fed upon a hark-from-the-tombs-a-doleful-sound literature that they seemed to dread anything lively. Hence this stock of ten-cent New Englands. Hence this stuck merchant. Hence these tears.

But this infamous scheme to exile and probably drown a brace of journalists, who are guilty of no offense in the world except a failure to say their prayers, needs an explanation. In the subjoined paragraph, taken from Freethought of April 20th, G. Washington M. fails entirely to state that he himself has been "innominated" for an ocean voyage, and for fish-bait at the bottom of the briny. Says he:

A correspondent of the Ironclad Age has placed the editor, Dr. Monroe, in nomination for a journey around the world, and especially to the Holy Land, and I arise to second the motion. I would further suggest that the United States consulate to Palestine is, so far as I know, as yet unfilled. Dr. Monroe is a citizen of Indianapolis, presumably personally acquainted with President Harrison, and he is also a deep student of Bible history, which fact should recommend him to the favor of the administration. I do not believe there is any good reason why Dr. Monroe should not represent this country in the Holy Land. His expenses, it is understood, would be paid by the government, and a small salary is attached to the office. The entrance of the editor of the Ironclad Age into Jerusalem, mounted after the fashion of his distinguished predecessor, and bearing his portfolio in one hand and a quart bottle of the Blood Feeder in the other, would be, I conceive, rather more triumphal than any other entrance known to history. It would also be calculated to evoke the enthusiasm of the nativs, and to win their respect for American institutions.

How G. Washington M. found out that the Blood Feeder has to be taken in a prohibited solvent, a fact that has been carefully concealed from Prohibition communities, is not known. The writer is somewhat acquainted with the president, used to work hard to hav him elected governor once in a while, and is now a member of the G. A. R. post to which he belongs; but for all this the president will never send him as commissioner to the old nor new Jerusalem—for the reason that he is afraid of water and won't go.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary. - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 314 W. Madison st., Chicago.

Removal.

The work of the Union absolutely necessitates a public office, so that the headquarters of the American Secular Union are now located at the Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1. Cut out this address.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

Mrs. M. J. Olds, McMinnville, Ore.	$45 00
Nick B. Mackenzie, Chico, Cal.	10 00
Fayette County, Ia., Secular Union	10 00
Minneapolis Secular Union (charter fee)	5 00
S. Brewer, Ithaca, N. Y.	5 00
N. S. Johnson, Sioux Falls, S. D.	5 00
Mrs. Theresa Rivers, Chicago, Ill.	1 00

BRUNO MONUMENT FUND.

Nick B. Mackenzie, Chico, Cal.	$5 00
W. S. Ring, Anoka, Minn.	1 00
Chess Brothers, Monravia, Cal.	1 00

As a slight recognition of her ceaseless labors for Liberalism and generous devotion to the Union, Mrs. M. J. Olds was placed on the list of vice-presidents by the last Congress. Herself and venerable partner, both life members, are heart and soul in the work, and though others may become indifferent through discouragement or lack of zeal, the hearts of the Olds's are ever young and loyal to justice and the cause of mental emancipation. Mrs. Olds makes it her business to scatter Secular literature throughout the territories, and has taken time by the forelock in spreading the light of the gospel of "Impartial Taxation," so that these territories or, I should say, newly admitted states, will see to the taxing of church property in the constitution they are about to adopt. It is such people and such efforts which mold public opinion, direct the destinies of states, and make nations free. A few more such noble women and slavery of the mind or injustice in the law would soon disappear.

The Union at McMinnville pledged $20, $5 of which was forwarded some time ago, and $1 each should hav been credited to Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Booth, and the rest to the Olds family. Mrs. Olds agreed to raise the amount to $50, and as some are tardy she promptly sends her check to fulfill her pledge.

Nick B. Mackenzie proudly bears our banner aloft, and furnishes some of the ammunition to sweep from the state the injustice of the church. He is a gallant soldier of the Secular forces, and, like most of his California compeers, rejoices in an opportunity to upbuild humanity. He sees the necessity for the American Secular Union, believes in sustaining it, and presents a splendid example to others. In honoring the illustrious dead he crowns Time's retribution which next month will partially fulfill by the monument to Bruno at Rome.

Fayette county, Ia., Secular Union is a unique organization and is a marvel in Secular and Liberal propaganda. By organization this society has had more lectures in different parts of the country and scattered more Secular literature than any county, I think, in the United States. Lecturers are taken by the friends from town to town, and thus an economical arrangement is made for the advancement of practical good which only organization can effect. William Redfield is now a familiar name to the most of Liberal workers, and he, together with Alexander Rich and Daniel Davis, make failure a matter of difficulty. Some one ought to write in detail their practical mode of work as a model for all communities where our forces are not concentrated. Mrs. Freeman has just given them a specimen of her inspiring eloquence and has aroused them to enthusiasm. Hence the donation. Their annual meeting re-elected all the old officers but one—president, Daniel Davis; vice-president, Thomas Beecher; recording secretary, E. D. Godfrey; corresponding secretary, Emery Frost; treasurer, William Redfield; advisory committee, James K. Smith, Alexander Risk, Tom Barnes.

The Minneapolis Secular society has had an unfortunate experience with a secretary, and their charter fee, which was sent long ago, never came to hand. They hav got the right man in the right place now. Brother Lownd is a stirring, self-sacrificing friend of Secularism. In fact, there is talk of their inviting the next congress to Minneapolis. That would be a grand record for a young society.

N. S. Johnson, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, is the author of the Danish volume, "Er Bebelen Gud Ord," which has received most flattering notices from those capable of passing upon its merits. Andrew Jacobson, who published the Bible Contradictions, says of it:

OMAHA, NEB.

The book is a splendid eye-opener for truth seekers. . . . It shows the Bible in its true colors. You hav done in the matter a most noble work for the enlightenment of your country-people, and those who wish to know the truth and can read the Norwegian and Danish languages, . . . that they might see how grossly they are deceived by priestcraft. It is a book that not one of all the priests in Christendom can refute, although they may be disposed to exhibit their ability to defame and slander it, . . . their only method practicable for deceiving those behind the veil. All who examin your book critically will come to the conclusion that God never intended any man to write the Bible. . . . I do sincerely recommend your book to all those who would investigate and see for themselvs. . . .

ANDREW JACOBSON.

Mrs. Rivers was one of the old members of our society whose residence in La Grange for some years was to be regretted, but Mr. Rivers has moved back to Chicago. We shall be benefited by their presence.

We are also glad to see that the pledge to the Bruno fund is now fulfilled.

POLITICAL TREACHERY.

While en route to St. Louis I stopped a day at our state capital, and interviewed several members of the legislature, among whom was a party having in his possession for several weeks my bill demanding the taxation of church property in the state of Illinois. Anticipating a hearing before a committee of that body after our bill should be presented, I had prepared a special argument, and gone to some expense to locate by streets the exempted property in this city. I did not ask that any member should commit himself to the bill in its preliminary stage, but they should demand us a hearing, and a delegation of the American Secular Union, the Turner Societies, and other organizations would present their reasons.

On receiving the most positiv assurance that it would be done, and that the only reason the matter had thus far been delayed was on account of the then pending election, I departed from Springfield.

Since that time I hav written the Hon. (?) Q. J. Chott, a pretended Liberal Bohemian, through whose perfidy and lying the measure has been delayed beyond any hope of work till the next legislature.

Not only hav they not presented the bill to exempt church property, but hav presented a bill to further extend this infamous injustice, and that is likely to pass at the behest of the papal contingent.

This is a measure to allow religious corporations to purchase and hold not exceeding twenty acres free from taxation, which is an extension of the present legal privilege of ten acres (State Title Corporations, § 42). Our constitution allows (art. ix, § 3) the legislature to exempt such property from taxation and our revenue laws hav provided for such exemption, but the legislature may change this.

Our esteemed friend and distinguished jurist, Judge Levi North, of Kewanee, Ill., in correspondence on this matter writes:

No "vested right" of exemption now exists. And it will be noticed that the present statute allows exemption from taxation, and not from assessments, such as street and sidewalk improvements (see a decision by Judge Tunnicliff, Sup. Court Reports).

Now, it is plain that if legislature may exempt religious corporations from taxation, it may make that exemption perpetual, and it seems to me this is the end and aim of this new move. They propose to checkmate the move for taxing the property of these corporations in this indirect manner.

I could comment on the bill better if I had it before me.

You will find in our court reports the case of the Northwestern University against the County Treasurer of Cook County, which arose out of an exemption contained in the charter of the real estate of the university from taxation. The court held that the property could not be taxed. The university had a vested right to escape taxation. I think the case showed that the property in question was situated in the city of Chicago. I suppose, the right once vested in any church to be free from taxation, it would be perpetual.

I take this to be a scheme of probably Jesuit origin to allow large properties to be bought up and held for revenue purposes, as Trinity church of New York is, without taxation, the churches getting all the more rent because of the exemption. I do not know that the bill provides:

1. For requiring the land to be in one body.
2. That it makes any distinction between city and farm property as to amount.
3. Whether it makes any distinction between property now held or that to be acquired in future. It may and probably would apply to present property, such as the Methodist Church Block, corner of Washington and Clark streets, Chicago. There is room for a good many niggers in this fence.

I am much pressed for time, but hav written to Mr. Hurst, our Democratic member from R. Island county, to fight the bill and to send me a copy. Our senator is a fool, and I can't say anything to him. Can't you get hold of some of your Chicago members and stir them up. I know that but little good goes from Cook county to the legislature, and nearly all is purchasable and afraid of the howly pope.

I know no paper through which I can talk, as they are cowards. Yours truly, LEVI NORTH.

In reference to the Methodist Church Block property, I will state that now they pay a ground-rent tax, and the rest of the building is free from all other taxation as a sort of compromise.

LECTURE.

"Neither dead or speechless," must hav been the verdict of the strangers who attended the lecture under the auspices of the Secular Union last Sunday afternoon. At the conclusion of the opening exercises, which consisted in part of a well-rendered selection by the volunteer chorus, the president introduced the lecturer of the evening, Mr. Gruber, who prefaced his address by a somewhat lengthy and altogether unnecessary apology, for a very well composed and exceedingly interesting paper on the "Co-relation of Materialism and Idealism." The speaker's aim was to call attention to the ideal side of Materialism—to show that a Materialist is not compelled, as is often falsely charged, to giv up all lofty ideals and to grovel in the dust, but rather that it is only in the soil of Materialism that true ideals can take root.

The lecturer succeeded in vindicating Materialism from the charges of its opponents, and showing that the Materialist's position is generally misunderstood. At the close of the lecture, the usual debate ensued, which took a wide range, vindicating beyond the shadow of a doubt the absolute freedom of thought and expression so dear to the heart of every true Secularist.

The speaker sustained his part throughout with an admirable combination of modesty and sang froid.

SECULAR SIFTINGS.

On Saturday evening last the members and friends of the Secular Union met at the Princess Opera House, the occasion being a May party and dance given by our indefatigable friend and co-worker, Mr. Barr. It is unnecessary to state that the affair was a complete success. It was unanimously voted one of the most enjoyable parties that the Union has given this season. Miss Westcott sustained the somewhat exigeante role of "queen of the May" with grace and dignity, and the dance round the May pole was pronounced by numerous delighted spectators a most pleasing and artistic performance. All the ladies who took part in it were attired in white, with handsome sashes of red, white, or blue, which latter decorations were shared by their partners. At the conclusion of the august coronation ceremonies, the insignia of royalty were discarded, and nearly all present were soon threading the mazes of "the light fantastic," which exercise, no doubt to the unspeakable horror of the orthodox portion of the community, was kept up till the "wee sma' hours." The proceedings on the holy Sabbath, however, were not marred by anything calculated to excite the antagonism of the most ardent Prohibitionist, as the refreshments dispensed comprised nothing of a more intoxicating nature than ice-cream and lemonade, which, it is needless to add, were well patronized.

Mr. Barr, who kindly undertook the management of the affair from beginning to end, is justly entitled to no small amount of credit. May he liv to conduct many May parties.

"So say all of us." E. A. STEVENS, Sec. A. S. U.

The Bruno Statue at Rome.

The letters, papers, and large colored placards received from Rome show that the unveiling of the statue of Bruno on the 9th of June next, on the very place of his execution, Feb. 17, 1600, will be a grand event in the history of Rome, Italy, Europe, and the world. There is reason to believe that it will be the landmark of the extinguishment of even the possibility of the return of papal temporal power in Rome, and of the subsidence of clerical influence in Italy, Europe, and, indeed, everywhere.

We regret extremely, therefore, to say that no one of the American committee can arrange his affairs so as to be in Rome and to take part in that final triumph. This will be a matter of great regret also to the Roman committee. We shall, however, use every endeavor to hav Judge Stallo present, with as many Americans, who are in Europe, as possible. The funds which hav been sent in to aid the attendance of some of our committee hav been added to the fund itself, and, thus increased, we gladly announce that we hav already $50 over the $1,000 promised, as the following account shows. We expect to make another remittance during the coming week, and a final one on the 24th instant, which is the last day funds can leave here and be in Rome in time. The names and money to be sent must reach us on or before the morning of that day. As soon as possible thereafter, we will make a final report. Let us all rejoice that a glorious success crowns the work!

American Committee { R. G. INGERSOLL. / T. B. WAKEMAN. / D. G. THOMPSON. / THOMAS DAVIDSON.

Send to T. B. Wakeman, Treasurer and Secretary, 93 Nassau street, New York city.

THE ACCOUNT.

O. Child, Moline, Ill.	$25 00
J. S. Shepard, Vineland, N. J.	5 00
Ethan Allen Gates, Del Norte, Cal.	5 00
Julius Fehr, Hoboken, N. J.	5 00
C. B. Waite, Chicago, Ill.	5 00
Wm Smith, Geneva, N. Y.	5 00
W. L. Ryder, Monticello, N. Y.	5 00
Jerome Lynch, Sandford, Fla.	1 00
Mrs. Nannie R. Lynch, Sandford, Fla.	1 00
B. G. Morrison, Warren, Pa.	1 00
B. F. Morris, " "	1 00
W. H. Grow, Red Wing, Minn.	2 00
B. Sugenheimer, Winsboro, S. C.	2 00
Charles Lownd, Minneapolis, Minn.	1 00
John Corbett, " "	1 00
S. Brewer, Utica, N. Y.	2 00
Alex. McV. Miller, Anderson, W. Va.	1 00
J. H. Steward, Brownsdale, Minn.	1 00
George N. Hill, Boston, Mass.	1 00
Colin G. Mackenzie, New York city	1 00

H. L. Smith, Conveant, O.		1 00
Wm. Hunter, Oregon, through Geo. E. Macdonald, editor of Freethought, San Francisco, Cal.		1 00
F. D. Sheldon, Salem, Ia.		1 00
R. Baker, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.		1 00
Simon F. Cummings, New York city		1 00
C. F. W. Marguardt, Norfolk, Neb.		1 00
W. J. Haldeman, Pinegrove, Pa.		1 00
John Mahara, Charles City, Ia.		1 00
L. DeWitt Griswold, Elmira, N. Y.		1 00
Thos. Balkwill, Port Huron, Mich.		1 00
R. M. Stender, St. Louis, Mo.		1 00
N. D. Burnham, Lowell, Mass.		1 00
John Steves, Durand, Ill.		1 00
Leonard Walters, Mt. Jackson, Va.	(per T. S.)	3 00
A. W. Thompson, Newcastle, Pa.	"	2 00
George S. Halterman, Parowan City, Utah	"	1 00
J. V. Stafford, Canyon Ferry, Mont.	"	1 00
Clemens Berylson, Purdy Sta., N. Y.	"	1 00
Christ Alt, New Albany, Ind.	"	1 00
George Svenson, Kalana, W. T.	"	1 00
N. G. Knox, Havana, N. Y.	"	1 00
A. Trouty, Chicago, Ill.	"	2 00
Jno. Rhody, Coalport, Pa.	"	1 00
Irving R. Zimmerman Princetown, Minn.	"	2 00
Agnosticus, New York city	"	5 00
N. D. Goodell, Sacramento, Cal.	"	5 00
J. Henry Schroedet, Araga	"	75
J. B. Elliott, Philadelphia, Pa.	"	1 00
A. F. Knight, Gt. Valley, N. Y.	"	1 00
A. Olcese, Hornitas, Cal.	"	1 00
J. W. Butcher, Eldorado, Col.	"	1 00
Chas. Dunn, Owen Sound, Ont.	"	1 00
A Friend	"	10 00
John Collies, Athens, Tex.	"	1 00
Total		$126 75
Heretofore received and acknowledged on the second $500 (TRUTH SEEKER, May 4th)		$425 75
Total		$552 50

The credit of $5, in list of May 4th, to L. Geiger, should hav been to John Wolf, Hudson, N. Y.

E. Livezey will find his $2 in the same paper.

T. B. W.

Piling Pelion on Ossa—But Will It Stop the Lies?

A PREACHER'S FALSE WITNESS.

WORCESTER, MASS., April 15th.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL, Dear Sir: The Methodist Episcopal conference is now being held in this city, and one of the visiting clergymen, J. O. Peck by name, made the following statement before a packed house yesterday, the 14th: "You don't hear Bob Ingersoll saying anything the past two years about the mistakes of Moses, and why? Because one of his daughters has been converted and joined the church. and his wife begs him not to say anything against the religion their child thinks so much of." Now we think this a downright lie, but hav not the proof at hand. I write this to ask you if you will furnish us with such proof, that it may be published in the city papers, as otherwise thousands may never know the truth. Hoping that you may always be proven in the right, I remain, Yours for Freethought, MRS. W. B. CLARK.

No. 45 Park street.

COLONEL INGERSOLL'S REPLY.

NEW YORK, April 16, 1889.

MRS. W. B. CLARK, My Dear Madam: There is no truth in the report that one of my daughters has joined a church, or that my wife has ever objected to my saying anything against what is known as orthodox religion. Neither of my daughters is a member of any church. The statement of the Rev. J. O. Peck is without the slightest foundation. He probably told what was told him, supposing what he said to be true, but he was entirely mistaken.

Yours always, R. G. INGERSOLL.

AN INTERVIEW WITH MISS EVA INGERSOLL.

From the New York World of April 28, 1889.

"Yes, Miss Ingersoll is in," and the empire-coated butler led the way to the drawing-room in the great iconoclast's stately home at No. 400 Fifth avenue. The room, with its book-lined walls, bits of colored porcelain and carved silver—artists' dreams in marble and on canvas—was beautiful enough, but the slim, sweet, timid creature, in her silver-gray dress, was radiant. She might hav been taken for a Quaker maiden, or a member of some new order of nuns, but for the daughter of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll—that alleged monster, commonly denounced from every pulpit, and by preachers in every tongue and creed—never!

But there sat Miss Eva Ingersoll in a little slipper chair, beaming in the loveliness of her youth and beauty, and this is what she had to say regarding the Rev. Dr. Peck's address before the general conference of the Southern New England Methodist societies:

"That is about the fifth time I hav joined the church, in print, and it is so ridiculous, because neither my sister nor myself has ever attended service. Once Mr. Carnegie invited us to hear Henry Ward Beecher. It was in the evening, and the address he delivered was the only one we hav ever heard. Another time we went to Dr. Collyer's church to attend a friend's wedding, and that is the extent of our knowledge of churches."

"But why havn't you gone out of curiosity?"

"Well, I don't know. I never had any desire, somehow. I hav been told that the music might be entertaining, but I'm sure that it can't compare with operatic music, and we go to some opera or concert three or four nights in a week. I hav read a great many sermons, but never was sufficiently pleased or interested to care to hear one. Our parents are not responsible for our attitude. Indeed, sister and I are more radical than they. Father has always told us that he wanted us to realize the greatest happiness in life, and advised us to examin for ourselvs and to act in accordance with our convictions. We hav had books of all kinds and all sorts, and friends to exchange ideas with. Father has read with us, and together we hav looked up references. localities, and proofs, but the more we know about Christianity the less admiration we hav for it.

"Just now we are studying the 'History of the Inquisition,' and can't bear to think of church or creeds. My grandfather, you know, was a Congregational minister, but most of our relativs hav been extremely Liberal. They all believed in religion, and so do we, but neither they nor we are Christians. This distinction often amuses the people we meet for the first time, and they in turn amuse us by almost demanding an explanation,"

As she talked, her beautiful hands were playfully tying the long, silky ears of a magnificent hunting dog across his face.

"Rust is one of the family. We've had him five years. His temper is absolutely perfect. They tell us we hav spoiled him, and perhaps that is a fact, but father is too kind-hearted to be a hunter. He wouldn't kill a bird or see one killed for pleasure, and that's why Rust has been allowed to liv in the family and get spoiled."

Standing against her knee, with his face in her lap and the perfect golden brown of his coat contrasting with the delicate silver gray of her dress, the two were a picture for a Landseer.

"Did I ever pray? Never. We were never taught prayers as children, but when old enough to reason, mother selected the prayers that are considered most beautiful and touching, and told us, as she always did in making selections of poetry and prose, to read them carefully and learn the ones that pleased us. None pleased me, especially, and I didn't commit any of them to memory. I could not see the wisdom of praying for or against things I knew were beyond human influence.

"And I never prized a Bible, as most girls do, not even in silver or ivory covers. I don't like the book because there are too many improbable and impossible things in it, and worse than that, it abounds in cruelties.

"We doubtless seem horrible people to you believers, but we are very happy together, and if my parents are as odious as some people fancy them, they must still hav many very redeeming qualities of mind and heart, because it is a tax for them to make new friends, the old ones are so numerous and so exacting in their affection. In all my life I hav never heard a cross word spoken by my parents, either to one or the other, or to my sister or myself.

"School? We never went to school a day in our lives. Mother preferred to hav us trained at home under her own supervision, and father made out the course of study and allowed us to make optional whatever we liked. We are stupid enough, but it is all our own fault."

The modesty of Miss Ingersoll did not permit her to state that she is a close student and takes great pride in her lessons. Every day she learns a lesson from a French, German, and vocal teacher, finds time for several hours of practice, and personally cares for her wardrobe, not only designing, but actually making all her own dresses. Believing that much valuable time is spent in a miscellaneous toilet, each daughter has her own peculiar style. Miss Ingersoll always has two dresses—a silver-gray cashmere made with a round waist laid with cross plaits, between which is set a vest or "V" of soft white silk. About the neck and sleeves is a finish of gray ribbon, and the straight skirts are simply stitched. A long gray cloak, and a gray hat, with a gray silk veil and gray gloves, complete the toilet in which she walks, visits, drives, goes to afternoon entertainments, studies, and receives morning callers. Her evening dress is made of white silk or nuns' veiling. and in but one fashion, gathered skirts, round waist, with V-neck and half sleeves.

Miss Maud Ingersoll, who is a decided brunet, wears a black lace. Neither daughter has ever been seen on the street alone, the mother or aunt always acting as—not a chaperon, but a companion. They know nothing about shopping, larks, slang, chums, or beaux, and there never has been a time so merry or a party so gay that these beautiful creatures were induced to leave the great Infidel and his wife. Similar examples of family devotion there must be among "orthodox" people, but greater devotion it would be impossible to find.

The entire family has a passion for music, and it is not an unusual thing for the mother and daughter to call at the lawyer's office and drag him off to some symphony or oratorio uptown or over in Brooklyn, leaving a group of clients in open-eyed wonderment. If there is anything they admire in people it is their talent—an ability to do something or say something just a little better than anybody else—and if there is anything they despise it is veneer. Show counts for nothing with them. It is never tolerated and never indulged in. There must be jewels in the caskets, but if so they stay there, for neither daughter is ever adorned save in the beauty of her own charming personality. So, Rev. Dr. Peck, of Taunton, Mass., "Bob Ingersoll's daughters" hav not joined the church, and apparently hav not thought of doing so.

The Progress of Christian Science.

C. H. Clark, a photographer of Salida, Col., is in hot water. About two years ago Mrs. Sweet, of Buena Vista, Col., induced Clark and his wife and several others in this city to join the Christian scientists. Shortly after they became members of the faith, Clark's son James, fourteen years old, was treated by them for dropsy. They would not permit a physician in the house, and as a result the boy died. For three days after his death the deluded parents claimed the boy was only sleeping and that he would be brought back to life by prayer. He was finally buried. Three weeks ago the Daily News published the fact that the Clarks were repeating their former actions with their thirteen-year-old daughter Maud. For over a week, says a dispatch to the Salt Lake Tribune of the 18th ult., the girl has been confined to her bed and the heartless parents refuse her medicin. They hav had the big mogul of the faith, one Dr. Benbow, come here from Colorado Springs, but his prayers availed nothing. The girl is dying by inches, but her parents will allow no one in the house. Information as to the condition of the girl has spread abroad, and remembering the treatment accorded their son, the best citizens organized a law and order society to relieve the inhuman parents of the care of the child. They had the girl placed in charge of responsible parties and physicians summoned. It was almost impossible to restrain the people of the city. Some of them were determined to deal harshly with the Clarks and their kind. Tar and feathers and rails were provided, but cooler heads prevailed, and the course outlined above was pursued.

The funeral of Mrs. Royal E. Fox took place at her home, No. 30 Erie street, Syracuse, N. Y., May 9th. The responsibility for the fatal termination of Mrs. Fox's illness is laid by public opinion at the door of Christian science. Mrs. Fox had been subject to bilious attacks for several years. When the first one came on Dr. Jay W. Sheldon was called. When the patient had begun to recover she was left to the charge of Dr. E. H. Flint. Mrs. Fox was to some extent a believer in Christian science at that time, and her husband was, as he is yet, "very firm in the faith," to quote an expression used by one of the friends of the family. Two weeks ago the disease came on again with unusual severity, and an apostle of Christian science—Mrs. Norris—was called. Mrs. Fox's daughters urged that a physician be called. but their entreaties went for nothing. Mr. Fox had unbounded confidence in Christian science as a curativ power and felt sure his wife would recover. The patient, it is said, suffered terribly, and frequently called out in her agony, "I must hav help! I must hav help!" She was told that all she needed was courage, and she would be sure to triumph over the malady. Mrs. Fox took scarcely any nourishment during the attack. Dr. Flint was summoned at the last moment. "When I entered the house," he said, to-day, "Mrs. Fox had just passed away. The body was still warm, but there were no signs of life. I was called to make out the death certificate, I suppose. I assigned as the cause of death inflammation of the liver." Dr. Flint expressed the opinion that if Mrs. Fox had been allowed her own way she would hav had the services of a physician. One of the neighbors said that the body immediately after death was "all twisted up," its position leading her to believe that Mrs. Fox was writhing in agony when she died.

When the Christian scientists will meet here next month in annual convention, says the Cleveland Plaindealer, they will probably be called upon to discuss a new phase of the science. The story has been going the rounds among adherents of the peculiar belief that a strange domestic drama has been enacted in Christian science circles, the last act of which has yet to be played and most likely in the divorce court. A well-known married lady of the city, who is one of the enthusiastic supporters of the new science, gave birth to a male child. Certain circumstances estranged the husband from the wife, who attributed the birth of the babe to what she termed an immaculate conception. She asserted that it proved the superiority of mind over matter that no human agency was instrumental in the conception and birth of the child, and she pointed to her offspring as another victory of the new science. A number of people in town believe with her and regard it as a divine miracle, while a few Christian scientists take no stock in the story. The secret is safely guarded by the local Christian scientists, some of whom are thoroughly conversant with all the details, and a few Spiritualists in town also know all about it, but to the outside world the affair is still a secret, and there are only a few people in the city who know the lady's name. There has been no legal separation as yet between husband and wife, but they liv apart. Their intimate friends are seeking to keep the story a secret.

The Difficulty of Exalting a New Savior.

The Presbyterians of Chicago selected to try Mrs. Kinnehan hav adjudged her guilty of blasphemy, apostasy, and heresy, and therefore worthy of expulsion from the church. Mrs. Kinnehan is one of the Beekmanites, a religious sect who worship the Rev. G. J. Schweinfurth as Christ. At the trial the prosecutor stated the charges: That the woman on trial had avowed her belief that Christ had reappeared, and that she worshiped him in the person of the Rev. Mr. Schweinfurth. To the charges, one and all, Mrs. Kinnehan pleaded not guilty. She refused to hav any counsel appointed to defend her, saying that she was able to defend herself. When asked to swear she refused to do so, and opening her Bible read passages showing that it was proper to swear not at all. She said, however, that she had been taught by the preaching of the church that Christ was coming on earth, and was now fully satisfied that Schweinfurth was Christ. Nothing could change her views. Schweinfurth, the alleged Christ, settled in Rockford, Ill., a few years ago not worth a nickel. He now has one of the finest farms in that section of the country, and is worth over $50,000. Since the trial the White Caps of Rockford hav taken a hand in and warned Schweinfurth to leave the town within ten days. They threaten, if he fails to go, to tar and feather him and roast him alive. Schweinfurth has employed a night watchman and bought guns and dogs for self-protection. The messianic business pays better in Illinois than it did in Judea, but the messiah has about the same trouble with the people in both places. But why should Schweinfurth buy guns and dogs to protect himself? If he is as much of a divine individual as Jesus is reported to hav been, he could lay the White Caps out with a few miracles, and thus serve two purposes—establish his supernatural powers and punish a lot of scoundrels who ought to be in state prison.

What the Sabbatarians are Doing.

The city council of Lincoln, Neb., decided, April 20th, that the dime museum of that city must not open on Sundays.

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, field secretary of the American Sabbath Union, is planning to visit every state and territory (except some of those recently visited) before the end of the year, to promote the observance of both the religious and the civil Sabbath, by sermons, lectures, and especially by organizing state and county and city Sabbath associations, or preparing the way for such organizations.

If the experiment of stopping freight trains on Sunday is successful, says the Savannah, Ga., News, a similar experiment will doubtless be made with passenger trains. As the movement to stop all Sunday trains is a religious one, the objection to running passenger trains is as strong as that to running freight trains. The passenger trains, however, are closer to the people than freight trains, and before they can be stopped the people must change their Sunday practices in some particulars.

Ah, Thank You, Me Lord.

Charles Watts in Secular Thought.

The May number of the Freethinkers' Magazine is an exceedingly good one, being full of solid articles. "A Defense of the Devil," by Nelly Booth-Simmons, is very amusing. We are inclined to believe with Mr. Green that "giv the devil his due" was the humane sentiment that actuated Miss Nelly Booth-Simmons, when she wrote the able defense of Old Split-foot. By doing this she has made "her calling and election sure" for his dominions. "Mental Panics," from the ever-graceful and facetious pen of Helen H. Gardener, is a rich entertainment for those who revel in humor, robed in sparkling and refined attire. The portrait of Eugene M. Macdonald, the able Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, is good, while the facts given of his life are highly entertaining. We were much pleased to read the well-deserved tribute paid to the noble character and versatil ability of Mr. Macdonald, for it accords with our personal knowledge of the modest and "reserved" editor. The better he is known the more will he be liked for his frank and genial qualities.

Who Claims the Reward?

From San Francisco Freethought.

Money talks, and Mr. Israel W. Groh offers a reward of $5,000 to the person or persons who will make it possible for excursionists to visit the garden of Eden and identify the spot by the description given in the second chapter of Genesis. Mr. Groh embodies the above offer in a ten-cent pamphlet published by the Truth Seeker Company entitled, "Did Man Fall?" The author's remarks upon the general subject are pertinent and interesting.

Blasphemy Prosecutions in Sweden.

From the London Freethinker.

On the 8th of March the adjourned trial of Mr. Victor Lennstrand took place, the charge being that his lecture, "Why I Attack Christianity," contained blasphemous expressions against God. The judge acted in a most arbitrary manner. As an instance of how a judge may conduct himself in a Swedish court, we giv the following extract from the verbatim report: Lennstrand had asked to be allowed, according to law, to cross-examin the witnesses. "You hav done it," shouted the judge. "No," he replied. "You don't think so, but I think so," said the judge. "I request that it may be entered in the protocol of the court that I hav not been permitted to put questions to the witnesses. I am supposed to hav such a right, as they in their evidence hav touched on several points." "You hav heard all about it," bullied the judge. "No, I hav not," repeated the accused; "I request, according to the law of the country, to be permitted to question the witnesses. Here is the paragraph [proceeding to read it]" The judge, enraged, shouted, "Silence, or it may cost you dearly [strikes the table violently while stamping on the floor with his feet]! Silence!"

Later on, the judge asked Mr. Lennstrand if he had anything to say. He replied, "I had much to say, but as I am denied the right of questioning the witnesses, I will not enter further into any defense." "But I say you hav," interrupted the judge. "Well then, I ask according to chap. 17——" "I hav already replied to that," again interrupted the judge. "But I am not permitted." "That is a lie," shouted the judge. After some wrangling, during which the judge treated Mr. Lennstrand in a most brutal manner, the judge ordered to be entered on the court protocol, "Lennstrand has nothing to say." Judgment was postponed to the 5th of April, when he was sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

In the interim Mr. Lennstrand has been activly lecturing and as activly prosecuted by the authorities. On the 1st of April he lectured before a large assembly in Stockholm on, "What Hav the Authorities Won by Their Prosecutions?" A large body of police was present, and others were concealed in the neighboring barracks. The lecture passed off, however, without any disturbance. Two detectivs took down the whole of the lecture in shorthand. On the 2d of April he was acquitted by a second jury from the charge of having published a translation of Joseph Symes's pamphlet, "Who Is to be Damned if Christianity is True?" On the 14th he was charged before the court at Lindköping, and on the 6th before the court at Norrköping. The hearing of these charges has been postponed to the 25th and 27th of this month.

On the 7th of April he was to lecture in Eskilstuna, but the police prohibited the lecture. Lennstrand boldly announced from the steps of the building that he would arrange for a private meeting later in the day. Shortly after Mr. Lennstrand and his friends were admitted to the private garden of a courageous lady, Mrs. Matilda Freese, in the outskirts of the town. The police tried to prohibit the meeting, but Mr. Lennstrand announced to the crowd that all who entered their names as members of the Utilitarian Society would be admitted. The result was that one hundred and ninety new members were enroled. The chief of police insisted on being admitted, but Mr. Lennstrand told him it would be at his own peril if he tried to effect an entrance by force, as it was a private meeting where he had no business. Mr. Lennstrand afterward lectured on "Free Assembly."

On the 9th of April Mr. Lennstrand was arraigned at the court of Stockholm to answer a new charge of blasphemy. The authorities at Eskilstuna are not much blamed by our Swedish friends. It appears that these prosecutions hav been instigated by clerical pressure, and Swedish Freethinkers believe they will aid the progress of their movement. Evidently they hav still a hard battle to fight, and we can assure them of the earnest sympathy of the Freethought party in England.

THE BRAVE SWEDE LENNSTRAND.

Translated from the Kansas City Weckobladet.

The paragraph in the Swedish law as used by the prosecuting attorney of Linkoping against V. Lennstrand runs thus: "Whoever blasphemes God, or criticises or ridicules God's holy word or sacraments, shall be punished by imprisonment at hard labor not more than one year." So stands it and nothing more.

But the prosecuting attorney had accused Mr. Lennstrand as follows: "That he criticised and ridiculed the Christian religion; denied a life after this one; denied Christ's resurrection; expressed himself heretically concerning the state church and its doctrins; denied Christ as a person of the godhead, and in support of it appealed to Mark iv, 4–12."

At the appointed time Mr. Lennstrand was on hand and the court house filled with people who came to hear. The attorney demanded that Mr. Lennstrand answer the following and in the order given:

Mr. Lennstrand; "Mr. President, the attorney has called upon me to answer, according to the first paragraph of the seventh chapter of the criminal laws for all that; but according to the law cited it is only criminal to blaspheme God and ridicule and criticise his holy word and sacraments. That I hav done these I deny most strongly. It is certainly only criminal according to the second article, third paragraph, of the freedom-of-press laws 'to deny God, a life after this one, and the pure evangelical doctrins;' but according to the now cited law that is not at all criminal. This complaint relates not at all to the case."

The mayor: "We will make the matter short. Does Mr. Lennstrand now confess to blasphemy?"

Mr. Lennstrand: "I will come to that later. I shall first point out the things in the accusation that do not belong to the case. That which is not subject to answer ought not to come into the question and therefore I leave it out. That which belongs to the complaint—that I blaspheme God—I strenuously deny. That is an empty accusation that the attorney makes against me. The attorney cites as an aggravating circumstance that the fact occurred publicly and before a large assembly. I will say that the authorities with their complaints called attention to me and thus gave me a large audience. But is this influence of the authorities in increasing my audience to be cited as an aggravating circumstance against me? As a further aggravating circumstance the attorney charges me with exacting an entrance fee. But if it is an aggravation of the offense that the gathering was large it must be a mitigating circumstance to hav charged an entrance fee and thus reduced the audience in numbers. That I should charge for admission is proper, as I belong to no church or society. The attorney is probably thinking of the state-church priests, but possibly forgets that they are paid a hundred thousand times when no one goes to hear them. Finally: As a further aggravating circumstance the attorney charges that I hav been already sentenced before for a similar offense. This is not true. I hav been accused four times according to the paragraph of the law cited and all four times cleared. That seems to me a circumstance mitigating in the highest degree. If I am to be found guilty according to the paragraph it is necessary to prove that by some expression I caused a 'general scandal.' Even that I deny, as after both meetings my listeners applauded, and that could not indicate offense. Certainly the Christians might be thoroughly moved, but that is not a 'general offense,' as little as the same could be said when Freethinkers are criticised by Christians."

The attorney: "What is charged against Mr. Lennstrand is, in my view, punishable. It says in the paragraph, 'to criticise and ridicule God's word;' and that I consider a man does when he denies a life after this and the resurrection of Christ, since God's word tells of these things. And by saying that God's word is untrue a man ridicules and criticises the same."

The mayor: "Has Mr. Lennstrand denied a life after this one?"

Mr. Lennstrand: "I will not answer as to anything irrelevant. If it comes into the mind of the attorney to charge me with all sorts of irrelevant matters in connection with this suit I am not required to answer them."

The mayor: "Now, the court must hav a decided answer."

Mr. Lennstrand: "I hav said that the attorney's accusations do not concern this case."

Here the public withdrew, whilst the court took a recess, which was made a long one, notwithstanding the question must be perfectly clear.

To interpret the paragraph as the prosecuting attorney wished would make it lawful to imprison all who read the Bible in a different way from the state church; all Baptists, Methodists, Unitarians, Catholics, etc.

It is decided that Mr. Lennstrand must meet the attorney's points so far as he expressed himself blasphemously. Questions put anew to Mr. Lennstrand, but he answered: It now devolves on the accuser to show which expressions were blasphemous. Accuser being unable to show the slightest proof, named his witnesses: Doctor Cronvall and Assistant Lindquist of the Seminary, and School Director Cleve and three police constables. The three first named had a written report. Read by the mayor. Also by Mr. Lennstrand, who said that he did not say, "God cannot be found," but, "Such a God can not be found," meaning that if God were almighty, all-good, and omnipresent there should not be so much suffering found in the world. Witnesses would not deny that Mr. Lennstrand used the expression, "such a."

Mr. Lennstrand: "But I do not find the slightest resemblance to blasphemy in the testimony of the witnesses."

Witnesses interrogated and declare that they heard nothing more than is in their testimony.

The mayor: "But Mr. Lennstrand denied a life after this."

Mr. Lennstrand: "Yes; that is, I can find no proof of it. But that does not concern this case."

The mayor: "But Mr. Lennstrand denies God."

Mr. Lennstrand: "No, that I do not. There are many ideas of God, as the president knows. The Unitarians' and Positivists' ideas of God I do not deny."

The attorney: "My notion is that when a man denies God he blasphemes therein."

Mr. Lennstrand: "There is a difference between denying and blaspheming, and, as is known, the Swedish law makes a difference."

The policemen had prepared a short account. It stated that Mr. Lennstrand denied the necessity of baptism, as he had asked, "Does anyone believe that a little child dying now would go to-night to the devils to be tortured?" If the court means that that expression is punishable, it is wiser than the state church, as the latest catechism does not answer the question whether children are damned that die unbaptized. The mayor again took up the question whether Mr. Lennstrand had denied God.

Mr. Lennstrand: "When Theodore Parker calls Truth and Goodness God, I do not deny God, neither do I when the Positivists call all mankind God. But that is irrelevant. The charge is I blasphemed, and that has not been proved."

All hitherto related to the first charge. The court now passed to the second. Witnesses were two policemen, who stated that Mr. Lennstrand said that if one man wronged another he need not make restitution but could ask forgivness of God, and then the injured one must also forgiv him.

Mr. Lennstrand: "That is only a fact, and cannot offend God. If that is blasphemy, it is blasphemy against mankind."

Mr. Cleve testified that Lennstrand said the Bible contained contradictions and wrong advice. Mr. Lennstrand asked if Mr. Cleve remembered some such.

Mr. Cleve: "No."

Hereupon Mr. Lennstrand interrogated all the witnesses as to whether his discourse caused "general scandal" on the occasion. Witnesses could not say it did. Some had gone in shortly before the close. Others heard handclapping. Mr. Lindquist testified to an interruption, but could not say if it was applause or opposition. The prosecutor brought up a poster announcing the meeting, but Mr. Lennstrand denied that it had anything to do with this matter, but related to the freedom of press laws. The prosecutor finally asked if Mr. Lennstrand wrote so and so as stated in the paper.

Mr. Lennstrand: "Yes, I did."

Now as the prosecutor read he showed that he knew so little of the matter he was defending that he read "Augustinian confession" where Mr. Lennstrand used, "Augsburgan confession," and the audience had hard work to keep from laughing. A sharp light was thus thrown on the situation. What hypocrisy, to defend a book of confession (creed) that one has never read through and whose name even he does not know! And by such hypocrisy men think they are protecting Christianity—Christianity that they are trampling underfoot and not bothering themselvs about.

Prosecutor: "It is so written."

Mr. Lennstrand: "That is irrelevant. I did not say at the meeting that which the attorney is now reading."

Mr. Lennstrand asked to hav noted in the minutes of the proceedings that one of our foremost legal writers, Professor Hugström, of Upsala, says that "blasphemy consists only in expressions of contempt for the supreme being." And Mr. Lennstrand denied that he had so expressed himself at the meeting.

The mayor: "What does Mr. Lennstrand mean by 'supreme being?'"

Mr. Lennstrand: "I must say that I know nothing about it."

Mr. Lennstrand now asked that it be noted on the minutes what idea of God he denied: the Jewish Jehovah, the godship of Christ as decided by the vote of a church meeting.

Court adjourned for fourteen days to get the testimony of a watchmaker and other witnesses.

Among the auditors were men of all classes, and much bitterness was created by that manner of protecting Christianity, and it will certainly cause a great falling away from the state church. The prosecutor showed himself ignorant of what belonged to the case, as well as of the a b c of logic.

Christian Persecution of Christians in Arkansas.

From A. T. Jones's Civil Government and Religion.

Elder J. W. Scoles, a Seventh Day Adventist minister, had gone from Michigan to Arkansas in June, 1884, to assist Elder D. A. Wellman in holding some meetings at Springdale, Washington county. As the result of these meetings, quite a number of persons adopted the faith of that body, and practiced accordingly. In August, 1884, Elder Wellman died, and Elder Scoles continued the work in that place. In the winter of 1884–85, Elder J. G. Wood went from Appleton City, Mo., to assist Elder Scoles at Springdale. A church was organized at this place early in 1885, and the erection of a meeting-house was begun at once. In addition to his subscription to the enterprise, Elder Scoles agreed to paint the house when it should be ready. Further than this, we hav the words of Elder Scoles himself. He says:

I volunteered to do the painting as my share of the work, in addition to my subscription. I worked away at the church at odd times, sometimes half a day and sometimes more, as I could spare the time. The last Sunday in April, 1885, in order to finish the work so I could be free to go out for the summer's labor with the tent, and expecting to go the next day twenty miles, I went over to the church, and finished up a small strip of painting on the south side of the house, clear out of sight of all public roads; and here I quietly worked away for perhaps two hours, in which time I finished it, and then went home. It was for this offense that I was indicted.

At the fall term of the circuit court held at Fayetteville, Mr. J. A. Armstrong, of Springdale, was summoned before the grand jury. He was asked if he knew of any violations of the Sunday law. He said he did.

Grand jury: Who are they? Armstrong: The 'Frisco railroad is running trains every Sunday.

G. J.: Do you know of any others? A.: Yes; the hotels of this place are open and do a full run of business on Sunday, as on other days.

G. J.: Do you know of any others? A.: Yes, sir; the drug stores and barber shops all keep open and do business every Sunday.

G. J.: Do you know of any others? A.: Yes; the livery stables do more business on Sunday than on any other day of the week.

After several repetitions of this same form of question and answer, in much the same manner, in relation to other lines of business, this question was reached:

G. J.: Do you know of any Seventh Day Adventists who work on Sunday? A.: Yes, sir.

After getting from the witness the names of his brethren, indictments were found against five persons, all of whom were Seventh Day Adventists. Elder Scoles was one of the five.

From the above it will be seen that special pains was taken to indict none but those who had conscientiously observed the seventh day. A more marked instance of deliberate persecution could not be imagined. Mr. Scoles was convicted, and an appeal was taken to the supreme court, where the decision of the lower court was sustained.

Mr. Meeks had been a resident of Arkansas since 1856, with the exception of one year. He had held the office of justice of the peace for a number of years both before and after the war. When he became a Seventh Day Adventist he refused to hold the office longer, because its duties conflicted with his observance of the Sabbath.

Mr. Meeks was indicted at the July term of the circuit court, 1885, for Sabbath-breaking. He was arrested in November, 1885, and held under bonds of $500 for his appearance in January. The offense for which he was indicted was planting potatoes on Sunday—the third Sunday in March, 1885. The work was done near Mr. Meeks's own house, and not nearer than two and a half miles to any public road or any place of public worship.

On the day referred to, Mr. La Fever and his wife went to visit Mr. Meeks at his home, and found Mr. Meeks planting potatoes. Mr. Meeks quit his work and spent the rest of the day visiting with Mr. La Fever. La Fever afterward reported Mr. Meeks to the grand jury, and as the consequence Mr. Meeks was indicted, as stated. The fourth Monday in January, Meeks appeared before Judge Herne. His case was laid over to await the decision of the supreme court in the Scoles case.

James M. Pool, a Seventh Day Adventist, was indicted for Sabbath-breaking, at the fall term of the circuit court held at Fayetteville, beginning the first Monday in September, 1885.

He waived his right to jury trial. The only witness in the case was J. W. Cooper. Cooper was a member of the Presbyterian church, and professed sanctification. He went to Pool's house on Sunday morning, to buy some tobacco, and found Pool hoeing in his garden; so testified before the court, Judge Pittman presiding. The judge sustained the indictment, pronounced Pool guilty, and fined him $1 and costs, amounting to $30.90.

Mr. J. A. Armstrong moved from Warren county, Ind., to Springdale, Ark., in 1878. In September, 1884, he joined the Seventh Day Adventist church at Springdale. November, 1885, he was indicted by the grand jury for Sabbath-breaking. On the 13th of February, 1886, he was arrested by William Holcomb, deputy sheriff for Washington county, and was held under bonds of $250 for his appearance at the May term of the circuit court. The particular offense upon which the charge of Sabbath-breaking was based was digging potatoes in his field on Sunday. Millard Courtney was the prosecuting witness. Mr. Armstrong had a contract for building the school-house at Springdale. Mr. Courtney, with a friend, went to Armstrong's house on Sunday, to negotiate a contract for putting the tin roof on the school-house. From the house they went into the field where Mr. Armstrong was digging potatoes. There the business was all talked over, and the contract was secured for putting on the tin roof. Then this same Courtney became the prosecuting witness against Mr. Armstrong for working on Sunday.

On the first Monday in May, Mr. Armstrong appeared before Judge Pittman, circuit judge of the Fourth judicial district, at Fayetteville, and, waiving his right to jury trial, submitted his case to the court for decision. Judge Pittman sustained the indictment. Fine and costs, amounting to $26.50, were paid, and Mr. Armstrong was released.

Mr. James, a Seventh Day Adventist, was indicted by the grand jury in January, 1886, for Sabbath-breaking. The particular offense was the doing carpenter work on Sunday. The indictment was founded on the testimony of Mr. Powers, a minister of the Missionary Baptist church. Mr. James was working on a house for a widow, near the Hot Springs railroad. The work was done without any expectation of receiving payment, and wholly as a charitable act for the poor widow, who was a member of the Methodist church. Mr. James worked in the rain to do it, because the widow was about to be thrown out of the house in which she lived, and had no place to shelter herself and family. Powers, the informer, lived about six hundred yards from where the work was done, and on that very Sunday had carried wood from within seven rods of where Mr. James was at work, and chopped up the wood in sight of Mr. James.

At the January term in 1886, Mr. Meeks was indicted the second time. July 13th he was arrested on a bench warrant in the hands of William La Fever. Meeks gave bonds for his appearance at the July term of court. The offense was for fixing his wagon-brake on Sunday. He was reported to the grand jury by Riley Warren. Warren had gone to Meeks's house on the Sunday referred to in the indictment, to see Mr. Meeks about hiring a teacher for their public school, for both of them were members of the school board of their district. In the course of their conversation, Mr. Meeks incidentally mentioned having mended his wagon-brake that morning. This was reported to the grand jury by Mr. Warren, and the indictment followed.

John A. Meeks, aged fourteen years, son of Edward L. Meeks, was indicted by the grand jury at the January term of the circuit court of 1886 for Sabbath breaking. The offense was for shooting squirrels on Sunday. The place where the squirrels were shot was in a mountainous district entirely away from any public road or any place of public worship. He was reported by a Mr. M. Reeves. The sons of Mr. Reeves were hauling wood with a team on that same Sunday, and were present with the Meeks boys in the woods, and scared the squirrels around the trees for the Meeks boys to shoot. When the sport was over, the Meeks boys divided the game with the Reeves boys.

Then the father of the Reeves boys reported the Meeks boy and he was indicted. His case was held over to await the decision of the supreme court in the Scoles case. At the January term in 1887, the boy confessed judgment, and was fined $5, and $3 county tax was assessed, and the costs, amounting in all to $22. The fine was paid and the boy released.

William H. Fritz was indicted at the April term of the circuit court in 1886 for Sabbath-breaking, and held under $250 bonds for his appearance at the September term, at Huntsville. Mr. Fritz is a woodworkman, and the offense charged was working in the shop on Sunday. The shop was in the country and two hundred yards from the public road. The indictment was sustained. The defendant was fined $1 and costs, amounting to $28. Mr. Fritz was a Seventh Day Adventist.

I. L. Benson was not at that time a member of any church, made no pretensions to religious faith, and did not observe any day. He had the contract for painting the railroad bridge across the Arkansas river at Van Buren, Ark. He worked a set of hands on the bridge all days of the week, Sundays included. In May, 1886, Mr. Benson and one of his men were arrested on the charge of Sabbath-breaking. They were taken to Fort Smith and arraigned before a justice of the peace. The justice did not put them through any form of trial, nor even ask them whether they were guilty or not guilty, but read a section of the law to them, and told them he would make the fine as light as possible, amounting, with costs, to $4.75 each. They refused to pay the fines, and were placed in custody of the sheriff. The sheriff gave them the freedom of the place, only requiring them to appear at the justice's office at a certain hour. Mr. Benson telegraphed to the general manager of the railroad in regard to the matter. The general manager telegraphed to his attorney in that city to attend to the cases.

Mr. Benson and his men appeared before the justice for a hearing in their cases. It was granted, with some reluctance. The attorney, Mr. Bryolair, told the justice it was a shame to arrest men for working on the bridge at the risk of their lives to support their families, when the public work in their own town was principally done on Sunday. A hearing was granted, and the trial set for the next day.

They were not placed under any bonds at all, but were allowed to go on their own recognizance. The following day a jury was impaneled and the trial begun. The deputy sheriff was the leading witness, and swore positivly that he saw them at work on Sunday. The jury brought in a verdict to the effect that they had "agreed to disagree." This was on Wednesday. The following Monday was set for a new trial. No bond was even at this time required. The defendants appeared at the time appointed, and pleaded not guilty. The justice, after giving them a brief lecture, dismissed the case.

In August, 1886, Mr. P. Hammond, a member of the Baptist church, appeared before the grand jury in Hot Spring county, and charged J. L. Shockey with hauling rails and clearing land on Sunday, the first day of the week, July 11, 1886. The grand jury presented an indictment. On Dec. 14, 1886, Mr. Shockey was arrested and taken to Malvern, locked up till the next day, when he gave the usual bond for his appearance at court, and was released. The work for which Mr. Shockey was indicted was done on a new farm which he was opening up in the woods, three-fourths of a mile from any public road, and more than a mile from any place of public worship, and not in sight of either. The witness, Mr. Hammond, passed by where Mr. Shockey was at work, and after he had gone some distance, returned, and spoke to Mr. Shockey about buying from him a Plymouth Rock rooster. The bargain was then made, Hammond agreeing to pay Shockey fifty cents for the rooster.

Shockey was indicted, and his case set for trial Feb. 7, 1887. This case, with the one before mentioned, and some others that had been held over to await the decision in the Scoles case, was called, and February 11th fixed as the day of trial for all.

America Ahead.

Grateful beyond measure, I desire to return my heartiest thanks to Brothers Wakeman and Stevens for their splendid work, and to all the other Liberals, both ladies and gentlemen, who hav contributed to the North American portion of the Bruno monument fund.

My original appeal and subscription in behalf of this lofty purpose hav been so magnificently supported and carried forward by the noble-minded and generous-hearted helpers in this grand cause, that our part of the international fund exceeds in amount that of any other country.

America certainly has reason to be proud of her record in this as well as in so many other movements for the highest welfare of humanity, and in the language of the Bruno monument committee in Rome to me, I return you all "a thousand thanks."

Cannot the Liberals also all join me in upholding the Bruno calendar memorial, which seven years ago I founded in honor of this greatest of martyrs for science and Freethought? Do not the extended, untiring, and effectiv labors for liberty of Brother Wakeman, upon whose happy suggestion the calendar was based, deserve, in addition to the memory of the illustrious Bruno, this tribute from the pens and hearts of the true friends of freedom throughout the civilized world? The Bruno monument committee in Rome indorse the calendar, and in writing to me use the Italian equivalent of our phrase, Year of Science, which is "Anno della Scienza."

Boston, Mass, May 9, A.S. 289. GEO. N. HILL.

Job.

O sore afflicted and long-suffering Job,
With "biles" enough to stock our tearful globe,
And some to spare for those in Jersey-land,
Where Boonton lies in superstition's stubble!
And then besides thou hadst a peck of trouble,
God letting Satan play a strong "lone hand!"
Between the two you found it mighty "rocky,"
And, than before, they left you far less "'stock'-y!"
O suffering Job, with "comforters" unique,
I see thee, anguished, writhing in the ashes—
Not quite in the "good form" of one who "mashes!"
But somewhat looking like a Bowery "freak!"
O Job, that put-up job on you was cruel,
But now you're squaring it on heavenly gruel!

SI SLOKUM.

The Great Discussion.

From the Denison, Tex., Gazetteer.

"Limits of Toleration," a discussion between Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford, before the Nineteenth Century Club. The letters were stenographically reported expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER, in which they first appeared, and are now published in pamphlet form to meet a demand from all parts of the country for them in a more durable shape.

The Truth Seeker's Good Deeds.

From San Francisco Freethought.

An attractiv pamphlet has reached us containing the oral debate between Colonel Ingersoll, the Hon. Frederic Coudert, and Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford, of New York. This debate has already become famous, and its preservation in pamphlet form adds another to the many good deeds which the Truth Seeker Company is constantly performing. Ten cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 18, 1889.

Religious Persecution in this Year of Our Lord.

We print on another page several cases of persecution of Seventh Day Adventists by their Christian brethren in Arkansas. These are only a few of the many that hav occurred in that state within the past few years, where the people, being densely ignorant, are correspondingly pious and fanatical. A man can be killed in Arkansas in some of their drunken fights and the people will make less fuss over it than over a case of "Sabbath breaking." A few years ago those who kept one day of worship in a week were allowed to work on Sunday, but the legal clause of the Sunday laws permitting this was repealed in 1885 under the plea that saloonkeepers took advantage of it to keep their places of business open on Sunday. However that may be, since its repeal no saloonkeepers hav been prosecuted, though as many saloons are open as before, while some score and a half of Seventh Day Adventists hav been punished for laboring on Sundays. It looks very much as though the evangelical Christians desired to repeal the clause expressly to punish the Christians who venture to interpret the Bible differently from them. The record is a powerful argument indeed in favor of the total abolition of all religious Sunday laws.

Last week we printed among the Letters from Friends one from a subscriber in Alabama who has been wronged by a court. He has since sent us fuller particulars, and though at his request we must suppress his name, it is apparent that Alabama is no whit behind Arkansas in Christian zeal. The facts are these: Our subscriber sued a man for money due him. In the circuit court of Tuscaloosa Judge Spratt refused to allow him to make an affirmation and rejected him as a witness, in consequence of which he lost his case. The judge also said that an Infidel's testimony could not be taken in that state.

The constitution of Alabama, as we stated last week, provides "that no religion shall be established by law; that no preference shall be given by law to any religious sect, society, denomination, or mode of worship; that no one shall be compelled by law to attend any place of worship, nor to pay any tithes, taxes, or other rate, for building or repairing any place of worship, nor for maintaining any minister or ministry; that no religious test shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the state; and that the civil rights, privileges, and capacities of any citizen shall not in any manner be affected by his religious principles." The statutes provide that "all testimony, except as otherwise directed, must be given in open court, on the oath or affirmation of the witness."

It seems to us that the last clause of the article of the constitution above quoted covers this case, though it is evidently held by the courts that to take advantage of it a man must hav some religion, either Christian, Mohammedan, or Buddhist, or some other superstition, and that an Infidel, not possessing any pet superstition, is an outlaw. The rule of the courts as to affirmation we learn from a letter written to our subscriber by an eminent legal firm of Alabama to whom he had applied for information as to a remedy. The letter says:

"Yours of 17th inst. received. 'If a man, being a Christian, has conscientious scruples against taking an oath in the usual form, he will be allowed to make a solemn religious asseveration, involving a like appeal to God for the truth of his testimony, in any mode which he shall declare to be binding on his conscience.' From this rule you see any man is allowed to affirm instead of swearing in the usual form, but he must believe in God and a future state of rewards and punishments—that is, that divine punishment will be the certain consequence of perjury, before he can swear or affirm or testify.

"If a justice of the peace or other court prevented or refused to allow a witness who believes in God and divine punishment for perjury to affirm and testify, that would be simply a judicial error to be corrected on appeal. The witness himself would not thereby be injured and would hav no cause for complaint.

"An Agnostic is one without knowledge—an ignoramus—hence there cannot be an Agnostic in faith. If a man is ignorant of God—does not believe that he will reward and punish us according to our deserts—he is incompetent to testify in any court.

"Where a man offers to affirm under the penalties of perjury and is rejected as incompetent, if he was rejected because of a want of knowledge of and belief in God, and that he will reward and punish according to our deserts, the court acted right in refusing to allow him to testify. If the witness had this degree of belief or faith, the court erred, but the error can be corrected only on appeal.

"Let us call your attention to the Word, where it says: 'The fool hath said in his heart there is no God.' Therefore everyone who says there is no God is a fool, and a fool is incompetent to testify in any court."

From the foregoing it is seen that Agnostics in Alabama are without legal remedy for any wrong Christians may inflict upon them. And as another eminent legal light (who will probably not object to having his name printed) to whom our subscriber had appealed, puts it, to liv in peace he will hav to emigrate. This is the second legal opinion.

"LAW OFFICE ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, 40 WALL ST., NEW YORK, April 24, 1889.

"DEAR SIR: You happen to liv in an uncivilized state, where those in authority hav been barbarous enough to place beyond the protection of the law those who honestly differ with them on subjects about which no one knows anything for certain. I do not see how you can help yourself in that state if you do not happen to believe in what the average Alabamian calls God. Your civil rights to a great extent are lost. The meanest believer can assault or rob you with impunity, and you will not be allowed to tell your story in a court of justice. Such is the Christian civilization of Alabama. In all the States of this Union—except Alabama—it is provided by the constitution that every man may worship God according to his own conscience. You will thus see that Alabama has the honor of holding the hindmost place in the procession. Probably the best thing you can do is to emigrate. Yours very truly, R. G. INGERSOLL."

The facts in the case are, it is seen, agreed upon by all. Those in our friend's favor are that his suit was a righteous one, and that the constitution of the state prohibits a court from depriving any man of his civil rights, privileges, and capacities on account of his religious principles, and that he may make affirmation in lieu of an oath when so desiring. The facts against him are that the court is Christian; that the affirmation provided is really an oath, as objectionable as the regular oath; and that no one not believing in a God and future rewards and punishments is competent to testify. The only remedy is to attack the constitutionality of the statutes which enforce this state of things, and obtain a reversal of the rulings of the courts which hav made affirmations really oaths. It is doubtful if this could be done in the state courts, as the judges would probably hold that the constitution meant that men must hav religious principles of some recognized sort or another, and the United States courts hav no jurisdiction, as it has often been decided that the religious amendment to our national Constitution is not binding upon the states, which can establish and maintain as many churches as they please provided the people thereof hav not adopted (which most if not all of them hav) a state constitution prohibiting it. From the information we possess, therefore, we hav to say in answer to our subscriber's appeal to us that he is without remedy unless he becomes converted and joins the church. This we cannot advise his doing. Fairly construed, the constitution would protect him; but it is too much to expect that Christian judges would so construe it.

In regard to the law in New York, concerning which our friend inquires, evidently having our own electiv fight last fall in view, we may say that the precedent will not help him. New York's constitution provides that "no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief," and also that "no member of this state shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers." We contested our case on the ground that our statutes had provided for affirmation without question, when desired by a person taking the legal obligation to tell the truth; and second, that the affirmation did not invoke the name of God. We positivly refused to answer any questions as to our belief, holding that the inspectors had no right to ask them, being bound to administer the affirmation when requested. The judge sustained us. We held that the invocation of deity was part of an oath, and not a part of an affirmation. This opinion was also sustained by the judge. Besides these two impregnable points, New York's statutes provide the form of an affirmation as follows: "You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm." Had the judge not sustained us, we should hav fought the matter out on constitutional grounds. Alabama's statutes, it seems from the letter of the Alabama lawyer, provide an affirmation recognizing God, or if not in the statutes (which we hav not by us) it has been so settled by precedent and the rulings of the courts, which precedents and rulings form a sort of common law only overruled by a plain statute law. Constitutional grounds, therefore, form the only basis of an appeal for our Alabama friend.

We hope no one will get angry at the biblical and theological nonsense of the Alabama lawyer whose letter is printed above. The writer didn't know any better, and his obiter flings are not worth noticing. He has a valid excuse for his ignorance in the fact that he resides in Alabama.

More Outlawing of Infidels.

The Charlestown, Prince Edward Island, Examiner of a recent date prints this story of injustice:

"A scene which is, perhaps, unprecedented in our courts, occurred in the county court on Saturday last at the trial of an action of trover for the value of a cow alleged to hav been illegally seized under execution against Ewen Stewart, of Brackley Point road, and claimed by his son, Walter Stewart. In support of the plaintiff's claim a witness was called, named Peter Stewarts, whose oath was challenged on the ground of his Infidelity. The following are the questions put to him by the judge and his replies thereto:

"'Do you believe in the deity?'

"'No, not in the ordinary acceptation of the term.'

"'Do you believe in the trinity—God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost?'

"'I do not.'

"'Do you believe in the Bible?'

"'I believe the Bible is a history.'

"'Do you believe that it is the inspired word of God?'

"'I do not.'

"'Do you believe in rewards and punishments after death?'

"'I expect no reward after death for any good I do, and no punishment beyond the grave.'

"The next witness called, whose name was William Roberts, was also objected to, aud interrogated in the same way. He replied substantially as follows:

"'I do not believe in the Bible. I do not believe in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I can't say that I believe in any God. I do not believe in heaven or hell, nor in the doctrin of rewards and punishments after death.'

"These men were both middle-aged, and appeared to be intelligent. After this declaration of their faith, or rather, want of faith, Judge Alley refused to allow an oath to be administered to them. In doing so, he expressed himself in emphatic terms regarding their views, and stated that if they adhered to them through life they would doubtless hav good reason to believe in hell before the end of their existence. This incident shows that our home missions afford a good field for evangelistic effort."

Prince Edward Island is a part of Canada, and an English semi-independent colony, and its laws are of the old English type. There is probably no legal remedy for the excluded witnesses.

It is evident that Judge Alley and the editor of the Examiner are both Christians, and their remarks, like those of the Alabama lawyers, are about what could be expected of men with their training. It is evident, however, that both of the men whose answers are recorded in the above statement are fully equal in intelligence to either the occupant of the bench or the straddler of the editorial tripod, and we imagin the home missionaries would make little impression upon them.

Some Facts.

We trust that those Liberals who think that the time is past when Christianity needs to be shown up, and that the period has arrived when we can afford to let evolution do its perfect work unassisted by attacks upon the Bible and aggressiv warfare upon the churches, will change their minds after reading this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

In three countries, as shown elsewhere, are men being persecuted by the Christians and outlawed. Under Swedish, under English, and under American law Infidels and non-evangelical Christians are deprived of their rights. For malignant persistency in persecution the Christians of Sweden are winning laurels for their brows now which will undoubtedly, in their own opinion, be exchanged for a crown in heaven. The Arkansas persecutions are simply the expression of the hatred which one Christian sect has for another. In Prince Edward Island and Alabama the injustice perpetrated upon heretics is the usual outward sign of the arrogant inward grace which dominates Christians when dealing with unbelievers. If these Christian judges possessed the power to go further they would unquestionably do so. It is a black and villainous record which the Christians hav made for themselvs in the cases of persecution here presented to the Freethinkers of the country, and one which arouses hot indignation in the hearts of all advocates of justice and upholders of liberty.

The one thing which givs us courage is the fact that in one city there are men with sufficient backbone to attack in the most practical way one branch of the Christian church which has committed these criminal acts. The legal endeavor of the Chicago Liberals to prevent St. Mary's Roman Catholic Training School from fattening at the public expense is worthy of all commendation and aid. The case is now in the hands of the court, the defendant institution having replied to the brief which we print, and the plaintiffs hav rejoined. The defense was a demurrer, admitting the facts charged, but holding that the appropriations could be legally made. It is now for the judges to decide whether the constitution of Illinois means anything or not.

It seems to us that there never was more need of activ, persistent, aggressiv work against the churches than at the present time. Men are being persecuted and outlawed by the Christians in dozens of places, and our public treasuries are being plundered of millions of dollars to support the religion which is doing this infamous work. There is no real separation of church and state in the country. The claim is a glittering generality; a shining exterior with interior falseness. Until persecutions and outlawry for opinion's sake shall cease; until no man is taxed to support churches and their pauper institutions; until we hav a bona fide divorce of ecclesiasticism from secular government, and perfect liberty of expression and equality of civil rights, no Liberal should think for a moment that his work is done. Evolution has mighty hard work in getting hold of and changing a Christian. It won't do to sit down and trust to time to right the prodigious wrongs which the Christians are daily inflicting upon those who do not come into their tabernacles.

Science and Religion.

The Chicago Times evidently retains a Jesuit to write its editorials on religious or irreligious matters. In a late issue we find an article on the "inconsistency of religious unbelief," which bears the unmistakable earmarks of the Jesuit theologian, writing irresponsibly and as he has been trained. The article is a sharp and grossly false arraignment of science, and its caliber may be measured by the statement that "science, which has been the foe of revelation from the beginning, has been from the beginning the arch impostor." How any man, with sufficient brain capacity to learn to write at all, could hav deliberately penned the conclusion of that sentence, can be explained on no other ground than that he is a paid attorney to abuse his opponents. He goes on: "Science is Sir Oracle. It claims divinity and infallibility; it is dogmatic beyond the dogmatism of sectarian creeds; it demands a servility of acceptance worthy only of despotism; and it lays down its proposals for our blind faith as flippantly and as positivly as if it had turned up every stone in the universe to read its contents, uprooted every tree of the earth to get at its story, and called down from the heavens the stars to verify its assumptions. It is science, not religion, that livs upon faith; and, unlike religion in its truest significance, it has largely to liv on faith alone."

In this our Jesuit theologian has very emphatically reversed the general conception of science and religion. He has got the cart squarely before the horse, and has done so, we suppose, for a purpose. That purpose is, to support the huge imposture of religion, and delude the people. It is needless to say that science is not open to even one of the charges so recklessly made, and it is equally plain that religion is open to all of them. There never was a scientific man in the world who claimed to be speaking as a divine person, or that God was inspiring him. The very commonest definition of science that can be given precludes any need of divinity. Science is knowledge of facts and principles, causes and effects, and their relations in the world of phenomena. The fundamental basis of science is that the laws of nature are immutable—that two and one always hav made and always will make three, not one—and that the same causes under the same conditions will produce the same effect. The facts and principles now existing always hav existed, and science is but their discovery, and classification for the convenience of students. Science does not destroy nor create; it tells us what is, discovers what has been, and from these facts predicates what, under like circumstances, will be. Abstract science is based on self-evident truth; physical science on experiment and observation. Before science classifies a fact, from which to deduce principles, it discovers that it is a fact. Natural laws and principles are infallible; what the scientific men theorize about them is not. No scientific man ever pretended that his methods or conclusions are divine or without possibility of error. He demands acceptance of no truth he cannot demonstrate; if he cannot demonstrate it he givs only the probabilities, and the reasons for them. No evolutionist tells us that we must accept the philosophy or be damned. He simply tells us what he has found out, and from these facts deduces principles which convince reasoning people that he is right. The true scientist, like the true Agnostic, suspends judgment until he is sure of his facts, and there need be and can be no faith when the facts are plain to everybody. Certain it is that that assumption or theory which has but faith to support it, can never be deemed a part or parcel of science.

But how is it with religion? Does it not claim divinity, infallibility? Is it not dogmatic? Does it not demand servil acceptance? Does it not lay down proposals to which only blind faith can accede? Does it not flourish by faith, and upon faith alone? Has even its chief premis—the existence of a God—been proved by one single fact? Hav all the theologians in all the world, pagan or Christian, been able to demonstrate even that one assumption upon which all other theological assumptions are based? Science is knowledge of facts; religion is a combination of fear, feeling, wonder, and awe. But it has no facts behind it. The early savage, crawling from his cave, saw the lightning flash, was frightened by its reverberations, and he shrunk back, scared almost to death by the operations of nature. His spoonful of brains conjured up in the sky a monster of infinit power, and that monster was his God. Since then, man has conjured up Gods of all sorts. There is nothing he has not deified, and his imagination has formed superhuman beings and powers, evil and good, demons and angels, for whom he has felt a shuddering reverence, a cowering dread, and an awe-struck desire to propitiate their favor or their mercy. That is religion pure and undefiled. Civilization has added new qualities to its Gods, improving upon the cave man's God as the human race improved upon the cave man himself. But, all this time, from the cave man to Shakspere, there never has been given to the world one solitary fact demonstrating the existence of any such superhuman beings, powers, demons, or angels. The greatest theologian is as ignorant on this subject as the filth-covered human brute who lived on snakes and lizards and slept in caves away back in the ages when the line between man and beast was indistinguishable. Religion never had a fact to support its superhuman pretensions. All that is true in it is of this world. Yet it dogmatizes on our relations to that other world; it demands a servil faith in its existence, and it claims to be infallible in interpreting the will of the God whose existence it cannot prove. The Christians as well as the other sects hav built up a theology which they cannot demonstrate—which has not even a probability to support it—every essential dogma of which contravenes natural law, overthrows the relations of phenomena, and violates the eternal and immutable principles. Such a scheme of theology can be true only when the universe is ruled by chance, and phenomena become the haphazard results of omnipotent caprice.

Religion proves nothing, and claims to know everything about the past and future. Ignorance is ever dogmatic. It must instil faith by force and loud assumption, for it cannot demonstrate by facts, nor persuade by reason. The priest convinces by an appeal to fear, a hope of reward, a desire to propitiate the creature conjured up by the imagination. Heredity is his ally. He is indebted to the man in the cave for the soft position he holds to-day. He is the medicin man of savagery, the magic-worker of a later period, the spirit-conjuror of witchcraft and sorcery times. He is, however, less laboriously employed, for he has ceased to work the wonders which his people called miracles, and the sleight-of-hand men hav exposed his conjuring tricks. He is only a relic of the past; and why he should now be engaged in writing editorials for the Chicago Times is comprehensible only when we reflect that to some the most entertaining specimens of our species are the mummies swathed and bandaged beyond recognition which stand in gloomy niches of our museums. The editorial page of the Times is evidently the alcove wherein it keeps on view its intellectual antiquities.

Editorial Notes.

THE statue to Giordano Bruno will hav to be inaugurated without the presence of an American delegation. Mr. Wakeman reports that no one of the committee can arrange for a visit to Rome. This is regrettable, but the generous contribution of over $1,000 which the Freethinkers of the United States hav raised will show that American heresy is not backward in acknowledging the services to mankind of the hero whose monument will soon honor the Eternal City. The inauguration promises to be a great affair. We hav received a poster about seven feet long by three wide setting forth the occurrence, but as it is in Italian the only information we can glean from it is the names of Giordano Bruno and the committee who hav the project in charge. But it is evident from the size of the poster that the occasion will be one of great importance.

A GREAT many towns throughout the country held services on April 30th to celebrate the centenary of Washington's inauguration as first president of this republic. In a large number of instances ministers were chosen to deliver the oration, and the amount of pious untruth they managed to squeeze into their discourses is nauseating to one who knows the real facts about the men who more than other individuals helped to establish the independence of this country. Of course "God" was given a great deal of credit, though the English were as firmly convinced that he was on their side as our pious are that he helped the colonial troops. If he was around April 30th and turned his ear in the direction of the United States, he must hav felt by night that he was a pretty big and good individual. But if it had not been for Ben Franklin and France, we are afraid the occasion for praising him would hav been deferred an indefinit number of years.

THE Democrat, of Topeka, Kan., reports another instance of Christian endeavor to swindle the state: "The Kansas Theological School has commenced a suit in the district court against the county treasurer, county clerk, and county commissioners of Shawnee county to restrain them from selling the plaintiff's property for taxes. The petition alleges that in 1885 the board of county commissioners assessed and placed on the tax roll for taxation, lots 266 to 288, inclusiv, on Topeka avenue, city of Topeka; that said property was assessed for the year 1884 the sum of $182.75, and for the year 1885 the sum of $166.11; that in September, 1886, the property was sold for taxes and bid in by the county treasurer, who is now advertising the same for a deed. Plaintiff alleges that all these proceedings are void, for the reason that said property is exempt under the laws of Kansas from taxation, being occupied exclusivly for literary purposes, to wit: a theological school; that the teachers of said school, or some of them, liv in said building, viz., Bishop Thomas H. Vail, president and professor of systematic divinity, and Bishop Elisha S. Thomas, professor of exegesis, but that they reside there because of their connection with said institution as teachers. Plaintiff further avers that Treasurer Roberts has advertised said property for a deed, and that thereby there is threatened to be made a deed on account of said illegal assessment and taxation."

THE Rev. M. D. Shutter, of the church of the Redeemer, Minneapolis, is to be congratulated upon understanding the true principles of Americanism. In a sermon recently, the subject being "Religion and the State," he said: "I am opposed to this measure [the Blair bill], because any attempt to promote by legislation the observance of any day as a day of religious worship is no part of the function of the state. A state may simply act on grounds of general public welfare. It may require cessation from labor one day a week, if, in the judgment of legislators, that is necessary for the public benefit; but it may not require this cessation on any particular day, because that is regarded by any part of the people as a holy day, or for the purpose of promoting the observance of such a day as a day of 'religious worship.' For the state to proceed upon the basis that such a thing is demanded by the law of God, is to establish the principle that the state has a right to determin what are the laws of God. The Sabbath is in debate even among Christians. The action contemplated in the Blair bill makes the state a partner in a religious controversy, and forces it to a decision against one set of claimants and in favor of the other. Its decision must then be enforced, and this is persecution. The principle itself is the one that lies at the bottom of a union of church and state. We had a trial of the very thing to which this bill would lead in the early days of this country, when each colony was dominated by a religious sect. We hav gotten away from that condition. Let us take no backward steps."

Letters from Friends.

MOUNT JACKSON, VA., May 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I see the name of no one from Virginia that has sent anything toward the Bruno statue at Rome. Every Liberal should be proud of the erection of the greatest statue ever undertaken by man. So please find check for $3 to help that purpose. I remain, LEONARD WALTERS.

HAMMONTON, N. J., April 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find money inclosed, that the best of papers may continue its weekly visit to our humble home. The weekly contents certainly do not deteriorate. I am glad to learn there are so many able to help in the League work. Then, the "Letters from Friends" are interesting, and some amusing. I think you must hav enlightened Mr. Brown on the Blair affair surely, or he is dull of comprehension. The source for cartoons seems almost inexhaustible with Heston, and they continue very true to their mission—to enlighten such as cannot see a point unless it be tangibly presented.

One in favor of progress, D. R. WOLLISON.

CRESSOO, MICH., April 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me "Did Man Fall?" by Groh; "Pioneer Pith," by Robert Adams; "The Story of an African Farm;" "The Drama of the Nineteenth Century," by Voltairine de Cleyre, five copies; "Life of Joshua Davidson," Mrs. Lynn Linton.

The scheme of Mr. Rice in the last TRUTH SEEKER is a good one. We stand as much in need of a test now as old Elijah did, and hav got as good a claim for one. We stipulate to hav no chopping of heads because somebody happened to guess wrong, and that would be an improvement on the old style. That granit cathedral in New York city does not appear to come along, yet if you could swap Talmage for old Elijah there might be something done. Poor Talmage—he is all talk! Yours for Humanity, THOMAS KNIGHT.

WASHBURN, WIS., April 27, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I did not receive your sample copy until to-day, and I most cheerfully admit that the paper is a stanch defender of Freethought and champion of intellectual freedom. I will subscribe in the near future. I wish to call your attention to the promised catalog, as I am desirous of obtaining the works of Voltaire, Spinoza, and others, and forming a library by adding from time to time the works of illustrious freemen, both dead and living. I appreciate the noble sentiments of your paper on the labor question, as I am myself a workingman, and abhor the idea that monopoly owns the bodies of men and women, or the church the souls.

I believe with the great Paine that "the key of heaven is in the keeping of no saint." I will limit my order this time to your ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.

CHARLES L. MURDIE.

SUNSET, TEX., April 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose in this twenty-five cents in stamps for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I am trying to rile up the pool of water for the Baptists by getting our St. Remsburg here to stir it well from the bottom, so I must do a little toward paying him and not let the expense fall on a few. Please excuse imperfections of writing, on account of my age, which is sixty-nine. Yet I hav no dread of that river Jordan when Mrs. Amy Post has gone before crowned with her weight of years.

We hav a Scotch disciple of David Hume here, by the name of Charles Robertson, who has a large family, and Infidel though he is, the gentlemanly boys and ladylike girls he has ought to be an example for the whole of the neighborhood of Christians—who keep up scandal factories that run day and night. A telegraph pole is only knee-high to those factories. Friend Robertson is helping me to get Mr. Remsburg here to giv us a little talk. He is to be here the 1st of May. Long life to the Truth Seeker Company.

Yours for liberty, HARRIET DAVIS.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I send this obituary notice: Died, of Bright's disease, in Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 17, 1889, aged sixty-six years, W. E. Polhamus, born in Sodus, Wayne county, N. Y. He was a stanch Liberal for forty years, always ready to giv a reason for the doubts that were within him in regard to superstition, and to strive earnestly to teach his fellow-men not to accept any doctrin that could not be reduced to reason, and to set a good example of purity in life and character. During his last hours of pain he was visited by orthodox neighbors who entreated him to let them pray with him, but he refused all assistance of that kind and heroically died without a slavish fear. He had a faint hope in the possibilities of nature's power to giv another life, and so child-like threw himself upon the bosom of her great unknown sea. His wife was as resolute as he in refusing the offers of prayer and religious consolation. He left one son and one daughter, both Liberals. The Masons performed funeral services. A FRIEND.

DELEVAN, MINN., April 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Our little burg has just had a pleasant sensation, in the form of a course of lectures by Mrs. M. A. Freeman, of Chicago. I hav stood afar off and witnessed a Dakota cyclone; I hav noted the effect of whirlwinds on their death-dealing course; Dakota blizzards I hav faced, but I shall hav to say that of all the cyclones I ever saw, she takes the chromo. She is a whole host and houseful by herself. I rather think I should hate to be a "God" and hav her criticise me. I should consider that I was very small indeed. And about the "devil," she killed him and made hell tenantless in very short order. One good Catholic was heard to remark, "She took my devil and my hell away from me, and now I hav no use for heaven." Mrs. Freeman has struck more responsiv chords here than hav ever been touched before. Her logical illustrations are the talk of all who heard her. To see her, you would guess her weight to be about ninety pounds. To hear her, you would set her weight at about a long ton. As a champion of woman's cause, she is a success. To any of our Liberal friends who contemplate a course of lectures, I would most heartily recommend corresponding with her, and more so if they are desirous of seeing the devil roasted in his own fire, and the Jewish Jehovah made small in his own smallness.

Yours fraternally, W. L. HORTON.

OSWEGO, ORE., April 24, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: There are a great many Liberals here, but they are afraid to speak out and show their colors. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since July last, and will doubtless continue to take it as long as I liv and can pay for it. I like THE TRUTH SEEKER because everyone has his say. I believe that debates such as the "Limitations of Toleration" do much to arouse the spirit of investigation. I don't think you could publish anything more instructiv, and I further believe that such discussions would be a great inducement to Christians to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and when once started on the road of investigation they will then be led to a correct idea of mental liberty, of true morality, correct ideas of right doing, as consistent with common sense and human reason, and without regard to any belief whatever. They will then see that they hav been mistaken, and that the Bible is a Holy Queer, and will then know how to do good without a God.

Heston's cartoons are first-class. Inclosed find money, for which please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC, and "Christian Absurdities," by John Peck. Please send me a catalog of Freethought publications. EDGAR L. DAVIDSON.

SING SING, N. Y., April 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been spending a little time with my dear friend THE TRUTH SEEKER, and cannot help but mention it, for it is the happiest hour I spend; especially when I hav just had a controversy with some good Christian friend, for it seems to touch the spot, and as I read its pages it seems to gratify my feelings in showing its contempt for the infernal religious humbug which is constantly poisoning the minds of the people and manufacturing hypocrits—for, as far as I can understand, a man to be called a Christian must be either a hypocrit or a lunatic. But perhaps I do not understand the Christian religion. Well, if I wanted to become a Christian I should wish I had never understood anything, for according to the Christian the nearer a person is an idiot the better his chances are of escaping getting roasted forever in hell. If I wanted to become a Christian I should also stop reading the Bible and Christian papers, for the more I read them the more inconsistencies I find, and the humbug seems to increase instead of decrease. Now, if there are any readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that want to become Christians, I will giv the following receipt. Stop reading your Bible, for it is a divine book and you cannot fathom its depths. Leave that all to your pastor. He will do your thinking for you. Just say your prayers, and if they are not answered hav patience, watch and pray. Go to church, shut your eyes and open your mouth and swallow all the pastor says. Do not stop to investigate it, but just accept it as it is. You will then be what they call a Christian.

I hav several religious papers handed to me by my Christian friends, and as I was reading one of them to-day I came across the following from the Christian Arbitrator:

At the dedication of the new Catholic church, St. Paul's, on North Carolina street, Baltimore, on January 27th, Cardinal Gibbons, in the course of his sermon, said: "We were informed recently by the daily newspapers that a certain Antichristian Sunday-school was organized in this city for the purpose of advocating an Infidel doctrin. Several ministers appealed to the municipal authorities to suppress the school. For my part I would be sorry to see the arm of the civil law used toward the suppression of this school. Coercion is not conversion. Our divine savior never had recourse to the arm of the law or the sword in teaching his doctrin. The only weapons we ought to use are the weapons of argument and persuasion in dealing with this school. The only sword I would draw against the enemy of Christ is the sword of the spirit."

And as I read it I thought to myself, how true are the words of Col. Robert Ingersoll when he says that when the Catholic church has no power it is humility itself, but oh, if they only had the power now they had during the Dark Ages, how much differently they would act! Instead of using or offering to use argument as a weapon, they would use the thumbscrew or the rack or perhaps a slow fire to torture the existence out of those who were advocating Freethought.

CHARLES GRANT.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, April 23, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read Mr. Harrison's proclamation for the 30th inst. to be observed as a sacred day of prayer and thanksgiving, and general theological humbug. And he directs them to get at it bright and early, 9 o'clock in the morning. What a travesty on human reason for the chief magistrate of this mighty nation to be engaged in! How the humbugging Christian snipes will smile and grin and chuckle one to another, and will say, "We will hav our Jewish Godship in the Constitution in a short time, for Mr. Harrison is a holy Christian." It seems instead of the 1st of April being All Fools' day, the chief magistrate has altered that observance to the 30th. And don't let the American people forget it. Well, it's the remark often that this is a world of changes, and this is one of them. If Voltaire were living, he could add another word to his "Pocket Theology."

Let all the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER read the letter of Mr. Carlton Rice, of Hamilton, Ont., of date March 20, 1889, calmly and deliberately over, and get their friends to read it. It is on page 251 of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It's a subject I hav reflected on a great deal, but, like Mr. Rice, I hav never known the first prayer or petition that was ever answered by a Jew God, or any other god, and I hav often told many of these knowing Mormon thugs so. I hav put them to defiance to prove it. The decrees of nature do not swerve from her undeviating course to pay any attention to any or all clerical Christian twaddle and pious humbug. Now, then, ye sky-pilots, Mr. Rice givs you a fair offer, whereby you may obtain a decent fortune by proving the locality and personality of your Jewish Godship in the midst of this mighty and infinit universe. And remember, it must be outside of your vain imaginations. So just step to the front and let us know something of him, as it concerns all of us legions of godless Freethinkers. We want your definit proofs of any prayer or petition that was ever answered, as we shall consider all sky-pilots impostors till you prove your claims.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., April 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: For months I hav been a reader of your valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and as an unprejudiced reader I am led to admire the spirit of Liberality therein shown, as it certainly is a fact that many so-called Liberalists are the most il-Liberal people we meet with. In order to decide any disputed question with the greatest judgment and impartiality, it is necessary to study it in all its bearings, for and against, and no one, however much he may think he knows, has any right to pronounce judgment until a thorough investigation is had. The pronounced opinions of mankind are full of dishonesty, owing largely to the fact of preconceived ideas and motivs of selfish interest, and Liberalism is by no means an exception. I am only a pupil in this great schoolhouse for development, and after nearly fifty years of study and observation I feel that I can say, without successful contradiction, that no line of thought which has ever come under my observation possesses a monopoly of all the truth.

The beautiful allegory in No. 17 of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a happy illustration of the labor required to gain this much coveted prize, Truth. Hence the liability of all to err, the pitfalls by the way, the dishonesty, ignorance, and il-Liberality of our would-be teachers, should prompt us to study the situation, and not judge too harshly without a hearing. Even the great and noble Ingersoll, who has been as soundly abused as any other man on this continent, and who, in my opinion, stands head and shoulders above any of his traducers, and fully abreast of any living man, needs our sympathy, and I will add, charity, for some of his utterances. I am in full sympathy with Dr. Severance in her remarks on Colonel Ingersoll's Agnosticism, given in No. 17. In this the colonel is quoted as making a positiv assertion, while the testimony of millions is to the contrary, many of these standing in the foremost ranks of scientific investigation, and whose opinions are entitled to as much consideration as those of the great "Agnostic."

I hav long been a student of the religious idea, and while I hav my own opinions on this subject I am always glad to listen to those of others with tolerance. I think THE TRUTH SEEKER the best channel I know of for this purpose.

I find many of your correspondents hav outgrown the trammels of the church, and now declare themselvs free men and free women. This is as it should be, but the intolerance I often see manifested toward those who still cling to the old and nearly obsolete idea is hardly setting a good example. For my part, I hav never subscribed to the theological idea, and hav no regrets on this score. I hav only sympathy for that mind so hemmed in by church and creed that not a ray of the light of truth can penetrate it. This class of Christians is very numerous in our city, as shown by the costly and magnificent temples built for the purpose of establishing a church debt, and worshiping the personal man-made God who, in the nature of things, can hav no real existence. Let us hope that time will work a change for the better.

The Liberal element is quite large and growing here, and my object in writing, although I hav rambled out of the way, is to giv a word of encouragement and appreciation.

Long may you wave. J. W. WHITE.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., May 1, 289.

MR. EDITOR: When President Harrison said, "To the end that the people of the whole country may join in commemorativ exercises appropriate to the day on which Washington was inaugurated president of the United States," it was only a cover for this religious appointment of a day, or in other words was the keg, as it were, in which their religious porridge was to be headed up. Because when he designated the place of meeting and what course to pursue, did he not mean to ignore all those that did not meet in a house of worship and that could not join in prayer? Would he not, if he meant to be impartial, hav stopped short on that head with the above quotation? Since he has ignored you, would it not be right in justice to yourself to ignore him when he comes to ask you for your suffrage hereafter. Will you do it? Everybody knows that just as long as you will be imposed upon by an individual, just so long you will hav to be; and it is worse with politicians. It is only the kickers and organizations that make their demands with vehemence that are not ignored by these policy-seekers or office-seekers. But I venture to predict that there are very few of you that will enter a protest about the size of a ballot against this insult. I fear when it comes to your party you are like the Christian with his fetich, viz., "Though thou slay me I will fall down and worship thee;" and also, "I do love my Jesus." So it is no use talking. Liberals hav their prejudices that keep them from looking after their best interest, as well as other folks. There is not a Liberal but knows today that all the persecutions and imprisonments that hav been done in this country hav been done by the Protestants, and they derived their power through the Republican party. It will not do to say that Catholics are the most dangerous foes to American liberties we hav, when all our experience proves to the contrary. The first thing that Liberals hav got to do is to down the Protestants of this country, because they are trying to get the power before the Catholics do; and the Catholics are so shrewd they are even becoming their allies, because they well know if they ever obtain it there are so many denominations of them that they will begin to quarrel among themselvs, and in the end this means Catholic supremacy. She always curries favor with the powers that be. Whereas if we direct our batteries against the Protestants till the Catholics drop them for their allies, then we will hav the Protestants for our allies, and everybody knows that the Protestants would never consent to allow the Catholics to lead off, because if they got the power they would hold it against all dissenters. Now, all are agreed that the final conflict must come between Catholicism and Rationalism, and the above mode is the proper way to bring about the final issue. I never like to make a fight at the half-way house, because you are apt to turn those into foes who are likely to become our allies, and all Liberals know that we gain a dozen Protestant converts to one Catholic. And, in order to put it so that every Liberal can see that this is a fact, count on your fingers' ends how many ministers hav come over to us, while there is scarcely a priest. So the proper way to do is to avoid a direct conflict with the Protestants.

And there is another thing Liberals hav got to make up their mind to. Individualism will do all very well until it comes in contact with other organizations, then if you wish to accomplish anything you hav to act in a body.

The great trouble with all that are dissatisfied with the old parties is: There are no less than a dozen hobbies of reform; all contain some good ideas, but they forget that they should pool their issues. Even then they would hav a hard enough row to hoe to make a good, growing party against the powerful organized money power. Some one predicted in the formation of this government that a republic would not stand because the people would become divided up in so many factions that it would fall back into a monarchy.

JOHN W. ABBOTT.

ADRIAN, MICH., May 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: C. L. James's plan of issuing money would be of no value. All would be merely optional with the issuer. He could repudiate his neighbor's or his own. I heartily indorse J. H. Wood's plan. Let government do all the furnishing of money. In place of national banks substitute sub-treasuries. Loan money at one per cent. Depositors would be safe. Shut down the enormous drainage, bond interest. Hold a paper dollar at par—no fluctuation in money value. Labor should be adequately rewarded. A lazy parasite should not be encouraged. The efforts of any superstitious sect to monopolize the power of government should be knocked out in one round.

Hang the pope, and try to convince his adherents of their folly. The shameful Blair bill should be buried in infamy, and any effort to control affairs of state by superstitious dogmas, Comstockism, popery, or any other foolishness, should be struck by a withering influence. Such ranters as Talmage —there are many of them—ought to be forced to argue the situation with the orthodox devil in his sulphurous realm a thousand years—as long as he was chained—before being let loose upon us poor unsuspecting cusses. Amen. Lord, help.

O. S. BARRETT.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., April 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER, April 6th, is a communication from a D. W. Milk, which contains the opinions of a class of Christians who do more to clog the wheels of progress than the sanctimonious (lovers of good living and other men's wives) priests. The priest as a rule is a student, and for love of the good things of this life continues to preach hell to the superstitious, although knowing better. The Milk class read nothing but the Bible and kindred books. They know nothing about philosophical studies. They denounce Voltaire, Paine, and other Infidels with a vehemence that is amusing to the average Liberal. Those arguments are the stock in trade which they claim will and do "snow" Liberal truths under.

The historian tells us that Napoleon had the power to close his eyes and in a moment be lost in "sweet, restful, and thoughtless sleep." Milk Christians claim the same power. No person who has so weak and undisciplined a mind as to believe in the inspiration of the Bible and the immaculate conception can stop thinking of the fate of a favorit son who lies in a suicide's grave. Idiots and animals hav the power of Mr. Milk, viz., not to think. There are immutable laws established, from which nature cannot depart, as is well illustrated in the parable of the tree. The tree is responsible for the bud, the bud expands into the blossom, and both are responsible for the fruit. Man is the tree, the thought is the bud, expression of that the blossom, and from the action of both is the fruit. If the tree or man kills the bud, one of the laws has been broken, suffering is entailed, and a penalty must be paid. Colonel Ingersoll is obeying the laws established by a power to men unknown, and millions partake of the fruit, which is a "knowledge of good and evil," that is, knowledge of freedom and superstition.

They say Ingersoll and Company are tearing down and offer nothing better than Christianity.

Christianity givs:	Infidelity offers:
Ignorance.	Education.
Slavery.	Freedom.
Fear of hell.	Peace of mind.
Discontent.	Happiness.
Despondency.	Hope.
Jesus.	Humanity.
Future state.	The present.

And so on without limit.

This would be a world of intolerance if the teachers of this century were in accord with those of the first century.

All can read for themselvs. Compare the civilization from A.D. 300 to 1600 with that of B.C. 800 to A.D. 300. Christianity crushed out the civilization of the world and gave what is well termed the Dark Ages. Learning was suppressed, church and state were united, the poor oppressed and enslaved, and the accumulated learning of ages was destroyed by fire at Alexandria.

Read the "Conquest of Mexico" and Peru, by a churchly historian, and blush at the cruelty of the followers of the lamb. Fox's "Book of Martyrs" is also very entertaining to the saintly sinners.

Luther dared to rise against the church of Christ and pronounce it wrong and rotten to the core. Melancthon, Zwingle, Wesley, Calvin, Roger Williams, Campbell, Jos. Smith, and many others hav evolved from the teachings of Luther—more religions than a statistician can enumerate.

Volney's "Ruins" shows up the fallacy of all God-worship, and shows there can be found nothing better than, Be happy in the present and the future will take care of itself.

Voltaire made war upon the church in France, and upon the ruins is built up one of the greatest Infidel powers in the world, prosperous and happy, first in learning, arts, science, and mechanics.

What has the church done for Spain? The "Infidel scrip" of France is above par, while the priest-ridden country of Spain is bankrupt both financially and morally. The name of Thomas Paine is held in scorn by the church because he dared to investigate the Bible. Paine's writings precipitated the Revolution which enabled us, a mere handful, to overthrow tyranny and become an independent nation. A few years later, with peace in Europe, England could hav crushed the life out of the colonies, and to-day we might be on a par with priest-cursed Canada, not allowed to make laws without the sanction of the church.

Paine's influence kept God out of the Constitution, which made him the greatest curse of the eighteenth century in the opinion of the Christian ranters of the present day.

They ask for a better law than the Ten Commandments. The first four show the base nature of the Christian God, jealous, vindictiv, and cruel. The remaining commands were laws established and enforced by heathen nations long before Mr. Milk's God was created.

No Christian, Jew, or gentile dares to or has the inclination to follow the teachings of Jesus on the Mount. Who receives a blow and does not resent it? The slave. No man allows a thief to steal, or tolerates a borrower. Who takes no thought for the morrow, what he shall eat or wear? The tramp. These teachings are pernicious and degrading to mankind, and the people of no country can be persuaded to adopt them.

Jesus taught hell (Luke xvi). Our asylums hav enough inmates.

Many murders are committed for the sake of Jesus. Colonel Ingersoll teaches more pure and exalted religion than can be found in the Bible. Thomas Jefferson's ten rules of life form a better sermon than that of the Mount.

Great stress is laid upon Daniel's vision. As a seer he was a humbug. He could not see the powers of England, Germany, France, nor Russia. His God did not know that the earth was round, and on the opposit side would rise a kingdom that could crush his combination of kingdoms. He did not see the power of Mohammed that sweeps Christianity before it like chaff before the wind.

Christians delight in questions. I would ask a few. Is the Bible true? If so, why are the latter part of Gen. xxxvi and the latter part of 1 Chron. i, the same? How did Moses know about the kings in Israel? How could he chronicle his own death? Explain to us: Abraham pursued Lot's captors "even unto Dan." It is evident upon the face of it that Moses never wrote Genesis nor any of the other books, and they were not written until about the days of Solomon or later, most likely a thousand years after Moses. The historical part of the Bible is a strange mixture of contradictions and improbable events, interspersed with silly romances and with cruelties that would put to shame the tyrant Nero.

The God of the Christians established laws (see Lev. xix, 20; Deut. xxiii, 2, 17; xxii, 21-29; Ex. xxii, 16, 17), and then deliberately violated them by debauching the Virgin Mary; and to giv his offspring a name he ordered Joseph to marry her. Can any orthodox priest explain?

Who can reconcile the two genealogies of Christ given in Matthew and Luke? Can they tell us who made the addition to the sixteenth chapter of Mark from the ninth verse (see marginal note, New Translation)? Christianity has nothing to back it. Reason and argue as you will, it falls to the ground, an empty, soulless creed, founded by the selfishness of men upon fear and ignorance. The only true religion is love and humanity. More than this breeds slavery and oppression.

WALLACE WESTWIN.

April 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 6th I find an article from D. W. Milk, of Chesaning, Mich. Whether he is the spring from which flows the "milk of human kindness" I know not, but I am glad to know he does not favor the Blair bill, although himself a Christian. While he propounds a few questions to Colonel Ingersoll, he seems to place a chip upon his own shoulders and rather defiantly asks Infidels to knock it off. As I am rather skeptical in my views on the salvation question, I wish to return the favor of questioning, and while our gallant colonel is pouring the oil of truth into the ears of our friend Mr. Milk, I will suggest a few ideas and questions for him to answer.

We all know how easy it is to ask questions, but it is not always as easy to answer them. This can be seen in the case where the boy asked his mother who made him, and was told that God made him. Now, this was perfectly easy, as anyone who knows could hav answered, but the next question, Who made God? was rather a sticker, as she was not up to the criticism of the end-men of our present time, who (fully as intelligently) would hav said, Why, another God, of course. The (I suppose Rev.) Mr. Milk goes on to say, in contradistinction to Colonel Ingersoll, that he himself can control his thoughts and not allow any thought to be forced upon his mind; also that he can at any time stop thinking and go to sleep. In the latter I can partially agree with Mr. Milk, as every Infidel who has a clear conscience, when he is tired and sleepy, can easily lie down and go to sleep. Yet not so when these Infidels—or at least I—are awake and with mind working to know the truth, as thoughts will come without one's foreknowledge or consent. The reverend gentleman goes on to quote scripture (Matt. v, 28), and says: Now compare this with another teacher's statement, who lived over eighteen hundred years ago—a recognized author by many, if not by the colonel at this present time—who says: "Whosoever looketh upon a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart."

I suppose Mr. Milk has reference to the reported sayings of Jesus the prestidigitator. I say "the prestidigitator" to designate the particular Jesus referred to, as the name of Jesus was as common in those days as in old Mexico at the present time. Now, Jesus the prestidigitator is said to hav given utterance to the passage of scripture above mentioned, and Mr. Milk of course claims that he can keep from thinking evil or lusting after a woman, unless he wants to so do. But I fail to understand how it is possible for a person to keep from seeing, thinking of, or lusting after anything until there is a knowledge of its presence, after which it will be too late, for the crime of so seeing, thinking, or lusting has been committed or allowed, and we hav already sinned. If we cannot trust ourselvs to look upon women without committing sin by evil thoughts, we may be equally as bad in thinking of them even though they are not in our presence, as our minds are prone to wander into by and forbidden paths. How, then, are we to change our thoughts? God is said to hav created us and hav given us both our mental and physical faculties, also the passion of lust; he has also made woman the most beautiful flower in the whole garden of nature to be admired by man; then why, let me ask, has he placed such restrictions upon us as to command us to do what seems to me to be impossible? Was it so decreed, that God might show his authority over us as our infinit, all-wise father and we be his finite, weak-minded children? Is it not blasphemy to ascribe to God such teachings?

Where in the whole of thought or books can be found such blasphemy upon deity as is written in the Bible, and if the Pentateuch is true, where in existence can be found another such an infamous brute as Moses? Mr. Milk, did the thought ever occur to you, or did you keep from thinking it, just before you thought, that the Bible has made more Infidels than all other books combined? Where is there a candid, honest seeker for the truth, or in fact anyone except the ecclesiastical police force, who can read the Bible carefully and understandingly and fail to come to the conclusion either that the Bible is a fraud or that God is a wretch and unworthy the respect of man, saying nothing of duty or adoration? Such a deity Infidels cannot accept, and sooner than believe my God such an ignominious brute, having such evil attributes and propensities, I am free to say I would sooner believe the Bible a fabrication. While there is much in it that is good, all of which I accept, the book, as a whole, is beneath the respect of any fair-minded man. If I must believe that my God and my creator is susceptible of such inhuman wrath that he can be appeased and his vengeance diverted only by the suffering of either man or a God dangling between heaven and earth nailed to a barbarian cross, suffering the excruciating pains of slow death by torture, I must say I would sooner believe in no God at all. You will tell me that "God's ways are not man's ways." Well, I am glad of it. But those ways recounted in the Bible were man's ways and not God's ways, and sooner than accept such things as ordered by God, I prefer to die the death of the untold millions who hav already suffered agony of both mind and body in torture to satisfy the superstitious whims and dogmas of the hypocritical bigots who hav kept the masses in superstition, that they themselvs might liv off their ignorance. Is it not time to cry a halt and educate the masses to think for themselvs; to teach to do right from the love and justice of so doing, instead of teaching them to crouch in fear before such a God. Can we not think of a higher and nobler deity, one, at least, worthy of our respect, and one who will in the course of events, by his eternal and divine nature, bring us to a state of perfection where "fear and trembling" will be at an end, and where we shall not hav to watch our very thoughts for fear we shall offend some God who is ever waiting to "catch us napping" in order to punish us? Away with such a Jehovah, and giv us one as good as our thoughts are capable of conceiving, one who loves us and whom we can love. Better teach men to love and protect our women, and all fear of lusting after forbidden fruit will be at an end.

Giv us a full and untrammeled education, free from the contaminating influence of church or state, such as will raise the coming generations to see as much as possible of the noble works of nature, and which will not lay all the mistakes upon some unseen and unknown personage beyond the comprehension of man. Teach them to think and act for themselvs and not to rely on the saving powers of man or God, Teach them to be honorable and humane, and not to think they can commit any amount of crime and misdemeanors and then be forgiven and dwell in a haven of eternal rest. Our sins can only be forgiven by an equal amount of compensation rendered to those whom we hav sinned against.

To this end, Brother Milk, I extend an invitation for you to come to our mourners' bench. Come rejoicing in the new revealed religion of Science, one in which God is not held responsible for the sufferings of this world, but which in time will bring peace on earth and good will to men, when all will wear the helmet of peace and sing anthems of great joy. Oh, come and will you go? will you go? will you go? etc.

A. D. SWAN.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Kitty's Name.

Where Princeton's lofty mountain hights,
In Massachusetts greet the sight,
With valleys full of shades and lights,
And healthful breezes playing round,
A wondrous kitty I hav found.

She is not pink, or blue, or green,
Not extra good or extra mean,
Not very thin or very fat,
But just like any other cat;
Yet still she should be known to fame,
Because she has a wondrous name.

Now, hold your breath and listen well,
Whilst kitty's name I try to tell.

'Tis Ax-ie Prax-ie Pru-cie (do
Just wait awhile—I am not through)
Al-le-cam-pane Rox-a-na, too,
Ma-til-da Pe-tro Bangs—the rest;
Now, don't you think that cat is blest?

A bright-eyed girl and fair-faced boy
Consider her a lengthy joy,
But if they are but good and kind,
I fancy that she will not mind.

If kitty dear should chance to die,
I think some other cat should try
To raise a gravestone broad and high,
To tell the cats and dogs with breath
That kitty's form was cold in death,
And on that monument should write,
In letters legible and bright:

Poor kitty died in early fame,
From lack of breath and length of name;
Her bones within this grave do lie;
Her name livs on—too long to die.
So Ax-ie Prax-ie Pru-cie dear,
Whose form is slowly moldering here—
Al-le-cam-pane Rox-an-a true,
We cats will often think of you—
Ma-til-da Pe-tro Bangs, be blest
In kitty's heaven safe at rest—
Full many virtues you can claim,
If half as many as your name;
Your life and name we gladly tell,
Ax-ie Prax-ie Pru-cie
Al-le-cam-pane Rox-a-na
Ma-til-da Pe-tro Bangs,
Farewell!

C. Fannie Allyn.

America.

O America, how great, how wonderful, how sublime! We look at thee to-day in all thy glory—the queen of nations. Little did our forefathers think that you would some day be crowned with such a wreath of glory. Little did they think that on the foundation which they labored so faithfully to build would some day stand the greatest and grandest republic beneath the sun. But their labors were not in vain. The sword of Washington, together with the pen of Paine and Jefferson and the eloquent appeals of Patrick Henry, James Otis, and the Adamses, were the originators of American Independence. It was this strong pillar upon which they laid the foundation of our republic. Many a brave man has borne his bosom to storms of shot and shell for the sake of American Independence. Brave men were with Washington on the bloody field of Monmouth. They fought by the side of the dying Warren on the blood-soaked ridge of Bunker Hill. They were with Arnold and Montgomery in the heroic charge upon Quebec. They were with Lafayette and Pulaski at the Brandywine, with Stark at Bennington, Arnold at Saratoga, with Wayne at Stony Point, with De Kalb at Camden, and on every bloody field of the Revolution they hav fought, bled, and died that their country might be free. No nation in the world can boast of men who fought with more courage, bravery, and determination than the soldiers of the American Revolution. They were inspired by the thought that they must gain their independence, and they pushed ahead, heedless of the flying shot and shell that swept their ranks like a wild tornado. And in the last rebellion in this country there was exhibited the same determined spirit. With Grant, brave men turned defeat into victory on the hot field of Shiloh. They stood with him upon the ruined ramparts of Donelson and Vicksburg. They marched with him into Petersburg and Richmond. They stood bravely with McClellan at Antietam, with Thomas at Chickamauga, with Hooker on Lookout mountain; with Meade and Hancock they drove the rebels from the field of Gettysburg; with Sherman they advanced upon Atlanta; with Grant they plunged into the Wilderness amid a shieking storm of shot and shell. They followed Sheridan on to victory at Winchester, Cedar Creek, and Fisher's Hill. They were with Sherman on his march to the sea and in the heat of many a hard-fought fray. In the words of Ingersoll, "They finished what the soldiers of the Revolution commenced. They relighted the torch that fell from their august hands and filled the world again with light."

America need not blush at the deeds of her noble sons. Upon her scroll of fame are to be found the names of some of the bravest and noblest of the world's great heroes. We should not forget these heroes. They made our country what it is, and on May 30th an admiring nation will bedeck their graves with flowers. O America! how can you fail to honor your brave defenders? They made you the grandest nation on earth—they placed upon your brow the wreath of everlasting glory. At their feet lie the great evils that hav threatened the destruction of your liberties. On their swords and bayonets is written your history, and by their side stand the glorious stars and stripes without a stain on them. O beautiful America, I would not giv thee up for the richest seat in paradise! Although the waters of your rivers, the green grass of your valleys, the slopes of your mountains, the streets of your cities, were one day stained with blood, you are today the most beautiful, the most picturesque, the most genial country beneath the shining sun.

George J. Remsburg.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

"And now, children," said the superintendent, benignantly, "are there any questions you would like to ask before we leave this lesson?" "How long did it take you to get all the pigs in the pen the first time you tried?" inquired the sweet little girl on the front seat.

A Boston lady visiting in this city recently told some friends that her son being now five years old, she thought it proper to explain to him that Santa Claus was only a pleasant fiction. To her surprise the lad, instead of regarding the information complacently, was thrown into a towering rage. "So you've been fooling me all this time about Sandy Claws, hav you?" he exclaimed. "Well, next thing you will tell me it was all stuff about our savior. I wouldn't mind that so much, but I thought Sandy was real."

A good appetite is a great blessing. It speaks well for one's physical condition; sometimes, too, it sharpens one's wits. "Ma," remonstrated Charlie, "when I was at grandma's she let me hav two pieces of pie." "Well, she ought not to hav done so, Charlie," said his mother. "I think two pieces of pie are too much for little boys. The older you grow, Charlie, the more wisdom you will gain." Charlie was silent, but only for a moment. "Well, ma," he said, "grandma is a good deal older than you are."

The boy who gravely stated in the chemistry class that "coal is made of diamonds," belonged to that variety of original thinkers who prefer their own interpretations to blind reliance on a text-book. A governess in a private family was once astonished, in a history recitation, by the statement, "The queen, on hearing this news, was so frightened that she flew into flinders." "What can you mean?" exclaimed the teacher. "It is given in the book, 'The queen fled into Flanders.'" "Oh," replied the pupil, "I thought it meant she was frightened to pieces."

Correspondence.

Hutchison, Kan., April 25, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I am four years old. I read the children's letters. I think them so nice. Ma says I am a little Liberal. If you print this, I will write again.

Ethel I. Huston.

Corinth, Ill., April 22, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I thought I would write a few lines to the Children's Corner. My father takes The Truth Seeker. We like it better than any other paper we hav read yet. I read the Children's Corner. I like to look at the pictures also. My ma and pa are Liberals. I think I would like to see John Peck. He givs children such good advice. I hope I will see this in print. From your little friend, Rosa M. Williams (aged ten years).

April 13, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: It is Friday afternoon, and my mother has kept me home from school to pile up some wood. And I had to take a wheelbarrowful of wire and tin cans and dump it down the street. There is vacation next week. My brother came home yesterday with a headache, and I had to help him carry his papers through the rain till we were both wet through. One of my brothers went away today; he is fifteen years old. The one that came home with a headache is thirteen years old. I hav four brothers. I am ten years old. My father is a dentist, and he is forty-eight years old. My mother and father are both Freethinkers. I hav two little chickens, and my mother has a cow and about twenty-five hens. I will close.

Your good friend, Nat. D. Mead.

Talent, Ore., March 16, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I am going to try to write a nice letter for the Corner, but I expect I will fail. I like to look at the pictures in The Truth Seeker; and I read the Children's Corner. I hav been going to school, but the public school is out now. There is a select school here, but I don't go. There are many Liberals around here, and the preachers don't seem to know how to preach. I guess few of the preachers know much. We hav a nice flower garden. I don't want to tire you out with my first letter, so I will close.

Your Freethinker friend,

Clara Terrill.

Bonham, Tex., April 14, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I will now write you a letter. I am a little girl twelve years of age. I liv on a farm five miles from Bonham. I went to school this winter. Our teacher's name is Mr. Griffith. I went to thirteen parties this winter. I cut and made all of my dresses. I would like to correspond with Maggie M Wedekind. I hav a little baby brother fifteen months old. I went fishing the other day, and caught nine fish, and came home with a chill; but I was not too sick to help eat the fish. For fear I am making my first letter too long I will close, hoping to see this in print. From your little friend,

Rosa May Holland.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Dear Sister Wixon: I inclose something for the children. It isn't anything in the way of an idea. I always mean to write in some little thought of benefit. But in this I failed. Last summer I was at the Heywoods' in Princeton, and boarded a week. This was the name of the cat. I took it down, for it was quite curious. I presume Mrs. Heywood had something to do with the name.

Tuesday I went to call on Mr. and Mrs. Thorpe, Sadie, and the family, in Ballston Spa. Perhaps you remember the buying-the-cow incident. They are splendid Freethinkers—just out of the church, ardent admirers of Susan Wixon, Elmina, The Truth Seeker, etc. I had a pleasant time.

I hope you will find room for the rhyme if you are not crowded. But don't leave out anything calculated to aid and instruct the children for this little rhyme. I write most of mine on the railroad, and am going to get out a book some time if I can get a cheap publisher. I want a book to sell for about twenty-five cents apiece, leatheret covers. I am determined the outside shall not be better than the inside.

Bless you for your work. You know you are envied as well as thanked for the good you do by

Your sister truth seeker,

C. Fannie Allyn.

Science Column.

One of the Late Achievements of Electricity.

Most of my readers hav doubtless heard of that learned gentleman Prof. Elihu Thompson, the inventor of electric welding.

By careful study and experiments Professor Thompson has solved the problem of how to spare human strength in this particular line of work.

You all know what welding means, and some of you hav probably seen the blacksmiths at work at welding. When it is desired to weld two pieces of iron or steel, the pieces are heated to a white heat; they are then taken from the forge and quickly placed together, while the hammer of the smith molds the joint into the desired shape. That is the old way.

The new way, as discovered by Professor Thompson, is to do it by electricity.

When a weld is desired the pieces to be welded are placed in strong clamps. These are connected to what is called a transformer or welding coil. This in turn is connected to the dynamo which produces the powerful electric current which is to do the work. The current is turned on, and the points to be welded are brought very close together, but do not touch. This forms an arc, such as you see in the large electric lights. The electricity jumps from one point to the other, and causes the points to come rapidly to a white heat. They are then quickly brought together and a perfect weld is made, without all the hammering as in the old method, and the joint is stronger than the rest of the piece.

But this is not all that is gained by this great discovery. By this process of electric welding we are enabled to hav brass and iron firmly welded together, also copper and steel, lead and brass, and various other metals, the welding of which, formerly, was very difficult and sometimes impossible. But now it is a matter of a few seconds or minutes, and we hav a perfect joint.

This is one of the great things that science has done for humanity, and I should like any preacher to tell me of anything equal to it that Christianity has done. A. F. W.

Questions.—What is meant by welding? Describe the old method of welding. How is it done by electricity? What metals may be joined by means of this force? Which is the greater benefactor to humanity, science or Christianity? Why?

MATERIALISM:

Its History and Its Influence upon Society.

By Dr. Louis Buchner, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Address The Truth Seeker, 28 Lafayette Place.

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM

By DR. FREDERIC R. MARVIN, Professor of Physiological Medicin and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Paper, 12mo, 68pp., cloth, 50 cents.

His analysis of nerveus and mental phenomena is sharply scientific; his pathological theories are rational, clear, and modern.—Medical Review.

His language is strong and well chosen, his style admirable in its directness and brilliancy, his thought clear and logical.—Liberal Christian.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Christian Absurdities.

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

JUST PUBLISHED!

THE

Cosmian Hymn Book.

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

(Words and Music)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, ... $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ROME or REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Bible Temperance:

LIQUOR DRINKING

Commended, Defended, and Enjoined by the Bible.

BY E. C. WALKER.

This is a companion book to Remsburg's "Bible Morals." 48 pages; price 10 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE

French Revolution

ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

By W. S. BELL.

Paper, 12mo, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL,	28
JAMES PARTON,	32
HELEN H. GARDENER,	33
S. P. PUTNAM,	36
CHARLES WATTS,	37
E. A. STEVENS, Sec. A. S. U.	41
PARKER PILLSBURY,	42
ROBERT C. ADAMS,	44
J. D. SHAW,	46
F. M. HOLLAND,	47
E. B. FOOTE, JR., M.D.,	50
LUCY N. COLMAN,	51
J. H. BURNHAM,	53
L. K. WASHBURN,	63
ELLA GIBSON,	64
SUSAN H. WIXON,	67
JOHN PECK,	71
W. S. BELL,	78
E. C. WALKER,	80
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN,	84
DR. JULIET H. SEVERANCE,	87
MRS. E. D. SLENKER,	89
COL. J. R. KELSO,	91
G. H. DAWES,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.
BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.
Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.
☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist
BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."
Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.
The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.
Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.
Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

LIBERALS SUPPLIED
With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.
Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.
The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.

THE EDISON MIMEOGRAPH.
Patented by
THOS. A. EDISON.
Manifolds Autographic and Type-Written Letters, Drawings, Music, etc., etc. 3 000 copies from one original.
Send for circular and sample of work.
A. B. DICK COMPANY,
32 Liberty St., New York. 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

ANTICHRIST.
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.
144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculativ, each proved affirmativly and negativly by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.
By W. H. BURR. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.
☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O, N.Y.

The Career of Jesus Christ.
An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
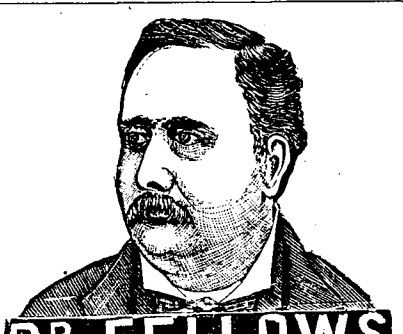
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.
The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.
Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.
The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.



EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.
The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.
For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

FATHER, SON & HOLY GHOST.
BY T. E. LONGSHORE.
5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen; $1 for 25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

Another Liberal Gone.

On April 20th, in the town of Avoca, I attended the funeral of Edward Comstock.

He has been a consistent Liberal all his life, and had the manhood to stand by the principles which he professed. He was a conscientious man, and not calculated to compete in the rough-and-tumble of life with the money-getters of the world. Though poor, he never made a debt which he did not pay, and according to his ability turned his opportunities to the best account. It was his request that no minister should be called to officiate at his funeral, as he wished it to be conducted in keeping with the principles which he had professed.

We are loth to lose the stanch old Liberals, but we are not as one without hope. For it is an encouraging fact that, as these old-timers drop out, others, younger and more vigorous, rise up to take their places and do battle for the right.

This was verified at the funeral of Mr. Comstock.

I was introduced by Charles Conderman, a young lawyer from Hornellsville, who deserves particular mention. He is a young man of promis, and one whom the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER may hear from further on.

I quote at random a few thoughts from his introductory remarks, which I think were not only appropriate to the occasion, but really brilliant. And these remarks will giv a better insight into the life and character of the deceased than I am able to giv:

He was a worshiper of liberty, a friend of the oppressed. He believed that happiness was the only good, reason the only torch, justice the only worship, humanity the only religion, love the only priest, and home the only church.

In the grave we should bury the prejudices and passions. Charity should hold the scale when we weigh the lives of men.

Although holding convictions not in harmony, perhaps, with the majority of his friends, yet it should be remembered that he who in the light of one generation is wrong, may be right in the light of the next.

Until every soul is freely permitted to investigate every creed and dogma, the world cannot be free. Mankind will be enslaved until there is mental grandeur enough to allow each man the full expression of his thought.

To the deceased threats were unavailing. The wrath of an angry God gave him no fear, the terrors of hell did not disturb him. If he was good, he was so for the sake of being good. He who does right for fear of consequences is a coward and a traitor.

About this being (God) I hav only to say, he has never written a book, inspired no barbarian, commanded no worship. Nor has he prepared a hell in which to burn the honest seeker after truth.

Thus it will be seen that, as the old landmarks are removed, young men are coming upon the stage of action to take their places and keep the car of liberty moving. This is the bow of promis to the true Liberal.

It is an oft-repeated statement of the clergy that "Infidelity may do to liv by, but those who profess it always seek the consolation of religion in the dying hour." And Infidels too often giv effect to the statement by turning their funerals into camp-meetings. The life-long influence of many Liberals is neutralized by allowing Christians to come in and hold a powwow over their dead bodies.

And yet it must be confessed that there is some excuse for such proceedings. For the friends of the deceased feel that it would be disposing of their dead as they would dispose of a dead animal to bury them without any ceremony.

And perhaps there is no Liberal whose services can be obtained to take charge of the funeral or to make any remarks, and so they call in the minister, who in one way or another turns the occasion to the advantage of the church and makes it tell against the interest of Liberalism.

Where Christians represent an Infidel as one who does not believe in heaven or hell or attend church or observe the Sabbath, and does not believe the Bible, and that he has no regard for "God, man, or the devil," as they often do, they mean to convey the idea that he is a being cursed of God and one who ought to be despised of men.

An Infidel may liv the most honest and upright life that could be imagined and yet it all goes for naught among Christians. Because the bigotry of a Christian will not allow him to rise high enough to see that any man has a right to think differently from himself.

In every Christian community Liberals are held up before the people in a false light and grossly misrepresented. Manhood and all that is good and decent are made to hinge upon a belief in Christian creeds and dogmas.

By insinuation, open misrepresentation, or direct statement, the church and the clergy try to make it appear that Infidelity has a tendency to produce a laxity in morals. That the world would go to the bad without Christian influence. That all Infidels are laboring under a sort of moral stupor, and that Christianity is the real soul and life of all that is honest and decent. Many a Liberal has been made to feel the effect of such pious misrepresentation.

No minister should be allowed to blubber over his prayers and benedictions and sing Christian hymns at the funeral of a Liberal. It has a tendency to giv the color of truth to these lying statements of the Christians, and the occasion will be made to redound to the interest of the church and the Liberal cause will be weakened. For the Liberal seems to repudiate at death what he has professed through life, and this last act neutralizes half of the good which he has accomplished.

When a Liberal dies and shows to the world that he has no fear of hell or an angry God—that death has no more terror for him than it has for a Christian—it is a triumph for Freethought. It givs the lie to the deceptiv statements of the Christians, deals a death-blow to superstition, and shows to the world that there is no truth in the hackneyed statement that "nothing but Christianity can giv solace in the hour of death."

There is nothing in an Infidel's life which leaves a more decided impression for good than to show to the world that he can die as he has lived—without any help from the minister—and that even the pretended consolations of his religion are not needed by him, living or dying.

If there is anything that cripples a Christian, it is the example of a Liberal who livs an unblemished life, and peacefully makes his exit without saying to the clergy as much as, "by your leave, sirs." Such a death givs the lie to these Christian pretensions, just as sailing around the world did to the theory of a flat earth. When Liberals take these matters into consideration they will see how important it is for them to stand up for the right, and not play into the hands of the enemy either in living or dying.

When Liberals die, if nothing better can be done, let the friends of the deceased come together and each in turn say a good word for the departed, or speak in favor of Freethought and the better way, or giv a word of encouragement to those who are trying to dispel the clouds of superstition, or offer a word of consolation and sympathy to the bereaved.

Liberals should feel that it is a duty incumbent upon them to attend such funerals when it is possible for them to do so.

I hav attended two funerals, one of a man and the other of a woman, and each made the request before dying to be buried without ceremony, if no Liberal could be obtained to deliver an address at the funeral. This is heroic, and as it should be. Let Liberals show their faith by their works, and not sow good seed all their lives long and then let it all end in a harvest for Christianity, which it will if ministers are allowed to hav a blow-out at their funerals.

It will be remembered by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER that I gave an account of Dell Keysor's death and funeral a little less than two years ago. By rounding off his life in the heroic manner he did, he exerted a most salutary influence in that community in which he lived and died.

It showed to the people as no other lesson could, that a man can liv a good and useful life, and then lie down at the end of the journey as unconcerned as an innocent child.

Liberals, let us square our lives to our professions and not allow the minister to come in and make capital out of our funerals, and make the last scene in life's drama speak in favor of the old superstition. JOHN PEOK.

Naples, N. Y.

The Late Mrs. Wheelock.

From the Janesville, Wis, Recorder.

The late Mrs. Elvira Wheelock-Ruggles was a woman of many accomplishments, and for many years, while a resident of this city, contributed of her wealth of ideas to the local press. She was born in September, 1836, and was nearly fifty-three years of age at the time of her death. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Wheelock, removed with their children, of which she was the eldest, to Janesville, in the fall of 1865, where her permanent home had been ever since.

The subject of our sketch achieved a fine education at the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary and the Fredonia Academy, of Chautauqua county, N. Y., in addition to her common school advantages. In 1868 she was married to Gen. Jas. M. Ruggles, of Havana, Ill., by whom she had two sons—James Ruggles, of Rockford, and Theodore Ruggles, of this city, both grown to manhood. Her contributions to the press were invariably signed with her maiden name, and by this she continued to be known by the general public. For some years before her marriage she obtained fame as a lecturer, and never ceased to be a stanch advocate and skilful defender of Liberal reforms, moral, political, and social. She was methodical, and stamped her productions with the spirit of earnestness which invited the admiration of all. That her convictions were sincere none could question. She advocated labor reforms for both men and women, and ever showed herself the friend of the poor and unfortunate. During her activ life, whatever question of public or social character may hav been agitating the people, she was ever found upon the side which displayed the greatest Liberality and the broadest sympathy and charity for the masses. She could tolerate an honest opponent, but was impatient with hypocrisy and pretense, not failing under such provocation to display a healthy sarcasm. The papers hav recently given the circumstances of her death at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Brown, in Rockford, Ill., April 24th, but the purpose of this articleis to make mention of her high qualities of brain and heart and the manner in which she devoted her talents for the good of mankind.

Gospel Politics.

Col. Elliott F. Shepard shows surprising inaptitude in selecting the texts for his great religious and humorous daily. He should search the scriptures. To show the colonel the sort of thing the public wants, we hav made the following collection of appropriate passages which he might hav used throughout the past ten months. It is an epitome of the late campaign and subsequent political events up to the present time:

Two men shall be in the field: the one shall be taken and the other left (Luke xvii, 36).	The campaign openeth, and its inevitable result is foreshown.
They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth (Ps. lxxiii, 9).	Each party attempteth to educate the people.
I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old (Ps. lxxviii, 2).	Colonel Shepard taketh part in the discussion.
The cities of the south shall be shut up (Jer. xiii, 19).	He also waveth the bloody shirt.
They are corrupt, and speak wickedly concerning oppression (Ps. lxxiii, 8).	The party of the Republicans seeketh after boodle, and deceiveth the people.
They are inclosed in their own fat (Ps. xvii, 10).	A certain one, Foster, giveth a valuable hint.
And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt offerings (Jer. xvii, 26).	And the party fryeth out the fat wherewith it may anoint its chosen.
And the cup was found in Benjamin's sack (Gen. xliv, 12).	The campaign closeth. Benjamin is taken and Grover is left.
They are brought down and fallen: but we are risen and stand upright (Ps. xx, 8).	Colonel Shepard exulteth;
When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn (Prov. xxix, 2).	But all virtuous folk are cast down.
I will return unto mine house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished (Luke xi, 24, 25).	The king enjoyeth his own again, and Benjamin entereth the White House.
And he said, Go thy way, Daniel (Dan. xii, 9).	The old order changeth.
Behold, Elijah is here (1 Kings xviii, 8).	Giving place to new.
Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us (Gen. xxxii, 20).	Benjamin chooseth a premier.
Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in and dwell there (Luke xi, 26).	And he selecteth his other secretaries.
What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs (Jer. xxiv, 3).
The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things (Jer. li, 19).	He taketh a ninth counselor, that the earth may bring forth her increase.
The young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet (Ps xci, 13)	The premier is puissant and greatly exalted. He is the chiefest among several.
O deliver not the soul of thy turtledove unto the multitude of the wicked (Ps. lxxiv, 19).	Colonel Shepard predicteth for him an aggressiv foreign policy.
My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations (Jas. i, 2).	But breatheth a silent prayer for the preservation of his innocency.
Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf: in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil (Gen. xlix, 27).	Yet the soul of the premier quaileth not for itself and showeth no signs of travail.
He maketh them also to skip like a calf (Ps. xxix, 6).	Benjamin proceedeth to the distribution of the offices.
In those days they shall say no more, The fathers hav eaten a sour grape and the children's teeth are set on edge (Jer. xxxi, 29).	He purgeth the civil service.
I discerned among the youths, a young man void of understanding (Prov. vii, 7).	He believeth in the descent of honors even unto the third generation; and showeth respect unto the children of the great.
I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made (Ps. cxxxix, 14).	He filleth the Austrian mission.
Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him (Prov. xxix, 20).	Colonel Shepard praiseth the appointment, and giveth his reasons.
I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top (Ps. cii, 7).	When he filleth the German mission, Benjamin runneth amuck.
My kinsfolk hav failed, and my familiar friends hav forgotten me (Job xix, 14).	Colonel Shepard confideth what his own position is.
For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south (Ps. lxxv, 6).	He bewaileth his lot.
Gad, a troop shall overcome him (Gen. xlix, 19).	And showeth the cause of his lamentations through the night watches.
And the last state of that man is worse than the first (Luke xi, 26).	The seekers after high places encompass Benjamin round about.
And the famin was sore in the land (Gen. xliii, 1).	Indiana outdoeth Ohio.
O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselvs together to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-hacerem (Jer. vi, 1).	Many hunger in vain for some good thing.
But Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs (Gen. xliii, 34).	They go their way, finding nothing to devour. Panic and discord prevail in the party of the Republicans.
There be three things which be too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not (Prov. xxx, 18).	Benjamin knoweth not how he may approve them.
	Colonel Shepard resigneth hope, but marveleth greatly at the times.

—Eureka Bendall in Puck.

GODS AND RELIGIONS
OF
ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL,
Price, 25 Cents.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Deathbed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

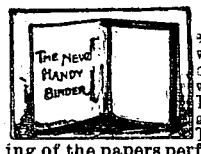
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257.

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular, Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c.

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right,

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 190 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

MICHIGAN has forest fires.

FRENCH elections giv majorities to Boulanger.

COUNT TOLSTOI, the despotic and hated Russian minister of the interior, is dead.

ONE of the Washington centennial arches will be reproduced permanently in marble.

THE Haymarket monument at Chicago, in honor of the police, will be unveiled May 30th.

GENERAL BUTLER and Admiral Porter are assailing each other's war records with virulence.

THE City of Paris has crossed the ocean in 5 days 23 hours and 7 minutes, breaking the record.

AT Pottsville, Pa., on the 9th, a car fell five hundred feet down a mining-shaft and killed ten men.

ONE hundred thousand Americans are in Paris viewing the Exposition. The American exhibit is splendid.

IOWA Catholics are raising a fund to be presented to Cardinal Manning on the coming jubilee of his consecration.

THE Scott temperance act, a Prohibition measure, has been repealed in several counties of the province of Ontario.

THE sale of stand-seats at New York's centennial brought $90,000, but $30,000 is all that can be found of the money.

AT Kalamazoo, Mich., on the 8th, six women were killed and five injured by collision of a street-car and a locomotiv.

WASHINGTON Catholics are preparing a great public reception to Bishop Keane, rector of the University, on his return from Rome.

A WIND-STORM on the 10th did much damage throughout the eastern and central part of the country, and caused the loss of several lives.

THE statistics of divorce asked for in Parliament by Gladstone, that he might lead a movement against the practice, hav been prepared, and show large increase.

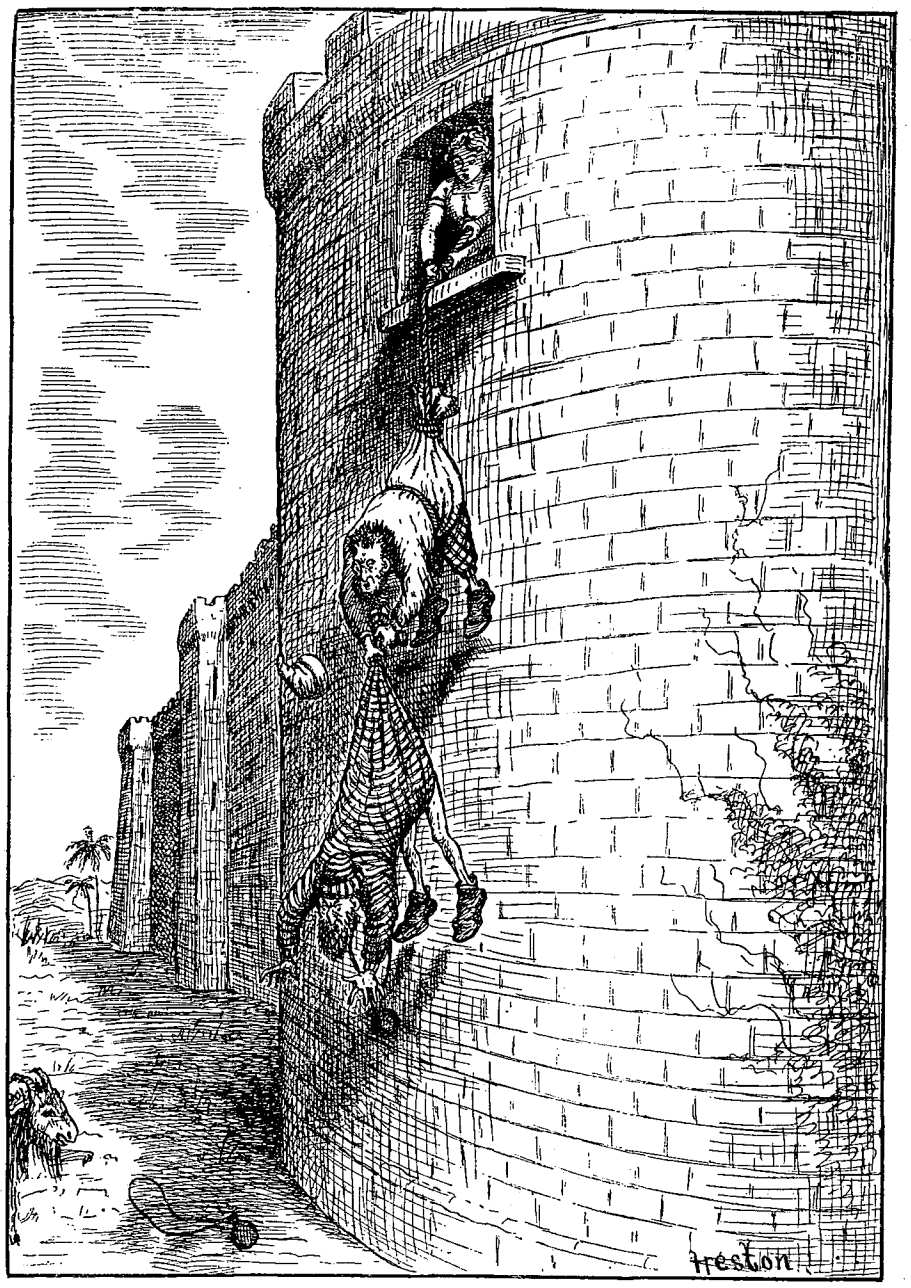
UNDER the anti-clerical laws lately secured by Mexican Radicals, Bishop Moreno has been arrested and fined at Silas, Mex., for wearing a cassock in the streets.

A PIOUS deacon of Danbury, Mass., named Bates, on the 9th came near getting lynched for horsewhipping three women who were picking wild flowers in his lot.

MANY boomers crowded out of Oklahoma hav started to settle on the Sioux reservation, containing eleven million acres, which it is understood will be opened to the public.

WANAMAKER, who raised the corruption fund that Quay used to elect Harrison, is expected to raise the money for the Pennsylvania Prohibitionists in the coming election.

A COLLIERS' strike in Germany is being attended by more trouble than any previous one in Europe. Several men hav been killed. Troops numbering ten thousand are on duty.



NEAR Buffalo, N. Y., there hav been unearthed eleven human skeletons with skulls indicating a lower order of intelligence than any before found, scarcely above the ape. It is thought that they may constitute the "missing link."

RICHMOND, Va., negroes hav been attacked with a wholesale and unprecedented religious frenzy. Hundreds go about in the streets speaking to all they meet and singing their experiences and telling of their talks with spirits from heaven.

ENGLAND, Russia, Austria, Germany, and Italy hav directed their French embassadors to absent themselvs from Paris during the Exposition, to show disapproval of the principles of the French Revolution which this exhibition is to celebrate.

THE custom of restitution by handing money stolen from one's fellow-men over to the priests, is being followed by Miss Drexel, who was left $2,000,000 by her father the Philadelphia banker. She has retired to a convent to meditate some plan for evangelizing the negro and Indian races.

ON the 6th a boy aged ten had the unpleasant experience of spending a night adrift on the bay at New York with a religious madman, his stepfather. Then after being taken about all the morning by his relativ to the Y. M. C. A. rooms and such places, the boy was rescued by a policeman.

RAHAB ASSISTETH THE SPIES TO ESCAPE.

Then she let them down by a cord through the window: for her house was upon the wall and she dwelt upon the wall.—Joshua ii, 15.

Odds and Ends.

NOAH would hav failed as a railroad man. He even built an ark to keep stock from being watered.—New York Mail.

VISITOR (at the museum): "Where is the 'Fasting Man,' boss?" Keeper (absent-mindedly): "He's just gone out for supper; he will be back in a minute."—Sun.

STERN parent (to a young applicant for his daughter's hand): "Young man, can you support a family?" Young man (meekly): "I only wanted Sarah."—Boston Post.

To find on the ballet-girl science's seal
Is something we'd scarcely expect,
Yet she is, beyond question—the truth to reveal—
A creature of gauze and effect. —The Stage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL teacher: "There are just a few moments now before school closes. Would any of you like to ask a question?" Thoughtful pupil: "Yes'm, I should. When Adam fell, do you suppose Eve laughed?"—Exchange.

ST. PETER (sternly): "Young man, put away that note-book and pencil." New York reporter: "You will hav to excuse me; but I am due this afternoon at a New York seance, and this article will be a clean 'scoop' for our evening edition."—Time.

A DEVOUT old deacon of Glasgow
Would every Sunday to class go.
When they sat on his hat,
He said "God bless our flat,"
This pious old deacon of Glasgow.
—Time.

AUNT SUSAN (to Boston girl, who has just returned from New York): "And how did you enjoy yourself, Carrie?" Carrie: "I had a very enjoyable visit, aunt; but it was positivly shocking to see so many people without glasses."—Boston Transcript.

THE conversation turned upon a certain gentleman who is not what you may call a brilliant speaker. "He has only three faults," a friend apologetically remarked: "first, he reads his speeches; second, he reads them badly; third, they are not worth reading."—La Caricature.

MRS. STUBBINS: "What's the matter, neighbor? You look as though you was in a peck of trouble?" Mr. Jobbles: "It's that boy o' mine, Mrs. Stubbins. His goin's on is downright awful." Mrs. Stubbins: "Ah, well, boys will be boys, as the sayin' is. Wot's he done now?" Mr. Jobbles: "Bin an' jined the Salvation Army." Mrs. Stubbins: "Oh, the 'ardened young willain!"—Pick Me Up.

"CHARLOTTE, my dear, how is it I find you weeping? Hav you bad news from your husband?" "Oh! worse than that! My Arthur writes me from Karlsbad, that he would die with ardent longing for me, were it not that he could gaze affectionately at my picture and cover it with a thousand kisses every day." "That is really very nice of him; and pray is it that you are crying for? I would giv anything to hav such a poetic and tenderly loving husband as you hav!" "Ah! yes, my Arthur is very poetical; but let me tell you that, just to try him, I slipped my mother's photo into his traveling bag instead of my own before he started!"—Fliegende Blatter.

PROHIBITIONIST: "And you never touch a drop of liquor on principle? Of the wine that betrays—that brings the trembling hand, the cloudy brain, the unsteady steps? We cannot hav too many men of your moral fiber—you must join our Prohibitionist society—what is your profession?" Mr. Cold Steele: "Bank burglar."—Munsey's Weekly.

A FRESH young man burst into Harry Miner's office last Wednesday with blood in his eye, and found that individual in charge smoking contentedly a fragrant perfecto. He objected strongly to the amount of a bill for program advertising, and did not know that the unruffled smoker who took him in in such a maddeningly quiet way was the great mogul himself. At last he lost all patience. "Well, I'll see Mr. Miner about this. Where is he? I want to see some one a blanked sight higher than you, that's certain. Who can I see higher than you around here?" "God," answered Miner, pointing reverently ceilingward with his cigar, "is the only one higher than I, young man, around this office."—Dramatic Mirror.

FISHING 'midst the flowers of May,
Maud and I went yesterday;
Not a ripple stirred the stream—
Life seemed like a tranquil dream.

Dimple-cheeked and rosy fair,
With sunny locks of golden hair,
Maud knew not my inmost wish—
All her mind was just to fish.

Each of us our lines threw in,
But I could not draw a fin—
While Maud was busy throwing out
Now a chub and now a trout.

Long I toiled and much I thought—
Still no fish I moved or caught;
All the beauties of the brook
Ran to Maud's, and shunned my hook.

Yet their choice I could not blame—
I own I should hav done the same;
And, finding nothing else to do,
I was caught on Maud's hook, too!

We furled our lines. I cannot tell
When or how this change befell;
But her soft hand held by mine
Outthrilled the gamiest trout and line!

Though no fish adorned my hook,
On my lips reward I took—
Took it often and anew,
As our homeward lines we drew.
—Galveston News.

Gems of Thought.

To be slavish, is to invite a tyrant.—Anon.

THE man
Of virtuous soul commands not, nor obeys.
—Shelley.

THERE is only one thing worse than the desire to command, and that is the will to obey.—Professor Clifford.

A DAY will come when the European God of the nineteenth century will be classed with the gods of Olympus and the Nile; when surplices and sacramental plate will be exhibited in the museums; when nurses will relate to children the legends of the Christian mythology as they now tell them fairy tales.—Winwood Reade.

AS many customs deemed right by our ancestors seem detestable to us, so many customs which we think proper our more civilized descendants may regard with aversion.—Spencer.

WHEN modern men write they so fix and dispose their words that the words suggest the meaning. It was different with the Holy Ghost. He expected the reader to fix upon a meaning, and then make the words accommodate themselvs to the meaning he desired them to convey.—Saladin's God and His Book.

NOTHING delights the average minister more than to find that a passage of scripture is capable of several interpretations. Nothing in the inspired book is so dangerous as accuracy. If the holy writer uses general terms, an ingenious theologian can harmonize a seemingly preposterous statement with the most obdurate fact. An "inspired" book should contain neither statistics nor dates, as few names as possible, and not one word about geology or astronomy.—Ingersoll.

OUR best way of learning how to promote progress in the future is to find out what has been the chief means of its advancement in the past.—Robert C. Adams in Pioneer Pith.

I HAV but one lamp by which my feet are guided; and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past.—Patrick Henry.

To assure men that they are depraved is to induce them to act accordingly.—Robert Adams.

MANKIND are not so wicked as certain people exclaim in hopes of governing them. That the devil may be in the bodies of the theologians I am ready to allow; but assuredly he is not in mine.—Voltaire.

HISTORICAL investigations hav revealed to us the origin and growth of the Bible; we know that by this name we designate a collection of writings, as radically unlike in origin, character, and contents as if the Nibelungen Lied, Mirabeau's speeches, Heine's love poems, and a manual of zoology had been printed and mixed up promiscuously, and then bound into one volume. We find collected in this book the superstitious beliefs of the ancient inhabitants of Palestine, with indistinct echoes of Indian and Persian fables, mistaken imitations of Egyptian theories and customs, historical chronicles as dry as they are unreliable, and miscellaneous poems, amatory, human, and Jewish-national, which are rarely distinguished by beauties of the highest order, but frequently by superfluity of expression, coarseness, bad taste, and genuin oriental sensuality. As a literary monument the Bible is of much later origin than the Vedas; as a work of literary value it is surpassed by everything written in the last two thousand years by authors even of the second rank, and to compare it seriously with the productions of Homer, Sophocles, Dante, Shakspere, or Goethe would require a fanaticized mind that had entirely lost its power of judgment; its conception of the universe is childish, and its morality revolting, as revealed in the malicious vengeance attributed to God in the Old Testament and in the New.—Nordau.

IT strikes me that God might write a book that would not necessarily excite the laughter of his children. In fact, I think it would be safe to say that a real God could produce a work that would excite the admiration of mankind. . . . The man who now regards the Old Testament as, in any sense, a sacred or inspired book, is, in my judgment, an intellectual and moral deformity. There is in it so much that is cruel, ignorant, and ferocious that it is to me a matter of amazement that it was ever thought to be the work of a most merciful deity. . . . Admitting that the Bible is the book of God, is that his only good job? Will not a man be damned as quick for denying the equator as for denying the Bible? Will he not be damned as quick for denying geology as for denying the scheme of salvation? . . . To each reader the Bible conveys a different meaning. About the meaning of this book, called a revelation, there hav been ages of war and centuries of sword and flame. If written by an infinit God, he must hav known that these results must follow; and thus knowing, he must be responsible for all. . . . Nothing can be clearer than that Moses received from the Egyptians the principal parts of his narrativ, making such changes and additions as were necessary to satisfy the peculiar superstitions of his own people. . . . According to the theologians, God, the father of us all, wrote a letter to his children. In every land, where this letter from God has been read, the children to whom and for whom it was written hav been filled with hatred and malice. They hav imprisoned and murdered each other, and the wives and children of each other. . . . All that is necessary, as it seems to me, to convince any reasonable person that the Bible is simply and purely of human invention—of barbarian invention—is to read it. Read it as you would any other book; think of it as you would any other; get the bandage of reverence from your eyes; drive from your heart the phantom of fear; push from the throne of your brain the cowled form of superstition—then read the holy Bible, and you will be amazed that you ever, for one moment, supposed a being of infinit wisdom, goodness, and purity to be the author of such ignorance and such atrocity.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 21. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 25, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

SUNDAY AS THE SABBATARIANS WANT IT.

Notes and Clippings.

In Poonah the nativs say of the total abstaining soldiers: "They cannot be Christians—they are so good."

The Seventh Conference of the German Freethinkers' Union takes place at the Elysium Hall, Chemnitz, to-day and to-morrow.

Col. Elliott F. Shepard is talked of in Washington for minister to Russia. Colonel Shepard would be a persona grata to the czar, says the World. He is a truly good man and he can be more kinds of a—of a—hustler than one would think to look at him.

Walt Whitman, the poet, will be seventy years old on May 31st. A dinner in his honor will be given at Camden. The World reports that among those who will probably be present are Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Mark Twain, E. C. Stedman, and others of equal prominence.

General Butler said to a Washington newspaper man a few days ago: "I hav had all kinds of abuse and I am used to it. I hav been called everything—everything," he added, with an added slant to his left eyelid, "except a damned fool, and no one ever called me that."

The theory is now offered that General Boulanger was tricked out of France by the acute ministry which desired to keep him away in order to stop the excitement produced by his presence. The minister of the interior, M. Constans, sent for one of the high police officers and commanded him to hav six determined fellows, who would be intimidated by nothing, ready to arrest General Boulanger without legal authority. The police officer endeavored to get the order modified, but without avail, and thereupon, as it was hoped he would, went and told the general, who fled.

Says the Sun: "It has been evident at the recent meetings of the Nineteenth Century Club, which has held its last meeting for the season, that the death of its founder and president, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, was a heavy loss to it in many ways. He not only spent his own time and means in its behalf, but he also induced many other notable men to take an interest in it and join in its debates. The absence of his suggestiv mind, which constantly supplied novel themes for debate, is keenly felt by the members of the club. It is doubtful whether the club will be able to maintain its existence long after the death of its founder."

The man out West who is pretending to be a new messiah and has got into trouble on that account, is not the first of his kind. There hav been at least three other claimants of messiahship within the past few years. One of them appeared in Australia, where he met with poor success. Another of them, who appeared in southern Russia, was a woman named Gabacrewicz, who pretended to perform miracles, and created a prodigious sensation among the peasantry, until the government sent her to prison. Still another, who appeared in Arabia among the Bedouins, some of whom believed in him, was a Jew, who came forth from the desert, where he had spent many years in mortifying the flesh, and who was a wonder-worker until found out. Our western pretender is not a novelty in his line. Other messiahs of the kind hav turned up now and then in many countries during the past two thousand years.

A gypsy evangelist has appeared in the West. Says the Cincinnati Enquirer: "Gypsy Smith broke down all prejudice on Sunday at Trinity church. He speaks as if composing cable dispatches at a cost of a dollar a word. He has but little use for adjectivs. No one can fail to understand him. He has far superior tact to Sam Jones in manipulating a congregation. He uses no slang and is never vulgar. Sometimes like an auroral light he shoots up a scintillating flame of eloquence, and is always luminous." And the question is, can he turn the enthusiasm of his hearers into cold cash by those flames of eloquence?

The Universal Congress of Freethinkers will be held at Paris September 15th to the 22d. Among the topics set down for debate are the following: Religion in the Light of History and Science, Liberty of Conscience, the Scientific Basis of Morality, Woman's Rights, Education, the Duty of Parents and the State toward Children, Legislativ Reforms necessary to secure practical Liberty of Conscience, State Subvention of Religions, How best to combat Superstition. The last day of the Conference will be devoted to visiting the Pantheon, the monuments of Dolet, Voltaire, and Diderot, and the Museum of Religions founded by M. Guimet. In the evening there will be a fraternal banquet.

The great strikes now in progress in Germany are said to be stimulated by the secret Socialist organizations that exist in the empire, notwithstanding the laws against them. In France in the recent municipal election at Narbonne the Socialist candidates were successful, and a crowd of men paraded the streets singing the "Marseillaise." At the Hague on Sunday night a body of Socialists hauled down the royal standard from the Great Tower and hoisted the Socialist flag in its place. At St. Petersburg a large number of military officers, suspected of Nihilism, hav been arrested on the charge of engaging in the recent attempt to assassinate the czar. These events indicate renewed activity among the Socialist leaders in several of the countries of Europe.

An up-town preacher is troubled over the somnolent habits of some of the members of his church who fall asleep in their pews before he is half through with his sermon. He has just given them a warning from one of the stories told by Paul du Chaillu, when he came here after traveling over Lapland. When the traveler visited the churches of the Laps, which are of the Lutheran faith, he found that some queer devices were adopted to keep the people awake during the sermon. The minister holds a large baton by his side, and, when he sees that his hearers are falling asleep, he beats it noisily upon the pulpit, while at the same time the sexton seizes a long stick, with which he pokes the sleepers in the ribs as he walks around the church. By these means the devout Laps are kept awake under the preaching. The New York clergyman told his hearers that this was an excellent custom worthy of adoption here, but thought that in at least one church the preacher would hav too hard work in plying his baton, and that the sexton would never get a rest from poking his long stick into the sleepers' ribs.

Communications.

In Defense of Atheism.

In the present age the great majority of civilized men are given but very little to deep thought on religious matters, and of the small minority who do devote a portion of their time to this subject, by far the greater number take for their theme some petty point for dispute and dismiss the more important question of the truth or falsity of the first principles of religious creeds, and it is among this class that I must place Mr. Beecher. It seems to me that some sort of a religion is a necessity to him, and arguing in a necessitarian fashion, he is unable to free himself wholly from the superstitions forced upon him from childhood, and is therefore thus debarred from arriving at a true estimate of the value of the facts placed before him.

Mr. Beecher tells me that "I amuse him." Let him be amused, if he can find sufficient for amusement in a discussion of this kind. For my part, I regard the subject as far too serious to admit of amusement. Would it not be better to approach this question in a more serious light?

In taking upon myself the simple task of answering his somewhat timid criticism of my "Plea for Atheism," I will say at the outset that I thoroughly understand the drift of his first two questions. The meaning of the term Agnosticism is, "I do not know," and the Atheist, likewise the Theist, is in precisely the same dilemma. But while the Atheist frankly acknowledges that he does not know, the Theist asserts that he does know, and, therefore, assumes that there "must be a God." The distinction, however, between the Atheist and the Agnostic is that the latter makes a blank avowal of ignorance while the former does not, affirming what is true and denying what is untrue. And while various sects of Theists do affix arbitrary meanings to the word God, and these meanings in their own terms being so self-contradictory, the Atheist then rejects them all as unsatisfactory, and accepts nothing but what is compatible with reason and common sense.

Not knowing any person or persons who would be so foolish as to boldly declare there is no God, I am at a loss to find any term to designate them. However, no truly scientific thinker could be so dogmatic as to declare emphatically "there is no God." The question is truly an undecidable one, and is to the scientist a question of no very great importance whatever. It is as difficult for the Theist to prove the existence of God as it is for the Atheist to disprove it. But Mr. Beecher must not forget the one indispensable rule of logic, that until a proposition has been proved to be true, it practically remains untrue. Therefore, how can he expect the Atheist to disprove that which cannot be proved?

Mr. Beecher's reference to those few "savage tribes" as being Atheists because they are without "idea" of God, is too mean and contemptible to merit any reply from me.

Mr. Beecher then informs us that his position is this: "Ignorant Theists are prevented from crime by their belief, and intellectual Atheists are not induced to crime by their belief." Now, as it is only through having reached a certain stage of intellectual development that a man becomes an Atheist, it is self-evident, and a fact that Mr. Beecher cannot deny, casting aside his allusion to those few savage tribes, that the criminal class of our population is not to be found among them. And if Mr. Beecher's position is true, that "ignorant Theists are prevented from crime by their belief," we must look for all our criminals emanating from educated Theists. Then would it not be much better to leave the people in ignorance than to educate them, and thus make criminals of them? But history itself refutes Mr. Beecher's position. It tells us that the world was most sinful when it was most ignorant, and it was not until science and Freethought stepped in, hand in hand, to lift up a struggling humanity, that people hav become more true to each other. Sin and crime were never so rampant and widespread as when the Christian church was supreme, and it is only now the church is losing her power that the people hav become more free socially and morally.

I do not think the effect would be salutary if it was demonstrated within twenty-four hours that there was no God, neither would it be salutary if it was likewise demonstrated that there was a God. But if Mr. Beecher had asked me whether it would be salutary if "Atheism" was universally established within the next twenty-four hours, I should hav answered him, Yes, because just as Theism not only implies a belief in God but also the duty of obedience to his supposed laws, so does Atheism not only imply a non-belief in God, but also the duty of accordance with the known laws of nature. And it is only by finding out the laws of nature and conformity to them that man has made any improvement. Man has suffered much from obeying God's supposed laws.

Mr. Beecher then charges me with "plagiarizing moral precepts from Christianity and calling them teachings of Atheism." I venture to think that in thus accusing me Mr. Beecher has been rather too presumptuous. Be it noted that he has put his own meaning to the "obligation that everyone in society owes to his neighbor." The obligation is not, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," but, Justice toward each other, for you can be just to friend and foe alike, but you cannot "love" them. Wherefore now do I "plagiarize?" Methinks the charge is more applicable to Mr. Beecher than to myself, for has he not plagiarized pagan maxims, and put them forward as Christian moral precepts? If Mr. Beecher will refer to "The Bible in India," by Jacolliot, pages 244–5, he will find a few thoughts and maxims of Christna, among which is the following: "Love of his fellow-creature should be the ruling principle of the just man in all his works, for such weighs most in the celestial balance." Also you will find many more of the "moral precepts" claimed by Christianity. Who is the plagiarist?

I quite agree with Mr. Beecher that to the "extent that Christianity and Atheism teach morality to that extent they are beneficial," but I assert that Christian teachings are decidedly immoral, for from a religion which begins with social treachery, and ends with wantonly shedding the blood of the guiltless, no very pure and exalted code of morals is to be expected. I am next accused of stealing the fruits of experience and offering them for inspection as the tenets of Atheism. My Atheism is the "fruit of my experience." Let me ask Mr. Beecher, Can a man steal that which is his own? Mr. Beecher also asks me to substitute "reason" for "Atheism," and all will agree with me. What is Atheism but the results of our ordinary intellectual faculties, i.e., reason, aided by knowledge and experience. Friend Beecher, if there were sufficient ground for "amusement" in this discussion, it should be on my side, at your decidedly bad logic.

I am told that there is very little in my "plea" worth arguing, or even discussing, but yet, with seeming bad taste, Mr. Beecher occupies the greater portion of his articles in reply to me, and has left but very little to each of the other of his critics.

In my "Plea for Atheism," I asked Mr. Beecher to giv me a definition of what he meant by the word "God." Although he has not done so in his reply to me, I hope I shall not be considered impetuous if I take his definition as given to Professor Haskell, as meant for myself. Mr. Beecher there defines God as "incomprehensible intelligence," but I am unable to accept this as a definition. What is a definition? A definition is to describe the unknown in the terms of the known. But to define God as "incomprehensible intelligence" is, to me, describing the unknown in the terms of the still more unknown. If it is incomprehensible, how does Mr. Beecher comprehend anything concerning it? I would also ask what he means by "intelligence?"

JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH.

Forgery of Ancient Manuscripts.

Jean Hardouin, the learned French Jesuit, was born in 1646. He was the son of a bookseller. At the age of thirty-seven he was appointed librarian of the college of Louis le Grand, in Paris. At the age of forty-four he began to suspect that certain writings of the Christian fathers were spurious. Continuing his researches he became convinced that they were all fabricated by the Benedictine monks after the revival of learning; and further, that most of the classical Greek and Latin literature was of like origin.

Having published his startling opinions he incurred ecclesiastical censure, and in 1708 was compelled, like Galileo, to make a public retraction. His book was suppressed and he was debarred from promotion. Furthermore, from the manner in which he was replied to by scholars all over Europe, conspicuous among whom were Basnage, Leclerc, Lacroze, Ittig, and Bierling, everybody became convinced that in spite of Hardouin's great learning, he was wrong about the fabrication of the classical literature, and especially the writings of the Christian fathers.

Hardouin was fifty-two years of age when he was compelled to make his public retraction. He lived thirty-one years longer and died leaving a manuscript in Latin, written in the last year of his life, in which he reiterated his former opinions with emphasis and supported them with powerful arguments, scarcely deigning to allude to his former antagonists, whom he tenderly characterized as "good men, of sound minds, but nevertheless rather weak." But adverting to his trial and condemnation in 1708 he says:

> If the holy apostolic see wishes hereafter to pass judgment upon my present work, may I liv to see the day; but I trust it will not submit the case to judges taken from the royal family (familia regulari), who think that because any part of those so-called ancient writings emanated from their bosom, therefore they must be saved at all hazards. Let the case be submitted to secular theologians, or to men of character and standing belonging to those orders who wish to preserve only the good in religion, and are willing that the bad should perish.

One assertion of Hardouin, if true, is of great weight in favor of his opinions, to wit, that there are no manuscripts older than the early part of the fourteenth century, except the holy scriptures. The work of forgery, he says, began about the year 1335, when Petrarch found some of Cicero's "Familiar Epistles" and two of his orations. In the next century Poggio Bracciolini discovered the entire collection of Cicero's "Epistles to Atticus," also a few to Brutus and to Quintus.

Poggio is now proved to hav forged the "Annals of Tacitus;" and when the work was first published in 1468, there was appended to it "A Dialog Concerning Oratory," which, though anonymous, was assigned to Cornelius Tacitus. It purported to be written in the sixth year of Vespasian, A.D. 75. But Lipsius, in 1574, could see nothing of the peculiar style of Tacitus in it, and was unable to determin who wrote it. Other scholars could not agree whether it belonged to Tacitus, Pliny the Younger, Suetonius, Quintillian, or some unknown author. The truth is, it cannot be ascribed to any ancient author. It was probably forged by Poggio. Hardouin says that the name of the ancient author was sometimes purposely suppressed, so that in a later age the work could be ascribed to some great name.

The earliest of these systematic forgeries were in Latin, because it was some time after the revival of learning before scholars mastered the Greek language. Poggio could write excellent Latin, but made no attempt at Greek. And it is a remarkable fact that the works of Tertullian, the earliest Latin father, were discovered by Poggio.

No printed edition of the Old Testament in Greek was in use among the Greeks in Hardouin's time, nor did they hav a New Testament in Greek before 1638. There were many Greek manuscripts in Italy, but they were of recent date and apparent translations from the Latin. Hence, he suspected that most of the Greek books were first written in Latin, and sent to Italy to be translated into Greek. Only a few went to Constantinople. Indeed, there were never many Greek manuscripts found in the East, but in the West they abounded. Why? Because there they were fabricated. Hence, says Hardouin, we find in them so many Gallicisms.

And in corroboration of the priority of Latin fabrication it is noticeable that where there is a Greek and a Latin codex the Latin is generally, if not always, the earliest discovery. And if the forgers of the Greek manuscripts betray themselvs by Gallicisms, it may be added that the Latin forgers use words that are designated in our lexicons as "bad or used only by writers of an inferior class;" for example, Christus and Christianus, as found in the "Annals of Tacitus," in "Pliny's Letters," in "Suetonius," and in all the Latin fathers.

The name Christus in Latin is an absurdity and a fraud. The Hebrew word for anointed was mashiach, and the Aramaic or Syriac meshiha, which, being translated in Greek, was christos. The Latin equivalent was unctus, but the Roman church preferred a transfer to a translation, and therefore called their man-god Christus, as if that was the Hebrew surname of Jesus. And so the fraud has been perpetuated. Dr. Murdock's translation of the ancient Syriac New Testament, which is claimed to be an older version than the Greek, has no Christ in it. And among many evidences of the priority of the Syriac version is the text of John i, 41, which reads: "We hav found the messiah (i. e., the anointed);" but the Greek scribe enlarges it so as to read:

> We hav found the messiah (ton messian), which is, being translated, anointed (christos).

There is no Greek word messias except in the fourth gospel. It is not in the Greek lexicon, implying that it deserves no more recognition than Christus in Latin. Dr. Murdock has taken the liberty to transfer the Syriac word meshiha, rendering it messiah, with a capital C. But it ought to hav been translated "anointed."

Hardouin is doubtless right in regard to there being no manuscripts, except the holy scriptures, more than four hundred years old in his time, 1729. And here comes in a suspicion that perhaps even the holy scriptures should not be excepted. It is well known that King James's translators had no old manuscripts before them. They had only "a Greek text which Erasmus in 1516, and Stephens in 1550, had formed from manuscripts of later date than the tenth century." So says Tischendorf, who claimed to hav discovered in 1844 the oldest of all Greek codices of the New Testament. "Since the sixteenth century," says Tischendorf, "Greek manuscripts hav been discovered of far greater antiquity than those of Erasmus and Stephens." And after naming the Vatican codex, which first appeared in the catalog of 1475, and which, he thinks, may be as old as the middle of the fourth century, he claims that the codex which he found on Mount Sinai is even a little older, and may be one of the fifty copies which Constantine is said to hav ordered in the year 331.

The next oldest codex is claimed to be the Alexandrine, which was brought by the Patriarch of Constantinople from Alexandria in 1628, and is believed by Tischendorf to hav been written about the middle of the fifth century.

But some scholars doubt the great antiquity of these three codices of the New Testament. And it is a curious fact that soon after the publication of the Sinaitic codex in fac-simile an audacious fellow in Europe proclaimed that he wrote the manuscript himself; and his assertion was considered important enough to draw forth an elaborate refutation.

It may be that the gospels as we now hav them, were substantially the same in the second, third, and fourth centuries; nevertheless there is room for suspicion that the hand of the Benedictine forger may yet be detected in the oldest codices of the New Testament. Not that the nucleus of the gospel stories was fabricated in modern times, but if these oldest manuscripts of the New Testament shall appear to hav been written many centuries later than they purport to be, then who knows what alterations and additions may hav been made by the transcribers? And what if it shall appear that the Sinaitic codex, so mysteriously found in a convent on Mount Sinai in 1844, just ready to be used for fuel, but saved by the purchase money of a Russian emperor in 1859, and the Alexandrine codex, resurrected in Egypt in 1628 and sold to King Charles I. of England, are both cunningly varied copies of the Vatican codex, first cataloged in 1475 for a Roman library that was then only twenty-five years old?

ANTICHRIST.

Our London Letter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: That rampant bigotry is still alive and flourishing was fully shown in the debate on the Religious Prosecutions Abolition bill. There are many who believe that religious persecution is a thing of the past, but if they read the speeches made in the House they will be slightly undeceived. There was just as much inclination shown as ever to persecute unbelievers, but the prosecution of G. W. Foote did the Christians so much damage that it is only fear of the consequences to themselvs that prevents them doing the same thing again. The lying assertion of the solicitor-general that there had been no prosecution for heresy since 1640 shows that they are ashamed of their deeds, though they are anxious to keep the heresy laws on the statute book on the chance of their still being able to use them. Although the Repeal bill is killed this session, it will no doubt be brought forward year after year till carried, which it is bound to be sooner or later. These professing Christians are greatly shocked at the idea of their religious feelings being wounded, and yet the same individuals are now appealing for funds to send out missionaries for the purpose of insulting the religions existing in other countries. There is no such profound hypocrit as your humble follower of Christ.

The prophet Freund has fallen on evil times. His message is pretty much the same as the Nazarene's, and he receives much the same sort of treatment. As the faithful are daily looking for the second advent, how do they know that they are not persecuting their redeemer again in the person of Freund? Great will be their condemnation. The prophet Baxter is more wary and full of guile; instead of going into the temple of the most high and denouncing the worshipers as a generation of vipers, he concentrates his energies on showing, in the most clear manner, that Boulanger is the beast vice Napoleon, deceased, and if the former dies too soon, some one else will be trotted out as the genuin beast, which is beastly rough on the selected victims. Fortunately no one pays any attention to this particular prophet, or some thin-skinned Frenchman might want to hav war declared in consequence. As Baxter makes a very decent living out of his line of business I think he must be a rank impostor, for genuin prophets never make the thing pay.

It is distressing to hear that the prosperity of many of the religious societies has fallen somewhat off during the past years. The British and Foreign Bible Society has to deplore a decreased income of £38,000, and is in debt to the tune of £13,000. That they hav done a good work may be understood by the fact that they hav issued nearly three million seven hundred thousand Bibles—not a bad year's work—and such a useful society ought to be better supported. It seems the best trade done was in 1887, when there was a tremendous demand for cheap Bibles for presentation. The penny Testament is a great boon, and there has been a big run on the article—it is cheap and useful, as the leaves are just about the right size to wrap up small lots of sweetmeats. It is very evident that all these millions of Bibles are not bought for perusal, or there would be far greater additions to the Infidel ranks. It is stated that Mohammedans are large purchasers, bu as we do not hear of any great secessions from that religious party, it would be interesting to know what they do with the books.

An offshoot of the Church Missionary Society is known as the Missionary Leaves Association. I never heard of it till this year, and suppose it is a comparativly new swindle. Last year it collected about £10,000, which were expended in a magic lantern for Ceylon, a consignment of harmoniums for Hudson's bay, and a case of tools for Bonny, which purchases leave the society £510 to the bad. They must hav paid pretty high for the goods, or expenses of management must hav been high, probably the latter—the office expenses of religious societies are always large. The report does not say whether these articles were sent out in the way of trade, but as nothing was said about future payment, they may hav been presents to some one, though I should fancy they would be as useful as warming-pans in the West Indies.

The National Vigilance Association evidently wants to pass the hat round this month. This mysterious society generally wakes up about this time of year. It is now engaged in prosecuting several booksellers near Exeter Hall for selling Zola's works, and no doubt will get these unlucky people convicted. The godly magistrate who heard the cases had read some or all of the books, and considered them highly indecent and demoralizing, so committed defendants for trial. I wonder if he ever read the Bible quite through, and if so, what is his candid opinion of the Song of Solomon and the book of Ezekiel. I dare say he would assert that they were highly elevating and moral.

There hav been several reverend shepherds getting into trouble lately about money matters and the female sex, but as these things are of such common occurrence it is not worth while enumerating them.

J. D.

Spiritualism to Save the Country.

There are crises coming. Crises occur every day. They may be in your physical conditions, and culminate in a severe headache or a fit of the blues, consequently as the case may be, and dependent upon your physical, mental, or spiritual conditions. Nations are enjoying the benefits of crises, but some people think all crises are very much to be deplored, and that if we could only avoid them we would be a great deal happier than we are. We doubt it very much. For if there were nothing in the body to remind you, by crises and consequent pains and penalties now and then, that it is only by due attention to the laws governing existence that you liv, you would go on damaging your physical machines until they were worn out, and some day you would find yourself sent forth into the spiritual world a great deal sooner than you were prepared for it.

Take national crises. Whenever a crisis has manifested itself in the affairs of a nation, that crisis is but the outward and visible manifestation of the rankling sores that lie underneath the surface finding their way to some weak spot for vent and removal.

What is the next crisis you are going to hav? You had a political crisis some hundred years ago. It made your political blood stronger and healthier, and left you with a tolerably fair and vital political organism. While it did you good it was very disagreeable; its pains were very agonizing indeed, but you all look back on the Declaration of Independence as one of the healthiest things that could possibly happen.

Now what is the next crisis? There are two little crises somewhat in the form of boils on the national body that are beginning to grow. You can see the signs and germs in a thousand different directions. Somebody says: "We are going to hav a dreadful crisis. I am perfectly satisfied that the industrial questions of the nineteenth century are going to come to a head and we are going to hav a labor war—a terrible time—the working people rising up in all their might and ignorance and vengeance, and they will attempt to overturn society." Now, this much-to-be-feared labor crisis which they claim is going to be a large-sized eruption is of the nature of a blind boil. Why, do you suppose that over a hundred years of existence as a nation has had no educating effect upon the people? Do you suppose that after having emerged from political tyranny and learned the lessons of bitter experience, and labored for a broad foundation, all such matters hav been lost on the public conscience? Certainly not; and directly this alleged-to-be-coming labor crisis assumes anything like definit proportions, the justice, intelligence, and practical humanity of the people of the United States will see that right and justice are done between the contending parties. There is no stronger power than the force of public opinion, and when that asserts itself on the side of right and justice, and not only sees that the workers of the community get their just dues but also insists upon the worker rendering in return his just due, then you will find your labor boil very much smaller. But so long as it is a one-sided affair on either side, it will keep going up and down. When all parties render each to the other their just rights and dues, there will be no necessity to squabble, no materials for a boil, and the lessons of the past will hav a practical result in the economic side of the United States, and the world will see the labor and capitalist questions of the age attaining an equitable solution in harmony, in right, and in justice.

But there is another boil, a far more dangerous boil, and one that we are very much inclined to think will come to a head. And if it does it will be a very painful one indeed. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Not only the price of political and social liberty, but the price of religious liberty as well. This is where the coming crisis most displays itself. Are you prepared to help forward a religious boil upon the nation's cheek? If you are not prepared, then stand up vigorously as citizens of the great republic—the greatest in the world to-day—as men and women who unswervingly believe in the individual right of every man and woman to worship God after the manner of his own heart; who say, boldly and fairly, this is the land of equal rights, and no party from a religious point of view shall ever let a religious standard float above the stars and stripes.

There are parties with apparently the very best intentions, who seem desirous of doing you a great deal of material good by putting God's label on your nation. They think the Constitution of the United States is such a limited, weak, and useless kind of thing that it needs God's plaster on the back of it. Parties who think that the government of the United States will never take its true position or be accepted at its real value until it ranks as a so-called Christian nation with other nations. Parties who would like to see the secular government subject to a spiritual government, that would teach the child obedience to the church first and the nation afterward. They may seem all very proper parties, and what they desire may strike people who do not think as very respectable things to do, but you hav only to turn to every country existing to-day, and to the records of previous governments, to find that if these things are revived in these free and united states, you would hav in the end an entirely different condition, and a deplorable condition, for the sixty millions of people who dwell in them.

Assuredly, friends, we believe in every man's having perfect liberty to worship God after the manner of his own heart, even if it be the African worshiping a rag tied to a stick, if he does it honestly and truly. We would not hamper the religious life of any individual, but we would not giv any religious party power and influence.

Therefore be watchful, or before you know it God will slip into your Constitution. Be watchful, or the gentleman who wears the trinitarian crown, although he would hardly be recognized by an Episcopalian as a trinitarian, may find himself with a great deal more influence over the land than he who sits as an uncrowned king in your midst. Rome may hav more prestige than Washington in your national affairs. You must remember that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. If political liberty was worth fighting and dying for in 1776, surely—though we pray God there may be no need for it—liberty of conscience would be equally worth fighting and dying for whenever the crisis should call for it.

If there is one thing that will avert this crisis it is the broad and catholic teachings of modern Spiritualism. She sees the nature of the individual and of a personal God, and finds that theocracy is not necessary for the government of a human world; and so long as you can progress with pure hearts and minds toward the next stage of existence, you do more than any church of God for the government of your country.

J. J. MORSE.

Condensation Without Confusion.

From the Tyler, Texas, Leader.

Robert C. Adams, the author of "Pioneer Pith," begins by saying, "What men want nowadays is pith; the marrow, kernel, substance, bottom fact, bed-rock truth. Condensed thought is in demand; for knowledge is so vast and time so short that few can grasp any great bulk of the treasures of learning." This is the keynote of the entire volume. Every chapter shows that the author has practiced what he preaches. Brevity is the soul of wit, but it is sometimes attained at the expense of clearness. There are but few writers who can condense without obscuring, compress without confusing. The author of this book may be ranked as one of the few writers who possess this happy faculty. The salient facts of "Evolution," "The History of Religion," "The History of Christianity," "Hebrew Mythology," "Modern Criticism of the Bible," and other universally interesting subjects, are arranged with remarkable perspicuity. The author's facts are incontrovertible; his conclusions alone admit of a difference of opinion. The volume is well worth, and will more than repay, a careful perusal.

Only One Fault, and That Not Colonel Ingersoll's.

From Pittsburgh Truth.

"The Limitations of Toleration," a discussion between Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, and Ex-Gov. Stewart L. Woodford, is a handsome pamphlet of forty-four pages. The discussion between the disputants clearly defines the true positions of Liberalism and Christianity toward free speech. The remarks of Mr. Coudert are very discourteous, and show that gentleman to be narrow-minded, bigoted, and totally ignorant of what constitutes the limitations of toleration. Mr. Coudert is a Catholic, and of course that accounts for his illiberality and mental darkness. Ex-Gov. Woodford is courteous, Liberal in his views, but "intelligently" absurd. The opening speech of Colonel Ingersoll and his reply to his critics are masterpieces of rhetoric and logic, and one cannot read them without increasing his admiration and love for the colonel. There is only one thing about this pamphlet that we do not like, and that is the patent or copyright upon it. The copyright is not in harmony with Ingersoll's sublime plea for the freedom of thought. We do not believe in "cornering" the seed of Liberalism. We do not believe in that kind of protection for free speech. Let us hav free trade, so to speak, in Freethought. But after all, a copyright doesn't amount to much. The price of the pamphlet is ten cents. Address the Truth Seeker Company, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 3¼ W. Madison st., Chicago.

A Picnic in Ohio.

Saturday, Aug. 31, 1889, the Secular Society of Kent, O., will inaugurate a series of Freethought meetings, continuing over Sunday as an open-air grove mass meeting and basket picnic for the Freethinkers of the county. Speakers who will attend the annual congress of the American Secular Union, and who are willing to help make these meetings a success by their presence and oratory, will do well to address the secretary, and we will do our best to greet you with a hearty welcome.

Prices must be low, as benefits will be mutual; and profits are out of place in our common cause—the welfare of mankind.

MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec'y.

The Public School Problem Proposition for a Prize Manual.

One of the most important questions of the times, which must very soon be met by the American people, is that of moral instruction in our public schools.

How to teach children the purest principles of morality without teaching them sectarian dogmas, is a matter involving the very existence of our free public school system.

Individuals cannot, with propriety, insist that their peculiar religious tenets shall be taught to those children whose guardians do not accept such doctrins, and they hav an undoubted right to object to anything being taught in a free unsectarian secular school to which any patron can reasonably make objections.

Recent events in Boston, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and other places, show that a bitter controversy on this subject will soon convulse our entire country, and a wise policy requires that some common scheme of moral instruction shall be suggested to our state schools, which shall be acceptable to all.

In a recent Symposium got up by the editor of the Christian Register of Boston, on the main question, "Can morality be taught in our public schools without sectarianism?" a large number of the leading educators of our country of different denominations, including Hebrews, answered in the affirmativ. We, who believe it can be done, are bound to show how to do it. With this in view, I venture to make the following practical proposition:

I will contribute $100, to raise $1,000, to be offered as a prize for the best practical scheme, in the form of a manual, or other device, for the use of teachers in our public schools, showing how the purest ethics can be taught without teaching such doctrinal tenets as could justly be offensiv to either Catholics or Protestants, Jews or Liberals.

This pledge of $100 is conditioned upon the pledge for this object of the total sum of $1,000.

When the whole amount of $1,000 is promised, the subscribers shall hav a friendly conference in person, or by proxy, to arrange details and select a committee to act as judges upon the papers submitted, and to award the prize.

Several personal letters hav been sent out containing the above proposition, and the following pledges hav been promptly made:

R. B. Westbrook, Philadelphia, Pa	$100 00
G. E. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis	100 00
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O	100 00
I. L. Gergen, Hudson, N. Y	100 00
W. H. Forwood, Fort Snelling, Minn	100 00

We now need $500 more. I earnestly appeal to all patriots, and especially to members and friends of the American Secular Union, to subscribe this amount of money at once. We prefer subscriptions of $100 each, but smaller amounts will be accepted. Let us hav at least three more of $100 subscribers. Let the balance be made up by $50 and $25 pledges. Progressiv thinkers are often called iconoclasts and destructiv critics—tearing down without an effort to build up. There is too much truth in this charge. If we object to the present system of "religious" instruction in our public schools, and in Girard College and other institutions that should be free from sectarianism, we are bound to show a more "excellent way." The ecclesiastical war between Romanists and Protestants over religion (?) in our state schools will at last hav to be settled by Secularists and on the Secular principle. Persons holding to the Nine Demands of Liberalism must lead in this great work. Moreover, we Liberals need just such a manual as we propose for use in our own families and societies, to place side by side with Washburn's "Cosmian Hymn Book" and Bierbower's "The Virtues and their Reasons" and other similar works. Let us now vindicate ourselvs from the slander that we are indifferent to the question of morals and that we are mere agitators and theorists. Let us do something for the permanent good of the world.

We hope to hav the proposed subscription filled within one week from the time that it reaches our friends through our Liberal papers. Responses may be addressed directly to the undersigned.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
President of the American Secular Union.
1,707 Oxford st., Philadelphia, Pa.
May 20, 1889.

Watts the Rupert of Debate.

The Chicago Secular Union has closely held public attention through the press for the past week by seizing on D. L. Moody's biblical convention or institute to push forward the Secular philosophy. Some five hundred ministers from various states attended, besides a large number of theological students and laymen, all expecting to receive special instruction how to refute the arguments of skeptics and Agnostics. Rev. Dr. I. D. Driver, of Portland, was imported from Oregon, as well as Dr. Hastings of Boston, the former claiming to hav devoted thirty years' study to answering skeptical arguments, and said to be the very best champion the Christians can put forth.

It was announced in the papers with a flourish of trumpets that questions of Atheists or other skeptics would be answered by Dr. Driver. Accordingly a respectful communication was penned by Brother Stiles, and a delegation from our Union attended the Tabernacle, with a polite request that, being skeptics, they desired the privilege of asking the questions themselvs. The program had been that Dr. Driver or D. L. Moody or some of the ministers would write out some supposed skeptical question and then Dr. Driver would demolish it with neatness and dispatch. In fact, the ladies present must hav concluded that it was perfectly lovely the way in which he routed the wicked skeptics and annihilated men of straw.

D. L. Moody was considerably nonplussed when he read our communication. He sang over it and prayed over it, and prayed again before he would commit himself, but I must say we were all well pleased with his fairness and honesty. He finally consented that we might ask questions but not discuss, and gave us to understand that evening would be devoted by Dr. Driver to our questions. From the first it was evident the distinguished theologian was determined not to answer our questions, so we thought we would arrange to hav Mr. Watts come to pin him down to the subject under discussion.

After Mr. Watts arrived, Dr. Driver said he would not debate. He had conscientious scruples against debating, but if Mr. Watts would lead off for an hour each evening he would follow for the same length of time. He (Dr. Driver) had no conscientious scruples, however, against such manifest unfairness. Merton Smith, who acted as moderator for D. L. Moody, finally agreed that half-hour speeches be allowed, still giving the Christian champion all the advantage. To that we consented, as Mr. Watts could well afford to concede everything and then find no trouble in metaphorically wiping him out.

The four nights of the greatest discussion held in Chicago were, by request of Dr. Driver, who pleaded indisposition and fatigue, reduced to three.

Large and intelligent audiences attended each session, and on some occasions the Princess Opera House, our regular place of meeting, was packed to its utmost capacity. It was quite a task to enforce the rule demanded by the Christians that no demonstrations of approval or disapproval be made, as they were the most frequent violators of it.

The press reports were unusually fair, the Tribune and Inter-Ocean devoting some days a couple of columns, and the other papers giving considerable space to the discussion.

Dr. Driver is a man of considerable information, is connected with the theological university in the city of Portland, and is an interesting, but somewhat emotional, orator. His greatest ingenuity was shown by the manner in which he evaded the questions of Mr. Watts.

It would be utterly impossible in a brief article to even summarize this most important event or to do anything like justice to Mr. Watts's magnificent championship of Secular principles. Thoroughly armed at all points, he is perfectly impervious to the aimless shafts of his adversary. He is a great compendium of Secular history and philosophy, and the skill of his methods is almost marvelous, for mind and tongue are trained to work in rapid unison, and he is ever ready to clinch with logical reasons any points on his orthodox opponent; to all this he adds a well-tempered satire, which cuts as keenly as a Damascus blade. Through the greater part of the controversy Mr. Watts preserves a suavity that might be described as "insinuating smoothness," but before he closes he marshals his facts and descends on his unfortunate adversary with an impassioned eloquence which is like the resistless, onward rush of an avalanche, sweeping all before him. He is certainly the prince of polemics, and Dr. Driver was never so badly driven.

The lectures Charles Watts delivered Sunday afternoon and evening drew large audiences, and were applauded to the echo. "What Do We Know of God? A Secularist's Reply" and "Christianity and the Bible" were scholarly productions, evincing a breadth of culture and depth of research strangely contrasting with even the greatest champion Christianity can put forth.

A large portion of the orthodox element were of the class who, "convinced against their will, were of the same opinion still."

It may be there were a few open to conviction and possessed of sufficient intelligence to discern the difference between Rationalism and emotionalism. Such must hav been impressed with Mr. Watts's forcible arguments. We know that "we hav not labored in vain, nor spent our strength for naught," for several new members were added to our roll.

A resolution was unanimously adopted, thanking Charles Watts for his championship of our cause, and for the splendid intellectual treat his lectures afforded us.

THE WESTERN AMERICANS.

Nos. 1 and 2 of this stalwart Western American, which proposes to grapple with the great Roman anaconda, are before me, and the way in which my friend, Col. C. G. Minor, formerly of the Cincinnati Commercial, deals deadly blows at this insidious serpent, Catholicism, proves that we hav now a fearless champion of the American against the Roman idea in our midst. Chicago may be redeemed from Roman control if the valiant colonel is sustained. He proposes to advocate "Free thought, free speech, free press, free schools, free government," but he also adds "free pulpits and free Bibles." Now, what the latter hav to do with a political paper devoted to "preserve liberty, civil and religious," I fail to understand. I am glad he recommends "taxation of all property," and will oppose "all interference by any church in politics," or the "use of public funds for sectarian purposes in violation of the constitutional prohibition." My friend will not be able to take very advanced ground as to Freethought, though personally a very progressiv man. The Western American is very much needed in Chicago.

MY COMPLIMENTS TO L. F. MATHÉ.

Friend Mathé makes a great mistake if he thinks I entertain any prejudice toward the French Canadians. I assail not their nationality but their popery—that system which is responsible for their illiteracy and retrogressiv tendencies, for Mr. Mathé will hardly hav the hardihood to affirm that French Canadian Catholics are a very progressiv or enlightened people. As for being "inspired" by the Orange Sentinel, Mail, or World, I hav not seen the two former for years, and never the latter. Strange that my reference to their characteristic frugality and industry my friend should torture into an attack. Perhaps my quotation, "the Chinese of the East," led him to misinterpret me, for I am not afflicted with Kearneyism, and entertain considerable respect for the many good qualities of the heathen Chinee, even though he may be somewhat peculiar. In reference to their general illiteracy, if I remember right, Prof. Goldwin Smith made that statement to me personally when interviewing him a little more than ten years ago, when he was, I think, superintendent of education for Ontario. His statement ought to be of as great weight as that of Mr. Ross, and, from a political standpoint, a little more reliable. Did I hold the French Canadians up to contempt for punishing infanticide? I merely stated a condition which the priests took pains to maintain as a means of ultimate supremacy. The same in regard to my remarks on "strong ties of race, language, and laws." What kind of a muddle should we be in if each nationality insisted that the courts be carried on in their language, as they do in the province of Quebec? In some localities the German element are as numerically large as the French Canadians are in portions of Quebec.

Now as to bigotry and intolerance. I well remember trying to procure a hall for an exposition of Romanism in Montreal by an ex-priest, and when I called on the printer for the bills, instead of getting my posters, the foreman presented a revolver at my head—I did not count the barrels—and appeared to be considerably excited. I tried to calm his troubled soul, but he refused to calm, nor did I remain in the city to sue for breach of contract, for not a hall could be obtained.

I will admit that either myself or the compositor made a "bad break" on French, but Mr. Mathé is indeed very ignorant of that language if he could not understand where the mistake was. My verdancy in French is somewhat proverbial, and I hav been set back on that several times. When a boy I frequently crossed the Channel, so I got hold of an Ohlendorf. When next in Paris, of course I was anxious to display my newly-acquired accomplishments, but not having any French tutor, I gave my nativ pronunciation in all its provincial purity. I asked a gentleman a question. He (the Frenchman) then retorted, "I don't understand English." I won't attempt to write it in French, for Friend Mathé might get at me again. But my French aspirations received a cruelly abrupt termination. However, that is not the question, nor does my "bull" make his point right. A distinguished physician of this city, who has been the head of the United States Medical Society, gave a friend a prescription the other day on which he wrote a recommendation. In that he spelled stomach twice with a k. Did that indicate that he knew nothing of the function of the stomach? If he did not, who would? From pretty close observation I think I know something of the methods, purpose, power, and influence of Romanism, and it was not the race I was writing against, but their pernicious religion. E. A. STEVENS.

Phenomenal Philosophy.

Before the Independent Society of Spiritualists in Lynn, March 24th, I heard the old hero, Mr. J. Clegg Wright, deliver a lively lecture which would hav done the soul of any Secularist good to hear. As I hav said of Mr. Washburn, who spoke on the same rostrum, that Spiritualists would do well to employ him to review some of their old-time Radicalism, so I say that Secularists of the Material school will not miss it to engage Mr. Wright, when they can get him, for he out-materializes most of the Materialists whom I know or hav read of. And to both classes let me remark, do not use these veteran reformers so cavalierly as to discourage the younger intellectual and ethical athletes from entering the gymnasia of political, philosophical, scientific, and social revolution.

Here is some of Mr. Wright's wisdom:

If modern Spiritualism be not true, then all the teachings of the past is error. If modern Spiritualism be true, the supersensible world out there is larger than all that we can see or think of the sensible universe.

I am proud of the audience that comes here to question nature direct. How long it does take for people to get at nature! It is only for about two hundred years that we hav begun to touch nature. Until Bacon we had no real philosophy. [That is because, until Bruno, there was no real science, the foundation of philosophy.] To be sure, there was Aristotle, but hardly a thousand then understood him, such as he was, a vague speculator with a few valuable thoughts. Until Paley there was no statement, worthy of notice, of the "design argument;" and now no good theologian quotes him as satisfactory. Episcopalians are preaching pantheism for Christianity. A few old orthodox are trying to keep close to the letter of the church creeds, but that craft is fast falling in pieces. Spiritualism comes between the Liberal and orthodox schools. It comes in a manner of its own. It does not say, "authority," nor "theory," but "phenomena." The message which the spirits bear us is, "Try to read your title clear to mansions in the skies by keeping your character clean."

There are several sorts of Spiritualists in Boston. There are those who hunt for ghosts, who are peeking to see a table tip, satisfied supremely to hear a few raps. There are those who condemn the ghost-shows and hav no patience with the materialization racket. Lately, there has been set up in Boston a class of Theosophists, as they name themselvs, disdaining to be numbered with Spiritualists. They would be so far above other folks as to come face to face with God. These are men who start with their brains wrong side up, their motto being, "God is," not, "I am." God is? What a basis for an argument! Then Christian scientists. Christian science beats Theosophy all to pieces. There can be no such thing as Christian science, any more than there can be a white black, or a long short. They do not attempt to prove their propositions. Oh, no! That would be beneath their dignity. To ask for proof would be to insult their faith. You must believe. Only believe and diseases will vanish! These things are weeds. I like to see a farm in weeds when it can grow nothing else. It shows that there is an effort to grow something. I am not burlesquing. I am glad for anything that may develop into something better.

I only know phenomena. I cannot know God, for he has not parts, as he is infinit, and I can only know what has parts. Not to be infinit would be not to be God, and to be infinit is to be merely abstraction. When Moses saw God's back-parts he saw fraud. Some of you may think I speak too freely. I am here to speak freely; and whilst you cringe in fear of your supposed God, I declare that there will come a time when the word God will not be heard in all Lynn, for there will be none who believe in him; the people will get their brains right side up. What a happy time it will be when God is dead! When the monarch of monarchs shall be no more, freedom will reign and liberty giv her increase. With liberty we hav fecundity of civilization. With a theocracy we hav slavery.

I want to be right. I want to be just. I want to be God. I want to be Christ myself.

Warren Hastings, when a boy, looking over his father's lost estates, dreamed and determined that some time he would buy back all that pleasant property. That resolve of what he would do when a man, made him governor-general of India. He did not do battle for love of bloodshed, nor marshal his vast armies for the vanity of military glory. The great hero endured the heat and wrestled with war to pay for a farm.

What influences a man's life, that is his real God. A man's God is his ruling idea. What he calls God may be only his plaything. The fancy that there is some one who, after the fashion of a man, makes and breaks things, won't hold water. The anthropomorphic God must die. Now, do not get frightened. In taking him away I am leaving you the soul that looks out upon phenomena. [Would it not puzzle Mr. Wright to tell anything more about that soul, as much as it does to understand the anthropomorphic God?]

We cannot travel beyond our sensations. The spirits returned cannot tell us what their world is like. They can only say what it is not like, and that what they hav is as tangible to them as our things are to us, and far more glorious than our grandest possessions. We are like the blind man whose conceit was that the color of blue resembled the sound of his wife's voice. We compare what we don't gather with one sense to what we know by another sense. There is a chasm between this world and the other that our understanding cannot pass; hence the spirit that has gone over, when he comes back, talks about this earth all the time, and tells how happy he is in his new home, with things about him similar to his old surroundings on the mortal plane. Personality is not worth much without memory. I am not sure that memory will last forever. Forever is a very long time for any object to last. I am not by any means certain that there will be no pain over there in the spirits' home. The fault with the Christian is, the saints are too happy. St. Paul, stretched on the greensward before the great white throne of God, would hav to call for a former negro slave from a Southern plantation to roll him over. Nay, he would be too overwhelmingly contented with boundless bliss to want to be turned over. I do not want too much pain, but I want a little, just enough to make me move. It is the cracks we get in life which do us good, and contending against our troubles here fits us for the life beyond. And in the life beyond enough trouble will need to continue to keep us improving. Put a Boston young lady on a sofa, giv her "Robert Elsmere," or better, something more sensational—the more sensational the better—and never hav her do any work, or practice calesthenics, and she will develop into a bad mother, and the third generation will be bad indeed. The cultivation of the intellect and imagination is well, but we want strong and activ bodies therewith. I am not sure that Boston is any better than the Indian Territory. The Indian, though unlearned and uncouth, not like the typical Bostonian, has a healthy body, which is a good foundation for a robust and cultured mentality, which may spring from him in the future.

We do not want too much mediumship. Running after mediums continually tends to run Spiritualism into the ground. We must respect our own personality, and not let ourselvs be merely so many birch-bark canoes for spirits to paddle about in.

Do not liv for heaven, but labor. The new gospel is that this life well lived is the best preparation for the life to come. We are on the earth, and what we hav to do here is to make the most of the situation, so when we hav another locality we may be ready to occupy that bourne.

There is still much work ahead for the reformer. A reformer is a peculiar thing, and he has to be, for his part is to do a peculiar work. A reformer is like nothing that ever was before him. A reformer is like the day after to-morrow. The reformer is not wanted in his day, for his business is to overturn. He turns right side up the brains that were bottom up. The reformer is a marked man. He has a mark down his back. He is spotted and hooted as a crank, compared to and called everything that is crooked, but he comes out right side up at last. A few years ago John Bright's name could hardly be spoken in England, to-day almost every Briton takes off his hat to John Bright. [Alas! how soon after this high praise of the Quaker statesman, that apostle of peace and evangel of liberty lay palsied on his bier, whilst the people of three nationalities uncovered their mourning heads in homage to departed worth!] We want our mansions here; it is too long to wait mid rain and heat, through wind and sleet, for palaces in the skies. We need homes, and we need them now. The church recommends the laborer to religion; we cite him to social economy. The man going up a seven-story ladder with fourteen bricks in a three-cornered box on his shoulder, is told by his prayerful master: "'Thou God seest me,' don't steal a brick." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and your mansion shall be built in the skies, while you camp in a cabin below." The Gods don't belong to the Knights of Labor; they are affiliated in an entirely different organization. [The Sons of Rest, doubtless.] The aspiration for the elevation of the masses bears with it an adequate philosophy. Spiritualism is more than a spiritology. As a philosophy, Spiritualism is a war on all the old oppressiv ideas and customs. We hav got rid of the traditional mischief, but a vast amount remains to be rubbed off the board. We cannot buy a house without taking a deed worded according to feudalism. Our forms of law are full of the antiquated and obsolete, and there is still abiding in legislature and judiciary loads that ought to be obsolete. The United States Constitution is the best plan of government ever invented, and if we could only get honest men enough to vote an honest ballot, and honest candidates to fill the offices, what a happy country this might be! We hav every resource but honesty.

What is to be the religion of this land when the population shall be 200,000,000? Not Methodism, that is too prim; not Congregationalism, that is too crabbed; not baptism, that is too wet; not the Salvation Army, that is too noisy. Will there be a religion without sectarianism? That would be a ship without a keel; a quadruped deplete of a backbone. Religion without sectarianism doesn't amount to much—it is too thin and limp. It may be that Catholicism will be the prevailing religion of the coming people of this republic. Catholicism is growing in our midst. Notice that every Sunday morning Catholic girls are told by the priests: "When you are grown up and married you must submit to your husband's desire, and the more children you hav the greater glory to God." Thus they hope to gain the ascendency in America which they hav lost in Europe, and then they will put the little Jew of a God above our banner, and then, good-bye liberty. So they use the liberty they hav to harbor here to destroy the haven of personal freedom.

What is to prevent? Education. Education will prevent the dominance of every superstition, only apply it; and that is the only thing which can. We boast of our democracy. Democracy is good, but democracy without education is a failure. The Catholics are conspiring to ruin our common schools. The free school stands in the way of the prison-church. We may learn to like and adore a prison, as a dog loves a master who kicks him. We must take advantage of the force of early training and teach the young the love of liberty, or liberty will be overthrown.

To all of the foregoing remarks I would respectfully say, Amen, and add this benediction: May common sense, larger knowledge, and widest friendship come to cure the curse of superstition, and make man, woman, and child free indeed.

Lynn, Mass. JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD.

Explaining Fables.

From the Kansas City Times.

At Christ church, Bishop Ussher, rector-elect, took for his subject the so-called mistake of the "Sun Standing Still," taking his text from Josh. x, 12-14. He showed that the error in understanding the passage grew out of the Masorite interference with the original Hebrew in the year A.D. 500, when the vowel points were introduced. He gave the translation of the unpointed Hebrew by Dr. Pratt, a very eminent Hebrew scholar, as follows: "Then spake Joshua to Jehovah, on the occasion of Jehovah delivering up the Amorites before the children of Israel, let the sun be obscured over Gideon, and the moon over the valley of Ajalon, and the sun was obscured and the moon also, while the people rose up against its enemies. Is not this written in the book of Joshua, and the sun remained in the clouds of heaven and shone, not rising like an ordinary day, and there has not been such an event as this before or after it, as to the hearkening of Jehovah unto the voice of man, for Jehovah fought for Israel."

This translation does away with all the built-up difficulties regarding the arrest of planetary motion.

The preacher, while stating distinctly that he in no sense limited divine thought or power for a moment, that anything in the created universe was outside of the limit of the fullest divine control, showed by scientific facts that the condition of the sun, seeming to stand still, could be produced by refraction, and by his very clear way of putting facts, left no ground for the skeptic to stand upon.

If Jack the Giant Killer's Beanstalks had been the Eiffel tower indefinitly extended into the sky, and the elevators had worked satisfactorily, and Jack had been a bigger man, and been armed with Hotchkiss rapid-firing guns, and the Giants had ever lived, why, Jack might hav killed them and the story might hav been something besides a nursery tale, and skeptical young America would be completely overwhelmed. As it is—well, very few persons can see much truth in the tale.

Lectures and Meetings.

S. P. PUTNAM has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....Ore., June 22, 23.
Stayton..... " " 24.
Mills City..... " " 25, 26.
Turner..... " " 27.
Eola..... " " 28.
Canby..... " " 29, 30.
Molalla..... " July 3, 4.
Kalama..... W. T., " 6, 7.
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity, July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.
Astoria.....Ore., July 14.
Stella.....W. T., " 15, 16, 17.
Oswego.....Ore., " 18, 19.
Arnold's Grove " " 20, 21.
Coos Co...Ore., July 22 to Aug. 4.
Coburg.... " Aug. 7, 8.
Lebanon.. " " 9.
Olympia..W. T., " 11, 12.
Buckley.. " " 13, 14.
Davenport, " " 17, 18.
Rosalia, W. T., and vicinity, Aug. 19, 20, 21, 22.
Dayton..W. T., Aug. 24, 25.
Pomeroy.... W. T., Aug. 26.
Union..... Ore., " 29, 30.
Baker City.. " Sept. 1.
Prairie City, Ore., and vicinity, Sept. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.
Fox Valley.....Ore., Sept. 9, 10.
Long Creek..... " " 10, 11.
Hamilton..... " " 14, 15.
Monument..... " " 16, 17.
Hay Stack..... " " 18.
Lone Rock..... " " 19, 20.
Fossil..... " " 21, 22.
Hillsboro, Ore., Sept. 25, 26, 27, 28.
North Yamhill...Ore., Sept. 29.
Forest Grove..... " " 30.
Talent, Ore., and vicinity, Oct. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.
Linkville.....Ore., Oct. 11, 12, 13.
Sacramento.....Cal., Oct. 20.
San Francisco..... " " 27.
Los Angeles and vicinity, the month of November.
San Diego and vicinity, the month of December.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY'S Catalog of Freethought, Reform, and Scientific Books will be mailed free.

Communications.

Spiritual Phenomena.

That the spirits of the dead occasionally revisit the living, or haunt their former abodes, has been in all ages, in Europe, a fixed belief, not confined to rustics, but participated in by the intelligent. . . . If human testimony on such subjects can be of value, there is a body of evidence reaching back from remotest ages to the present time, as extensiv and unimpeachable as is to be found in support of anything whatever, that these shades of the dead congregate near tombstones, or take up their abodes in the gloomy chambers of dilapidated castles, or walk by moonlight in moody solitude (Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science, pp. 120-21).

I hav no expectation or desire of proving a negativ respecting the existence of ghosts, spirits, gods, angels, spooks, goblins, diakka, or any other intelligences besides the men and other organisms which belong to, assimilate with, and are a part and portion of the earth; but I would like to contribute a little toward accounting for the fact that so many of us hav not the slightest belief in the existence of any such entities, having any connection with this earth and its real and known inhabitants. Certainly it is not for lack of testimony. We hav that in abundance. In fact, we hav altogether too much. If we take in all that can be clearly substantiated by unimpeachable testimony, we shall land in the asylum; if we begin to reject what is unreasonable, improbable, contradictory, impossible, and absurd, we come ultimately to reject the whole. We come to reject the whole by a process known in geometry and logic as reductio ad absurdum.

During the winter of 1872-3 Elder Dungan, the man who recently debated with Professor Jamieson, was pastor of the Campbellite church in Lincoln, Neb. He advertised to giv a lecture on a certain night on Spiritualism. The elder said, among other things, that he had lately been reading the writings of Judge Edmunds. In those writings, he said, Judge Edmunds gave an account of a visit he had recently made to the spirit world. When he was there he called upon his daughter. She was recently married to a man who owned a sawmill. He went, with his new son-in-law, past the sawmill to milk the cow. As they passed by the mill he observed how symmetrically the logs were piled. There were ten logs at the bottom of each pile, nine on them, eight on them, and so on to the top. The only remark the elder made was respecting the cow. "What a wonderful cow that must hav been! She would feed in pastures of immortal clover, giv milk forever, and supply buttermilk to all eternity."

One of the members of the church passed by my house, on his way home, and I walked with him. He thought the preacher's criticism on Judge Edmunds the best thing he had ever heard. I asked him if he thought the Bible could withstand such criticism. He said he would like me to point out anything in the Bible as absurd as that. "Well," I said, "you recollect when Elijah had cut the river Jordan in two with his mantle and he and Elisha had crossed over, they met horses and a chariot and Elijah mounted the chariot and rode in it up to heaven. Now, if they hav horses in heaven, may they not hav cows also? If they hav spiritual chariots they will want spiritual timber to make them of, and spiritual sawmills to saw the timber, and I do not see why Judge Edmunds's son-in-law cannot own one of those sawmills as well as any man."

The trouble is that Spiritualism connects itself with religion, with demoniacal possessions, with all sorts of trickery, fraud, and delusion, but we cannot get hold of anything which will connect it with the world we liv in.

What are spirits? "Do they occupy space? Do they liv upon some kind of food? Of what shape are they? Could they be classified by a naturalist? Do they run or float or fly?"

We ask the Christian where heaven is. He tells us it is where the spirits of believers go after they die, where Christ ascended to, where God is. We ask where these spirits go after death. He tells us, to heaven. We ask the Spiritualist where the spirits reside. He tells us, in the summer-land, or the spirit world. We ask where the spirit world is. He tells us it is where spirits dwell. If we want a little more precise information he waxes wroth, or refers us to A. J. Davis, who tells us that the summer-land is spread out around the sky between the stars and the Milky Way. This way of locating the spirit world is about like the old darkey's designating the whereabouts of the agricultural implements. The master inquires:

"Sam, where is the hoe?"

Sam: "It's wif de shovel."

Master: "Where is the shovel?"

Sam: "It's wif de hoe."

Master: "Where are both of them?"

Sam: "Thay's bof togeder! Seems to me you's mighty potikler!"

When I was a small boy I undertook to find out the meaning of "surmise" by the aid of Webster's Primary Dictionary. It said, "Surmise. To conjecture, to guess." Turning to "guess," it said, "To conjecture, to surmise;" and "conjecture" was "to guess, to surmise." Of course, if I wished any more information I could go round again.

I hav perused volumes of Spiritualistic literature and hav found myself continually going around in the same little circle, and for all the information I hav received I might as well hav spent my time on the picture-writing of ancient Mexico. In fact, it seems a surprise to Spiritualists that one should demand definit information as a condition of belief, and they are ready to insist that none of us really know anything for certain.

This to me is another point of connection between Spiritualism and other forms of superstition, and a point at which it separates itself from every department of science. I never began reading a treatis on any science but that I commenced to get information—information that would connect itself with the knowledge of the world I had already acquired, and which I could verify to any extent I chose. But I started with a belief of continued existence, heartily wishing it were a fact, feeling as if it ought to be, and yet the alleged proofs appear to me so utterly futil that, at present, I hav not the slightest belief on the subject.

The proof of the existence of spirits depends upon the occurrence of what are called phenomena; and the definition of the word phenomenon from a Spiritualistic standpoint is about the same as that given by an itinerant scientific lecturer who was discoursing in a country school-house. He said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I hav used the word phenomenon. Now, phenomenon is a big word and I presume most of you do not know what it means. Let me illustrate. You see that cow over in the orchard. Well, that cow is not a phenomenon. She is standing under an apple-tree. That tree is not a phenomenon, nor is the cow standing under it a phenomenon, but if you should see that cow climb that tree tail-foremost to gather those apples that would be a phenomenon."

How much testimony would be required to prove the actual occurrence of this phenomenon? To be sure, the only objection we can urge is that cows can not climb trees. Or suppose we put it in the form of a statement that it is impossible for cows to climb trees. By this statement we place ourselvs among those arrogant people who hav arrived at some "finalities" and assume to know something. Suppose the man who has collected the testimony by which this phenomenon has been proved, finds that the testimony of a number of good and true witnesses, who saw it with their own eyes, fails to convince us that a cow can climb a tree. He then urges, as an additional inducement to belief, that she climbed the tree tail-foremost. We can see that that would make it more of a phenomenon, but cannot just see how it makes it more credible. Finally, we are assured that the phenomenon was entirely natural, that all the witnesses are good Infidels who could not for a moment believe in the supernatural. Still we fail to experience any belief; being as unable to believe in the unnatural as in the supernatural.

The above would be a mild specimen of "phenomenon"—in fact, hardly phenomenal at all—compared with alleged occurrences to which our Spiritual brethren are calling our attention every day. Take, for instance, the independent slate-writing phenomenon. Can there be anything more absurd than the idea of writing being done between two slates fastened together?

It is urged that we must comply with the conditions. But the conditions are such as, from a standpoint of common sense, would not help the writer to write nor the observer to see the writing done, but would help the medium to play tricks. Hence, while no one has ever seen any writing done between closed slates, they hav been made the media of innumerable tricks and frauds. Why hav two slates? I can think of no spirits who would be likely to write better by using two slates except the Irishman who came over on two ships, and the writer of the gospel of Matthew who had Jesus ride two donkeys into Jerusalem.

Materializing séances present testimony of occurrences still more phenomenal. A man makes his appearance from a cabinet in a closed room who purports to be the materialized form of a defunct citizen. He has on a beaver cap with a silk lining. Was this cap made by some spiritual hatter who lived in some town in summerland and had his advertisment on a spiritual board erected on some spiritual rail-fence just outside of town, and which board was sawed from a log which was cut from a spiritual tree, which grew in a spiritual forest, and which log was floated down a spiritual river into a spiritual millpond? Was the skin from which the cap was made taken from the materialized form of a defunct beaver? Was the silk lining made from skin spun by spiritual silkworms? Or was the whole thing just materialized out of air, or—out of nothing? He has on calfskin boots with cowhide soles. Do they indicate the previous existence of cows and calves? He has on a woolen coat. Wool comes from sheep. Did this man take thought for the morrow, and does his coat indicate previous processes of shearing, spinning, weaving, dyeing, and tailoring? This defunct citizen was a Democrat who died during the last campaign, and he comes in with a bandanna handkerchief in his hand, which he uses to wipe away the tears that he has not ceased to shed on account of the late defeat and for other purposes not necessary to mention. His boots are sewed with waxed thread. Are the bees which gathered the wax still flying through the balmy air of summerland and sipping nectar from the blossoms of the clover on which Judge Edmunds's son-in-law's cow is feeding? From whence came the dye with which the various garments worn by this citizen are colored?

But all this is nothing compared with the fact that he has materialized a body with all its infinitly complicated organs and attributes. Look at him. He has apparently heart and lungs. He has veins and arteries ramified into countless millions of capillary tubes. He has a brain and nervous system of infinit complexity. His skin has millions of pores. He is as natural as life and the same size, and, if we were to ask him, would undoubtedly say with the materialized form of Mrs. Burr's father, that he never felt more natural in his life. All this has been done to make a show for an evening, or a fraud has been perpetrated. O my brethren! Let us go back to something reasonable. That the air should be successfully navigated on a broomstick, or that people should sail upon the ocean in a sieve, are reasonable occurrences in comparison.

But it is not only bodies of men and women which materialize, with all their characteristics and defects. The various diseases are either materialized or contracted in a few moments after materialization takes place.

THE TRUTH SEEKER readers will recollect that in Medium Keeler's Spiritualistic show, witnessed by the Burr family, there was a clown connected with the performance, known as "Wash." This fellow came forward every night, with an impediment in his speech, apparently caused by a split palate. (These materialized forms do not stay over from one night to another. It is so much easier for the spirit of a man who, while he was "in the form," could not make a sawhorse, to secrete and accrete around and in himself an entire body and suit of clothes, representing the art and science of a wide range of occupations, than it would be to stay over with some of his relativs or neighbors. Besides, he would hav to dematerialize to get back into the cabinet, for that is a part of the performance.)

"Wash" came in one night badly hoarsed up with a cold. The same night Mrs. Burr's father took pains to materialize a pocket handkerchief to be used during a séance of about a minute and a half. These facts are terribly suggestiv. We see, in imagination, the rocks and fences of the spirit world covered with the materialized forms of patent medicin advertisments. Some of the medicins must be hard to make. For instance, how would the spirits make a porous plaster? Perhaps they could make the plaster out of the pores of a defunct plaster, but the trouble would be to find something out of which to make the pores.

We hav not only abundance of testimony to prove the materializing of human bodies with whole suits of clothes, made without hands, like the mansions in the skies, but we hav a still more abundant testimony to prove the materialization of fragmentary parts. Thousands of people hav seen and recognized the isolated hands of their friends. One gentleman, a lawyer, instanced by Professor Howe, in the Freethinkers' Magazine, identified the hand of his wife, which came to him apparently floating through the air, and ascertained that it was about the usual temperature.

A Nevada editor, quoted in the Golden Gate, saw, in a séance in Oakland, a materialized skeleton come out of the cabinet and march about the room. He or she was a very polite skeleton, for it bowed several times to the audience. This is a very economical materialization, for the very beauty of a skeleton consists in its not having any clothes on. Methinks I could hav addressed that materialization in the language of the man in the "Vision of Sin:"

> Trooping from our moldy dens,
> Our chap-fallen circles spread;
> Welcome, fellow-citizen,
> Hollow heart and empty head.
>
> You are bones, and what of that?
> Every face, however full,
> Padded round with flesh and fat,
> Is but modeled on a skull.
>
> No, I cannot praise the fire
> Of your eye, nor yet your lip;
> All the more do I admire
> Joints of cunning workmanship.
>
> Lo, God's likeness—the ground-plan,
> Neither modeled, glazed, or framed;
> Buss me, thou rough sketch of man,
> Far too naked to be shamed.

These are but specimens of phenomena which can be attested by innumerable good and true witnesses who relate their own personal observations and experiences. If testimony can verify the absurd and establish the impossible, Spiritualism has surely produced all that is necessary. I giv the same credence to many of the witnesses that I would to my own observations, and if I had seen all that is claimed to hav been seen and heard, I should still hav no belief in the existence of disembodied spirits or in their ability to collect around them material forms, the exact similitude of those which were buried or cremated. To account for the existence of a good solid human body, clothed and in its right mind, by supposing it to hav collected around, or in, an invisible intangible spirit, has about the same philosophical merit as the Hibernian's idea of the way they make cannon. He said "they just take a hole and run some iron around it."

I owe McArthur an apology. I should not hav written as I did. Surely I could not entertain any personal enmity against a person for simply stating facts or advocating what he regarded as such. His "fact" is that writing can be done between two closed slates, and that spirits (not ghosts) do the writing. Those, to me, are unwarranted inferences. That I cannot explain Slade's tricks, does not prove that he is not a trickster. That I hav not made a chemical analysis of the moon, does not giv value to some other person's inference that it is a cheese.

I certainly had no idea that the account of Alexander's horse had the slightest value as historical evidence of evolution. Those who hav worked out the paleontological history of the horse hav none of them, so far as I know, mentioned that statement, except Prof. Oscar Smidt, from whom I quoted.

Until modern observation had shown that the rudimentary toes of the horse do sometimes develop hooflets, that story seemed altogether improbable. Now that there are no grounds for objecting to the story on account of its intrinsic improbability, it becomes much more likely that the story is true than that some unknown writer should hav anticipated scientific discovery by inventing it. Then, again, my idea was that Bucephalus was a horse, not a pliohippus. Josephus relates, among the wonderful occurrences which transpired as premonitions of the destruction of Jerusalem, that a heifer which was being led to the temple, to be offered as a sacrifice, gave birth to a lamb. Though I think that it can be proved that cows and sheep had a common ancestry, I regard that story as entirely mythical; and I should regard as equally mythical the statement that a horse gave birth to a pliohippus. Except in the one particular, a horse with hooflets on his rudimentary toes is not likely to bear more than ordinary resemblance to a pliohippus. Men hav rudimentary muscles to move their ears. A neighbor of mine has these muscles in a working condition, but I do not regard him as bearing any more resemblance to the "missing link" than myself.

Yes, McArthur, you and I seem to hav different ideas of the meaning of the word Infidel. If the true Infidel accepts no finality, I am not an Infidel. If I thought that I had lived (if anybody or anything does liv) in this world (if there be any world) for half a century (if there be any duration) without having found out anything about anything for certain, I would quit. Think of there being "eternal search and eternal questioning" without there being anything to search into or anybody to question.

McArthur seems to want me to admit that he does not know anything—that he has not arrived at any finality. I am not going to do it. If I do so, where will I be? What is a "fact" good for if it is not a "finality?"

McArthur indignantly exclaims: "Because you do not understand a proposition, is the proposer a fool?" Not much. Fools do not hav propositions. My idea of a fool is a fellow who does not know anything, and I am not going to make such an admission even by implication. Now, friend McArthur, I do not think a discussion between you and me, on Spiritualism, would amount to much, because we are so differently constituted that the precise point where the evidence seems to you most conclusiv, is exactly where, to my mind, it breaks down. Be assured I shall read with interest and attention whatever you contribute to THE TRUTH SEEKER in the future, as I hav in the past. D. PRIESTLEY.

Mrs. Severance to Her Critics.

Yes, Brother Hebard, the paragraph I quoted from Ingersoll, which you repeat, is beautifully written—so writing being a thing in which none can surpass the colonel. The only fault I find with it is, it is not true. It is a positiv affirmation which I think he would feel a sort of hesitancy in attempting to prove. Now, what my article was trying to point out was the inconsistency of being Agnostic on the existence of a God and a future life, at the same time making the positiv assertion, "No person has come back from the unseen world, no authentic message has been delivered. Through all the centuries not one whisper has broken the silence that lies beyond the grave. Countless millions hav sought for evidence, hav listened in vain for some word." Can the colonel prove this assertion? On the contrary, if human testimony is of any account, there are millions who claim to hav sought and found evidence. Which is to be credited—statements of those who claim to hav proof which they can furnish upon which their belief is based, or the bare assertion of one who attempts no proof of the statement he makes?

You certainly are not posted on the claims of those who hav "heard whispers" and "received authentic messages," if you think they claim anything supernatural. Not at all. They claim that it is just as much in accord with natural law, and just as demonstrable, as to be able to talk in Chicago with a man in New York. This cannot be done unless one goes where telephone communication is established. It cannot be done at all places and at all times "on call."

How would one that had a telephone and operated it every day regard the assertion of any person who had never seen a telephone, that no voice from New York was ever heard in Chicago—that no authentic message was ever received? Would not one naturally inquire how he knew—ask him to prove it?

Colonel Ingersoll did not say, "I do not know about a future life. I don't know that a whisper was ever heard, or an authentic message received, and I do not believe anyone else knows." That would be the Agnostic position, and if any proof was demanded it would fall upon the one claiming to know. The colonel did nothing of the sort. He made a positiv affirmation. I deny it, and the burden of proof falls upon him.

If I should say, "There is no God," I could then be reasonably asked to prove my assertion. If a man asserts there is a God, I can justly call on him for evidence, and having never found anyone that could furnish me any such evidence, I am Agnostic—I don't know.

My caustic critic, Brother Hammond, in the first place, shows his lack of the sharpness he assumes when he calls me "he." Why, bless your soul, brother, Juliet has been a woman ever since the days of Romeo. I do not think you meant to misrepresent my positions, but your evident prejudice against Spiritualism led you to do it unconsciously. Read my article again, name and all, and yours also, and see what mistakes you made, especially in your quotations, which make me say anything but what I did say.

I regret to be compelled to admit that there is a great deal of superstition among Spiritualists, as I also am sorry to hav to acknowledge that there is much of bigotry among Materialists, but considering both classes hav largely come out of the churches, and hav some of the vestiges of orthodoxy still left in them, it is scarcely to be wondered at. I am in accord with you in the interest you express in psychology. I hav been studying and experimenting for the past thirty years, and am still interested deeply. If you know of any new discoveries recently made, please inform me.

By the way, allow me to call your attention to a work just published in Chicago by Professor Loveland on Mediumship. As he is a man of deep thought and scientific acquirements, if you feel there may be something possibly that you do not know on the subject, invest a dollar in this book. This you will perceive will be "outside the séance room."

If you required a demonstration in chemistry, you would hav to go to the laboratory, wouldn't you? You could get a dissertation on chemistry in a book or lecture. Do you perceive?

Milwaukee, Wis. JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

Does Death End All?

The Spiritualists and the orthodox agree that after death the spirit continues to liv. If the spirit can liv without the body it is reasonable to suppose that it would prefer to liv in this world where it is better acquainted than it would be in some other world. After my having made a public speech, Spiritual mediums hav said they could see spirits around me while I was talking, and one said she could see me surrounded with little children, and all were holding out their hands for pennies. Now, it is true that I used to giv a good many pennies to little children, but how could she hav known about that?

If it be true that I am surrounded with little children, their influence ought to be good, and it may be that their influence is better than would be the influence of the church if I were one of its members. As no one is protected by patent on ghost stories, I suppose that I hav as good a right to tell what I hav seen, as anyone. Now, I want to say right here that what I saw, or thought I saw, the other night, came nearer shaking my faith in Materialism, than anything that I hav ever seen.

A few nights since I had the nightmare; my wife came in and, after waking me, she went into another room, and a minute or so after she had left me in the dark, I saw a bright little girl standing on my bed. She was neatly dressed and seemed to be some six or seven years of age, and, after gazing at each other for a minute or more, believing her to be a living child, I said to her, "What are you doing here?" But she made no reply. Finding that she would not talk, I resolved to investigate, but she understood me, and, I think, was displeased, for, as I was about to reach for her, her eyes began to twinkle and snap like flashes of fire, and, at the same time, she began to fade, slowly at first, and soon went out like a flash.

Now, as our eyes were not more than four or five feet apart, and I could see her as plainly as if it had been by the light of the sun, it seems to me that I could not hav been mistaken. My wife says that she heard me say, "What are you doing here?" I was awake, and kept awake till daylight watching to see if she would again appear. Now, did I really see something, or was it only an optical illusion? I thought that I saw something, and I still think so, but if I was mistaken, then the chances are that death ends all. If the Spiritualists hav no evidence of an existence after death, there is no evidence at all. The orthodox hav a belief, but belief is not evidence.

I remember that once, as I was walking toward home, two little children came running, and after they caught me, one of them said, "If we had five cents we could get two oranges." And when they left me they started on a run, and they were as happy as happy could be. One of them soon after died, and if the spirit livs after death, it may be that the little visitor who called upon me was the little girl whom I had once made so happy. Ingersoll does not believe in ghosts for the reason that he never saw one, but if he ever shall see as I saw what appeared to be a little child standing within four or five feet of him holding one finger in the corner of her mouth, and looking at him and he looking her square in the face for one or two minutes, he may change his opinion.

Now, I would rather be surrounded with bright-eyed little children than be surrounded with Moses and the prophets, for you see I like children, but I might not like Moses. But supposing that I was mistaken, and that the Spiritualists are mistaken, all we know is that man comes into the world like an animal, and he goes out of it like an animal, and that is all that we know about it. M. BABCOCK.

St. Johns, Mich., May 3, 1889.

Notes of Travel by W. S. Bell.

From Leadville I had a delightful ride over the Marshall pass and through the Black cañon. One cannot begin to adequately describe the charming scenes which greet the eye of the traveler at these remarkable points. In approaching Marshall pass the road ascends the mountains on a steep grade, turning in the most tortuous ways around curves and back again over the same mountain, only higher and still higher, and you look back and down into the cañons stretching far away in the distance to see the windings of the railroad, and perhaps a small section of your train coming after you not far away at a snail's pace. You are not afraid of it running over you.

The charm of the Marshall pass is, that it does not fill you with the fear of imminent danger. But when you come to the Las Animas cañon and find yourself more than a thousand feet above the river, and riding on a ledge of rocks, without a foot of ground between the end of the railroad ties and this awful yawning chasm below, you will wish yourself out of the car and on foot. And if you do not get out you may feel as I did when the train swung around the curves. I leaned in the opposit direction to the cañon, lest my weight might be the last two hundred pounds that would tip the car over.

At Silverton I was met at the depot by Mr. and Mrs. Fisher and son, who accompanied me to the Grand Hotel and made all the necessary arrangements for the lectures and footed the expenses. They are entitled to great credit for the zeal and liberality. The lectures were something new and drew large audiences. The people very earnestly discussed the merits of the lectures on the streets, in the stores, and at their homes. I agitated the importance of supporting our Liberal papers, and think my efforts will bear fruit. I hav made similar exertions at this place. Last night I was introduced to the audience by a prominent citizen and lawyer of this city, Julius Thompson, Esq. Mr. Cyrus F. Newcomb made the arrangements for the lectures. Among the most activ Liberals are Robert Carter, Silas Moser, and Charles McLoyd. I am engaged to giv more lectures in Silverton on my return from here. The Freethinkers are more numerous and better united than they are here.

I shall be on my way in a day or two to Salt Lake City. W. S. BELL.

Durango, Col., May 6, 1889.

What "Pioneer Pith" Is.

From the Denison, Tex., Gazetteer.

"Pioneer Pith" is the gist of lectures on Rationalism, by Robert C. Adams, author of "Travels in Faith, from Tradition to Reason," "Evolution, a Summary of Evidence," etc. It is a hundred-page pamphlet, divided into twenty chapters, and discusses such questions as History of Religion, Hebrew Mythology, Creeds, Origin and Growth of Morality, Sabbath Observance, Ancient Morality, Christianity and Civilization, What Hav Unbelievers Done for the World? etc. Price, twenty-five cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - MAY 25, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

A Religious Squabble.

Our Protestant friends do not seem to be equal in skillful robbery of the city to our Catholic brethren. Their intentions are as good, but somehow the older church gets ahead of them almost every time.

The case recalling this obvious fact, though made public some months ago, has come up again through the wordy warfare between the authorities of the Church of the Redeemer and of the Convent of Mercy and St. Joseph's Industrial School, all of this city. Twenty-five years ago the common council of the city allowed the Church of the Redeemer to use twelve lots on the eastern end of the block between Park and Madison avenues and 81st and 82d streets. The permission was to endure "during the pleasure of the council." Upon this understanding a wooden structure was built on the corner of 82d street and Park avenue at the time, and remained there up to a year and a half ago, when it was removed to the corner adjoining. Simultaneously with the removal of the wooden building the foundation of a stone church was built on the site.

The other end of the block was afterward given to the Convent of Mercy, attached to the St. Joseph's Industrial School, on the same terms. The authorities of this religious mill, however, were not satisfied with their tenure, and appealed to the legislature, which enacted a bill leasing them the land for ninety-nine years for one dollar. They were then sure of holding that which they had got and soon desired more. So, two years ago, they stirred up the Sinking Fund Commissioners to take the land from the Church of the Redeemer and put it up at public auction, when by connivance with our Roman Catholic authorities, or by the indisposition of people to bid against the church authorities, they hoped to buy it cheap. The land was advertised to be sold and the Church of the Redeemer folks had to bestir themselvs. They, too, appealed to the legislature, and obtained a law allowing the property to be disposed of at private sale. Then they worked their pull and obtained two-thirds of the property for $67,500—$10,000 less than the officials first demanded—and paid $2,500 down, leaving $65,000 on mortgage at four per cent. The other third will be sold at auction and the Catholics propose to get it.

The plain English of the affair is that it is a fight between two religious bodies to obtain property to which neither had a shadow of equitable right. The Catholics say they hav the right to get all they can, but the Protestants claim that it is a case of "persecution." The Mail and Express says:

"So great has been the religious feeling aroused in the immediate neighborhood over the unwonted practices resorted to by the Sinking Fund Commission, backed by the influence of the board of aldermen, acting upon the suggestion and at he request of the Roman Catholic authorities, that the quesion threatens to become a burning one unless the convent people recede from their position."

And Bishop Potter has written a letter to the pasor of the church, calling the action of the city authorities an "infringement of religious liberty." He says:

"Your case is certainly one of especial hardship. Accepting in good faith the permission given by the city authorities nearly a quarter of a century ago, to occupy certain lots as a site for a church, it has come about that owing to the desire of a hostil religious communion to get possession of what, by every rightful and equitable construction, was your own property, you are now compelled to pay thousands of dollars for continued possession of it. The whole history of this business, so far as it relates to those who hav been striving to dispossess you, is a thoroughly discreditable one, and it ought to awaken the generous resentment of every friend of religious liberty. For, certainly, it is a grave infringement of such liberty that any religious sect should be allowed to avail itself of a legal technicality in order to get possession, whether for so-called religious or other purposes, of that which is not their own. And the conspicuous inconsistency of this action with that taken in the interests of those who hav fattened upon state and municipal gifts and grants, would seem to indicate that Protestantism has still abundant raison d'etre, and that Protestants may find in your case an object worthy, whatever their religious convictions, of their substantial sympathy."

These views, however, are far from accurate. They could not be accurate unless it is conceded that churches hav superior privileges and rights in this country, and are entitled to use public property without compensation to the owners. The real wrong is that the city and state authorities should hav given either the Church of the Redeemer or the Convent of Mercy a single foot of land until they had paid the market price for it. If the Catholics were shrewd enough to get their grant confirmed by the legislature, the Protestants need not complain. They would hav done the same had they thought of it. To make them pay for the land now is only a tardy act of justice to the people of New York, and it is only to be regretted that the convent cannot be forced to be as unwillingly honest. It is not a case calling for any sympathy for the under dog. It is only a fight between two thieves over booty stolen from the city; and the people are fortunate indeed to obtain restitution of so much of the plunder as the Church of the Redeemer has been forced to return.

The Presbyterians.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States is now in session in this city. This assembly is the governing body of the church, and is the only authority which can revise the Confession of Faith, and lay down in black and white the articles which Presbyterians must believe.

This assembly will debate and decide a great many questions regarding the machine work of the church, its political government, and attitude toward various classes and institutions, but the most exciting subject for decision is whether the creed of the church shall be changed and the doctrin of hell smoothed down to meet modern ideas. The Assembly is said to be divided on the subject. One party—the fossils who hav learned nothing since their ordination—stands by the "Confession of Faith" with its predestination of men to hell or heaven; the other party—composed of men who hav lived in centers of literature and thought and touched elbows with progressiv men—think that in the light of the nineteenth century these "figments of metaphysics," as they call Calvin's ideas, should be consigned to oblivion, and that modern life is far too short for mortals to concern themselvs with what they suppose God may or may not hav decreed. The first party calls the second party heretics, and the second party retorts by labeling the first party Ancients. Howard Crosby says the great majority of the laity of the church agree with the unorthodox preachers, and that when they subscribe to the Confession of Faith they do it with mental reservations.

The revision of the creed has been debated for several years, and is bound to be accomplished finally. With the exception of the Roman Catholic the churches are moving away from their medieval foundations, and, aside from Catholicism, Christianity to-day is no more the Christianity of a hundred years ago than a Chinese junk of the tenth century is a modern steamship. The enlightened portion of the Presbyterian church has already outgrown its creed, and the elimination of the five points of Calvinism will be but the formal marking of the progress it has made, a milestone planted by the side of the rough and bloody path it has traveled.

But if humor could find a place in a Presbyterian's make-up, the zealous preachers would see the absurdity of their voting to decide whether or not hell exists. If sheol is a real place, it cannot be abolished by ballot. If it is not, it cannot be created by the decision of a Presbyterian assembly. Even belief on the subject cannot be changed by the result of a ballot. Supposing the result is a tie vote!

The antics and "playings at" of nursery children are sensible compared to the actions of Christian councils. The children hav at least the excuse of youth for their foolishness.

Death.

One of the most piercing shrieks of Christianity against unbelief is that when the unbeliever lies upon his last bed, he is always afraid of death and calls upon the Christian savior to come to his rescue. In the face of facts innumerable this cry has been kept up for scores and scores of years. It has been said of nearly all the prominent Infidels, and believed by nearly all of the churchmen. Only within the past few years has it been admitted by any pietist that unbelievers die as serenely as the believer, and that Christianity is of no effect in smoothing the dying pillow.

Physicians are beginning to let the truth be known, and the religious papers do not like their testimony. The latest professional man to bear testimony in the matter is Dr. Shrady, editor of the Medical Record, and the physician who attended Grant in his last illness. Dr. Shrady says:

"My own experience, strange as it may seem, has taught me that Christian people are, as a rule, the most afraid to die. . . . I hav found that the best Christians are the most willing to stop out of heaven."

The experience is not so strange as Dr. Shrady implies. Christianity is the very best possible religion to inspire terror in a dying person, especially if that person really believes in it. Christianity has a hell and heaven, and the conditions imposed by theology for reaching the latter are so vague and uncertain in their application that a person who sincerely believes in the scheme can never be really sure that he may not ultimately find himself blazing in the former. The idea of hell is a terrible one, and well calculated to induce fear in a dying man, who knows down in his heart that he has broken many of the commandments which, if observed, would keep him out of it. The unbeliever, on the other hand, has no fear of hell, and his feelings when dying are regrets that he must leave those he loved, not terror at the uncertainty of his final destination. If a Materialist, he goes to the grave as to a couch of dreamless sleep. If a Spiritualist, he goes as to a pleasant visit where he may meet his friends again. So far as a mental condition can affect the dying, the heretic's state of mind is infinitly superior to the mental state of the Christian.

Please, Mr. Brown, Speak Up.

Some time ago we noticed the reported conversion of one E. P. Brown, of Indianapolis, Ind., from Infidelity to Christianity. He has broken loose again, and this time givs fuller particulars of himself. Until three years ago Mr. Brown claims to hav been an Infidel, the result of his own reasoning, as he never read any Freethought books until he was thirty years old. At that age, however, he became, he says, "a worker in the ranks of Freethought." He "took an avowed stand against the cause of Christ, and never missed a chance to strike a blow for unbelief." He "patronized Infidel papers; wrote for them; helped to support prominent workers; made speeches and tried as hard as he could to get people to see as he did." Mr. Brown was once editor of the Cincinnati Sunday Breakfast Table, and later editor of the Chicago Ledger.

In the winter of 1886–7 Mr. Moody visited Chicago and began revival services. Mr. Brown (so he tells us) visited the meetings and became converted. Since then he has been engaged in work for the Methodist church, his specialty being evangelistic labor. He has burnt all his Infidel books, sends his boy to Sunday-school, and loves the Bible as the apple of his eye.

We hav no particular quarrel with Mr. Brown for joining the church. It is his privilege in this country to make as large a fool of himself as he pleases. Hundreds of men, though having the hereditary taint of religion in their blood, hav lived a score or two of years without making profession of religion, and then swung into line and become as pious as any hypocrit. It is a natural phenomenon. But their Infidelity never amounted to much. They were perhaps conscious that their ways of life would land them in hell if the Christian scheme should be true; so instead of reforming, they denied hell. Living among Christians, they obtained a little country-grocery reputation by denying a belief in miracles and the Bible. Such denial brought them into sewing-circle prominence. The local minister would point them out as people to be shunned, and this tickled their vanity. Of the fundamental principles of Freethought they knew nothing, and disbelief with them was as much a matter of prejudice as is belief with others a matter of ignorant faith. Mr. Brown has had thousands of prototypes, and will hav hundreds of followers.

But it beats the world, when these fellows hav joined the church, how prominent they formerly were in the ranks of Infidelity. No man was ever so complete a wreck as the latest reformed drunkard. No blasphemer was ever so fluent in reviling deity as the most recently converted Atheist. So it is with these "converted Infidels"—no one ever did so much to spread heresy abroad as they. The fortunes they spent, the hours they labored, the speeches they made, the articles they wrote, the books they distributed, are beyond all computation! No one was ever so zealous, none so successful, in combating Christianity. It is positivly marvelous, wonderful! Mr. Brown is only a fair-to-middling sample, and the forbearance he exercises in telling of his previous exploits, now that he has audiences who know nothing of the subject, and would not question the biggest lie he could invent, is to be commended to other converted Infidels now engaged in the evangel business.

But how many Freethinkers of the country heard of Mr. Brown when he was devastating the fields of Christianity? Where and when did he make his speeches? what Freethought journals did he subscribe and write for? what prominent workers can recollect the support he gave them? We hope Mr. Brown will let us hear from him.

A Conundrum for the Reformers.

Things are getting muddled among the social reformers of this town, and one must be preternaturally acute to know just where they all stand and what they all teach.

Two or three years ago the social revolutionists of the town found an apostle in Henry George and a gospel in his "Progress and Poverty." George's theology was to take the tax off land and personal property and put it on land values, thus insuring to the community the increment which the land earned because of the community. The Socialists saw in this scheme a step toward their own ideal of society—an idea Mr. George carefully fostered—and banked heavily on George. Through their societies they got up a petition bearing thirty thousand names asking him to run for mayor, and when he ran, the Socialists and Communists and reformers of all sorts gave him a vote of sixty thousand odd. Dr. McGlynn left the Catholic church, took the stump for him, and things were booming for George.

The next year Mr. George's party went in for more election experience. They called a convention at Syracuse to nominate candidates. His sixty thousand votes had made Mr. George conservativ. At this convention he repudiated Socialism, and the Socialists left him. Dr. McGlynn stayed. Consequence, thirty thousand odd instead of sixty thousand odd votes.

Then came the presidential election. Mr. George went in on that heavily, and subordinated his land tax scheme to an advocacy of free trade. Dr. McGlynn couldn't stand that, and left his friend to go his way, while the whilom priest went in for Anti-poverty. Mr. George is still the free trader.

Along here somewhere Rev. H. O. Pentecost got hold of the land-tax scheme and became fascinated by it. He embraced it, and had to leave his church. Since then he has been teaching land-tax, plus doctrins which are perilously close to that Socialism which Mr. George repudiated at Syracuse. Mr. Pentecost started three meetings and a paper, and his growth toward Socialism led Mr. George's right-hand man, Wm. Croasdale, to pitch into Socialism and Anarchy with vindictiv strength, squinting over his desk while writing his diatribe at Mr. Pentecost.

Now Mr. Pentecost comes back and says that the ground-rent movement is degenerating into a mere fiscal scheme; that it is a Socialistic movement anyhow; that the Socialists and Anarchists agree with "us" that private ownership of land should be abolished; and finally avows himself an Anarchist by saying that his "prophecy" that "State Socialism would grow out of the single-tax, and Anarchy would grow out of that, was based upon our [his] belief that human nature has a tendency to arrive at what is highest and best by the method that is most practicable."

The student of social economy who has stood by and watched this development can only marvel, and opine that never before was there so much evolution seen in so short a time. Henry George from a Socialistic single-taxer to a free trade advocate; Dr. McGlynn from a Catholic priest to a single-tax free-trade anti-povertyite; Croasdale from a worker with Socialists to a denouncer of the whole party; Pentecost from a Congregational clergyman to an Infidel and single-tax-Socialist-Anarchist!

Where will they all land and whom shall we follow in order to help along the social revolution which is to secure justice and an equitable distribution to all of the things produced? Will the single-tax do it? Will Socialism do it? Will free trade do it? Will Dr. McGlynn's anti-poverty sermons do it? Will Anarchy do it? Will all of them combined do it?

And while we are in the way of asking conundrums, here's another. All of these reformers agree that the land question is at the bottom of the social trouble, and if therefore the social congestion would be relieved by making land, with limitations as to acreage, free to all who desire to use it—first come, first served, like government land at present—to be held only while used—movable improvements to belong to occupant who created them—and taxes assessed on the productions of the land at the lowest percentage at which an economical government could be administered—why do they not make that the issue? The rush to Oklahoma, the Chickasaw strip, to the Sioux reservation, and to the great Northwest certainly indicates that the social trouble lies deeper than any of the issues discussed to-day, and that a great majority of the people believe that free land to use will relieve more poverty than all the nostrums heretofore advertised. This issue would simplify matters, and people would know just what they were after when they "vote as they think." It would save an awful lot of ink now wasted in discussing non-essentials.

THE debate in Chicago between Mr. Watts and Rev. Mr. Driver which took place a few days ago, was not a debate at all, but a series of half-hour lectures by each gentleman, Mr. Driver always following Mr. Watts, and having the closing speech each evening. Under no other conditions would he consent to appear on the same platform with Mr. Watts. His "arguments" were the usual revival exhortations. This was a pretty tame ending of a vainglorious boasting that he had "spent thirty years in investigating science for the purpose of meeting the arguments of Agnostics," and like Tim Linkinwater could "so put them down" that words would fail to explain the depth to which they would sink. When Moody and Driver jumped upon the revival stage at Chicago they made a specialty of abusing and answering and confuting Infidels, and their audiences thought that they had but to see an Infidel to bag him, so unerring did they represent their pious marksmanship. But when in response to an invitation E. A. Stevens and his friends attended a meeting and began to ask questions, Driver was run into a corner at once and escaped only by refusing to let Mr. Stevens reply to his answers. Then Mr. Stevens challenged the two revivalists, and Moody put Driver up as Christianity's champion. He was too sharp to enter the lists himself. But when Mr. Watts arrived at Chicago and had an interview with Driver the Infidel knight learned that Dr. Driver would not debate under any circumstances. The only thing that he would do was to allow Mr. Watts to speak for an hour and he would follow, stating his views. He would not consent to Mr. Watts following him once. However, after a conversation he agreed to both having two half-hour speeches each night, upon the condition that "Mr. Watts should lead off every night and that he (Dr. Driver) should hav the concluding speeches." It need not be said, comments Mr. Watts, that there was no discussion in the proper sense of the word. The doctor took no notice of the Secular positions laid down, nor of the principal questions put to him, but instead gave a series of revival addresses. Notwithstanding the lack of an opponent, Mr. Watts made the meeting interesting for the audiences by traversing Mr. Driver's speeches, and succeeded, says the Inter-Ocean, in "making the worse appear the better reason." Mr. Driver appears to be an honest, sincere, able man, but he made the mistake of thinking that religious orations could ever take the place of calm, logical reasoning. He depends entirely upon arousing the religious sentiment which heredity has implanted in most people, and his refusal to allow Mr. Watts to follow him at all shows he feared the effect upon the audiences of a dissection of his sermons. Nevertheless the meeting of the two has done considerable good, as the Christians hav learned that the Infidels are not only willing but anxious to talk religious matters over, and they hav learned, too, that the preacher in the pulpit with no one to say him nay, is a much greater man than when he is on the platform with an Infidel opponent. If the preachers wish to retain their influence over their flocks they must be careful how they put themselvs where the iconoclast can strip them of their deific robes and remove the illusion of the people concerning them. It is only because the laity hav allowed the preachers to convince them that speakers upon whom apostolic hands hav been laid are a part of God that ministers occupy the position they do. Disillusionize the people and the clergy's occupation is gone.

THE three Christian county, Mo., Bald Knobbers who were hanged at Ozark on the 10th inst., seem to hav been a very pious lot. The crime for committing which they died on the gallows was murdering William Edens and Charles Green on March 11, 1887. The reason they killed the two men was because Mr. Edens had interfered with the Bald Knobbers when they were whipping one of his friends who was accused of misbehaving in church. Shortly after this interference the Knobbers raided Edens's house, and he and Green, who was with him, were murdered. The Knobbers were Methodists, and one of them received baptism just before his execution, and two of them, father and son, left a letter for their families, in which they say: "We can only resign ourselvs to our fate, and fervently hope to meet you all in a better world than this. And as to you, children, you must always try to shun bad company, walk in the way of righteousness, and let our sad fate be a warning to you all to never be led away by anyone. And should you be approached by any temptation cast it from you as Christ did Satan. Our aim is to meet God in peace and on the morning of the great day be enabled to stand at the right hand of God and sing our redeemer's praise. We thank God that he has given us a promis of heavenly home and faith to believe that he will fulfill it. We all hav to meet God sooner or later, and by the help of the one who died to save us let us prepare to meet him in peace. And thanks be to God on high, we believe with all our hearts that we are fully prepared to enter in at the straight gate and be welcomed home by the one who gave us our being. And now, dear ones, let the divine words of Jesus be your guide and he your comforter in all things." Any system of religion which gets such fellows as these Bald Knobbers into heaven, leaving their victims in hell, is surely not worth the acceptance and support of any decent man. Their lives hav been lives of bloody, brutal, cowardly cruelty, yet all the while they hav been believing Christians!

THE Madrid correspondent of the London Daily News intimates that Spain will some day follow France and break loose from the Catholic church. He writes: "Though the Catholic church has such a hold upon the immense majority of Spaniards, two facts must not be overlooked or ignored at the present time. The first is the existence of a growing disposition toward skepticism and almost open hostility to religion among the working classes of great towns, among the artisans of manufacturing districts, especially in Catalonia and in the southern provinces. The other is the development of a strong inclination for philosophical and scientific tenets absolutely opposed to the dogmas of the Roman church, in the more educated and enlightened strata of the middle class and of a fraction of the governing classes, men belonging, of course, to the Liberal and Republican schools. This current of thought and intellectual aspiration is to be met with in the bar, in literary circles, in the higher schools and universities, in journalism, and in the youth, not only of the university towns, but also among the new generation of the bourgeoisie that is engaged in commercial and industrial pursuits. They are as yet a minority in Catholic Spain; but their influence is spreading so much that it excites the ire and bitter opposition of the governing class and of the church, whose reactionary pressure is still felt in the domain of public education, and in every sphere of scientific and intellectual activity. I hav observed in Spain a phenomenon often noticed in France, in Italy, in Belgium, and in other Catholic countries, namely, that those Spaniards who sever their early allegiance to the Catholic church in the middle and in the upper classes, never go over to Protestantism, seldom even to any concrete religious form of dissent, and they hardly ever stop short of indifference, skepticism, or Freethinking, or some of the English, German, and French philosophical schools."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Concordia Blade givs us some more information about the religious proclivities of the denizens of Arkansas. He has been traveling in the state, and his observations led him to think that if he had to choose between a continuous residence in Arkansas and sheol he would prefer the latter place, unless it is worse than has been reported. "Religiously," he says, "the people of Arkansas are a success. Their Christian zeal is remarkable. I was informed of two cases while here, which show that in that direction they mean business. A new comer who had not learned the ways of the country, went into his harvest field and labored on the Lord's day; he was prosecuted and fined fifty dollars. The other case was that of a young lady who saw something funny in meeting, and laughed; it was only a little snicker, but it cost her fifty dollars all the same. I don't know what a good hearty horse laugh would be worth; but probably a couple of thousand. If the church people hear a gun on the Lord's day they will tramp and hunt around, and fool away time enough to raise five hundred bushels of corn to bring the guilty party to justice. Religious meetings are held in the school-houses, which are built of logs, and built by the Christian people for their use, and are called 'Christian houses,' but are used for school purposes also. I hav thought that this country is the Canaan of the Bible that God helped his people to drive out and kill the inhabitants, and located his people here; and they are here yet." Arkansas and Alabama are pushing each other hard for the place at the rear end of the procession of civilization.

Letters from Friends.

GALLUP, N. M., May 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I think Mr. Kirk's answer to the calf problem incorrect, as I can make it only 144 cattle. And to his "practical" example, I giv 12.7842 cubic yards as the quantity of earth taken from the cellar. LEE THOMAS.

POINT PLEASANT, IA., April 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5 to renew my subscription, and send two of your TRUTH SEEKER binders; I want to keep my file. I hav been a Liberal all my life, and enjoy your paper very much. Heston is immense.

Yours, etc., J. R. SELBE.

SOUTH ALLEN, MICH., April 30, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: C. B. Reynolds gave three lectures here at South Allen, and was thought by everybody to be the smartest man they ever heard. The church-members were a little mad, but will get over it. They heard something that they never heard before. Some said he ought to be tarred and feathered, but they dared not tackle him. He will be back in the fall. SETH BUELL.

PATCH GROVE, WIS., April 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find money order for $3 to continue my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER from May 1st.

THE TRUTH SEEKER still improves, and seems to hav enough to do yet before we can hav a model government, and I guess is likely to hav, as long as such noodles as Blair can get into Congress. All honor to Heston; his cartoons are long speeches that are quickly read, and the busy can take that much time to read them.

Fraternally yours, MARY Y. B. HUMPHREY.

GRANTFORK, ILL., May 7, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: IN THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 4th a Mr. G. H. Scheel states that the Liberals hav started a Secular society in St. Louis, and that they are to hav meetings and discussions every Sunday. He forgot to state where the meetings are to be held. I will be much obliged if he will giv the place where the meetings are to be held through THE TRUTH SEEKER. This town is near to St. Louis, and as the Liberals around here go there, they might go to one of the meetings. NICHOLAS J. KRAFT.

GREENE, IA., May 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: On page 65, vol. i, of "Thirty Years in the United States Senate," by Thos. H. Benton, occurs the following in relation to the Panama mission: "The monarchs of Europe had formed a 'Holy Alliance' to check the progress of liberty." Can you inform me whether or not the church of Rome was in any way concerned in that "Holy Alliance?" If she was, I would like, if possible, to be assured of the fact, and of any other correlativ facts that it may be possible to glean, as I want to make use of them in balancing assertions that I am making in regard to the recent Dr. Franklin papal nuncio fabrication. A. WILSON.

[Can any reader giv the information?—ED. T. S.]

LEONARD, IA., April 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hope my Infidelity in these parts may bear fruit in the future, as in the past. I am happy to say that there are and hav been in the past winter extensiv arrangements made by the people hereabouts to escape hell, and stamp out Infidelity—which, by the way, has caused an investigation. And the results from an Infidel standpoint show that the real thinkers are on one side, while on the other side are those that submit to the powers that be without investigation and do not seem to hav an individuality. Or, in other words, they that make the best Christians are those that read the scriptures the least. Therefore allow me to admonish Infidels to despise the cross, endure the shame, for the time is not far distant when the imaginary hell will explode, and then the priests undoubtedly will turn their attention to trying to get up an earthly heaven to be enjoyed here and now. Shake, Infidels, shake.

DANIEL LEONARD.

OAK MILLS, May 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It is with the greatest of pleasure that I take my pen in hand to write you a letter. My father is in Texas at present, and is having good success. While in Seymour, Ind., several months ago, he sent me a sickle that D. M. Bennett owned when he founded THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a rare keepsake, and I prize it very highly. I hav read two good books lately—Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods," and Edgar C. Beall's "Brain and the Bible." These works are unanswerable. I wish every pious, superstitious person in the world could read them. Among other good books that I hav read are "The Bible of Bibles," by K. Graves; "The Church and Morality," by W. S. Bell; "Foolishness of Prayer," by L. K. Washburn; "The New God," by S. P. Putnam; Colonel Ingersoll's "Vindication of Paine," etc., and besides these I hav read numerous works of Bennett, Ingersoll, Paine, Miss Wixon, Aunt Elmina, Wakeman, Putnam, Watts, and others. Nothing givs me more pleasure than to read the interesting articles in THE TRUTH SEEKER each week, especially those concerning the Blair bill. I was lately presented with a large scrapbook by my teacher, and in it are now to be found the portraits of several hundred Freethinkers. I think it is a book that I should feel proud of. When I look upon the features of those brave men and women, I say to myself, Can it be that they are all fighting against priestcraft, superstition, and the church? And when I realize that they are I feel so good, to think that they are some day going to overthrow these three great evils and place the Freethought banner upon the broken ramparts of all Christendom. With best wishes to you and Mr. Somerby, and all the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain, Faithfully, GEO. J. REMSBURG.

GREAT VALLEY, N. Y., May 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $6—$5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and $1 for the Giordano Bruno monument. I will merely hint to you at this time that there is scandal in the atmosphere at this place, and, as usual, it is all the doings of a reverend preacher and wife, and a young widow, whom report says he thinks more of than he does of her whom he swore to love, provide for, and protect, by the grace of God, a few years since. But alas! how unfaithful these reverends prove to their plighted vows when confronted by the graces and charms of a prepossessing young widow. It is then that the grace of God proves inefficient to hold the reverend fraternity, as a rule. Hence the wife of Rev. Mr. Thomas has sued her unfaithful husband for a divorce. It has caused a great scandal thus far in the neighborhood; has appeared in the county papers, also in the Buffalo evening News, and other periodicals, and is really assuming vast proportions. I understand the trial comes off at Salamanca the 20th of next month, and then we shall know something more definit regarding the matter. A. F. ALBRIGHT.

MOLINE, ILL., May 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I often see your paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and know you are interested in Colonel Ingersoll. I want you to inform him of the spirit I heard expressed against him when I was down in Alabama last winter. I was in conversation with a Catholic priest, and drawing him out on our free schools, which he was bitterly against. He commenced about R. G. Ingersoll, saying, "I would sign his deathwarrant, and go to bed and sleep soundly." This was also in the presence of Colonel Prentiss Ingraham. If this is the feeling that this element has for him, I think he had better look out for his scalp. It looks as though there might be some danger of his being assassinated by this element or their plot. Anyway, it is well enough that he should know it. We cannot afford to lose in that way the greatest man that ever lived. For my part, I am even proud to hav the opportunity to liv in a time that has produced such a man as Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Can I get in tract form from you, for missionary purposes, cheap, Gladstone on Ingersoll and Reply, Cardinal Manning on Ingersoll and Reply? I am going down in Alabama to put hornets in that priest's nest to start him on his mission that he would love to accomplish. Tell the colonel to keep on the lookout for him.

Yours, J. W. BURKHOLDER.

[Colonel Ingersoll's discussions with Mr. Gladstone and Cardinal Manning are not yet out in book form. Our catalog of books, sent free, givs prices of his other works.—ED. T. S.]

CARBONADO, WASH. TERR., April 19, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.50—$2 toward the paper and the remainder for the ANNUAL and Bell's "Outline of the French Revolution." I thought I was sure of a new subscriber, one who was taking a great interest in the paper, but I was doomed to disappointment through the party having to hunt new fields for a living.

In one of your late issues A. A. Hadley, of this coast, writes of feeling the effects already of the late election in favor of protection. We are feeling the effects of a reduction that took place in this coal camp on March 1st, the same being owned by one of the greatest railroad corporations in the country, whose leading man is one of our Republican lawmakers. When notified of it I asked the foreman what had become of protection. The only answer was a grin.

One of our Liberal protectionists, when admitting high wages in Australia, refers to that country as protected. Victoria is the only territory there that has protection, and it is well known that wages in that colony are lower than in free trade New South Wales and Queensland. British Columbia, adjoining this territory, has no protection, yet operators there can afford to pay the same wages for eight hours' work that protected Washington territory can afford only for ten. That twenty cents per day of W. T. S. H. falls far short of the Republican campaign scale of wages credited to British workmen. The wages of the surface laborers around the mines of that thickly populated country, from two shillings and fourpence to two shillings and eightpence per day, compare favorably with sixty-seven cents per day of laborers at the coke ovens of Pennsylvania, if we take labor papers who advocate neither protection nor free trade for it. Anyone traveling through Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire and seeing the valleys of those two counties lined with fine stone cottages on quarter-acre lots owned by miners on nine hundred and ninety-nine years leases, would think that they would compare favorably in prosperity with the wage-workers of Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Liberals in this territory would do well to take heed of W. S. Bush's suggestion to be on the watch for this incoming new state constitution. This place has few orthodox Christians, fewer Liberals, but quite a lot that are indifferent who never can afford time to read so as to improve their mind. Success to THE TRUTH SEEKER and its staff, is the wish of,

Yours truly, GRIFF LLOYD.

COIN, WASH. TERR., May 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: One of the main inspiring objects of life is happiness, and Robert Ingersoll says "the way to be happy is to make somebody else happy." It is not within my power to offer pecuniary aid to the toiling poor of the overcrowded cities of these United States, who toil every day for a mere pittance to keep soul and body together, with many trying to raise a family, and suffering from excessiv competition, lockouts, strikes, shut-downs, etc., over which the honest toiler has no control. But to such of these as scan the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER and honestly indorse the Nine Demands of Liberalism, I would offer a suggestion that they migrate to the Northwest, and procure a few acres of land, a cow, a team, a small stock of poultry; cultivate a garden, plant out a few fruit-trees, build up a neat little home, and thereby become more independent than a worker for wages can possibly be. Here in this Washington territory—soon to be a state—there are opportunities for tens of thousands of families to come and settle on uncultivated land, some of which can be obtained from the government by settlement in compliance with the law, while other lands can be bought of the railroad company at prices varying from $1 to $10 per acre, according to quality and advantages. Other parcels or tracts can be bought of settlers on easy terms and at prices to suit almost any of the energetic workers.

A little money is very convenient for a newcomer. It saves many hardships, judiciously applied, but it is not indispensable where there is energy and pluck; of all necessities this latter is the most indispensable.

We hav a fine climate, good soil, good timber lands, coal mines, some silver and gold mines not very well developed; no cyclones, tornadoes, earthquakes, or floods to boast of or fear; no angry God to fear or importune for favor. Nature is bountiful in gifts to the sterling rustler, and we want a full share of the honest breadwinners and defenders of the rights of man to share these blessings of independence in the new state of Washington. WILLIAM J. WHITE.

MARIAN, O., April 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps THE TRUTH SEEKER family has not heard from this priest-ridden community of God's immoral heritage. I hav been thinking of St. Paul, the hater of females, who advocated lying. Now, if God wants me to believe a liar he should hav made me of different material entirely. I am almost seventy years old, making my living at hard labor, harness-making. I became surety for a man, which I hav to pay, because he has put his property in the hands of his two daughters, who are building three fine residences to let. Now, these daughters are good church-members, and of course pray God to hav mercy on me a poor Infidel. At the same time they are silently chuckling over the fact that they are living nicely on the hard earnings of an Infidel—which to me is nothing short of a base swindle. Now, by the help of God—no, by the help of a little more elbow-grease—I will pay the note, and stick it in a conspicuous place, and when these good Christians tell me about the beauties of religion, I will point to that as a specimen of Christian honesty. Such are the consequences growing out of the pernicious doctrin of shouldering their sins on another person.

Not long since a reverend came to hav some repairing done. He wanted to know how much it would cost. "Twenty cents," was my answer. He wanted to know if I could not do it for fifteen cents, as that was all the money he had. Now, I did not believe one word of it, because these fellows make their living by lying.

Watson Heston's picture of God's jealousy reminds me of the time when I was jealous. Now, the misery of a man in that condition is simply indescribable. And I determined to break myself of it if it cost me my life, and came off conqueror. Now, God being jealous, he must be infinitly so, hence infinitly miserable. My advice to God is to do as I did—break himself of it if it costs him his life.

Yours for progress, until superstition and jealous Gods will be no more. FRANK EVERLY.

S. W. OSWEGO, N. Y., May 2, 289.

MR. EDITOR: While our friends are discussing the problem of modern Spiritualism, will you, or some one of your correspondents, giv us a solution of an occurrence which happened here a few months ago? My present, loving wife came into this neighborhood an absolute stranger to everyone here. She had never seen, or even heard of, any member of my family, who were all dead. While about her daily affairs, she says, she saw a card, about the size of a postal card, held before her eyes by an invisible power, upon which was printed in large letters, "Jane Walker, wife of Alvah H. Walker." This was before she had seen or heard of me. Also, every day for a week, and at all times of day, a pretty little lady would put her hand on the opposit side of her face, hold her fast, and kiss her. (That's the way my daughter always kissed anyone.) She saw this girl every time. While visiting a neighbor, she was shown the picture of my deceased wife and my daughter, and exclaimed at once, "That's the girl that has been kissing me every day;" and was surprised when told that the mother and girl died a long time ago. My wife is a Free Methodist, and "a consistent Christian." I am, and hav been for many years, what you understand as an Ingersollian Agnostic, and am naturally given to skepticism. I do not believe my loving wife prevaricates. There is also no motiv for doing so. I hav given you the facts in as little space as possible, and ask you again to explain. Neither of us is a convert to, or believer in, modern Spiritualism. A. H. WALKER.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., April 30, 1889.

DEAR OLD TRUTH SEEKER: You are not only a truth seeker but a truth speaker. Many a time I hav looked you through to try and find a lie in you, and then write and tell you of it, but I giv it up. You grow to be a more noble servant for the cause of Liberalism every day. I speak from personal experience. Continue on in your good work. I would sooner go without my meals for one week than go without one issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav received every number safe up to date, and I must say since my year's subscription began again I hav received two numbers each week, but rest assured I hav made good use of them.

This is a one-eyed country down here, nine hundred miles from everywhere. I cannot send you much news. The Methodists are having a gay time in their way, buying more seats and talking about building a new church. They hav a pastor now that deals it out to them with fun and humor, and of course draws a large congregation. The other preachers seem to be getting a bit jealous of him. That's natural, of course. They all find nowadays they hav to be a bit more funny to attract a congregation. No congregation, no dinners.

I was sorry to see C. B. Reynolds had been so sick. I wish the old gentleman was coming down this way again to giv us some talks, or Colonel Ingersoll, or Dr. Thomas, of Chicago.

We hav a lot of so-called Freethinkers in this city, but they never patronize a Liberal paper, and very seldom air their Freethinking ideas. They seem to think free speech is violating the Constitution of this country.

How I long to go to Chicago and see that man Stevens, and drop in at the Forum! Long life to Heston. His illustrations are rich beyond description. Giv us his picture in a coming number, or tell me where to get it.

I inclose twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL.

Yours for the sake of humanity, heaven while on earth and no Christian bigot's hell in the future, and right before might, W. G. MORGAN.

ENSENADA, LOWER CALIFORNIA, MEX., April 28, 1889.

MRS. ELMINA SLENKER: "Come let us reason together." I hav read your discussion with Mr. McArthur with a great deal of interest. Now that Mr. McArthur has abandoned the field, I suggest that you and I come and reason together, hoping, however, that good feeling will be maintained throughout. You say you wish to continue the study of the question, "If a man die shall he liv again?" You say you wish to be credited with honesty of purpose and willingness to learn. Granted. In your argument you seemed to take for granted all that has been said by the enemies of Spiritualists against the cause. For instance, the party who visited Miss Lulu Hurst said he saw no wonder at all—only a muscular girl. Now, if the moving of heavy bodies by Miss Lulu Hurst with one hand on top of the table, or whatever the object, is no wonder to you, you must understand perfectly just how it is done. Will you please inform me and the other readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER how it is done?

You seem to dispute the veracity or judgment, or both, of the fifteen million Spiritualists who claim to know Spiritualism to be a fact by ocular demonstration; demonstration, in fact, to all the senses; and such demonstration to many and repeated hundreds of times, and the fact as well and thoroughly established in the minds of many as the fact is to you that you can talk face to face with a friend and know to whom you talk, or that you can receive letters from friends and recognize them. Now, in all candor I ask, why this prejudice? Hav you found Spiritualists as a class lacking in veracity or clearness of judgment? Go into any community where there are Spiritualists. Visit the schools, take statistics. See if the children of Spiritualists learn mathematics as fast as others. Go to the courts and see if any distinction is made on testimony under oath. Take the census of the scientists of to-day, and inventors, and see to what religion the majority adhere. And, last but not least, who will uphold the downtrodden and fight unto their death, if need be, for the abused?

One instance of spirit communication—the last that has come under my notice. I hav been here in Ensenada not quite two weeks. I lived before coming here in Phenix, Ariz. While there I knew a medium whose name I hav not permission to use, but whom we will call David Church. He left Phenix about six weeks ago, came here, and went into the mines. Here is what I received from him last evening: "Mrs. N. A. Pickens: I received three letters from you last night—the first I hav heard from you since I left Phenix, except through spirit friends. They told me more than a week ago you were in Ensenada. I told McKimm [his partner] of it at the time." I could write and ask McKimm about it if necessary, but would dispute the veracity of my mother as soon. Now, if the spirit friends didn't tell him I had come to Ensenada, Elmina, please tell us how he did ascertain the fact. I hav had as good tests from Mr. C. hundreds of times, verbatim. MRS. N. A. PICKENS, M.D.

EL DORADO, KAN., May 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Last year I promised you I would giv you my experience in the church, or churches. Being born on Oct. 25, 1852, without any volition of my own, and under an orthodox administration, you see it was natural to drift into the church. So I did, and it was the Seventh Day Adventist. I was not in there long until I felt that there was something wrong. I left that and joined the Campbellites; this one imposed certain rites upon me that were not in harmony with my make-up. I liked the bread and wine, but the idea—how foolish!—I quit it with disgust. It was foolishness in the extreme. The members asked me why I quit partaking of sacrament. I told them I did not believe in it, and that I could see nothing but foolishness in such performances. The brethren would ask me to return thanks. I responded, "For things that we cannot get unless we work for them?" I "kicked" on the sending up of thanks for "our daily bread," too. Well, I don't know whether they went to heaven, hell, God, or the devil. I could never find out, as I never got an answer. However, I hitched my imaginary orthodox cart onto the M. E. chariot, and that just completely took all the wind out of my sails. But, in the mean time, I was busy reading Ingersoll's works, Paine's "Age of Reason," and works of other sons of liberty, until I was fully competent to decide in my own mind that the Bible was and is a humbug, and that the principles of Infidelity would make me a better man in every respect than the Holy Queer and the church.

I hav often said that if I were to stay in the church I could not be an honest man—i. e., I would be a hypocrit. I know a man who livs not over twelve miles from here, whose initials are O. F. H., who has been owing me $9.50 for two years. He has not paid it, and I think that he never intended to pay it when he contracted the debt. He is one of their leading members in the Methodist Episcopal church at L. He makes the longest prayers, etc., in favor of all the virtues known, and at the same time he will tell you or anyone else a willful falsehood. Such is the teaching of the church. The ministers in Kansas tell us that morality is not essential in the salvation of mankind. Well, I would rather be a moral man and serve the devil, than be a church-member and be a hypocrit. From what I hav learned by reading Ingersoll, Paine, Voltaire, Humboldt, Volney, and the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, with its most valuable contributions, I hav bid adieu to the church for truth and veracity. The church is a burden to every man, woman, and child clinging to it, and I hope that the time will come when this infernal superstition will hav no hold on the minds of the people. Down with all the isms that hav a divine revelation for their guide.

I hav over two hundred TRUTH SEEKERS, and I am sending them out to friends and acquaintances. Send THE TRUTH SEEKER right along. I shall never giv another cent to build churches in which ignorance and superstition are taught. I had rather giv to the poor of our times than for such folly. The preachers know no more about the future world than the most ignorant men of earth. Why do they pretend to know unless it is to mislead and deceive the people? The people are to blame for hiring men to teach something that they do not believe themselvs. Liberals must wake up and do all they can to get rid of this imposition, Bible Christianity. Away with the Bible God, and giv us liberty and morality in its stead.

Yours for Universal Liberty, T. W. BUTCHER.

ALLIANCE, O., May 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking a few lines from our Liberal Society here might be of interest to some of the readers of your good paper, I will just say a few words, that the Liberals of the country may see that we are still at the front. We hav a society here made up of Spiritualists and Liberals who work together, and get speakers. So we got Mr. Frank T. Ripley, of Boston, to speak here for two months, March and April, and he had very good audiences. Mr. Ripley is quite a good talker, and a very social man. He made quite a number of warm friends here, and is a radical Liberal. We hav a good deal of friendship for him on that account, if we do not believe as he does spiritually. He gave up his last lecture in the evening to B. F. Underwood, who spoke to one of the largest audiences we ever had. People had to go away on account of there not being any room for them to be seated. Mr. Underwood's lecture was open for remarks, and a few persons had some questions to ask, which Mr. Underwood answered in such a way that it made the meeting quite a lively one. His opponents had no defense to offer to their own questions. Mr. Underwood is quite a favorit here, as he is one of the first Liberal lecturers we ever had to speak for us. He used to come here as far back as 1865. I know he could see quite a change between now and then. In those days he could get an audience of from thirty to fifty; now he has an audience of five or six hundred.

At the close of Mr. Ripley's course of lectures the following resolutions were adopted, and a request that the same be sent to you for publication:

ALLIANCE, O., April 28, 1889.

WHEREAS, Mr. Frank T. Ripley, of Boston, Mass., lecturer, and platform test medium, has been speaking and giving tests for this society for two months, March and April;

Resolved, That the officers and members of this society find him an able teacher and lecturer and test medium on the subject of Spiritualism; and,

Resolved, That we extend our earnest thanks for his work done among us; and,

Resolved, That his many warm friends here will welcome him back again in the future when he can come among us again; and,

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Liberal press for publication.

J. R. HAINES, President.
R. G. SMITH, Secretary.

And also there were some resolutions adopted for our young brother and friend Alfred E. Vaness, who is president of our Secular Union, and first vice-president of the Independent church. Mr. Vaness and his brother came to our town about two years ago from England, and are highly educated, and fine singers. The loss of Alfred E. Vaness from this society is deeply felt, especially by the young folks, of whom he was quite a favorit. He is a machinist by trade, and seeks another place where he may find employment. On behalf of him the following resolutions were adopted, with a request that they be sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER:

INDEPENDENT CHURCH, ALLIANCE, O., May 5, 1889.

WHEREAS, Mr. Alfred E. Veness, president of the Secular Union and first vice-president of the Independent church, is about to remove from our midst and sever his connections with this Union, in which he has so faithfully labored as a member; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply regret the necessity of losing him in our Liberal work, and most fervently wish for him a future of activ usefulness in his chosen field of new associations and interests. And we do most respectfully recommend him to all Liberal societies as a true and faithful Liberal.

J. F. HAINES, President.
R. G. SMITH, Secretary.

Will Secular Thought please copy this last resolution? With kind regards for THE TRUTH SEEKER family, Respectfully, R. G. SMITH.

HAVANA, ILL., April 22, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: "If a man die shall he liv again?" This is a question that comes up in the mind of every individual. It is a question that no one can answer to the satisfaction of all, and I am only going to giv my honest thoughts about the subject. By examining all the creeds of the different religions, I cannot find anything to prove to me there is a life beyond the grave. I find in the holy Bible, Eccl. iii, 19, 20: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they all hav one breath: so that a man hath no preëminence above a beast. . . . All go unto one place." Eccl. ix, 5: "The dead know not anything, neither hav they any more a reward." Isa. xxvi, 14: "They are dead; they shall not liv; they are deceased; they shall not rise." Now, Bible bigots, where does your resurrection come in? Again, says Job vii, 9: "As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away, so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more." And I might go on through this old book called the Bible and I could not find anything that says there is a life beyond the grave. And we find it positivly denies the resurrection. Then if the Bible, or supposed divine revelation, givs us no light on this subject, we must consult that grand faculty of reason which nature has been so kind as to giv us. Nature givs us this grand faculty to guide us in search of truth and justice, and if man will not let prejudice and religion trample his reason under foot it will guide him to grand and useful facts. It is understood by almost all people that it is our spirit that livs after our bodies are destroyed by death. By spirit we mean the mind, that part which thinks, or in other words, our thoughts. I will first take the mind (spirit) and see what it is. I know nothing of mind only as it proceeds from the brain. The brain is the organ of the mind. Each faculty of the mind has its separate or special organ in the brain. While in this material world, mind can neither act nor be acted upon except through an organized apparatus. Impressions of external objects must be received through the organs of sense and their delicate nervous filaments, and thought can find expression only by means of the physical instrument under its control. Now, if we go behind these instrumentalities, tracing back the nerves which ramify through all the bodily organs to their focus in the interior of the cranium, what do we find? Not mind, but brain; not the immaterial intelligence which receives, analyzes, and composes the impressions transmitted through these nerves, but a material apparatus, an organ. Without this organ no mental manifestation would be possible. That the brain is the organ of the mind is now universally admitted. Consciousness localizes the mind in the brain, giving a clear conviction it is there and nowhere else. The brain has its function to perform the same as the stomach, heart, or any other organ of our system, and the brain is of no more use to our system as far as keeping up our physical existence is concerned than any of these organs. When the stomach has been destroyed it cannot digest food. When the heart has been destroyed it cannot propel the blood through the system, and when the brain is destroyed it cannot think or receive thoughts. The brain is activ only when the blood is circulating in it. When the blood ceases to circulate in the brain the mind is dormant. In a dreamless sleep the blood has stopped its circulation in all of the organs of the brain. In case of dreaming one or more of the faculties may be in activ exercise while all of the others are dormant. This is caused by the blood circulating in those organs that are activ, while the other organs that hav no blood circulating in them are asleep. But when the blood does not circulate in any of the organs of the brain the mind is in a dreamless sleep, the person is unconscious, cannot take cognizance of time, dates, place, or occurrences. In fact, the person does not know he exists. Whole hours may pass and he will not know it is a minute. Suppose, then, that while the person was in this dreamless and unconscious condition the other organs which keep up the voluntary parts of life should be cut off or destroyed, would the person regain his consciousness? I say no, and it does not look reasonable he would.

I will admit that in almost every mind there is a desire to liv again. I will also admit that in almost every mind there is a desire to gain some high position in life, but because you hav the desire that does not prove your desire will be rewarded. A desire which is not founded on facts is as worthless as a ship without rudder, mast, or sails. Persons hav a desire to liv again; this desire creates a hope, and on this hope their belief is founded. We often hear it said that almost every human being, civilized and uncivilized, hopes for another life after this. But this hope comes from their desire, and as we often hope for things we do not get, this proves to us that a desire, a hope, or belief does not giv us any evidence whatever that our desire or hope will be rewarded.

Belief should be the result of evidence and not of hope. Persons too often say they believe a thing when they only hope for it. Man is a product of nature. He came from a material germ. This germ came from material things. Man's physical organism is composed of material things. Then as he is brought into existence by material things, these material things contain the heat within themselvs to create life. Without heat all material substance would be without life, and without matter there would be neither life nor heat. The material substances of the earth and the heat of the sun are what produce life. But the sun derives its heat from a material substance, or matter. So we can see if there was no material substance there would not be anything existing, neither would there be any life or heat. Every product of nature livs upon some other product of nature. When a man dies his body will be food for some growing product of nature, the same as other products were food for him while he was growing. So we can see these products of nature pass from one thing into something else, but they remain material and do not pass out of existence. So those elements which compose man always existed and will continue to exist in some material form.

I am a Materialist because I cannot believe in mind or thoughts without a brain. I am a Materialist because material is the source of all things that do exist. I believe in nature's laws, which are a constant and regular order of facts. I believe in this world and no other. I believe in every man's duty to do all he can to make this world a heaven.

Yours for Materialism, J. A. WEABER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Cornish Lullaby.

Out on the mountain over the town,
All night long, all night long;
The trolls go up and the trolls go down,
Bearing their packs and crooning a song;
And this is the song the hill folk croon
As they trudge in the light of the misty moon—
"Gold, gold! ever more gold—
Bright red gold for dearie!"

Deep in the hill the yeoman delvs,
All night long, all night long;
None but the peering, furtiv elvs
See his toil and hear his song;
Merrily over the cavern rings
As merrily over his pick he swings,
And merrily over his song he sings;
"Gold, gold! ever more gold—
Bright red gold for dearie."

Mother is rocking thy lowly bed
All night long, all night long—
Happy to smooth thy curly head
And to hold thy hand and to sing her song;
'Tis not of the hill folk, dwarfed and old,
Nor the song of the yeoman, stanch and bold,
And the burden it beareth is not of gold;
But it's "Love, love—nothing but love—
Mother's love for dearie!"

—Eugene Field, in Chicago News.

My Little Pup Christmas.

I hav a little, fat, yellow pup, and his name is Christmas. I call him Christmas because I found him wandering on the street Christmas eve. I took him home, fed him, and made him a bed out of an old dress of my sister's.

When the pup was one year old my father, myself, and Christmas went out to the government pier. As I was walking along I stumbled and fell into the water. The dog jumped in after me, caught me by the coat collar, and held my head above the water until my father helped me out. I was very much frightened, but soon got over it. When Christmas was two years old I made him a present of a dog collar, which he liked very much.

Sometimes the neighbor's dog comes in and then there is a fight. My dog is a brave dog, and he can whip the neighbor's dog. After a while a friend gave me a little kitten. At first the dog and cat could not agree, but when they had been together for a while they became good friends, and this Christmas they may be seen together sharing their Christmas presents. We named the cat New Year because the dog's name was Christmas.

A week after I got the cat my little cousin came to visit me. He took a great liking to the dog, but did not like the cat. He would giv the dog sugar and other things, and would get very angry when the dog shared his good things with the cat.

One evening, when we were all busy, my little cousin took it into his head to get rid of the cat. He wrapped the cat in an old blanket and put it into the oven of the kitchen stove. My mother smelt something burning; she ran out into the kitchen, and was just in time to save the cat. The cat was very sick, but got well and is still living. My little cousin promised never to try again to roast a cat.

When the cat was a year old I thought I would giv him a surprise party. I invited all my friends and told them to bring all the cats and dogs they could find. They came and brought small cats, large cats, yellow cats, black cats, big dogs, little dogs, pug dogs, bull dogs, and every other kind. We had the party in our barn and when the procession filed in you ought to hav been there. There was a pitched battle, and you bet we boys had fun. My cat and dog came out of the battle alive, and are still enjoying good health.

Roy Stiles.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

There was once a little girl whose reading in school was so excellent that she was always called upon to display her abilities when visitors were present. On one such occasion, says Youth's Companion, she rose, "puffed up with majestic pride," to repeat a poem beginning:

Daffodils, daffodils.

But pride had a fall that time, for the words got twisted, and she enunciated with emphasis:

Daddyfoils, daddyfoils.

Many are the ludicrous mistakes belonging to reading classes. A little girl one day attempted the sentence: "Cortes, with a handful of followers, went to Mexico," but she read, in all gravity: "Cortes, with a handful of flowers, went to Mexico." Another child delivered, with great expression, the lines from "Lord Ullin's Daughter:"

Who will cheer my bony bride,
When they hav slain her lover?

"Why, Georgie," said a girl to her little brother, "I've just heard that you were whipped at school last week. I had no idea of it till ma told me a few minutes ago." "Hadn't you?" responded George. And then he added, with an air of pride, "Why, I knew it at the time."

A resident of the Cass Farm, Detroit, who owns a handsome home, considered himself infringed upon by a neighbor who had built aggressivly near to him, so that their windows faced each other. The aggrieved man determined to make his neighbor uncomfortable. So he took pencil and paper and draughted a line fence nine feet high, that would at once separate the two houses. His little daughter ran into his study while he was working at it and asked him what he was making. He explained it to her and gave her an admonition. "You are not to go into Mr. ——'s yard any more nor play with the children." "But, papa," pleaded the little one, "we're good friends. I like them and they like me." "I don't care," was the answer. "I want you to keep away from them, and that is why I am building this high wall between the houses." The child's eyes filled with tears, and she looked earnestly into her father's angry face for a moment in silence, then asked softly: "Papa, is it a spite-wall?" It will not be built now.

A little Sixteenth-street girl was interviewing the preacher. "Ain't God good?" she asked earnestly. "Of course he is, my child," said the pastor. "And it isn't wrong to say so, is it?" she continued. "Certainly not." "That's what I told mamma." "Why, my child," said the pastor in amazement, "your mamma did not say he was not good, did she?" "No, sir, not exactly; but at breakfast this morning, when papa took a mouthful of coffee, he said 'Good God!' and mamma told him there was no use in swearing, even if the coffee wasn't the best in the world."

Correspondence.

Portland, Ore., April 21, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I am fourteen years old, and I go to school every day. I am very glad to write a letter to the Children's Corner. My papa is a Freethinker. He has taken The Truth Seeker for five years. I am interested in the Children's Corner. I hav "The Story Hour," which my papa gave to me for a present. I hav enjoyed reading it very much. Your Freethinker friend, Florita A. Neunert.

Palatka, Fla., April 26, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: I thought I would write you a few lines. I am twelve years old, and will soon be thirteen. I liv with my grandmother. My mother, father, and little brother liv in Kansas City, Mo. I go to school, although school is out now. I study arithmetic, algebra, grammar, geography, United States history, Sixth Reader, and dictionary. I like to look at the pictures in The Truth Seeker, as I think them very funny. School was out on April 19th. This is my first letter to the Children's Corner. Hoping to see this in print, I am, as ever,

Your little friend, Ella M. Smith.

Lynn, Mass., April 22, 289.

Miss Wixon: I hope the cheery children's editor does not think that I hav forgotten the cosy Corner. I hav sent my messages two or three times since my last was presented more than a year ago. I suppose they must hav miscarried, so I send you a bundle to make up the account.

The Corner is about the first page I turn to when I get the paper, for however prosy or querulous may be other columns, I do not fail to find poetry and generosity in your department.

If I was able to hav my way in the world, I would buy a printing-press, and hire you to help me make a bijou paper that would be all Children's Corner. I think it should be done by some one. John P. Guild.

[Our friend is very kind, and we thank him for his appreciativ words. Some time, we trust, there will be a Liberal paper that will indeed be all Children's Corner. Until that time arrives we must be content to work and wait.—Ed. C. C.]

Eagle Point, Ore., April 25, 1889.

Dear Miss Wixon: As I hav nothing to do at present, I will occupy the time in writing to the Children's Corner. My father has taken The Truth Seeker for about six years. We all like it, especially Watson Heston's pictures. We liv on a farm three miles from Eagle Point. We hav a large orchard—about fifteen hundred fruit trees. I hav four sisters and two brothers. My little brother is a year old—his name is Robert G. Ingersoll; he is trying to lecture now. We are having bad weather here; it is raining here now.

Our school is out at present. We had a splendid teacher; last New Year's he gave me a very nice card. Do you not think him very kind? Mr. Putnam lectured here in Jackson Hall last summer. As this is my first letter to the Children's Corner, I will close, hoping, as I do so, that it may skip the waste-basket. From your Liberal friend,

Miss Minnie Newman.

P.S.—I will send you one of my cards, and would like to hav one of yours in return.

M. N.

[Thanks for the pretty card.—Ed. C. C.]

Science Column.

Ocean Navigation.

It may be truly said, I think, that ocean navigation is one of the accomplishments of modern science, and as it is a subject upon which the mind may dwell not only with pleasure but admiration, I will endeavor to explain how a sea captain with his vessel finds his way upon a pathless ocean from port to port, thousands of miles distant, when for weeks, or probably months, nothing but sky and water is to be seen.

We may, for the purpose of our explanation, suppose that for some time past the ship has been in the harbor undergoing repairs, taking in cargo, and making necessary preparations for the long voyage which she is about to undertake. At length the hour of departure arrives, and the ship, with her cargo, captain, and crew, glides smoothly down the river to the broad ocean, there to encounter storms and tempests of every form and magnitude.

The crowded and busy harbor is soon left far behind. In a short time every lighthouse and landmark disappears from view. Above the vessel is the blue sky, beneath her the mighty deep, around her the ever approaching and receding waves. But the rolling waves following each other in rapid succession giv to the gallant captain and brave crew no information as to the whereabouts of their ship.

Everyone knows that the compass is the sailor's true friend, because, in the darkest hour or thickest fog, it never deceives him. But as that instrument merely indicates the direction the vessel is going, he must hav some means of ascertaining the distance he travels. That he ascertains by means of the "log." A coil of string is wound upon a reel, the end is attached to the log—a piece of wood shaped to float steadily in the water—which is cast overboard, and the time that a measured length of string takes to run off the reel is noted, and by this method the number of miles per hour is estimated. The measured distances on the log line are marked by knots, and the time bears the same relation to the hour as the knot does to the nautical mile, and we speak of the ship going so many knots an hour. This estimated speed is written in the log book. The state of the weather, the force and direction of the wind, the course steered by compass, and all important events of each day and hour of the voyage are also written in the log book. This method of sailing is called by seamen "dead reckoning."

Navigation by dead reckoning is simple and easily understood, but causes may and do arise that render it unreliable. A captain may be sailing west on his way from England to America, and may enter a current of sea water several miles wide running rapidly northward. There may be nothing in the appearance of the sea to indicate that he is in such a current. And if he has only his dead reckoning to rely upon, he may run into danger when he thinks his ship is floating safely on the bosom of the ocean. Or a vessel may be so drifted, turned, and tossed about by violent storms and furious gales, that the dead reckoning may become confused and lost. The captain then relies for his safety on that branch of navigation known as "nautical astronomy."

Every person who has made a sea voyage must hav seen the captain appear on deck morning and noon with his watch in his hand and an instrument called a sextant at his eye looking in the direction of the sun. He is taking observations to enable him to determin the position of his ship, and in order to do that he has to determin his latitude and longitude.

Every well-informed school boy and girl knows that the earth which we inhabit is a round globe or ball. That its only natural fixed points are the north and south poles. That halfway between the poles is the equator, and that there are ninety degrees of latitude from the equator to the pole.

The sextant is an instrument for measuring angles, and when the captain comes on deck at noon, it is to measure the hight of the sun above the horizon. He begins to observe a little before twelve, and watches it rising slowly, until at last it seems to stop and slowly begins to descend. The highest altitude that has been observed givs the latitude by a short calculation, in which the principal thing to be considered is the position of the sun itself with reference to the equator.

The sun's distance north or south of the equator is called its declination, and the path it follows crossing the equator is called the ecliptic, and when making this calculation, altitude and declination are both considered.

Every year there is published a book entitled the "Nautical Almanac" (it is prepared at Greenwich Royal Observatory), in which all the movements of the sun, moon, planets, and principal stars hav been calculated beforehand. From this book the captain gets the sun's declination. He corrects it for the moment at which he took his observation, and is thereby able to determin his latitude.

It sometimes happens that the sun is hidden behind dark clouds and cannot be seen at noon, but the captain gets his latitude at night on the same principle from a meridian altitude of the moon, of a planet, or of a star. Latitude may also be obtained by taking observations of the pole star. An observer on the equator would see this star on the horizon, and as he travels northward it will continue to rise in the heavens, and the hight of the star above the horizon will always be his latitude in whatever part of the northern hemisphere he is in.

The captain having now discovered his latitude, turns his attention to the question of longitude, when the chief things to be considered are time and distance. One minute is the sixtieth part of an hour and the sixtieth part of a degree also. The circumference of our earth at the equator is 360°, all of which is passed over by the sun in 24 hours (15° per hour), and we all know that the sun appears to rise in the east and set in the west, consequently it must be daylight in the former before the latter, and as a matter of course it must be noon at St. Petersburg and Copenhagen before London and Liverpool, and at the latter places before Boston or New York. Sailors of all nations reckon or count their latitude from the equator, but longitude is counted from various places. The Russians count from St. Petersburg, the French from Paris, and the British from Greenwich. All seagoing vessels carry one or more clocks called chronometers. They are placed in swinging positions that they may not be injured by the rolling of the ship. They show the exact time at the place from which the captain reckons his longitude. We may suppose Greenwich, and by comparing the difference between Greenwich time, as shown by the chronometers, and the actual time on shipboard, the captain determins his longitude. If a ship is on the Atlantic ocean at 10 o'clock, and the captain knows that it is exactly 12 o'clock at Greenwich, he knows that he is 30° west of Greenwich, and that is his longitude. The duty of comparing time is performed with great care and accuracy, because if one hour of time is equal to 15° of longitude, one minute will make a difference of 15 miles in the position of the ship. It will now be seen that the ocean navigator is a man of intelligence and learning. He knows more about the size and form of our earth, the position and movements of the planets of our solar system, than was known by all the astronomers of the world before the time of Copernicus and Bruno. The starry firmament imparts to him information of great importance; the heavenly bodies reveal to him the divine teachings of nature herself. They speak to him in his own language; they warn him of approaching danger, and faithfully and unerringly guide him on the path of safety.

Robert S. Colvin.

Omaha, Neb., April 28, 1889.

Questions.—Why is the compass the sailors' true friend? How does the sailor measure distance upon the water? What is the "log?" What is "dead reckoning?" Is this mode of measurement ever unreliable, and why? What is nautical astronomy? What is a sextant? What is latitude? How is a ship's latitude found? What must always be considered in finding latitude? What about the "Nautical Almanac?" How is latitude found when the sun is obscured by clouds? May latitude be found in any other way? What is longitude? How is it found by the Russians? the French? the British? the Americans? What is a chronometer? In comparing the difference in time, must one be careful? Why? Is the sea captain a man of intelligence and learning? Why?

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE Truth Seeker Annual
—AND—
Freethinkers' Almanac,
1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	28
James Parton,	32
Helen H. Gardener,	33
S. P. Putnam,	36
Charles Watts,	37
E. A. Stevens, Sec. A. S. U.	41
Parker Pillsbury,	42
Robert C. Adams,	44
J. D. Shaw,	46
F. M. Holland,	47
E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D.,	50
Lucy N. Colman,	51
J. H. Burnham,	53
L. K. Washburn,	63
Ella Gibson,	64
Susan H. Wixon,	67
John Peck,	71
W. S. Bell,	78
E. C. Walker,	80
Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	84
Dr. Juliet H. Severance,	87
Mrs. E. D. Slenker,	89
Col. J. R. Keiso,	91
G. H. Dawes,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LIFE OF
Joshua Davidson:
MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.
BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order of Creation.
Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.
☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist
BY
A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."
Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.
The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.
Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.
Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

LIBERALS SUPPLIED
With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

Essence of Religion.
By L. FEUERBACH.
Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.
The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.

THE EDISON MIMEOGRAPH.
Patented by
THOS. A. EDISON.
Manifolds Autographic and Type-Written Letters, Drawings, Music, etc., etc. 3,000 copies from one original.
Send for circular and sample of work.
A. B. DICK COMPANY,
32 Liberty St., New York. 152-154 Lake St., Chicago.

ANTICHRIST.
PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.
144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculativ, each proved affirmativly and negativly by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.
By W. H. Burr. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., NewYork.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.
☞ For all Diseases of Eyes or Ears. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O, N.Y.

The Career of Jesus Christ.
An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

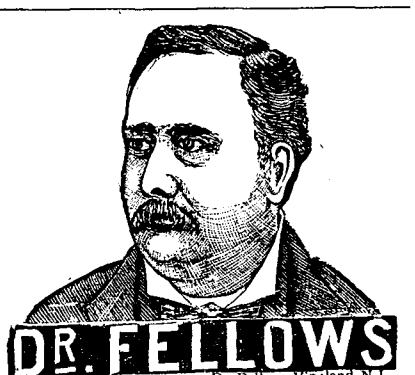
RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.
The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.
Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.
The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.



EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
Food and Diet in Relation to Health and Work.
The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.
For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.
It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 Warren St., New York.

FATHER, SON & HOLY GHOST.
By T. E. LONGSHORE.
5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen; $1 for 25.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
MEN, WOMEN & GODS.
BY HELEN H. GARDENER,
Introduction by
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.
The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.
Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

DR. FELLOWS
HYPOPHOSPHITES
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.
Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch Liberal is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

A Centennial Reverie.

Frank Pixley's Argonaut.

This inauguration of a first president was not the beginning of our national career. America's colonial history dates from the fifteenth century; the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries were, at this period, nearly complete; three hundred years of struggle had been endured while elements of population were accumulating and crystallizing, which became the basis upon which a constitutional government might be safely erected. The citizens of our colonial system were gathered from all foreign lands, bringing with them much which was good and much which was bad, much which was broad and generous, and much which was narrow and bigoted. Exiles from persecution in other countries, resorted to persecution in New England; persons fleeing from the tyranny of unjust and illiberal laws, passed harsh and cruel enactments; exiles fleeing to a land where they might indulge unrestrained religious opinions, denied the freedom of conscience to their co-exiles; Protestants fleeing from inquisitorial tortures, persecuted Roman Catholics, and denied to them equal privileges in a land which belonged to neither and which they had jointly agreed to steal from an aboriginal race, which did not know the God over whom Christians quarreled, nor understand the faith which they could not agree to interpret, nor believe in the religion which had divided them into warring factions. The victims of Torquemada and the bloody Alva; of cruelties practiced in the dark and troublous ages; refugees from the persecutions of Protestant England, Presbyterian Scotland, of the reforming Henry the Eighth, of the bloody and bigoted Cromwell; Huguenots fleeing from the massacres of St. Bartholomew, committed under sanction of pope and king—all gathering in New England, consented to drown Quakers, burn witches, persecute Freethinkers, exile Baptists, pass Blue laws, and traffic in slaves, stolen as captivs of war from Africa.

It was a curious mixture of strange peoples; it was a hard and dangerous period, out of which grew this strong and Liberal government. Had it not been for these diverse religious opinions so strongly held, these brave bigots so sternly resolute, and because of a stormy ocean, which rendered assistance from beyond the sea impossible; had it not been for common dangers which environed them, colonies widely separated, surrounded by hostil savages, oppressed with unknown dangers and with political and commercial wrongs of a common character—it is not probable that a friendly union of states could hav been effected under a constitution which recognized equality, freedom, and personal liberty. Three centuries of struggle and endurance, and the dawn of a new and brighter era broke upon the continent. Common dangers, common endurance, common enemies, had brought forth such a race of pure women and brave men as had never before been called upon in the world's history to plant the foundations of an empire.

Out of all this chaos and confusion, this narrow bigotry and inflexibility of religious belief, came a Liberal organic law which had no God in it—a government without a religion, a state without a church. A nation, all soldiers, emerging successfully from a long war, made no provision for a standing army; colonies, ruled from the pulpit by Puritan preachers, formed states which gave no acknowledgment to priests and no aid from the public treasury, recognizing no spiritual influence, no hierarchical interference or authority, in civil affairs.

Our forefathers builded better than they knew; but one evil still remained. It had not been overlooked, but the consequences of its continuance had not been estimated. Slavery had been permitted to hide in the Constitution, and it led to the only great danger which had threatened the American Union. That danger has now passed and we are again a united people. The evil our forefathers had not the wisdom to fear or the courage to eradicate culminated in civil war.

In 1620 a Dutch vessel brought slaves to America. In 1662 John Hawkins, an Englishman, brought slaves from Africa as merchandise in the ship Jesus, a slavetrader. Slavery existed in New York and New Jersey from the earliest period of their colonial history. The slave trade was protected by a convention between Englaad and Spain. For two hundred years slavery was encouraged by merchants of Boston and New York and by the commercial policy of England. It was sanctioned by religion—Roman Catholic and English Protestant. Merchants struggled to monopolize the slave trade. It was the central object of England's policy; leading theologians favored slavery. Jonathan Edwards, a Presbyterian divine, Berkeley, an English bishop—clericals in the train of Lord Baltimore—owned slaves and upheld slavery as a matter of principle and religious faith. Slaveowning societies sent missionaries to Africa to convert the heathen. There was trade and gospel grace in the African slave traffic and in slavery. The North retained it till soil and climate advised its political conscience that slavery was not profitable. The Yankee of New England, the Dutchman of New York and New Jersey, unloaded their human chattels upon the South, where, aided by climate and character of productions, slavery flourished. The institution became entwined in the very fabric of its political existence, was interwoven with the warp and woof of its industries, its economies, and its social and domestic life.

The time to write the history of the causes which led to the civil war has not yet come. Slaves are free and black men can vote; but the wounds of the conflict are not yet healed, the scars hav not yet faded out, war memories are not forgotten, war burdens are not yet lifted, war debts are not yet canceled, war damages are not yet repaired; race prejudices still exist, the color line does not fade, political dissensions are not yet adjusted, the intelligent white minority does not gracefully submit to an ignorant black majority—perhaps it never will, perhaps it never ought. We leave that question for discussion to the orators of the next centennial.

The Real King's Daughters.

From the New York Sun.

Every Friday Mrs. Robert G. Ingersoll and her daughters and sister are at home informally to their friends. The Misses Ingersoll often sing and play, and there is always special talent in the drawing-room, and some delicious little spread in the dining-room. These companies are delightful, the charm being the great territory they represent, for everybody who comes to New York wants to see Colonel Ingersoll's home and the Bartholdi statue of Liberty. On Sunday the entire family is at home, and then chairs are at a premium, and so many delightful groups are formed and so many brilliant points made that one is at a loss how to take it all in.

There were never such Sunday nights as these, for everybody on the carpet can do or say something just a little better than anybody else; at least the host thinks so, and that puts the guest at his ease. As an index to the taste of the family, the room generally reserved for company is the library, a splendid apartment with lofty walls, polished woodwork, and a view of ever-gay Fifth avenue. The floor is carpeted with a crimson rug that warms and brightens up the room, and wherever the eye strays there is a piece of china, a water color, a pot of pink azalea, a spreading palm, or a bit of marble to make what the art-loving lawyer calls a beauty spot. Every wall space is covered by a bookcase, from which the doors hav been removed, and there are thousands and thousands of books between the floor and frieze, and the library table is literally stacked with folios of prints and attractiv volumes of poetry and song. Many of the books are treasured as souvenirs, and on the margins are crisp, terse remarks showing the owner's opinion of the authors. Adjoining this delightfully booky room is the salon parlor furnished in blue, hung with splendid paintings, dotted with lamps, candelabra, and bric-à-brac that illuminate and idealize, and lined with a variety of chairs, divans, and low seats. One corner is given to music, and here the colonel gets his greatest enjoyment. Once a week Mrs. Ingersoll opens her basement door to the poor and needy, and the help she personally extends would put some very liberal churches to shame. In the winter kettles of soup and coffee are kept boiling the entire morning; empty bottles and cans as well as empty stomachs are filled, and, whatever the season, no worthy applicant goes without assistance.

Both daughters being of marriageable age, that most hackneyed of all interrogativs, Is marriage a failure? not unfrequently comes up, and with it the blushes of the pretty sisters. Apropos of elopements, the great Infidel has repeatedly denied the possibility of a surprise, inasmuch as he has always had his daughters' confidence, for the reason that he has tried to deserve it; and more than that, it has been the rule of his household never to admit to their society any man unworthy of their acquaintance. No one who has ever known the lovely girls will doubt the frequency of invitation to change their names, but as yet no suitor has been favorably regarded, the young ladies insisting that their father must choose for them. There is but one condition on which the consent of the unbeliever can be had, and that is a written agreement from the son-in-law to become a member of his family. "My daughters are free to marry any men they love, but instead of losing them I insist on gaining two sons."

The religion of the daughters of Colonel Ingersoll, or their lack of it, has been variously misrepresented. Taking a clergyman's recent assertion that the elder of the two desired to become a Christian as an excuse for asking the young lady for the truth, I got from her a positiv assertion that she had no inclination churchward.

"Very much that is amusing to us has been said about our religious tendencies," she added; "much that is wholly without foundation. We never contemplated going into the church, never, although we are perfectly free to act as we please. Neither my sister nor myself ever heard a sermon in our lives. We read church news just as we read church history, but hav so little respect for the manner in which creeds hav been established and are maintained that we never cared to listen to any of them. I think it would amuse you if you could see some of the people who come to our home to save us from what they call eternal punishment. We hav received more than any of us hav kept count of—men and women—all of them very nice people, and too earnest in their solicitude for us to laugh at them. They represented all Christian denominations, and some of them came long distances to talk to us. Sometimes we hav asked to be excused, but in nearly all instances one of us listened for the sake of being polite. The sermons, tracts, books, and marked papers sent to us from all parts of the world would hav made a very hot bonfire for a minute or two, had we cared to save them, and I do believe the creeds and articles of faith that hav been mailed to us would fill a postal cart. We didn't mind them, but we felt sorry for the clerks and carriers, as very often the documents were simply addressed to New York, and some one had to take the trouble of looking up our residence.

"No, we never hav regarded this class of visitors as audacious, for the reason that it is duty with them. These visits hav their pleasing side, for most of the would-be proselyters come prepared to see a monster of some sort, and when they tell us before leaving of their pleasure in having met us, we can't help feeling a little flattered."

An admiring friend of the Ingersolls gave to a Sun reporter this extolling account of the daughters: "They hav never gone to school a day in their lives, never attended a church service, never had a love affair nor a secret from their parents, never uttered a prayer nor bowed their haughty heads before a shrine, image, or priest, but they are two of the loveliest creatures that ever breathed the breath of life. If the big, merry Infidel lawyer could be induced to quit his tirades long enough to write a book on how to bring up daughters, there would not only be profit for the writer and the publisher, but a very excellent reason for a lenient opinion on the part of the abused churchgoers. It is not possible to come in contact with these sisters without a feeling of admiration and astonishment. If one is pious the feeling is also regretful. They captivate by their very presence; their manners are irresistible, and the beauty of their lives is as positiv as it is indescribable. Contrary to the established modes of procedure, the Ingersoll girls were never disciplined. The colonel started out by praising instead of punishing his children. Nothing was forbidden. Everyone was at liberty to say and do and be what he wished. The word 'must' was by common consent eliminated from the family vocabulary, and has remained obsolete ever since. The average parent says to his child: 'I want to be proud of you.' Colonel Ingersoll changed this and said: 'I want you to be proud of me.' On that basis the training of the little daughters began. The father planned the course of study. A tutor was secured, under whose supervision mother and daughters worked, and nothing in the realm of domestic or social science was permitted to overshadow the importance of these daily tasks. Household affairs were kept in the basement, where they belonged; friends were wooed and welcomed, not by one but by all; and the individuality that so much much trouble is taken to develop was allowed to sink into that sweeter, better feeling of dependence that made and still makes each helpless without the support of the other. There were no such things as secrets, and the trust and faith that so many girls giv to strangers was secured and held by the mother and father, who hav endeavored to be worthy of what they call the sweetest thing in life—child worship."

PIONEER PITH.

THE GIST OF LECTURES ON

RATIONALISM.

By CAPT. ROBT. C. ADAMS,

President of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club.

A useful compendium of scientific and critical lore. The best handbook of its size for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.—British-American.

It is the author's aim to condense the main facts of Rationalism into a small compass. It contains more than other books many times its size.—Freethought.

Salient facts, arranged with remarkable perspicuity.—Tyler, Tex., Leader.

Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

For sale at this office.

DID MAN FALL?

The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.

IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?

$5,000 REWARD.

By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"

Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.

Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.

Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn. —Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

Paper, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GODS AND RELIGIONS

OF

ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Givs a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS

OF

HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking usefnl precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune.

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

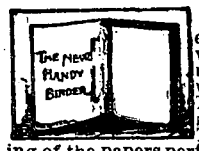
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257.

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited.

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular, Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right.

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, ENG.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

ANOTHER plot against the czar has been discovered, with ramifications in the army, navy, and all classes.

AT a Hungarian christening near Houtzdale, Pa., on the 5th, a general fight ensued in which one was killed and many injured.

HIGH license is reducing the number of Philadelphia saloons.

THE federal grand jury in Indiana is investigating election briberies.

FATHER BOYLE, a Catholic priest of Raleigh, N. C., has been arrested for rape.

SUPERFLUOUS Oklahoma boomers are going into Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona.

AT Salem, Ore., Rev. J. Harris has starved himself to death, being "commanded to do so by God."

THE 1888 report of the American Bible Society givs 1,453,357 Bibles distributed, and 567,016 families visited.

AT Toledo, O., Rev. Peter Van Etten has been arrested for attempting to run away with $3,000, the property of a widow.

CINCINNATI saloonkeepers hav bound themselvs, in their association, to keep open Sundays in defiance of the aw.

IT is reported that President Harrison will come to Brooklyn on June 5th to review the procession of sixty housand Sunday-school children.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., has suppressed the sale of Sunday newspapers.

THE German emperor is receiving Nihilistic circulars and threatening letters.

AS the Catholic congresses close, the Vatican is asking all European governments to coerce Italy into restoring the temporal power.

A WOMAN'S municipal suffrage bill has been defeated, in one form, in the Michigan legislature, but in another form will probably be passed.

EUROPEAN scientists by application of galvanic currents to different parts of the head hav secured results confirming the much-disputed affirmations of the phrenologists.

AT Forest City, Ark., race conflicts in politics hav resulted in the killing of three white sheriffs and constables, and the killing of the leading negro politician in retaliation.

THE present attitude of European powers toward the Exposition, when contrasted with their opposit conduct toward the second empire, shows a concerted attempt to boycott the republic.

THE bill to legalize marriage with a deceased wife's sister made its annual appearance in the House of Lords on the 9th, and was defeated, as usual, by the Bishops assembling in full force and voting against it.

IT is estimated that three-fourths of the women of leisure in New York and Brooklyn are interested in mind cure, Christian science, or faith healing. The pupils of the classes are all women, while the teachers are both men and women.

WOMEN voters of Brunswick, N. J., fiercely contested late school elections, on sides Catholic and Protestant. In this case, as in Boston, the women had taken no interest in the franchise till religion came up. We hope that women will bring no mischief into politics.

ALLEN THORNDIKE RICE, newly appointed minister to Russia, died on the 6th of tonsilitis. He is deeply regretted. He was a scholar, and a wealthy man who devoted himself to the public good instead of becoming an idler. He tried to reform politics, and made the failing North American Review a success by introducing live and radical thought on the issues of the day.

THE
ORDER OF CREATION.
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
CONTENTS:
I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis: A Plea for a Fair Trial By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.
This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.
Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Gems of Thought.

THIS crime, war, which consists in the commission of a great number of crimes, is not so general as you imagin. We hav already remarked that the Brahmans and those primitiv Christians called Quakers hav never been guilty of this abomination. The nations which are situated beyond the Ganges seldom shed blood. The people near the Indies and the Hydaspes were exceedingly surprised to see the first armed robbers who came to deprive them of their country. Many people of America had never heard of this horrible crime till the Spaniards came to exterminate them with the gospel in their hands. It is not said that the Canaanites were ever engaged in war till the sudden appearance of the Jewish horde who laid their villages in ashes, cut the throats of their women on the dead bodies of their husbands and of children in the laps of their mothers. —Voltaire.

WE know nothing of what the ancient gentiles . . . were before the time of the Jews, whose practice has been to calumniate and blacken the character of all other nations; and it is from the Jewish accounts that we hav learned to call them heathens. But, as far as we know to the contrary, they were a just and moral people, and not addicted, like the Jews, to cruelty and revenge.—Paine.

IT may be doubted if even-handed justice, as free from fulsome panegyric as from captious depreciation, has ever yet been dealt out to the sages of antiquity who, for eight centuries, from the time of Thales to that of Galen, toiled at the foundations of physical science. But, without entering into the discussion of that large question, it is certain that the labors of these early workers in the field of natural knowledge were brought to a standstill by the decay and disruption of the Roman empire, the consequent disorganization of society, and the diversion of men's thoughts from sublunary matters to the problems of the supernatural world suggested by Christian dogma in the Middle Ages. And, notwithstanding sporadic attempts to recall men to the investigation of nature, here and there, it was not until the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries that physical science made a new start, founding itself, at first, altogether upon that which had been done by the Greeks. Indeed, it must be admitted that the men of the Renaissance, though standing on the shoulders of the old philosophers, were a long time before they saw as much as their forerunners had done.—Huxley.

IT is owing to this long interregnum of science, and to no other cause, that we hav now to look through a vast chasm of many hundred years to the respectable characters we call the ancients. Had the progression of knowledge gone on proportionably with the stock that before existed, that chasm would hav been filled up with characters rising superior in knowledge to each other; and those ancients we now so much admire, would hav appeared respectably in the background of the scene. But the Christian system laid all waste; and if we take our stand about the beginning of the sixteenth century, we look back through that long chasm, to the times of the ancients, as over a vast sandy desert, in which not a shrub appears to intercept the vision to the fertil hills beyond.—Paine.

WE know that fragments of Greek and Roman art—a few manuscripts saved from Christian destruction, some inventions and discoveries of the Moors—were the seeds of modern civilization.—Ingersoll.

CHRISTIANITY has retarded the progress of the human race by at least fifteen hundred years. The fruits of science and social reform, which our descendants will reap in fifteen centuries hence, might be enjoyed at the present moment, if the last sixty generations had not wasted their time in disputes about the interpretation of idiotic dogmas.—Oswald.

LEARNING may be said to hav languished in a region of twilight for the greater part of a thousand years.—Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

FOR what can War but endless War still breed,
Till Truth and Right from Violence be freed?
—Milton.

WHEN war is called a necessity, it is meant, of course, that its object cannot be gained in any other way. Now I think that it has already appeared with distinctness, approaching demonstration, that the professed object of war, which is justice between nations, is in no respect promoted by war; that force is not justice, nor in any way conduciv to justice; that the eagles of victory can be only the emblems of successful force and not of established right.—Charles Sumner.

No man ever seriously attempted to reform a church without being cast out and hunted down by the hounds of hypocrisy.—Ingersoll.

THE highest crime against a creed is to change it. Reformation is treason.—Ingersoll.

THE SPIES REPORT CONCERNING RAHAB.

So the two men returned, and descended from the mountain, and passed over, and came to Joshua the son of Nun, and told him all things that befell them.—Joshua ii, 23.

Odds and Ends.

"JOHNNY! what made you help yourself to this jam?" But all Johnny could say did not improve matters in the least, and so due punishment was inflicted. A short time afterward he came to his mother's side with a troubled expression. "What is the matter, Johnny?" she asked. "You've always told me," sobbed the boy, "that 'God helps those who help themselvs' and God didn't help me one bit!"—Time.

A CHICAGO woman told her newly acquired Irish maid, the other day, to say she was not at home in case anyone called. One visitor did come, and she is responsible for the story. "Is Mrs. Blank in?" she said, when the door was opened in response to her ring. "No, ma'am," replied Bridget, stonily; "she's not at home, and may God forgiv the awful lie I'm tellin' ye." Whereupon she slammed the door in the visitor's face.

THE SEXTON.

Who is it walks with lordly tread,
And holds on high his haughty head,
And makes us quake with awe and dread?
The sexton.

Who, when we are engrossed in prayer,
Congeals us with his haughty stare,
And says, "How did you get in there?"
The sexton.

Who, when we join the pious band,
Lays on our arm his heavy hand.
And says, "Look here, you'll hav to stand?"
The sexton.

Who makes the stoutest heart to quail,
The rosiest cheek turn wan and pale,
And e'en the strongest courage fail?
The sexton.

—New York Truth.

"ELIJAH!" "Yes, sir." "What do you think we might do for that worthy Colonel Shepard, whose wholesome conversation and chaste sprightliness are so distinguished?" "Really, sir, I scarcely know, unless he is appointed editor of the prayers delivered daily in Congress." "Excellent, Elijah, excellent! And please arrange with the chaplains to mail him a copy of their prayers a day in advance. The evening papers must not be discriminated against."—Puck.

PRISONER: "Last time yer had me here I was a good Meffodist and got sent up fer borrowing a couple of chickens, while yer let a fellow off who had killed his mudder 'cause he war a somnambulist. I'se changed my creed and when I stole dat pig I war a regular howling somnambulist." Judge: "Three months for the prisoner." Prisoner: "Yo' don't mean ter say dat somnambulists has gone out ob style already. I might jest as well er stayed a Meffodist."—Exchange.

"I TELL you, neighbor, things ain't like they used to be when me and you was boys," said old farmer Haycock to a neighbor the other day; "I tell you boys nowadays ain't much like boys used to be when we was boys." "Not much they ain't," said the neighbor, dejectedly. "Naw, sir; nowadays if a boy puts in fifteen hours on the farm he calls it a full day's work, an' wants to quit, an' he kicks if he cayn't hav a full hour at noon." "I know it; blame 'em!" "An' if he cayn't hav a full suit o' store-clothes ev'ry year or two, he makes trouble, an' blamed if I can git one o' my boys to go to town bar'-footed after they get along toward nineteen an' twenty years old. Oh, I tell ye, pride an' laziness is ruinin' the world!" "That's so, Haycock; that's so." "It jist is! an' when my boys goes to town they've got to hav fifteen or twenty cents to squander away; I tell ye, you an' me didn't hav it, neighbor. An' my boys wanter eat up our eggs an' butter an' sich, an' let good bacon an' corn-bread go to waste; I tell ye, neighbor, you an' me never e't nothin' that could be sold." "No, we didn't, Haycock; no, we didn't." "We didn't wanter drop work an' go off to a circus once ev'ry summer; we didn't lay off work at sundown, an' when our dads called us at three in the mornin', we knowed better'n to roll over an' sleep till most four, like farm-boys do nowadays. I tell you, the good old times air gone an' a gineration o' good-fer-nothin's is risin' up." "That's so, Haycock; that's so." They silently weep in remembrance of the "good old times."—Time.

HIS NAME IS LEGION.

He springs up like weeds in a field of potatoes,
He grows up like grass where the cold waters lie,
He's multiplied thick, like the seeds in tomatoes,
He's widely diffused as the stars in the sky;
He's floating round thick as motes in the sunbeam,
As thick as the rain when the deluge began;
He's thick as the shadows that follow the sun gleam—
The only original Harrison man!
He comes in a legion
From every region—
This thick multitudinous Harrison man!

Oh, he's thicker than bees in the buckwheat and clover,
He swarms like musketoes in Jersey; he flies
Like the black cloud of locusts that swarmed Egypt over,
So dense that it darkened the light of the skies;
Oh, he comes in great droves, like a buffalo invasion,
He comes down in hordes, like a wild caravan,
He comes from each party and sect and persuasion—
This only original Harrison man!
In a great inundation,
He floods the whole nation—
This only original Harrison man!

And he wants to go up and govern Alaska,
And he wants to be minister down to Peru,
And he wants to be consul in wild Madagasca,
And he wants the post-office in Kalamazoo,
In fact, he wants to be spread out like butter,
All over the world, from Maine to Japan,
To be scattered round thick from Cork to Calcutta—
This only original Harrison man!
He wants the whole planet,
To run it and man it—
This thick multitudinous Harrison man!

—Yankee Blade.

COMMON SENSE
GUIDE TO CORRECT ENGLISH.
By J. L. BARKER.
Price, 35 cents. Address this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 22. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, June 1, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

JOHN WANAMAKER'S piety has led office seekers who want post-offices to obtain the indorsements of leading divines.

HEREAFTER politics will be tabooed at the White House on Sundays. The president thinks that he can make his administration stronger by attending to the details of office allotment on week days.

THE British Bible Society reports an expenditure for 1888 of £226,164, and receipts of £212,615, against £226.663 for 1887. The distribution of Bibles also fell 500,000, from 4,000,000 to 3,500,000. They were in 287 languages.

THE crew of the wrecked schooner Northern Belle complain that the converted nativs of Motlab island, in the Pacific, stole all their effects which were washed ashore, and that "the nativ missionary teachers were among the leaders in the looting."

CAPTAIN NOYES of the ship Coloma reports that he has found three new islands, southeast of Japan, which are not marked on any chart. The rocky little specks are about a quarter of a mile from one another, and rise forty feet above the level of the sea.

FOR the first time in ten years the law closing saloons, barber-shops, and places of amusement was enforced on Sunday in Indianapolis, Ind. And Benjamin Harrison, says the World, was many miles away sailing down the Potomac and enjoying himself in a very worldly way.

THE most eastern point of the United States is Quoddy Head, Me.; the most northern point is Point Barrows, Alaska; the most western is Alton Island, and the most southern Key West. Working from these four points, many will be surprised when they locate the geographical center of the United States.

"AWAY with the nauseous ditties," cried the Episcopal bishop of western New York, "which hav degraded our church solemnities of late, letting us down almost to the level of camp-meeting melodies or the minstrelsy of a strolling Salvation Army." This is harsh on the Methodists, and the general run of religious song-makers.

MR. MOODY is to return to Chicago next September. He preached in this city last Sunday. He will open in Chicago with a ten-day convention, to be followed with meetings similar to those he has just closed in that city. He will not, however, engage in debate with Infidels, and it is doubtful if he again retains Driver for that purpose.

A DISPATCH from Rome says that the pope will protest at the coming consistory against the erection of the proposed monument in honor of Giordano Bruno on June 9th. It is not at all likely that his protest will hav more effect than to emphasize the fact that the influence of the Vatican is not very great with the local government.

ISAAC PITTMAN, the inventor of the system of shorthand writing that bears his name, is a good example of vigorous and industrious old age. He is past seventy-six years of age, and works daily from 6 in the morning until 6 in the evening. He used to work from 6 in the morning until 10 at night, but now says that he is getting too old to work all day.

AN attack has been made by the pietists of England on the sport of flying pigeons, on the ground that pigeons are made to fly on the Sabbath, contrary to the Ten Commandments. The president of the Manchester Flying Club being interviewed, instead of expressing his belief that the community would support him in the contention that the Commandments do not apply to flying pigeons, has solemnly denied the accusation of Sunday pigeon-flying, saying that pigeons seen flying on the Sabbath are doing it on their own hook, without any encouragement from the club; and that when a pigeon race necessitates flying on Sunday the race is invariably declared off.

THE Iron Mountain railway, a branch of the Missouri Pacific system, gave notice in April that all unnecessary Sunday trains, both passenger and freight, would be discontinued on that road after May 1st. The American Sentinel comments: "It does well. Any railroad that is in the habit of running unnecessary trains on any day in the week ought to discontinue them if it wishes to make any money."

HERRMANN, the conjurer, has been interviewed in Chicago about his experiences with Madam Diss de Bar. It seems he has dropped her. He says she fell flat after he left Philadelphia, and she did her spirit pictures so much more poorly than he could do them that it was folly to keep her. Herrmann thinks she deceived so many persons that at last she was deceived herself, and really believed herself in the hands of the spirits.

THE Supreme Court of the United States, in an elaborate opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Field last week, decided that the Scott Chinese Exclusion Act, passed by Congress in 1888, is constitutional. The act provides that no certificate as to identity, granted under previous legislation and securing to a Chinaman who has left the United States the right of subsequent return thereto, shall hav any validity for the purpose of such return. It was this provision especially that came before the court in the case decided.

SOME of the managers of theaters in this city complain of the number of requests that they receive to giv performances in aid of the public charities and all kinds of institutions They say that if they acceded to all these requests their actors and actresses would be engaged in charitable work every night of the week, and the whole of the receipts at the box-office would be turned over to philanthropic collectors at the end of each performance. In several cases clergymen who preach against the theater hav asked managers to giv performances in aid of some charitable society in which they are interested.

ON the present meeting of the general assembly the Observer (Presbyterian) says: "There are some who favor a revision of the Confession of Faith, and overtures will be presented to this assembly to that effect. There is no proposal to change the doctrins, but the language in which they are expressed. It is assumed that this language is not in accordance with modern conceptions and modes of expression. We hav shown in a recent editorial that the statements of the Confession are strictly scriptural. The reasons alleged for the proposed changes apply with no more force or reason to the Confession than to the New Testament."

MINNESOTA has made a new departure in temperance legislation. It provides that whoever becomes intoxicated by voluntarily drinking intoxicating liquors shall be deemed guilty of the crime of drunkenness, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as follows: For the first offense by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $40, or by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than forty days; for the second offense by imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than sixty days, or by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50; for the third and all subsequent offenses by imprisonment of not less than sixty days nor more than ninety days.

IN England 19,328 schools receive assistance from the grant for public education. Of these 11,890 are connected with the Church of England, 555 are Wesleyan schools, and 917 belong to the Roman Catholics, making a total of 13,362 denominational schools. The unsectarian schools number 5,960. The church schools hav an attendance of 1,988,863 against 1,644,237 for the others. The church schools offer seats for 2,606,886, with an average attendance of 1,669,222, while the board schools are together capable of seating 1,826,392, and hav an average attendance of 1,389,208. Taking the other elementary schools also into account, it appears that 1,988 863 children go to denominational schools, while 1,644,231 attend those under unsectarian [but religious] control.

THE Maharajah Dhuleep Singh sends the Pall Mall Gazette a letter, addressed to the queen, in which, after enumerating many alleged wrongs, he insists on the restoration to him of the Koh-i-noor. He says: "It will be useless for me to demand the restoration of my kingdom, swindled from me by your Christian government, but which I hope shortly, by the aid of providence, to retake from my robbers. But my diamond, the Koh-i-noor, I understand, is entirely at your own personal disposal. Therefore, believing your majesty to be 'the most religious lady' whom your subjects pray for every Sunday, I do not hesitate to ask that this gem be restored to me, or else that a fair price be paid for it to me out of your privy purse."

THE rules of etiquet laid down now regarding court functions are comical, but do not compare with the following regulations, which were prescribed by the lord chamberlain two hundred years ago for the benefit of officers, many of them belonging to noble families. When invited to dine with royal persons they were to be neatly dressed, with clean coats and boots, and not to enter the room in a half-drunken condition. They were warned not to drink after each mouthful, as that would make them drunk too soon, nor to empty more than one goblet for every two dishes. They were not to put their hands in the plates, their bones under the table, lick their fingers, wipe their noses on the table cloth, or drink so much as to make them fall off the chairs or unable to walk straight. These are extracts from a Guide carefully drawn up for the guidance of officers and gentlemen of noble families, which shows that English manners hav improved since 1624.

THERE is trouble between the French and the English and American exhibitors in the Exposition. Sunday in Paris is the great holiday, and of course the Exposition is open and crowded with visitors. Some of the pious English and American exhibitors pretend to be shocked, but the Exposition is open nevertheless. The Courier des Etats Unis says: "We hav already seen how the movement of the Anglo-American coterie for closing the Exposition on Sundays has been ridiculed in France. At least a great portion of the English and American exhibitors hav decided, it appears, to evade the regulations of the Exposition by covering their products with curtains which will hide them from view on Sundays. This sort of protestation against the character of the institution from which they derive a benefit, and also against the sentiment and usages of a nation whose hospitality they are receiving, looks like a challenge, and it is certainly an impropriety. The first law to be observed by a stranger in a foreign country is that which invites him to conform, at least in public matters, to the institutions and customs of that country."

THE Tyler, Texas, Leader, published by and in the interest of the colored race, thus exposes an old but pious fraud. It is hoped that the negroes may be wise enough to heed the words: "A religious gentleman by the name of A. S. J. Allen, of Gainesville, Fla., recently had a remarkable letter printed in the office of the Sentinel of that city. The letter purports to be from Jesus Christ, found eighteen miles from Iconium, sixty-five years after Christ is said to hav left the world. Copies of the letter are to be sold. Mr. Allen has struck a rich vein, and, owing to the general ignorance and credulity of the masses, he will perhaps coin many a dollar out of his pious fraud. The hoax is similar to the one practiced by cunning priests several years after the crucifixion of Christ. They sold, in all parts of the world, pieces of the cross on which he was crucified. They sold so much of the "true cross" that if all the pieces could be collected they would build a bridge long enough to span the ocean. Fools, it seems, are itching to be fleeced, and one man may just as well do the fleecing as another."

DR. GAUTSCH, the Austrian minister of public instruction, has introduced a series of scholastic bills which will go far toward restoring ecclesiastical control over public schools in villages and small towns. The proposed legislation revives compulsory religious instruction, and provides that the same shall be imparted by priests, whose authority over the pupils shall be equal with the schoolmaster's. Attendance at elementary schools is to be compulsory for children between th ages of six and fourteen, but in villages and small places this rule may be relaxed. The post of school inspector is to be tenable fo life instead of the three years as at present and the clause of the present School law which provides that the inspectors shall be chosen from among the teachers and professors is abrogated. Lastly, Dr. Gautsch's bills will enact that rural communes shall not be required to maintain public schools in localities wherein the existing private schools shall seem to the communal authorities to be sufficient for local needs. The effect of this enactment must be to multiply church schools and to close numbers of national schools.

ANTI-SEMITISM has become so intense and aggressiv in Vienna as to create a powerful and vigorous opposition. Two hundred and fifty firms in Buda-Pesth hav published a common declaration to the effect that they will cease visiting Vienna's International Corn Market in consequence of the growth of the anti-Semitic movement in that city. Similar declarations hav been signed by the corn merchants of Miskolez, Arad, and Pressburg in Hungary, and by a thousand others in Prague, the majority of whom are said to be Christians. This boycotting of Vienna has told so upon the commercial and industrial classes that the Vienna Association, formed to attract visitors to the capital, has formally set its view of affairs before the Austrian premier. Trade and industry, says the association, especially the art industry, are at the lowest ebb in Vienna, principally because rich foreigners avoid a city in which those who spend money are held up to opprobrium and hatred, and also because the wealthy Jewish residents studiously refrain from any display of luxury in order to escape the attacks of anti-Semites. The memorial closes with a petition to the government to denounce anti-Semitism.

THERE ought to be one day in every week set apart for rest from the secular labor of the other six days, says the Sunday Mercury. But the day of rest should be one of perfect individual freedom. Under the present restrictions our Sabbath is not a Sabbath, but a day on which cranks dictate to the public how they shall spend it. The Field code of Blue laws, instead of being repealed, is used by bigots in religion to dictate what laboring men shall drink, and, indeed, what they shall hear. The divinest thing in all Christendom and heathendom, music, is under the taboo of miscalled reformers. The people of Europe come to "free America," and find as much lack of freedom as can be found in Siberia on Sunday. They are watched and hounded by police in uniform and detectivs in citizens' dress. The role of Aminadab Sleek is played by churchmen, and they would play the bloody role of Saul of Tarsus if they dared. It is opposed to the very letter and spirit of American institutions to close concert saloons, art museums, and museums of history against the poor men and women of a vast city, who are free only one day in the week to attend upon and appreciate them. The meanest tyrant is an aggregated one called the state and Europe has teemed with his historic examples. But better things are expected in a country where personal liberty is the supposed palladium of its citizens.

Communications.

Principles of American Liberty.

When the fathers of the republic drafted the Constitution of the United States, it was their intention to effect a complete separation of church and state. For well the fathers knew the history of the church. They knew what ecclesiastical rule was; what church domination meant.

From the days of Constantine church and state had been united. In fact, Europe was one vast hierarchy. It was a state within a church. The church was the supreme power, using the secular government as a means for the accomplishment of her ends. Men who represent a system of religion, the fundamental dogma of which is the doctrin of infallibility and whose system and profession can only be maintained by the people accepting that system, will, if vested with legislativ authority, incorporate the principles of their faith in legal statutes. Europe was thus dominated by the church for more than a thousand years; and so firmly did the church fasten herself upon every nation of Europe, that nowhere hav Secularists yet been able to force her to relinquish her hold.

The church gained complete control of the temporal as well as the "spiritual" affairs of Europe; and what was the result? Intellectual gloom settled upon the civilized portions of that fair country; mankind became debased; Greek and Roman civilization became extinct. Where once there had been enlightenment and wealth there came ignorance and destitution. In the place of Aristotle, Plato, Archimedes, Euclid, there came a horde of ecclesiastics, corrupting the people with their diabolical schemes for supremacy. In place of the Roman senate with its illustrious law-givers there came the Vatican with its wicked, cunning popes. In place of the pagan schools, with their geometers and philosophers, there came church councils issuing ridiculous creeds. Instead of the farm and thrifty husbandman there came the monastery with the monk and his crucifix. Europe was devastated by religious wars. Witches were slaughtered. The Inquisition arose and flourished. The skies of Europe for a thousand years were lurid with the flames of the auto da-fé.

The church has ever been the enemy of liberty. She has ever sided with the strong against the weak. Her record is one of tyranny, cruelty, and crime. Christian liberty means only the liberty to be a Christian. The Infidel has no rights which Christians consider themselvs bound to respect. Those who have been honest enough and bold enough to resist ecclesiastical oppression hav done so at the risk of their lives. Their children hav been taken from them and given over to the care of the church. Their property has been confiscated. And they hav been tortured on the rack or punished with the thumbscrews and boots.

The founders of our government knew that if we maintained our liberties the church should be allowed no legal advantage—should be recognized only as an individual. The great principle of human rights, which the church never knew, that "all men are free and equal and hav certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," was made the basis of American liberty. The great fact was clearly recognized that every individual has rights with which no government can, or should, tamper. These rights are liberty of conscience, free thought, free speech, freedom of religious exercises. The right to engage in such pursuits, to seek such pleasures, as shall be consistent with the rights of others. With the principles: That no one has a right to interfere with the natural rights of his fellow-men. That "all governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed."

The church declared that "kings rule by divine right;" that the "powers that be are ordained of God, and he that resisteth the powers resisteth the ordinance of God." But the American idea of liberty is, as expressed by Thomas Paine, that we not only hav the right to resist the tyranny, but resist the tyrant.

It is evident that our Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States are not based upon Christian liberty, but upon equality and justice. Our Constitution ignores the Christian religion. Its God is not recognized, its savior is not known, its holy book is not mentioned.

Washington said: "This government is in no sense founded upon the Christian religion." Our government recognizes no religion, but tolerates them all. One may voluntarily contribute to the support of any religion. But no one can be compelled, by taxation or otherwise, to contribute to the support of any sect or religion.

When the attention of those who drafted and signed the Constitution was called to the fact that they had not recognized the Christian religion or the Christian's God, some of them said they had "forgotten it," while Jefferson did not hesitate to say that it was the intention to found a purely Secular government. It was intended to let the church take care of itself. The state has no souls to save, no souls to damn. And in order to secure the people in their rights an amendment to the Constitution was made, which says: "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of a religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government for a redress of grievances." This prohibition of establishing a religion does not apply to the states, although most states hav a section of like import in their constitutions.

Not content with this remarkable liberty guaranteed to all, Christians, by being in the majority and being so thoroughly organized, hav controled legislatures, and in every state in the Union hav been able to secure the enactment of laws favorable to the church and tending directly to the establishment of Christianity as a state religion. People realize very little how the church, vampire like, is fastening herself upon our nation. She has ever intrenched herself in civil power; her doctrins hav been propagated by fire and sword through centuries of creed and crime. Our Constitution has severed church and state, and as a consequence the church has been losing power and influence. She is, therefore, making desperate efforts to engraft her dogmas into the fundamental law of the land—to enforce her tenets with a policeman's club. And unless Secularists awaken and make some effort to keep her in her place, she will hav succeeded before another quarter of a century is passed.

The church in our country does not hav the influence that she does where some form of Christianity is made the state religion, yet she has a far greater influence in state and national affairs than is commonly supposed. The church, by her vast wealth and complete organization, controls judges and legislators; and for her influence corrupt politicians readily work for her interests.

It is generally supposed that there is no union of church and state in our country, and in theory this is true, but in practice it is the reverse of truth.

"When the great amount of wealth owned by the churches is exempt from just taxation; when money is appropriated from public treasuries for the support of chaplains in Congress, the army and navy, in state legislativ halls and penal institutions; when millions of dollars of the people's money is given to the churches to support so called charities, but which are in fact sectarian institutions and money-making establishments; when one day of the week is set apart by law as a day for religious worship, commonly known as the 'Lord's day,' and people can be arraigned before a court, fined, and imprisoned for not observing this day as the church thinks proper; when the president of the United States and governors of the several states constitute themselvs high priests and call upon the people to abstain from secular pursuits one day of the year and bow the knee in thanksgiving; when church influence in strong enough to expel students from schools supported by public money because they exercise the rights of American freemen and absent themselvs from religious exercises; when in many places the children of our public schools are compelled to listen to the reading of the Bible and long-winded prayers, there is every appearance of a union of church and state."

The above expressions inclosed in quotation marks were not copied from, but suggested by the same thoughts in "God in the State," and the language is so nearly similar I felt myself in duty bound to giv due credit to Mr. Stevens.

Not content with this practical advantage, the church is making a desperate effort to hav Christianity made a part of our basic law—to hav our Constitution recognize the existence of the Jewish Jehovah; Jesus Christ declared the ruler of nations; to enforce the observance of the "Sabbath" laws, and place the Bible as a text-book in our public schools.

A political party, composed of a head, a body, and a tail—that is, the National Reform Association, Prohibition party, and Woman's Christian Temperance Union respectivly—is now attracting considerable attention. And the main object of this party is to secure this religious amendment. That plank of their platform which declares for the prohibition of the liquor traffic is only an ostensible object put forth to catch the votes of zealous, but unsuspecting, temperance people. But this party would much rather see its God in the Constitution than see whisky out of the country. If these religious fanatics succeed in securing this religious amendment the wheels of progress will again turn backward, for the church is as much the enemy of "profane learning" and liberty as ever. She opposes all science, all learning, that she cannot direct to her own benefit. As stupid as the church is, she knows that the next best thing to ignorance is a good orthodox education. Giv the church the power and she will become the same relentless persecutor as of old. The prosecution of Seventh Day Christians in Arkansas shows too plainly what the intentions of the orthodox churches are, and what they would do had they the power. And what these religious fanatics expect to do when they secure this religious amendment may be readily understood by the following quotations, for which I am indebted to the American Sentinel.

The Christian Statesman of Oct. 2, 1884, said: "Giv all men to understand that this is a Christian nation, and that, believing without Christianity we perish, we must maintain, by all right means, our Christian character. Inscribe this character on our Constitution. . . . Enforce upon all who come among us the laws of Christian morality."

The statement that this is a "Christian nation," is false, as I hav shown. This is not, and never was, a Christian nation, but I fear the people are so indifferent to their liberties that it will soon be made Christian, not by conversion, but by law. And they intend to "enforce" those doctrins, not because they are just, but because they "believe" that "we perish" without them. And Webster says, to enforce means to "constrain," to execute with vigor. Then to giv Christianity any such power is class legislation, which is tyranny and oppression. It would make the church again the dictator in moral and civil matters, and this would mean again the power of the church to invade the rights of conscience, and this, the National Reformers declare, civil power has the right to do. Rev. David Gregg, D.D., pastor of Park street church, Boston, a vice-president of the Reform Association, plainly declared in the Christian Statesman of June 5, 1884, that the "civil power has a right to command the consciences of men." From this it would seem that Puritanic influence has not entirely died out in the intellectual hub of the universe; that the efforts of Roger Williams were of no avail; that Quakers of New England had sacrificed their liberty and their lives in vain.

Rev. M A. Gaull, a district secretary, and a prominent worker of the association, said: "Our remedy for all these malific influences is to hav the government simply set up the moral law and recognize God's authority behind it, and lay its hand on any religion that does not conform to it."

Rev. E. B. Graham, also a vice-president of the association, in an address delivered at York, Neb., reported in the Christian Statesman of May 21, 1885, said: "We might add in all justice, if the opponents of the Bible do not like our government and its Christian features, let them go to some wild, desolate land, and in the name of the devil, and for the sake of the devil, subdue it, and set up a government of their own on Infidel and Atheistic ideas, and then, if they can stand it, stay there till they die."

Can Christian insolence and intolerance extend further? Considering the fact that this nation is founded upon Infidel ideas; that our Constitution ignores the Christian religion; that our Declaration of Independence declares the Infidel idea that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," and not, according to the Bible idea, that the "powers that be are ordained of God;" and that the founders of our government were imbued with Infidel ideas, and that the "Father of his Country" declared that "this government is in no sense founded upon the Christian religion," we must look upon Rev. Mr. Graham's remarks as religious arrogance and bigotry doubly distilled.

We do like this government because it is founded upon broad, liberal ideas, but its Christian features which religious bigots hav imposed upon it we do not like and propose to resist.

If this is a Christian government, why such an endeavor to hav Christianity recognized as a state religion?

And now we might add in all "justice," if the opponents of Liberal ideas do not like our government and its Infidel features, let them go to some wild, desolate land and in the name of their superstition and for the sake of their superstition subdue it and set up a government of their own on purely Christian ideas—patterned after some of the old theocracies of Europe—where they can again show their love of God by drowning witches and murdering heretics; where they can again show how much they love their enemies by waging wars of extermination and conquest, and stay there until they become civilized or exterminate one another.

In a speech in a National Reform convention held in New York city, in February, 1873, Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., named Atheists, Jews, Deists, and Seventh Day Christians, and summed them all up under the head of Atheists, and said: "These all are, . . . as far as our amendment is concerned, one class. They use the same arguments and the same tactics against us. They must be counted together. . . . The first named is the leader in this discontent, and in the outcry. It is his class. . . . The rest are adjuncts to him in this discontent. They must be named from him. They must be treated as for this question as one party." Then he tells us how he proposes to deal with these people when the religious amendment gives him the power. He says: "What are the rights of the Atheist? I would tolerate him as I would a poor lunatic, for, in my view, his mind is scarcely sound. So long as he does not rave, so long as he is not dangerous, I would tolerate him. I would tolerate him as I would a conspirator. The Atheist is a dangerous man. . . . Tolerate Atheism, sir! There is nothing out of hell I would not tolerate as soon. . . . Atheism and Christianity are contradictory terms. They are incompatible systems. They cannot dwell together on the same continent."

Certainly no one can accuse the Rev. Jonathan Edwards of entertaining unorthodox views. If his principles are not humane, they are most decidedly Christian. He entertains opinions not unworthy his great namesake. From these expressions we can realize what Christian liberty means. And as though this were not enough to show a sinful world that Christians are guided by the Golden Rule, for fear that some might yet doubt the sincerity of their intentions they propose to join hands with Catholicism in their crusade against a secular government. The Christian Statesman, of Dec. 14, 1884, says: "Whenever they [the Roman Catholics] are willing to coöperate in resisting the progress of political Atheism, we will gladly join hands with them."

Can anyone who understands the fundamental dogma of Christianity and is acquainted with church history fail to comprehend the intentions of the God-in-the-Constitution party? Are there any but can at once grasp the meaning of these ominous forbodings? Can anyone fail to understand the grim ferocity of these declarations? Yet the majority of the Liberals of this country hav settled into a state of perfect quietism. They hav attained Nirvana, from which even the tooting of Gabriel's horn will not arouse them. They are utterly regardless of their own liberty or the welfare of posterity. The Liberals with contemptible indifference witness the organization and growth of a politico-religious party whose intentions are directly at variance with the principles of American liberty, whose main object is to turn this secular government into a theocracy, yet never raise a voice or lift a pen or contribute anything to educate popular sentiment to counteract this cursed church influence and encroachment upon our liberties. Thousands of dollars can be raised for these theologians to travel over the country proclaiming their despotic and un-American doctrins, while the American Secular Union, the object of which is to preserve the non-sectarian character of our government and maintain our free institutions, can only raise a few hundred dollars for current expenses, with but one officer whose whole time is devoted to the work, and no funds for employing lecturers or publishing and circulating Secular literature. And, what is worse, must be stabbed by pretended friends. G. H. DAWES.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Our Memorial Trees.

The lot where our home is situated is 65x150 feet in size. We love it because it is our home, and as it is a custom, and a beautiful one, to plant a memorial tree, the editor, this centennial week of the inauguration of George Washington as the first president of the United States, has planted on the choicest spot of said lot four trees, dedicating the same to four of the greatest heroes and lovers of liberty the world has ever known—viz., George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, and Abraham Lincoln.—O'Brien Co., Iowa, Bell.

'Tis ever thus. Man made a hero and woman ignored. Take Washington as A No. 1 on the list, and who made him what he was? Who gave all the best years of her life to rearing and training him for the station he filled? Who but his mother—the hero of heroes and one of the best and noblest of women? Left a widow when Washington was only eleven years old, she had the full charge of his education, rearing, and training, besides that of the four other children yet younger than himself.

She was a faithful, economical, industrious, and vigilant mother, and all her children were successful in life because of her work. She was self-reliant, ingenious, and eminently practical. She taught her children all the virtues, both by precept and example. Above all, she taught them to feel a patriotic love of country and home. She taught them such an unswerving love of truth as to hav given birth to the saying that Washington could not lie, and out of this assertion was born the pretty fiction of "the cherry tree and the little hatchet."

Washington loved, honored, respected, and obeyed his mother as long as she lived. And this in itself is proof that she was worthy and deserving of it.

No one knows a mother as her child does, and no one knows a child as its mother knows it.

All honor to the Mother of Our Country. Her monument bears the inscription, "Mary, the mother of Washington." And as we honor the maker more than the machine, we should honor the mother more than the man she made.

You cannot read the full history of Washington and not see that his mother was the real "power behind the throne."

Woman will not always be thus ignored and kept in the background. The day will come when she will be the acknowledged crown of life's creativ forces, the last and most complete and perfect of all organized developments, the finale of evolutionary, progressiv differentiations.

I see where the mother of all
With full-spanning eye gazes forth, dwells long,
And counts the varied gathering of the products.

. . . . . .

What we believe in waits latent forever through all the continents.
Invites no one, promises nothing, sits in calmness and light, is Positiv and composed, knows no discouragement,
Waiting patiently, waiting its time.—Whitman.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., May 8, 289.

Religion Not Necessary.

During many years, I hav been impressed that the social and intellectual condition of the world would hav been vastly better, in every sense, than it now is, or has ever been, if religion had never made its appearance on the world. There is a general misunderstanding of the base and character of religion, and among the lexicographers it should seem that great pains hav been taken to plant the term, religion, in advance of all moral principles, and, indeed, to create for it the parentage of Ethics, or rather, to present it as the direct instrumentality put in form and action by God to its parentage.

Pure ethics hav but one character, tending universally to social good; and, so far as scientific study has been able to found the origin of ethics, nothing further has been evolved than that it came by the social needs of the race in obedience to the dominant rule inherent in all—self-preservation. The originals of the race, say eighty thousand years ago, scant in intellect as they must hav been, still were not ignorant of the social proprieties. Their ancestry centuries back had taught their offspring, stage by stage, the necessities of proper rule, tending to the welfare of their kind. This custom remains to the present age. So far, then, there was no need of religious forms. Many thousands of centuries must hav passed ere religion began its false and fatal career among the world's presumably more enlightened people.

Now, what constitutes religion? In reality nothing but form, monarchism, and adulation. Taking a full view, with its one thousand different sects at enmity on all sides, a clear analysis could make nothing good of it, only a jargon on contentions destitute of basis worthy of the name. It is therefore a public enemy.

To be sure, it has affected to hav lassoed all the ethics and the proprieties extant, while, inconsiderately, at the same time, it has filled the ears of the world with error as to the essential facts pertaining to ethics and science. Its energies would seem to appear most for the attainment of largest attainable sums from the people—of many very poor—for the continuous enlargement of clerical power and grandeur. D.

Why We Are Presbyterians.

Because, as Presbyterians, we believe that, "By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and [all] others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men thus predestinated and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definit that it cannot be either increased or diminished" ("Confession of Faith," chap. iii, Sections 3 and 4).

We believe that "God hath appointed the elect unto glory. Neither are there any other redeemed by Christ and saved but the elect only. The rest of mankind God was pleased to ordain to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice" ("Confession of Faith," chap. iii, Sections 6 and 7).

We believe that "Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ. Others, not elected, cannot be saved" ("Confession of Faith, chap. x, Sections 3 and 4).

We believe that "The bodies of men, after death, return to dust, and the souls of the wicked [non-elect] are cast into hell, where they remain in torments and utter darkness, reserved to the judgment of the great day. At the last day the dead shall be raised up with the self-same bodies, which shall be united again with their souls forever."

And that "God hath appointed a day for the manifestation of his glorious mercy in the eternal salvation of the elect, and of his justice in the damnation of the reprobate [non-elect]." "For then shall the wicked be cast into eternal torments" ("Confession of Faith," chap. xxxiii, Sections 1 and 2).

Thus we believe that "At the day of judgment the wicked [or non-elect] shall be cast into hell, to be punished with unspeakable torments, both of body and soul, with the devil and his angels forever." That is, "Their punishments in this world to come are most grievous torments in soul and body, without intermission, in hell fire forever" ("Larger Catechism, Answers to Questions," 89 and 29).

"The church is not at all ready for the revision of [these] its standards" (The Presbyterian, April 27, 1889).

Things to Think About.

For some time past a new gunpowder has been made at Wetteren, in Belgium. It is known as paper powder, and it is stated that a charge of thirty-nine grains gives, in a rifle of small caliber, an initial velocity of some six hundred and sixty yards to the ball. The additional advantages attributed to this new powder are those of not smearing the barrel, of producing no smoke, and of causing but little recoil.

Wire is now being manufactured, whether iron, copper, or brass, by a new and greatly improved process, and at a considerably reduced cost. The machine devised for this purpose consists of a series of rolls in a continuous train, geared with a common driver, each pair of rolls having a greater speed than the pair preceding it, with an intervening friction clutch adapted to graduate the speed of the rolls to the speed of the wire in process of rolling.

Experiments hav been made by Mr. Saunders, of the Experimental Farms, Ottawa, in the cultivation of grains from the extreme north of Europe, for the purpose of securing varieties that will ripen in the shortest Canadian summers. Wheat from Lake Ladoga, latitude 69°, ripened from ten to fifteen days earlier than other varieties in cultivation; a difference sufficient to insure its maturing soon enough to escape the earliest autumn frosts. This wheat yielded nineteen-fold, and was of satisfactory quality. Onega wheat, from latitude 62°; barley, from latitude 66°; and barley and rye from latitude 67°—or from the extreme northern limits at which cereals are grown in Europe in a continental climate—are on trial.

Attention has lately been called to the peculiarly destructiv effect of the creosote of wood soot upon chimneys, owing to the fact that the creosote thus formed from the slow combustion of wood contains so large a proportion of pyroligneous vinegar or crude acetic acid; this acid being formed in large quantities when the combustion of wood is slow, many quarts, in fact, being condensed in cold weather, where a large wood fire is very much checked, only a few hours being required for such condensation. The acid in question dissolves lime readily, carrying it away in solution, and in this manner the mortar is frequently entirely removed from the tops of chimneys in the country, new ones suffering in the same way as the old, instances being numerous where the top courses of brick in chimneys only two years old hav become entirely without support other than that afforded by the sand with which the lime was mixed.

Another device or method has been added to those heretofore proposed to prevent the burning of cotton when being conveyed in vessels. The safeguard now brought forward consists in wrapping each bale of cotton in wire gauze instead of the usual covering of jute bagging. It has been, it is claimed, subjected to all kinds of tests, including hooks and compression, and it is alleged has proved itself equal in all respects to jute bagging, the cost of the new material at present being about the same as that of jute bagging. The principle involved is that flame will not pass through very small holes, according to the well known construction of the Davy safety lamp. But while such wire cloth might stand a considerable degree of heat for some time, sooner or later the metal will oxidize and fall in pieces. It is suggested, therefore, that jute bagging might be treated with silicate of soda or some fireproofing "water glass," to render the fabric non-inflammable.

The cause of the blue color of the sky often used to be a subject of dispute among scientific men, until Professor Tyndall appeared to hav set it at rest by propounding the theory of its being the product of selectiv reflection of the blue rays of white light by reason of the presence of particles in the air of such minute size as only to be able to reflect rays of short wave length. Professor Hartley has recently propounded a new theory. After raising objections to Tyndall's theory, he presents his own arguments and the results of experiments to show that the blue color arises from the action of ozone upon the rays of light. The results of his examinations of ozonized air go to prove that it was impossible for rays of light to pass through so little as five miles of air without the rays being colored sky-blue by the ozone commonly present, and "that the blue of objects viewed on a clear day at greater distances, up to thirty-five or fifty miles, must be almost entirely the blueness of ozone in the air."

The primary object of ordinary reading or study, Mr. Balfour holds, is the enjoyment to be obtained by the possession and acquirement of knowledge. Knowledge is most easily attained in those subjects which we like most and take most interest in; and by that principle we should be directed to the kind of reading which we should take up. By the same principle we should not try to read the books on the list of the hundred or so best, merely because they are on the list; but when our interest is fixed on a particular line, the list is good to refer to for the best books bearing upon it. What interests the ordinary man at one time does not interest him at another; but his interests change with the changes that are going on around him in the world. He sees some natural curiosity, reads something in the newspapers, hears of some incident or character in history, or goes to some place which awakens his interest and attention, and induces him to read. If the ordinary man, then, is to read what interests him, he is pretty sure to read widely, and therefore necessarily, since life is short, superficially.

Col. Anson Mills, of the United States army, is actively engaged at Fort Bliss investigating the great irrigating problem of the arid West. When Congress appropriated $250,000 for geological surveys, and authorized Major Powell, who had charge of that department of governmental work, to encourage irrigation in arid districts by making surveys for the location of irrigation dams, to investigate rivers, lakes, and gorges, with a view to inquiry into the advisability of storing water for irrigation purposes, Colonel Mills went to Major Powell and explained to him El Paso's situation, her natural pass and natural resources for the storage of water in the wet season to irrigate the lands in the dry season. He explained that the Rio Grande was the most prominent torrential stream in America, and suggested the idea of a great international reservoir just above El Paso for the storage of the vast quantity of water wasted in the wet season. Colonel Mills will make the necessary surveys looking toward the impounding of the river in a large lake with a sixty-foot dam, and gates so arranged as to keep a constant flow of water through the proper channel of the river, and also to ascertain the average flow of water in the river and the amount of sediment in it. At a medium flow it would require one year to fill the proposed reservoir, which could be tapped by the people on both sides of the river, and when once filled, would supply a constant water power capable of running many immense manufacturing industries.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 314 W. Madison st., Chicago.

Oregon State Convention.

To the Liberals of Oregon: The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Ore., hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889 for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to coöperate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant: "Keep the church and state forever separate"

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of republican and democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal coöperation. In union there is strength.

J. W. MCCLURE, President of Silverton Secular Union.
R. D. ALLEN, Secretary.
MRS CARRIE FITZGERELL. }
H. D MOUNT. } Executiv Committee.
E. WOLFARD. }

Leonard Geiger, Not I. L. Gergen.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Who is I. L. Gergen, of this place? I notice his name in this week's TRUTH SEEKER among the subscribers to the Moral Code fund. I would like to get acquainted with him. I hav lived here forty years and never heard of the name before. There must be something wrong among the officers of the American Secular Union. Last fall they undertook to separate me and my wife by placing her away out in Ohio somewhere. And now they want to change my name, which is really, L. GEIGER.

Hudson, N. Y., May 23, 289.

A Gorgeous Roman Pageant.

Yesterday, May 19th, "His Grace" Archbishop Feehan, amid imposing ceremonies and before a con course of fully thirty thousand, laid the corner-stone of De la Salle Institute. It was the biggest Romish celebration Chicago has had in ten years. Columns are devoted by the daily press to animated and flattering descriptions of this insipid show, as though some great patriotic jubilee was being observed, instead of its marking the dangerous triumph of the power that ceaselessly works for the political degradation of America. The Times, which is running a neck and-neck race with the Herald to out-Herod Herod, as it were, in fawning to papacy, fairly grows ecstatic in laudation of the scene, saying, "It is the substantial fruition of a long-nursed ambition to adequately supply a high course of education, principally for the children of the laity;" and continues:

The sun shone brightly upon the imposing pageant presented at the grand stand from which Archbishop Feehan and the attendant clergy, supported by a gathering of the Catholic laity, reviewed the great procession. The scene was kaleidoscopic in its brilliancy, animation, and varied color. Upon the foundation walls of the building had been erected a substantial flooring with seating accommodation for fifteen hundred specially invited. This reserved inclosure was completely filled for nearly half an hour before the procession arrived. Thousands of little flags fluttered in the wind, and wreaths of laurel and heavy festoons of evergreen gave the requisit vernal relief to the rich color and golden emblazonries of the massed banners. These society flags formed the background for the officiating groups of richly vested clergy and representativ officials in gay regalia who occupied the conspicuous point of observation upon the great platform.

As every band in the city was out, no wonder the music of the occasion was wonderfully mixed; but the sublimity of absurdity was reached, not by the "Arkansaw Traveler," but when a popish procession marched to the air of "We'll Rally Round the Flag, Boys." Possibly it was the rebel flag, which the infallible Pio Nono was so anxious to acknowledge as the American standard, for which this tune was selected.

Three years ago great indignation was expressed by Catholic and Protestant against Sunday parades and promenading bands of music. Our city council promptly passed an ordinance forbidding processions within so many blocks of churches on the holy Sabbath, so that they would not interfere with the preacher's earning his salary on his busy day. No notice was taken of such an order yesterday, for were not our holy Roman rulers out on parade, and "His Grace" billed for a star performance, vested in a purple and silk cassock, with a long train supported by a couple of acolytes, richly embroidered lace, surplice, festal stole, cloth-of-gold cap, and his miter borne by Rev. T. Kerns? Pat Feehan, thus done up regardless of expense, wielded a golden trowel to complete his great act.

In a sealed copper box inserted in the stone was a Latin scroll, a portion of which reads: "For the greater honor and glory of God, and the welfare of youth, on Sunday the 19th of May, A.D. 1889, the corner-stone of De la Salle Institute was laid with appropriate ceremonies by His Grace Most Reverend Patrick A. Feehan, Roman Catholic archbishop of Chicago, in the presence of the reverend clergy of the diocese, many brothers of the Christian schools, and an immense multitude of people. DeWitt C. Cregier being mayor of Chicago; Joseph A. Fifer, governor of Illinois; Benj. Harrison, president of the United States; Pope Leo XIII., sovereign pontiff, gloriously reigning."

Then followed the cardinals and cabinet of the holy see and the officers of the institute. Mark the gradations this list includes—the steps of power and importance by which, one after another, we reach the ascending scale and climb to the dizzy hights of the "gloriously reigning sovereign pontiff."

Where does he reign? Certainly not in Rome, for there they know him too well, and he claims to be a "prisoner," so that the inference is he reigns in our republic.

From whom does this archbishop receive this high-sounding, impudent title, "his grace?" Not from the American government, the Constitution, nor the people, but the pope at Rome, to whom he owes his first allegiance. This Romish church is a political power, subject to a foreign monarchy, only rendering to this republic inferior and secondary obedience.

On the platform sat three Protestant judges submissivly seeking for future votes of the faithful, and thereby meekly and solemnly affirming their willingness to become pliant tools of the Romish church.

Pat Feehan (I mean his grace) favored a higher education and a broader culture—one which would be a lasting benefit to the church. There is little danger of anything else being introduced.

It is strange to hear two distinguished bishops of this church disagree, but Bishop Ireland lectured here some time ago, and was dead set against science, art, and modern philosophy. He condemned "the ambition of modern philosophy." He claimed the great source of light and improvement was the Christian religion, by which he meant the mummeries and mysteries of Rome. Now, if we do not hav modern philosophy, shall we hav musty philosophy? Feehan talks learnedly of the "broad culture" to be dispensed at the De la Salle Institute, by which he implies that other colleges are not so broad as this new infant of Rome. The next legislature will hav a bill, doubtless, demanding a bonus to encourage this extraordinarily classical non-sectarian institution.

The Romish church is an institution for the perversion of history and the inversion of intellect; for blighting imagination and blunting the lessons of experience—a contamination to the individual and a curse to society. It is the entering wedge directed against the heart of American freedom, for the avowed purpose of its destruction.

As a part of the "broad culture" which is of lasting benefit to the church, the De la Salle Institute is bound to inculcate what the leading papal journal in this country has declared:

He who denies the papal supremacy in the government of the universal church is as far from being a Catholic as he who denies the incarnation or the real presence The church is more than country, and fealty to the creed God teaches and enjoins through her is more than patriotism—New York Tablet.

This squarely places popery above patriotism, and "We'll rally round the flag, boys" sounds signally flat in a procession of Catholics who carry out and believe the above quotation.

Victor Hugo shattered this Romish sham of "broad culture" by asking a few pertinent questions of her prelates:

You claim the liberty of teaching. Stop; be sincere; let us understand the liberty which you claim. It is the liberty of not teaching. You wish us to giv you the people to instruct. Very well. Let us see your pupils! Let us see those you hav produced. What hav you done for Italy? What hav you done for Spain? For centuries you hav kept in your hands, at your discretion, these two great nations, illustrious among the illustrious. What hav you done for them? I am going to tell you. Thanks to you, Italy, whose name no man who thinks can any longer pronounce without an inexpressible filial emotion; Italy, mother of genius and of nations, which has spread over the universe all the most brilliant marvel of poetry and arts; Italy, which has taught mankind to read, now knows not how to read! Yes, Italy is, of all the states of Europe, that where the smallest number of natives know how to read.

Spain, magnificently endowed; Spain, which received from the Romans her first civilization, from the Arabs her second civilization, and, in spite of you, a world, America; Spain, thanks to you, to your yoke of stupor, which is a yoke of degradation and decay, Spain has lost this secret power, which it had from the Romans, this genius of art, which it had from the Arabs; and in exchange for all that you hav made it lose, it has received from you—the Inquisition.

To the machinations of this immovable church not a word of warning is whispered from the daily press, but columns of approbation for the stately ceremonies of these priestly sappers and miners of nations. Then the humiliation of judges flaunting their professional prostitution to a church which holds that "the state has rights only in virtue and by permission of the superior authority, and that authority can only be expressed through the church"—can judicial office-seekers descend to lower depths? All this portends a mighty conflict in which, as ever, Secularists must rouse, rally, and quicken the public conscience that liberty shall not lie prostrate at the foot of the cross, and thus hasten the people's advent.

Out of the light, ye priests, nor fling
Your dark, cold shadows on us longer!
Aside! thou world-wide curse called king,
The people's step is quick and stronger.

. . . . . .

Aye, it must come! Thy tyrant's throne
Is crumbling, with our hot tears rusted;

. . . . . .

Room! for the men of mind make way!
Ye robber rulers, pause no longer;
Ye cannot stay the opening day;
The world rolls on, the light grows stronger—
The people's advent's coming.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The disappearance of Dr. P. H. Cronin, an alleged Irish patriot, has occupied public attention for the past three weeks, but the discovery of his naked body crammed into the catch-basin of a sewer in a suburb of this city points unmistakably to a most foul and bloody murder. There was not a shred of clothing on the body, but from a slender cord suspended around his neck hung an Agnus Dei. The effect of religious superstition may be observed in this significant fact, that, while his Roman Catholic murderers were willing to commit such a horrible and cowardly crime, they did not dare to remove this scapula. What tender considerations their religion inculcates! This murder is the outgrowth of the policy of letting Ireland rule and rob America, for it is presumed that Cronin was about to expose enormous defalcations of the Parnell fund. His chief enemy was Alexander Sullivan, the Irish patriot, whose unprovoked assassination of Hanaford in this city is a matter of history, and who stained his hands with the blood of another man in Texas before he came to Chicago. There is strong suspicion that he is now a triple murderer. These Irish patriots are a sweet-scented lot.

'TIS RELIGION THAT CAN GIV SWEETEST PLEASURES WHILE WE LIV.

A Russian priest in San Francisco is suspected of three murders, illegitimacy, and incendiarism. He fired the church in the hope of burning up the bishop who was investigating his conduct, and to destroy the records. He belonged to the Greek church. The religion of the Russ and the Romanist seems to hav a common flavor.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

At a regular semi-annual meeting of the Chicago Secular Union the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: E. A. Stevens, president (twelfth term); vice-presidents, J. M. Stiles, Mrs. M. A. Freeman, James Gruber, Prof. James Milleson, and B. H. Marlett; secretary, Mrs. Holmes; financial secretary, J. F. Geeting; treasurer, Jehu Barr; executiv committee, G. L. Robertson, Leopold Koerpel, and E. N. Geer. E. A. STEVENS.

The Bruno Monument at Rome.

The following final letter, account, and banker's certificate speak for themselvs and for the liberality and international spirit of American Liberals.

As the years roll on it will be a source of gratification to every American to know that there were so large a number who insisted that the great republic should be represented in this great act of historical justice and becoming revenge.

In the many letters which hav brought in the money were found many inspiriting sentiments and expressions which we hav no room to spread before the public, but which hav added an earnest meaning to these contributions which we hav sought to make known at Rome by condensed and proper reports. The contributors may also be pleased to know that every cent contributed has gone to Rome, all expenses having been borne by the treasurer; and also that, the rate of exchange being in our favor, the money is larger at Rome than here.

At a proper time we may lay before our public some account of the great celebration on June 9th, but otherwise it seems that our duties as a committee hav come to a successful close. That such has been the result we hav to thank, first, our contributors, and then the American Liberal press, and especially THE TRUTH SEEKER, which has given free publication to all of our reports; and then the Boston Investigator, the Freethinkers' Magazine, Secular Thought, Freethought, Open Court Unity, and, in short, every Liberal newspaper in English America.

We need not repeat information which the following documents will disclose, and with thanks for the confidence reposed, we submit this final report.

T. B. WAKEMAN, Treas. and Sec'y,
On behalf of the American Committee.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
No. 93 NASSAU ST., N. Y.,
May 24 ERA OF MAN 289. A D 1889

TO THE HONORABLE THE COMMITTEE FOR THE BRUNO MONUMENT AT ROME ITALY, Gentlemen: I herewith inclose a final draft for $370.15, which makes $120 15 over the sum of $1,000 promised for the Bruno monument on behalf of American Liberals. As funds could not reach you in time for the celebration on the 9th of June next, if sent after this date, you may consider this draft as closing our account.

As we wrote you before, we regret extremely that no one of our committee can be present on the great occasion which will crown your efforts. In that regard we request you to engage the attendance, and if you think proper the voice, of our honored and excellent friend Hon. J. B. Stallo to represent us at your celebration, and we hope that he may associate with himself such other Americans as he may think proper. That he may feel free to represent, speak, and to act for us, we authorize you to show to him this letter as his authority if any may be needed.

We send you also herewith the names of all of the American contributors to this fund, with their addresses and amounts contributed, and pray you to preserve the same as a roll of honor among your archives. We hope to send you the same in a printed form at an early date. We pray you also to send to us such newspaper or other accounts of the great celebration as will enable your American friends to realize to some extent the joy and the glory of your success. Nothing now remains but to thank you finally for the honor you hav done us in placing our names upon your honorary committee for America, and for your patience and support in our efforts to perform the duties which that honor imposed. With profound respect and gratitude for the leading part you hav taken in this glorious work, we remain,

Your obedient servants,

American Committee { R. G. INGERSOLL. / T. B. WAKEMAN. / D. G. THOMPSON. / THOMAS DAVIDSON.

Per T. B. WAKEMAN, Treasurer and Secretary.

THE BANKER'S CERTIFICATE.

Received, New York, May 24, 1889, $370.15, which, with $750 heretofore received at various times, makes a total of $1,120 15, which we hav transmitted to G. Amici, secretary of the Giordano Bruno monument committee at Rome, Italy, for T. B. Wakeman, treasurer of the American committee.

25 Wall street, N. Y. CANTONI & Co., Bankers.

The following are the amounts received since the last acknowledgment:

R. Butterfield, Sacramento, Cal.	5 00
Briggs Monroe, St. Paul, Minn.	5 00
L. Magonheimer, San José, Cal.	2 00
Talbot J. Albert, Baltimore, Md.	2 00
Peter Selde, Jr., Davenport, W. T.	2 00
H. L. Wilson, " "	2 00
Jos. Kirk, Lumber City, Pa	2 00
Dr. J. Rode Buchanan, Boston, Mass.	1 00
N. T. Hows, New York city	1 00
Mrs. Mary A Smith, Newark, N. J.	1 00
Dr. W. R Bachelor, Pauline, Ark.	1 00
Samuel Cohn, Pottsville, Pa	1 00

Collected by Mr. John Jackson, Dallas, Tex. Received May 24, 289:

Dr. D. Mackay	$1 00
John Jackson	1 25
Neal Moore	1 00
C. M. Connally	1 00
George Cretian	1 00
C. W. Smith	1 00
Allen Johnson	1 00
Achille De Stefano	1 00
A. J. Rosenfield	1 00
T. G. Ard	1 00
L. D Douglas	1 00
G. M Danover	1 00
W. D. Robinson	1 00
I. K. Hawes	1 00
William Doran	1 00
Alexander Kennady	1 00
W. J. Schroffler	1 50
S. B Mendez	50
A. B Bristol	50
L Kells	50
F. De Stefano	50
J. B. Cook	50
J. R. Hamed	25
D. B Horn	25
G. Finkheiner	25
Louis Wagner, Hudson, N. Y.	1 00

The following has been issued by the Roman Committee:

INAUGURATION OF THE MONUMENT TO GIORDANO BRUNO. PLACE "CAMPO DEI FIORI," ROME.

Triumphant, after more than ten years of struggle against clerical intolerance, the statue of the great philosopher of Nola is at last to be raised on the 9th of June, upon the same spot which formerly was the scene of his torture.

The inauguration of the monument to Bruno in Rome is rationally the emblem which marks the centenary which has revolved since 1789 It does not mark the difference between the Goddess Reason and the supreme being with the scaffold as arbiter between them; but it is the crowning of the most elevated ideal of humanity. On the one side the Catholic church, on the other the modern state. and, between them, the monument of Bruno, the symbol of a mutual tolerance in freedom of thought, religions, worships.

For here we can see a pope celebrating freely side by side with the state, which discusses, also freely, the rights of sovereignty. Here the clergy may menace the faithful in the churches with the terrors of death, and that in front of the Athenæum which preaches, in its turn, rehabilitation in the right of life and affirms the law of nature. Here, again, between two different civilizations, towers the monument to Bruno which, embracing in unity of thought the two worlds, pushes them on toward a common end.

From whatever part of the earth the man comes who finds himself in front of this monument, he ought to think that he leaves behind him great differences of nation and of tongue, and that he has come, as it were, into a new country which has neither frontiers nor privileges; for there where thought is born again from its ashes is found the entire history of man, and one feels that the different forms of speech disappear in the common aspirations of a unique, a human tongue.

All those Liberal spirits and learned men in civilized countries in the Athenæums, the schools, the associations, in accepting the invitation to honor with their presence the inauguration of this monument—which is raised by the desire and by the subscriptions of every country—furnish the striking proof that posterity is mindful of this Bruno who carried the very eloquence of thought amongst nations, and was willing to consecrate it by his death in the Universal City.

The inauguration of the monument, sculptured by M. Ettore Ferrari, will take place in the forenoon of Sunday, 9th of June, in the presence of the Committee of Honor, the deputies from foreign and Italian Universities, and the invited municipalities and associations.

The inaugural speech, before the monument in the "Campo dei Fiori," will be pronounced by Professor Giovanni Bovio. Upon the eve of the inauguration (Saturday, June 8th), at the formal reception of the deputies and representativs, Professor Gartano Trezza, of the Institut Superieur of Florence, will deliver an address upon the life and works of the illustrious Martyr and Thinker.

Upon the day of the inauguration a bronze medal struck by the care of the executiv committee will remain as the perpetual souvenir of this civil ceremony.

AVO. GIOVANNI AMICI, Secretary,
Via due Macelli 66, Scala int., p. 2, Roma.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL will start this month for California, where she contemplates lecturing during the summer, and making a tour of the territories during the fall and winter. She desires engagements on the way to the Pacific coast, at Denver, Salt Lake, and other points. Her address is 438 S 24th avenue, Omaha, Neb. Mrs. Krekel is a splendid woman, an eloquent speaker, and her terms are reasonable Liberal societies and individuals desiring platform work in their towns should employ her.

PROF. JAMES MILLESON wishes to hear from a number of Liberals along the line between Chicago and Denver. He has lecture engagements at Boulder, Colo., which can only be filled by securing several intermediate appointments. If the Liberals along the line will help him to such engagements he will make the trip of great importance to our cause. His popular lectures on "The Conflict between Science and Religion," and his "Scientific Substitute for a Creator," can not fail to interest the Western people, as they hav done the citizens of Chicago. Please correspond with E. A Stevens, president of the Chicago Secular Union, at No. 558 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

A SPIRITUALIST camp-meeting will be held in Vandercook's Grove, three miles south of Jackson, Mich., commencing June 22d and closing July 1st. Among the speakers with whom negotiations are either closed or pending for that meeting are Moses and Mattie E. Hull, Dr. A. B Spinney, Fred. Heath, Mattie Strickland, Mrs. Curtis, Dr. P. T. Johnson, Mrs. Rich, and others. Among the mediums to be present are Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Cutter, and Mrs. L. Pet Anderson, of Chicago, and Mrs. Virginia Rowe, of Jackson, Mich., and others. The grove is beautifully situated on Twin Lakes, and has a dining-hall, dance-hall, swings, merry-go-rounds, and every other facility for innocent amusements between meetings. Good boating and fishing on the lakes. Day board can be had on the grounds. Tents can be furnished for all who will ask for them in advance. Fine singing, and good music for dancing. For further particulars address Leone Rich, secretary, 920 Greenwood avenue, Jackson, Mich., or New Thought, 675 W. Lake street, Chicago.

The Church the Servant of Plutocracy.

James B. Wasson in the North American Review.

The following incident happened not long ago in one of the largest cities in this country:

An important church in the city owed a large sum of money to a very wealthy man, one of its leading members. But though the money was overdue, the church officers felt no anxiety, as their creditor not only appeared to hav the interests of the church at heart, but was abundantly able to wait until it should be able to pay him, and, indeed, frequently expressed himself to that effect. At this point he was proved to be guilty of having broken one of the Ten Commandments—which one it is immaterial to say here—and as the transgression was a matter of common fame, the officers of the church were compelled to take cognizance of it. They did so, and, finding him guilty, declared him suspended from membership until he should giv some proof of having repented. The offender, though acknowledging the charge against him, was furious at the audacity of the church in presuming to disciplin him, and sent word to the officers that if he was not reinstated within a week he should at once proceed to collect the money which the church owed him. He was reinstated in three days, or as soon as the meeting of the officers could be convened, and is to-day a member in good standing of that church.

Some few years ago, in a small town in the central part of this state, there was a church which had recently called to the pastorate a young man of strong religious convictions and fervid piety. He had not been pastor long before he learned that the leading member of his church, and the wealthiest and most influential man in the town, was living in open sin. It had been a matter of common notoriety for years, but the former pastor, a weak, good-natured man having an eye to the rich man's very liberal contributions, discreetly ignored the matter. The new pastor, however, was a man of very different character, and, after privately admonishing the culprit to no effect, publicly cut him off from membership in the church. What was the result? The sinner, of course, withdrew his contributions, and so great was his influence in the town that the church-members generally condemned the clergyman for so offending him. Some actually upbraided him for driving a good-paying member away by needlessly raking up a little private matter that was nobody's business. The poor man's salary was so reduced that he was finally compelled to resign. This, of course, was a triumph for the rich magnate. A man was called as pastor who had no desire to stir up unpleasant matters, and who was only too willing to conciliate a man of wealth and position. The rich man, still living in open sin, is an honored member of the church, while the clergyman, who tried to end the scandal of his membership, is looked upon as a sort of Quixotic crank, and with this reputation, earned by his uncompromising devotion to principle, he finds it impossible to obtain any permanent or desirable charge.

Multitudes of other instances, differing in many details, but all showing the subserviency of American Christianity to the money power, might be adduced. The churches in the United States do not perhaps worship wealth; but they conciliate it and toady to it to such an extent that their message of universal brotherhood becomes a farce. In no department of American life is the power of money greater than in the churches. Not only does it shape the policy and blind the vision of individual parishes, as in the cases I hav related, but it compels American Christianity, as a whole, to take the rich man's view of every moral and social question that comes before it. The enormous wealth of many men, both in and out of the churches, is known to hav been acquired dishonestly, and in violation of the rights of multitudes of men whom they deprive of their dues. But neither the churches in their corporate capacity, nor the clergy in their individual capacity, ever think of denouncing the social system which allows this state of affairs to exist, and even throws over it the sacred sanction of law.

Tributes to Our Postmaster-General.

From the Sun.

They say that Wanamaker is pious enough to open oysters with prayer.

From the Springfield Republican.

Piety is cloaking the post-office department as with a mantle. The general superintendent of the railway mail service has issued an order that on and after the 26th the exchange of inner sacks between Boston and New Haven shall be daily, except Sundays, instead of daily as at present.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

One of the Texas statesmen now in Washington has just had an interview with the postmaster-general, some of the features of which were extraordinary. It appears that the Texan wanted a change in one of the presidential post-offices in his state, and was endeavoring to secure Mr. Wanamaker's recommendation to that effect. The term had not yet expired, however, and the postmaster-general declined to make the change. The Texan showed that the present incumbent of the post-office in question was an offensiv partisan of the worst character, and that Democratic as well as Republican patrons joined in the request for an immediate change.

Mr. Wanamaker was absolute in his refusal, and finally explained that a friend of his, the Rev. So-and-So, had requested the continuance of the present postmaster in office until the end of the term. The Texan grew furious at this interference of the clergy and expostulated, but all to no purpose.

"I can do nothing now," said Mr. Wanamaker, "for I hav assured the Rev. So-and-So that no change will be made."

"But, my God, Mr. Wanamaker," exclaimed the Lone Star statesman, with petulance, "what has this pulpit-pounder got to do with it?"

Postmaster general Wanamaker was shocked. It was evident that he was painfully shocked. After fully recovering his breath, he said, in the mildest possible manner:

"My dear sir, you must not swear; it is wrong, it is wicked, it is ungentlemanly. You must not swear in my presence."

The Texan wilted, and in apologetic profusion he said:

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Wanamaker, but that was not profanity; I tried not to swear; I merely——"

"Oh, yes, you did," interrupted the postmaster-general and Sunday-school superintendent; "you said 'My God,' and that's taking the name of our Lord in vain. You know the good book tells us that it is wicked to use the name of the Lord in any spirit but that of reverence and devotion," and then Mr. Wanamaker entered into a long and earnest lecture on the subject of profanity in general and the Texan's offense in particular.

When Mr. Wanamaker had finished, the Texas statesman, in solemn silence, took his hat and walked out. The lecture was lost upon him, however, for when he found himself in the hall outside he broke loose. He said many things of a sulphurous character that would hav deeply grieved Mr. Wanamaker had he been there to hear. For about five minutes the names of all the deities, biblical, classical, mythological, or otherwise, were taken in vain; and then the representativ of the state of Texas, feeling somewhat better, walked out into the street and the sunshine.

Inaccuracy of the New Testament.

Rev. M. J. Savage in North American Review for June.

What certainty hav we of the verbal accuracy of any single text on which, as we are told, hangs the tremendous issue of heaven or hell? The oldest manuscript of any part of the New Testament takes us no nearer the real words of Jesus and his disciples than some time in the fourth century. Hundreds of manuscripts, of all or a part of the Testament, are in existence. But they contain thousands of differences in their readings. Generally these differences are not important—that is, they do not materially change the sense. But in some cases they are very important. They amount to a difference as to whole verses; and, in a few instances, to whole paragraphs or parts of chapters. Some of these differences mean more than carelessness; they indicate a deliberate tampering with the text under the influence of doctrinal bias. It is sometimes urged, in reply to this point, that we are as sure of the general accuracy of the New Testament text as we are of that of the best classics, such as Cicero's orations. Suppose we are? The fact is still entirely beside the point. When some one claims that the salvation of the soul depends on the reading of a text in Cicero, then the comparison will hav some relevancy. Until then, however, it is only a flippant evasion of the difficulty even to raise such a comparison.

Coincident Opinions.

From Saladin's Agnostic Journal.

The leading Freethought journal of America is THE TRUTH SEEKER, published in New York. It is ably conducted by E. M. Macdonald, who was trained under the late D. M. Bennett.

From H. L. Green's Freethinkers' Magazine.

Eugene Macdonald is constantly improving THE TRUTH SEEKER and placing it in the first rank of journalism. At first we were not attracted to some of the illustrations therein published, but they hav been steadily growing better and now each week teach important Freethought lessons that could not be so well presented in any other manner. The Editor is yet a young man, has hardly reached the prime of life, and, if he improves his splendid opportunities, has a grand future before him.

A Sanguineous Defiance.

George Macdonald in San Francisco Freethought.

When Mr. Braden is tired of parading these names before the public he might arrange a new list, and put mine among them. I met him once in this office, and did not debate with him. The only reason why there was not a lively discussion is because I did not know who he was. I now challenge the Rev. Mr. Braden to mortal combat, and giv him the choice of weapons. Hear my war-song:

I am a terror—
Don't you forget it.
The glare thou beholdest
Streaming through heavens
In flashes of carmine
Is my red whiskers
Blown by the cyclone,
Amazing the nations.
Thou art a blow-hard,
Reverend Braden,
And thus single-handed,
Unto the combat,
Gauntlet or gospel,
Here I defy thee!

THE demurrer of the Messrs. Harman and Walker has been overruled by the court, and they will hav to go to trial on the indictment. The day for the trial is not yet appointed.

Communications.

Remodeled Christianity, With a New Savior.

JUST AS DIVINE A RELIGION AS THE OLD.

"Christ livs. He has come to earth the second time. Behold the savior! He is the pure one, the perfect one. He has no guile. He is God, become man. By believing on him we are made pure and sinless as he is, and our salvation is assured. Oh, how grateful and happy are we who are redeemed! Blessed be God, that we hav found him."

Such were the expressions delivered in a quiet but intensely earnest tone of voice to a Herald reporter this morning by one of the "angels" of the Schweinfurth Community.

What is the Schweinfurth Community?

It is the head center of the newest and most remarkable religious sect, of all the queer theological schools, that has found an existence and a company of believers.

The sect has been in existence about fifteen years, but Schweinfurth has not been revealed unto them as their lord and master until within the last half dozen years.

Mrs. Dora Beekman, the wife of a Congregational minister, originated the body of strange believers. She preached that in her own person were the attributes of the risen Lord. She was the woman Christ inspired and made sacred by the indwelling of Christ's spirit. The band of believers grew slowly and steadily. They located their central church at the little hamlet of Byron, south of Rockford, and by dint of besieging the meetings of all the other churches, and, jumping up, declaring their doctrins at all seasons, kept the poor clergymen and their faithful flocks in continual hot water. Her husband did not believe the new faith, and as a result he is now in the insane asylum.

Rev. George J. Schweinfurth was at that time a Methodist minister, a young man of prepossessing appearance. He had an auburn beard, a white brow, with veins plainly indicating refinement, and a very sharp eye, that could look as meek and pathetic as a Delaware river shad's when circumstances demanded humility.

Suddenly it was announced that Dominie Schweinfurth had renounced Methodism and become a disciple of Mrs. Dora Beekman. Very shortly afterward he was installed as bishop of the Beekmanites, as they were called, with a roving commission to visit the different localities where the creed had gained a footing to exhort and proselyte and orate and be the mouthpiece and confidential attaché of the woman Christ.

Mrs. Beekman died and became cold clay like any ordinary mortal. Her broken-hearted believers kept her body for a week, expecting that she would rise as she had promised and prophesied. They placed her body on a raised platform and worshiped about it hourly. There were expectant disciples standing about it every moment, in hope that life would return and they would witness the resurrection. The remains were never left alone for an instant, but the corruption of the body grew so great that at the end of a week the interment was ordered by the public authorities.

At this juncture came forward to the comfortless little band the shrewd Schweinfurth. He declared to them that just as she was dying he saw a glimpse of heaven "through the windows of her soul," and from her lips came the words, "You are Christ the holy one. My spirit passes into thine, and by this act transforms thy whole being. Go forth pure and sinless, the only son of God. Thou shalt bring all nations to worship thee and put to rout the evil one and all the hosts of darkness."

The credulous company believed and rejoiced in the real savior brought to them as from the dead.

From that day the growth of the organization, both in financial resources and membership, has been simply wonderful. The new Christ has displayed business sharpness and a keenness in the study of human nature that has brought forth much fruit.

A good old farmer named Weldon, who was possessed of eight hundred acres of fine land, became infatuated with the new sect and made over his entire property to Schweinfurth as head of the church. Here the central community is located and here I found my way early this morning.

The home of Christ is a large mansion standing in a spacious inclosure amid a number of large forest trees some distance back from the main road, about five miles south of this city. It has spacious barns, carriage buildings, sheds, and other appurtenances of a prosperous country manse. The members of the community make the breeding of blooded horses a specialty. Schweinfurth has three imported stallions and a large number of brood mares. He also has about eighty head of fine cattle. The house is very roomy and with its wings easily accommodates a hundred persons. There are usually about fifty females there and a dozen or fifteen men. The male disciples do the heavy work and are drudges. They liv on the plainest food and sleep in the attic. Most of them, having become infatuated with the new religion, count themselvs happy to suffer and labor for the cause, and hav given up all their earthly possessions to the Christ.

Schweinfurth possesses in his own name property which has been given him outright to the amount of $50,000 at the lowest calculation. Wherever a member of the "Church Triumphant" is found they set aside a tenth of all their earnings as tithes for the Lord, and the Lord deposits it in different banks in his own name.

When informed that the visitor was in search of information, it seemed as if a slight shade passed over Schweinfurth's countenance and there was a momentary hesitation before his reply. But it was only transitory, and in a moment he said: "Will you kindly follow me to my study? I hav no objection to answer any reasonable questions you may propound, if of proper character."

He led the way into the hall and thence to the two-story wing and upstairs into a room which bore the appearance of a literary man's comfortable retreat. It was lined with books in solid walnut cases, tastefully veneered with French varnish and elaborately carved. Motioning the visitor to a chair, he followed suit and awaited the interrogatories.

"Are you Christ?"

"I am," was the reply. "I am more than Christ. I am the perfect man and also God. I possess the attributes of Jesus the sinless, and hav his spirit; and more than that, I am the almighty himself."

"This, then, is your second advent on earth?"

"It is, and I am accomplishing untold good. The time is not far off when I shall make such manifestations of my divinity and power as will startle the world and bring believers to me by thousands and tens of thousands."

"When did you discover first your divine attributes and that you were the great head of the church?"

"In 1883 at the decease of Mrs. Beekman. Three days before her death she had a light from heaven and transferred her spiritual holiness to me. Before her death outsiders erroneously called her 'the woman Christ.' That was not true. She was the spiritual bride of Christ, and her people were called Beekmanites. After her death at first I was only sensible that I possessed the attribute of Christ and had in my own person his spirit coming a second time on earth. The people who believe in this great truth were 'The Church Triumphant.' Within the past year there has been still greater knowledge, and I can now declare that I am God almighty. My name is 'I am, that I am.'"

"Can you, then, perform miracles? Can you vanish from the flesh and be invisible and pass from one place to another as a spirit?"

"Yes, I hav unlimited power. I can come into a room with closed doors and disappear. I can raise the dead, cure disease, and do all the miraculous things which I accomplished when I was on the earth before. I do not practice them often, for I wish to convert the world to the truth without depending on supernatural powers, but by the truth itself. One of the ladies you saw downstairs was in the last stages of bronchial consumption; physicians had no hope for her. I brought her back from the face of death with my divine power and without approaching her. Did you ever see a more healthy mortal? Physical infirmities are cured by me simply by faith, and I can cure them without even their exercise of faith if I would."

"Do you expect to liv on earth forever?"

"I shall be here many years in the present body, and the world will see wonderful sights before I cast off this body. But I am incarnate, and when this goes into the corruption of death my spirit will enter another body and still liv on earth. How or when the present body will die has not yet been revealed of the father. But in form and substance the identical body I now possess was the one that was crucified on Calvary. There are many things in the gospels that are inaccurate about my crucifixion and my life on earth, and I am now occupied in writing a new and true version of the New Testament that can be accepted as the perfect and inspired word. This in itself, when given to the world, will create a revolution among those who now consider themselvs orthodox believers."

"Will you tell me something of your domestic life here?"

"Well, sir, you can say that we liv as a large family. There are several married couples here, but most are unmarried. The evil charge that we practice free love shows how little the world knows of the purity and sinlessness of our lives. I am the type of the sinless one, and those who liv with me and believe become pure even as I am pure and in them there can be no guile. Our marriage ceremony is binding and there can be no divorce. The sexual relation is only entered in by wedded ones for the purpose of raising children, and any other intercourse for the gratification of passion is considered sinful. As for myself, I never experience the passions of man, for I am God. I know that I shall be reviled and persecuted, and men will say all manner of evil things against me, but I am holy and the world will yet know it. The whole world is impaneled as a jury to try us, but those who now persecute us will be utterly destroyed. You and all others will hav to come to believe in me before you can be saved. I might add that our Church of the Redeemer will supplant all others on earth. The so-called orthodox churches are the beasts of Daniel and must be destroyed."

"If you hav the same body that was crucified, where are the marks of the nails in your hands?" asked the skeptical scribe.

"I do not claim that the material physique has not changed and put on new flesh, but my features are not changed, and though new material substance has covered the point of the torturing instruments, in a general sense the same body is now before you as arose from the tomb at my resurrection."

The Lord then led the visitor through the house from cellar to garret. On the first floor were the sleeping apartments of the ladies, elegantly fitted boudoirs. The second story of the wing is devoted to Schweinfurth's suite. They eclipsed the ladies' rooms in elegant furnishings. There was also a large school-room on the second floor of the main building, where some thirty pupils are daily taught. The garret, which is commodious and clean but very plainly furnished, contains a dozen beds. Here sleep the men whose hard work and substance hav gone toward equipping the rest of the house in such princely fashion. Within the last year or two $20,000 has been spent in remodeling and refurnishing the house.

The growth in membership of this remarkable sect has been astonishingly rapid within the last few years. They now hav churches at Chicago, St. Charles, Minn.; Minneapolis, Paw Paw, Ill.; Louisville, Ky.; Leavenworth and Kansas City. But the central community is this one here. New converts must come here and learn their duties and obligations, and those who are willing to work are assigned fields of labor. Services are held here every Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock and Schweinfurth always preaches. Sometimes his sermons occupy from two to three hours in delivering. He numbers among his followers people of learning and culture. "His kingdom," as he calls it, is growing beyond all conception of those who hav not examined into it, and there is no doubt that the new church which he has established will be heard from in hundreds of quarters from this time on.

There are quite a company of traveling men, colporteurs, and agents in various lines who belong to this sect. Schweinfurth makes special effort to attract this class, as they can more widely sow seeds of the new religion and can select the more likely subjects for their influence. Among the leading lights are Rev. Mr. Tuttle and wife, a Congregational minister, who has been established over the Chicago church of Schweinfurth. Mr. Tuttle is a man of education and excellent parts. He is a graduate of Yale College and Andover Theological Seminary. A Baptist minister in Pennsylvania is a recent convert, and a Congregational minister in Maine has just written to Lord Schweinfurth, stating that he believes Christ is now on earth, and asking for light on his claims to being the messiah.

There are a number of women living with Schweinfurth who by long residence and devotion hav approached sufficiently near to the purity of their Christ that they are called "angels." They eat with Schweinfurth, taking but two meals a day. The rest of the women, whose angelic wings are still in the pinfeather stage, eat separately at another house, and the men all hav other quarters for their meals. There is one "angel" who is most perfect and called by Schweinfurth his "soul's mate." Her community name is Angelica. She is a pale, dark-eyed, lissom creature of twenty-two years, not very plump, but willowy and spirituel, with a far-away look in her eyes. She occupies a special apartment, which is the most lavishly and richly adorned of any in the house. Her room is very near "Christ's," and she is never seen about the house, and visible to the others only at meals, when she sits on his right hand.

There are certain final rites celebrated which are called "The Garden of Eden" test. This is known to be a fact, though it is one of the few things that no one seemed ready to explain. It is understood, however, that it is modeled quite closely after the Mormon endowment house, and it is rumored that the women who pass through the ordeal do so in an absolute state of nakedness, in the presence of the Christ, also nude. But it is alleged that the participants are so free from all sin that even thus unattired they are purity itself.

There is one thing that is remarked upon by all who study Schweinfurth. He certainly bears the closest resemblance to the popular pictures of the savior. So near is the likeness that strangers, in total ignorance of his identity, hav been heard to comment on it. His eyes, beard, and hair of the same color The contour of his face follows the lines of the paintings of the real Christ with great accuracy. I hav certainly never seen any person who could begin to approach this striking resemblance. It is very likely that Schweinfurth depends upon this similarity for some of his most powerful arguments in making disciples.

In dozens of places are springing up church trials of persons who hav embraced the faith. In a Kansas City Presbyterian church a trial is now pending of a woman who has become a convert, and depositions are to be taken here to prove that Schweinfurth can not perform miracles, as is alleged.

A number of women hav recently left a Presbyterian church in Richmond, Ky., and are among the number of the community here.

Such is the story of the Beekmanites. The revelations are almost incredible, yet as given here they are absolutely true, and all important statements herein made can be fully substantiated by a score of unimpeachable witnesses. That these Beekmanites are bound to increase and multiply until they become a very strong organization is not doubted by anyone who has made them a subject of study.

Rockford, Ill.

The Church—Its Moral Status.

The Christian church, in every age and every land wherein it held dominant sway, has ever manifested the same spirit of bigotry, intolerance, and cruelty, because it has ever drawn its inspiration from that same old grayheaded superstition—the Bible, which has misled and deluded its millions.

Human nature, when not perverted and vitiated by the pestilent teachings of the Christian church and Sunday-school, manifests many high and noble traits of character, and one of the worst features of the teaching of the church is its fearful denunciations of human nature. The church starts out with the proposition that, by "nature," we "are children of wrath, sold under sin." That, in Adam, six thousand years ago, "we all sinned and fell short of the glory of God;" that we "are prone to evil as the sparks fly upward," and that we hav a heart "desperately wicked above all things," and that "out of it proceedeth false witness, thefts, murders, and adulteries." With these cardinal propositions of the church once fully believed, it is no trouble to see the ease with which Christians degenerate to a state of depravity and sin. In addition to this damnable heresy against human nature, we are taught that we hav no power to extricate ourselvs from this natural state of perverseness. "We sin, and sin only continually." What a fix this places and leaves man in! "A poor, miserable, sin-stricken, God-forsaken, hell-doomed wretch," without any power in himself to do right; and after irrevocably fixing this condition on him, it threatens him with a hell of endless torment if he does not walk the chalk line.

Now, we are led to wonder why the church originated this doctrin of the "innate vileness" of the human race, but, on examination, we find a good deal of shrewd method in it. The priests and clergy originated the church scheme to enslave and rob the people, and the first step necessary to do this, was to make arrant cowards of them by persuading them that they were the darkest-dyed criminals in the sight of God, who was angry with them every day. That they are "already condemned with nothing to expect or wait for," but a certain "fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." Man, gorged by these damnable doctrins from childhood, becomes semi-insane, and believing himself "leprous with sin, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet," seeks to avert the awful doom which he is led to believe awaits him, by building gorgeous palaces of worship, and supporting in idleness one of the most pestilent, useless, and worthless class of men that ever preyed on the substance and welfare of human society.

It would never hav served the mercenary purposes of the priests and clergy to hav taught the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. God as the universal father, and man as his child, with the divine image impressed upon him, would hav defeated the whole scheme. But God as "angry judge," and man as a "wretch undone," suited their purpose much better, and they hav not failed to work this scheme for all there is in it. In the United States there are one hundred thousand churches valued at $700,000,000, and which, although protected by the national, state, and municipal governments, pay not a cent of taxes to either. This enormous sum of $700,000,000, invested in magnificent temples of worship, is of no benefit to society whatever, for these churches are prostituted to the unhallowed purposes of reducing man to a state of mental slavery most lamentable to contemplate. These grand and highly decorated places of worship stand idle and locked up six days out of every week, and are only occupied a few hours on the seventh. They shelter no homeless, clothe no naked, feed no hungry; they educate no ignorant, reform no vicious, and yet, through the cunning and mercenary schemes of the priests and clergy, the credulous and deluded masses are made to support these worse than useless institutions at an enormous expense of time and money. And men who claim to be Rationalists join in and assist in aiding and perpetuating this barbarous curse of the ages.

This Christian scheme of salvation givs man no chance to start out in a moral direction. If man feels the impulses of good nature welling up in him and strives to disciplin and educate himself unto a state of intellectual and moral excellence, he is met with the most withering denunciations at the hands of the clergy, who tell him that his "own righteousness is as filth and rags"—"fuel to feed the flames of hell's consuming fires;" that righteousness is "odious to God," and "morality is no better than wickedness and is as devoid of saving merit as blasphemy." Then the church-approved method is recommended, which is, to ignore, deny, and repudiate all idea of any merit of our own, confess our own "innate vileness," and secure an acceptance at heaven's gate by having a sufficient quantity of Christ's merit in some mysterious manner injected into us.

And the masses—the priests-and-clergy-beguiled masses—accept this holy twaddle as gospel truth, and that too in an age of railroads, telegraphs, printing presses, free schools, and daily newspapers. Is this nightmare of superstition to hold its victims to a faith in these revolting theories forever?

Ed. Thompson, D.D., in his "Oriental Missions," page 204, states that "the spirit of persecution has often transformed the sheep of Christ into a flock of tigers." In this the doctor of divinity is mistaken, as the so-called sheep of Christ hav ever proved themselvs a flock of tigers, only playing the role of sheep when it suited their purpose, but revealing their tiger ferocity whenever circumstances enabled them safely to do so.

Mr. Talmage, the clerical clown of Brooklyn, in a sermon preached Feb. 6, 1887, stated that: "When any one sect got complete dominancy in any land, the devil of persecution and cruelty took possession of that sect. [Mistaken, as a spirit of persecution and cruelty already had possession of them.] A red line runs through the church history for nearly nineteen hundred years—a line of blood. Not by hundreds of thousands, but by millions, must we count those slain."

In a sermon preached Aug. 15, 1887, in referring to the career of the church in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, Mr. Talmage informs us that "the church tried to make people think aright by rack and gibbet and hot lead down the throat." [They would do the same thing to-day if they had the power.] He further adds: "At this time the people went from the house of God into the most appalling iniquity, and right along by consecrated altars there were tides of drunkenness and licentiousness such as the world had never seen or heard of; and the very sewers of perdition broke loose and flooded the church."

Why not? Did they not hav illustrious Bible exemplars to encourage them in licentiousness? And as to drunkenness, what about Noah and Lot and the admonition of Solomon, who said, "Giv strong drink to him who is ready to perish, and wine to those that be of heavy hearts, and let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more?" Latitude enough, we should think, for the most radical advocate of free whisky. Then there was Jesus discounting pure water by turning it into wine that givs to man "redness of eyes and wounds without a cause," to say nothing of Paul, the original founder of the church, who gave the command to his religious brother, "Drink no longer water," and recommended wine in its stead. We heard an old "seven-gallon Baptist" the other day quoting Bible arguments against temperance, and he said that there was "but one man in the Bible represented as wanting or calling for water, and he was in hell and ought to hav been there."

And yet, notwithstanding these facts, this old clerical mountebank, Talmage, at the modest salary of $16,000 a year, continues to slander human nature, scandalize honest Infidels, and extol the merits of that old she dragon that has left a sickening "line of blood" in her slimy trail down through the ages, and "numbered" her murdered "victims by millions."

W. S.

Nashville, Tenn., April 14, 1889.

To Balaam's Ass, Mostly.

Tho' you, Br'er Balaam, herded with the bumpkins,
That ass of thine was certainly some pumpkins!
Truly was he an ass as was an ass,
A wonderfully favored ass and gifted,
An ass to "second sight" and reason lifted,
An ass of parts, alas, now gone to grass!
An ass, Br'er Balaam, that, when under beatin',
Just humped himself and spoke right out in meetin'!
An ass that saw an angel on the road,
When you, a "seer," couldn't see a puncheon—
Hold! if of wine, I think you could, at luncheon—
An ass that "spoke his mind" when under goad.
O ass "inspired," thy fame we must not jeopard,
Yet loudly braying is thy rival, Sheopard!

SI SLOKUM.

Mr. Wanamaker's Effect Upon the Cabinet.

From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

A strong effort is being made by the Sunday-school people to induce the other members of the cabinet to follow the example set by Postmaster-General Wanamaker and forbid the admittance of employees to the departments on Sundays.

Statements—Some of Which are True, and Some Not.

And the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord: Thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the Saints.—New York Mail and Express.

The Young Men's Catholic Union of Chicago held a debate recently between representativs of the societies of the church of the Holy Name and the church of the Holy Angels. The subject of the debate was that the present public school system leads to vice and Infidelity. The judges declared the affirmativ carried.

Our republic is under lasting obligation to the Presbyterian church of America for its faithful advocacy of the Sabbath, both as a civil and religious institution. No Christian denomination has rendered greater service in defending this sacred trust, so essential to all national, as well as religious, progress.—Pearl of Days.

When Bishop Potter says of the men of the Revolution: "The easy levity with which their children's children debate the facts of God and duty and eternal destiny were as impossible to them as faith and reverence seem to be, or to be in danger of becoming, to many of us," he forgets that this was the age of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson and Thomas Paine—all unbelievers. It was the era of growing Infidelity when the churches had reached almost their lowest level.—The Independent.

For ourselvs, we are purely and simply Catholics, and profess an unreserved allegiance to the church, which takes precedence of, and gives the rule to, our allegiance to the state. If allegiance to the church demanded of us opposition to political principles adopted by our civil government, a disobedience to any laws which were impious and immoral, we should not hesitate to obey the church and God. We should either keep silent and avoid discussion of the subject, or else speak out frankly in condemnation of our laws and institutions, if we believe them to be anti-Christian, or, which is the same thing, anti Catholic, in their principles.—Catholic World.

The Baptist Pastors' Association met last week to hear an essay by Rev. E. E. Valentine, on the "Personality of the Devil." "Satan," said Mr. Valentine, "is just as much of a proper noun as Gabriel is. Some people are inclined to think that the devil is a kind of an indefinit, inexpressible evil power to which a personality is given in the Old and New Testaments in order to make the conception more plain. But if this is so, then the Testaments are encouraging a superstition, and a hideous superstition too. Christ himself alluded personally to the devil. When he cast out evil spirits he addressed them in the words, 'Out, unclean spirits!' If they did not possess personalities it is certain he would not invest himself in the role of a juggler by making pretenses of things that did not exist." Several of the Baptist brethren discussed the essay, and while admitting that they had not and did not desire a personal acquaintance with the subject of the paper, they agreed that he had more or less of a personality. The Rev. J. Ferris Patterson said that the subject proved highly interesting, and in his opinion was not considered enough. It would be a good thing, he added, to hav Sunday-school teachers discuss it to their classes.

In some men the destructiv propensity is largely developed. They take supreme delight in undermining old opinions and beliefs and institutions without particular concern about the consequences. They are not seekers after truth, but champions of destruction. On this line the recent centennial has brought out the denial of the Christian life and church relationship of George Washington. One E. A. Stevens, of the Chicago Secular Union, in an address delivered in that city on Sunday evening, April 28th, declared that Washington was not a Christian. A writer in the New York Independent claims to hav good authority for saying that the first president was not a communicant and not a member of any church. But Washington Irving, who never wrote carelessly, positivly affirms that both General and Mrs. Washington were communicants in the Protestant Episcopal church. The fact of his having taken the communion with the Presbyterians on a certain occasion at Morristown, N. J., and having stated to the pastor of the church that he was a member of another denomination, as related in our editorial two weeks ago, was never before called in question. It is too late to question it now. These facts correspond faithfully with his public utterances and personal character, and are supported by ample testimony.—Christian Advocate.

Freethinkers are strong in Chicago, their societies being numerous. I attended a meeting of the Bohemian Freethinking Society at Thalia Hall last Sunday. As a rule, Chicago's foreign population is free and easy in matters of religion. Before the time for the society gathering the male members occupied their time in front of the bar discussing the questions of the day. Within the hall a dozen children waited for the Sunday afternoon lessons to begin. They grew restless. Their mothers' apron strings no longer held them. While their teachers were delayed by the tightening gyves of the saloon they found amusement for themselvs. There is throughout the city a number of so-called "Sunday-schools," the doctrin taught in which is that all religion is either superstition or fanaticism, and should be abolished. These should not be confounded with the Anarchist Sunday-schools which were so thoroughly ventilated by the Herald a short time ago. The scholars in those schools range in age between seven and sixteen years, and the first thing impressed upon their minds is that there is no such thing as divine inspiration or a code of morals founded on religious beliefs; that churches are a vile fraud, perpetrated by ecclesiasticism, and are simply agents of the governing class. Ridicule is the potent weapon used, and the name of the deity is spoken as lightly and as trippingly upon the tongue as that of the most public of characters. A crusade was at one time begun against these institutions, but it was stopped by the decision of Judge Tuley, though an offer was made to show that Anarchistic as well as Atheistic doctrins were promulgated in these schools. Judge Tuley held that all sorts of meetings should be protected against the "caprice, whims, or malice" of officers of the law, and were not to be disturbed unless some overt act was committed. Evangelist Moody has frequently referred to these decidedly Freethinking Sunday-schools, but he has received no encouragement from the hard-hearted citizens of Chicago, who feel that seed sown in some sections of the city would be cast upon very barren ground indeed. Mr. Moody would like to make an onslaught upon these hotbeds of Atheism, but he can get no one to follow his leadership. The great question is as to how the attack should be made, and until that is settled nothing will be done. The probabilities are nothing will be done anyhow, as Christian intruders in the parts of the city where these schools flourish would receive rough treatment.—New York Herald Correspondence.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 1, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Mrs. Leutitia Heston, the mother of Watson Heston, died of paralysis on the 14th of May, 1889, aged 83 years 3 months and 9 days. As she was Liberal-minded, no religious ceremonies or observances were held over her remains.

Thus writes our artist, and that brief paragraph explains the absence of pictures in this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We extend to Mr. Heston our sympathy in his loss, and feel sure that we may add that of thousands of our readers.

Another Word to Liberals in the Northwest.

Once again we urge the Liberals of the four new states in the Union, Washington, Montana, and North and South Dakota, to be vigilant in seeing that religion does not gain a permanent foothold in the organic law of their states. Delegates to Constitutional Conventions hav been selected in Montana and the two Dakotas, and in South Dakota the Sioux Falls constitution has been adopted. This constitution, so far as it relates to the right to worship, or to write, speak, or publish opinions, is exceedingly good, and under it perfect "toleration" of all religions is secured. But we know how easy it is for legislatures to pervert constitutions, and the Liberals in this state as in the other three should endeavor to secure more liberty, and also justice.

They should insist that the Constitution shall provide that no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity, on account of his religious principles or lack of religious principles.

They should insist that the constitution shall prohibit the exemption of any property not owned by the state, county, or town, from taxation.

They should insist that the constitution shall prohibit the legislature and all state officers from employing ecclesiastics to perform any of their so-called "sacred" functions" for which the state has to pay.

They should insist that the constitution shall debar the legislature from setting apart any day as a holy day, or from passing any law affixing penalties for laboring or playing on any of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year.

They should insist that the constitution shall prevent the legislature from enacting blasphemy laws.

They should insist that some constitutional provision shall be made to prevent any money raised for the use of the common schools from being given to schools maintained by churches or for religious purposes, or wherein any religion is taught.

If these things are not insisted upon, the Liberals will find that they are the sport and plaything of the church, and that religion is riding them roughshod, to the detriment of their pockets and the complete loss of self-respect and religious independence. The churches know how to work their points, and they will hav men and money from the East without limit. They hav got all but one of the states under their thumbs, and secured almost everywhere a practical union of church and state, and will strive mightily to secure the new states. It rests with the Liberals to defeat them, for the "practical politicians" will not oppose an element which influences so many votes.

Steal, Steal, Steal!

The bill to allow the Roman Catholic "Protectory" and the Episcopalian "Sheltering Arms" to share in the public school funds was defeated in the Assembly before the legislature adjourned. Assemblyman Blumenthal of the 22d district was the champion of the bill. His main argument was that as long as a dozen or two other religious institutions were allowed money from the school fund he could not see why the Protectory should be excluded. Assemblyman Crosby, son of Howard Crosby, offered an amendment to the bill repealing the laws by which the school money is divided with corporate schools, but this was defeated by a vote of 49 to 49. The original bill was defeated by a majority of some half dozen votes.

Assemblyman Blumenthal's point that the Protectory has as valid a claim upon the school funds as any of the religions institutions already benefiting thereby was suggestiv, and it occurred to us to look into the matter. Application to the Board of Education for their latest report brought a nicely bound volume of over three hundred pages, dated 1888, being the report for the previous year. This valuable document shows that there are sixteen private and religious institutions drawing nearly $100,000 annually from the school moneys, and that most of them hav been doing so since 1851. The laws giving them this money were incorporated into the New York Consolidation Act of 1882, sections 1063 and 1066, and are as follows:

"Sec. 1063. The school established and maintained by the Five Points House of Industry in the city of New York, the school established and maintained by the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, at the institution in Park street, near the place usually called the Five Points, in the said city, and the industrial schools established and maintained under the charge of the Children's Aid Society, in the city of New York, shall participate in the distribution of the common school fund in the same manner and degree as the common schools in the city and county of New York, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as are now by law imposed on the common schools of New York.

"Sec. 1066. The New York Orphan Asylum school, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum school, the schools of the two half-orphan asylums, the school of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenil Delinquents in the city of New York, the school for the Leake and Watts Orphans' House, the school connected with the almshouse of the said city, the school of the Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans, the schools of the American Female Guardian Society, the schools established and maintained by the New York Juvenil Asylum, by the New York Infant Asylum, by the Nursery and Child's Hospital, including the county branch thereof, the schools organized under the act entitled, 'An act to extend to the city and county of New York the provisions of the general act in relation to common schools, passed April 11, 1842,' or an act to amend the same, passed April 18, 1843, or an act entitled, 'An act more effectually to provide for common school education in the city and county of New York, passed May 7, 1844,' or any of the acts amending the same, and including such normal schools for the education of teachers as the board of education may organize, and such schools as may be organized under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to the general supervision of the board of education, and shall be entitled to participate in the apportionment of the school moneys as provided for in this chapter, but they shall be under the immediate direction of their respectiv trustees, managers, and directors, as herein provided."

Under the provisions of these sections the schools hav drawn the following sums. This list is for the year 1887:

The New York Orphan Asylum School	$1,610 55
The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum School (two branches)	7,107 65
The Schools of the Protestant Half-Orphan Asylum	1,552 70
The School of the Leake and Watts Orphan House	790 82
The School of the Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans	2,555 67
The Schools of the American Female Guardian Society	17,561 78
The School Established and Maintained by the New York Juvenil Asylum	6,664 02
The House of Reception of the New York Juvenil Asylum	867 96
The School Established and Maintained by the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church	3,828 68
The School Established and Maintained by the Five Points House of Industry	2,787 12
The Industrial Schools Established and Maintained under the Charge of the Children's Aid Society	37,052 38
The School of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenil Delinquents	6,847 26
The School, including the Country Branch thereof, Established and Maintained under the Charge of the Nursery and Child's Hospital	1,870 94
The School Established and Maintained by the New York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled	1,571 98
The School of the Hebrew Orphan Society	2,372 44
The School of the Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls	2,256 70
Total	$97,298 65

It seems that while the Protestants hav been crying out against Rome and her dangerous machinations to divide the school money between the public and parochial schools, and strenuously insisting that such division would be most unjust to the taxpayers, their church has had her fingers in the public treasury all along, violating the principles she pretended to uphold, and playing the hypocrit in the most shameful manner. Nearly all of these institutions are either Protestant church enterprises or maintained by private persons and run in the interests of Protestantism. And at least three of these schools receive money unconstitutionally, one of them receiving over one-third of all the money so appropriated. The constitution of the state, Article IX, section 1, provides:

"The capital of the common school fund, the capital of the literature fund, and the capital of the United States deposit fund, shall be respectivly preserved inviolate. The revenue of the said common school fund shall be applied to the support of common schools; the revenue of the said literature fund shall be applied to the support of academies, and the sum of $25.000 of the revenues of the United States deposit fund shall each year be appropriated to and made part of the capital of the said common school fund."

Section 1063 of the Consolidation Act, by which the "School Established and Maintained by the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church" received $3 828 68; the "School Established and Maintained by the Five Points House of Industry," $2 787.12; the "Industrial Schools Established and Maintained under the charge of the Children's Aid Society," $37,052.38, is in violation of this article of the constitution, because these institutions are not common schools. They are corporate schools, maintained by private societies. The courts hav decided that even a normal school cannot share in the common school fund (Gordon v. Comes, 47 N. Y., 608), nor an astronomical observatory (People v. Allen, 42 id., 404). The supreme court has also declared a statute authorizing an orphan asylum to share in this fund to be unconstitutional. In this latter case, the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Society of Brooklyn desired to participate in the public school money for the years 1848–50. The board of education refused to entertain the claim, and the asylum brought suit for writ of mandamus compelling them to pay. This was granted, but the board appealed to the supreme court (October, 1851), and that court decided as follows:

"The act of March 7, 1848, which declares that 'the orphan asylum societies of the city of Brooklyn shall participate in the distribution of the school moneys raised in said city, in proportion to the number of children between the ages of four and sixteen who hav been under the charge of said societies during the past year, and instructed in such manner as is usual in common schools; and shall hereafter be annually entitled to such distributiv share, in the same manner and to the same extent as is now or shall be provided in respect to the common schools of said city,' did not intend to bestow upon the asylum societies a share of the moneys arising from the revenues of the common school fund.

"If such were the design of the statute it would be in conflict with the 9th article of the constitution, which provides that the capital of the common school fund shall be inviolate, and that the revenue thereof shall be applied to the support of schools by tax upon the property of the city of Brooklyn.

"The schools maintained by the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum Society of the city of Brooklyn are not 'common schools' within the meaning of the constitution."

The judge concluded: "To say that the legislature can determin what institutions shall receive the proceeds of the school fund; and that whatever they determin to be entitled thereto, becomes ipso facto a common school, is begging the whole question and annulling the constitutional restriction. For if this were so, they might by a simple enactment convert all our colleges and academies and all other seminaries into common schools. This cannot be tolerated. The courts must interfere, and preserve the constitution. All experience shows that the legislature will not. The judgment is therefore reversed, so far as it relates to the moneys received from the common school fund, and affirmed as to the residue" (13 Barber, 400).

This decision, if the true character of the schools designated in section 1063 of the Consolidation Act of 1882 were shown, would deprive these Protestant institutions of their funds and save the taxpayers of the city something over $40,000 per year. The children educated therein can all be provided for in the public schools.

As to the other schools, the source whence the money given them is drawn is not stated; but the same consolidation act which givs them the money also forbids its being given them. Chapter III, section 61, General Provisions, Powers, and Limitations Applicable to Departments and Officers, reads:

"No money belonging to the city, or city and county of New York, raised by taxation upon the property of the citizens thereof, shall be appropriated in aid of any religious or denominational school, neither shall any property, real or personal, belonging to said city, or said city and county, be disposed of to any such school, except upon the sale thereof at public auction, after the same has been duly advertised, at which sale such school shall be the highest bidder, and upon payment of the sum so bid into the county treasury; neither shall any property belonging to the city, or city and county, be leased to any school under the control of any religious or denominational institution, except upon such terms as city property may be leased to private parties after the same has been duly advertised."

Here is a distinct and explicit prohibition against giving money to religious schools, and yet all of these schools which receive city aid are confessedly religious! The legislature makes laws only to break them when appealed to by religious society beggars. The common school funds are protected by constitutional provisions, the other funds, belonging to the city and raised by taxation, are protected by statute; but our officials find no difficulty in handing over nearly $100,000 annually to the managers of religious and sectarian schools! How do they do it? Where is their authority? Who is responsible?

But the division of the school funds is not the only steal of the churches, nor does it form a large item in the total amount which New York annually contributes to support Christianity. Other institutions receive more than ten times the amount, and the greater part of it is used for purely sectarian purposes. Even the public institutions are influenced largely by Christian theology, and such places as the New York Juvenil Asylum are but little better than a purely sectarian asylum like the Children's Fold. Both teach the Protestant religion to the unfortunates in their charge. For the year 1889 the city is taxed $1,142,232.61 to support benevolent and religious institutions, and of this only $153,424.88 goes to strictly public purposes. The list is as follows:

NON-SECTARIAN [BUT INFLUENCED BY CHRISTIANS] PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.
New York Asylum for Idiots	$972 00
Hudson River State Hospital	7 957 20
New York Institution for the Blind	8,750 00
New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb	15.750 00
New York Juvenil Asylum	112.500 00
New York State Lunatic Asylum	1.200 00
State Asylum for Insane Criminals, Auburn	5,895 68
Total	$153,124 88
NON-SECTARIAN [BUT WHOLLY CHRISTIAN] PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS.
American Female Guardian Society	$25 000 00
Children's Aid Society	70,000 00
Institution for Improved Instruction of Deaf-Mutes	17.080 00
New York Infant Asylum	90.297 50
New York Infirmary for Women and Children	4,500 00
New York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled	26 250 00
Nursery and Child's Hospital	110.000 00
State Homeopathic Asylum for the Insane	3 000 00
Five Points House of Industry	10,400 00
New York Magdalen Benevolent Asylum and Home for Fallen Women	440 00
Total	$356,967 50
SECTARIAN, PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.
The Children's Fold of the City of New York.	$17,680 00
Protestant Episcopal House of Mercy	9,134 63
The Shepherd's Fold of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York	5,000 00
Total	$31,814 63
SECTARIAN, ROMAN CATHOLIC.
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls	$7,280 00
St. Joseph's Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes	20.700 00
Foundling Asylum of the Sisters of Charity	252,345 60
New York Catholic Protectory	254 000 00
Roman Catholic House of the Good Shepherd	6 000 00
Total	$540,325 60
SECTARIAN, JEWISH.
Hebrew Benevolent Society of the City of New York	$60,000 00
Grand total	$1,142,232 61
Non-sectarian [but Christian]	$510.092 38
Sectarian	632 130 23

From the showing of all these figures it is evident that the Protestants are as deep in the mire as the Catholics are in the mud, and that the great aim and object of both is to get as much money from the public as circumstances and the ignorance and indifference of the people will permit.

It will be noticed that in this list the Episcopal church is charged with all the appropriations to Protestant sectarian institutions. This is because the classification was done by the Independent, a Congregational journal. The institutions in the list headed non-sectarian are controled, as we hav indicated in the brackets, by evangelical Christians who consider that to instruct the inmates of the various asylums and homes in some form of orthodox Christianity is quite sufficient. Non-sectarian does not mean non-religious, as a public institution should be. It simply means that the evangelicals hav united for the more rapid robbery of the taxpayers. It is an alliance easily broken when any one of the sects is sufficiently strong to forage for itself. The Independent, in considering these enormous grants, waxes valorously righteous in its own opinion—and says: "We hav no objections that Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Jews, and even Infidels should organize as many private charities as they choose, and in the same teach their own religious tenets, provided always that they will be content to foot the bills thereof out of their own funds. This is their unquestionable right. But when religious sects seek to use the funds raised by general taxation for the support of their sectarian charities, either in whole or in part, then they in effect ask the people, through the system of compulsory taxation, to aid them in their work of special religious propagandism. To this we do most decidedly object, and would not appropriate a single dollar of public money for any such purpose. Every dollar thus appropriated in aid of a private sectarian charity, or in aid of a private sectarian school for the education of children, is misused and diverted from the purpose for which it was raised by taxation." All this ire is directed toward sectarian institutions, and, knowing religious advocates as we do, we may be pardoned for surmising that it is because the Episcopal church is drawing $30,000 a year to make more Episcopalians with, while the Congregationalists hav to be content with the influence they can wield in the non-sectarian institutions. If we are wrong, if the Independent is really against appropriations of public money for religious as well as for sectarian uses, we shall be glad to giv it credit for standing alone among religious journals.

The foregoing lists constitute the annual steals. The primal steals were years ago when nearly all these institutions were given the land upon which they stand, a gift in itself amounting to many millions of dollars. To three Catholic institutions and the cathedral the city has presented five and a half blocks of land, in the very best localities, worth today over $5,000,000. To fifteen Protestant and one Hebrew institution it has presented land worth double or treble this sum. Indeed, a religious society has but to ask and it is given. Under these lavish gifts of city property, and the exemption of millions of dollars' worth of religious property, the city tax rate is steadily creeping up, and this year is over $30 per thousand of valuation, the highest, we believe, it has ever been.

The facts we hav stated show that while we hav no established church, we are supporting about a dozen creeds by law, and giving their advocates enormous sums of money directly; and indirectly, through exemptions, giving them more than it would cost to maintain in each town sufficient church room to accommodate all the Christians who ever attend services. To say that in this country church and state are separate, is to tell a gigantic falsehood. To think so, is to delude oneself as completely as the ostrich which sticks its head into the sand and imagins its huge body is safely hidden.

Divergent Opinions.

The Southern Presbyterians in General Assembly hav resolved that the doctrin of evolution is contrary to the standards of belief of the sect. This was done by affirming the action of the last Assembly at Baltimore by sustaining the Charleston presbytery as against the South Carolina synod in publishing the decision as final and beyond contention. The Southern Presbyterians believe in the literal garden of Eden fable, and will not tolerate even a suggestion that it is not true.

But among the Northern Presbyterians, the Sun points out, there is an increasing dissatisfaction with the ancient standard of faith adopted at Westminster two hundred years ago. Last year a single presbytery asked for the revision of a single article, and its request was disregarded as of no representativ importance; but this year fifteen out of the whole two hundred presbyteries call for a larger revision, and the General Assembly is compelled to giv heed to them. Of course it will be some years yet ere the Confession is made to square with advanced ideas, but that the Northern part of the church will insist upon its being done ultimately there can be little doubt. The Southern body is just as strongly inclined the other way.

This difference of opinion suggests a difficulty. Supposing the Northern Calvinists grow enough to adopt the doctrin of evolution, and the Southern Calvinists maintain that Genesis contains the true account of the formation of the world—what effect will the difference of view hav upon evolution? Will it be true in the North and false in the South, and how shall we know who among the Presbyterians gets to heaven?

Resumption.

Not resumption financial; but resumption by man and the world of the attributes of which they hav been robbed. This is what the operations of Freethought are at bottom. Man has been despoiled of his every good quality. He has been plundered of all worth and goodness, and represented utterly vile. In heart, totally depraved and deserving damnation; in mind, despicable and helpless—this is the nature of man by testimony of theologians. The world about us, matter, has undergone the same deprivation as man. Matter the theologians will hav to be something poor, lifeless, inert, incapable of change or motion by itself. And these plundered attributes—this goodness and intellect of man, this vitality and force of matter—are all taken from us to be bestowed on God. It is to be a God, with his "spirit," that supplies with all their activ and all their glorious qualities man and the world.

We are getting to know better. We are getting to know that when man is good, he is good in himself and not through any God. That if man acquires any intelligence, he has to acquire it by himself and not through any God. That whenever he succeeds, he succeeds by his own efforts and not by help of any God. About matter we are getting to know the same. To know that what matter does, it does by itself. That moving in the earthquake, thundering in the skies, burning and illumining in the sun, it moves, thunders, burns, and illumins by itself. That every atom of matter possesses, and posseses inherently, and never can be deprived of, those energies by which it does that which we see done.

Indeed, how did people ever manage to get any other idea? How did they come to think that man and matter do what they do by anything else than the energies inherent in them? Why assume a something behind them furnishing the power? Then who would furnish the power for that something? Who ever saw a man getting power from God? Is there most of the power of man—of the intellect and the moral sense—in those nations that insist that they get it all from God, and that most hang upon what they call their protecting providence? Or is there most of it in those nations that are repudiating the God-source and going to work to help themselvs in their own way? As to matter, why say it is helpless and inert? Did anyone ever see any that was? Did anyone ever come across an atom devoid of force? Or come across any "spirit" unaccompanied by matter? Why not say that matter and force are all? If their existence yet seems mysterious, can we explain this mystery by adding to it another mystery? Why posit something else that we do not know anything at all about?

Reinvested with its rightful attributes, not left the poor despoiled thing that our enemies point at when they revile "degrading Materialism," matter presents itself as a thing excellent and admirable. It presents itself as that mighty thing that we see in eternal motion about us every moment and everywhere, in tireless manifestations of beauty and of awe. It presents itself as the All. While man, a form of this matter, a form of this force, a part of this All, reinvested appears in his true character—as its highest manifestation, a being now the most powerful of nature's products, and intrepidly advancing to achievements to which who shall set the bound?

THE Executiv Committee of the Pacific Turn Bezirk has recommended that all the members of that society join the California State Liberal Union. The society numbers some fifteen hundred or more, nearly all of whom are Freethinkers. Their Declaration of Principles embodies the Demands of Liberalism, and they are in full sympathy with the objects and aims of the American Secular Union.

Letters from Friends.

ORANGE, MASS., May 12, 289.

MR. EDITOR: May I ask these questions of your readers, for which I hope to receive an answer: If a stone should be hurled down a hole through the earth, would it pass the center of gravity? Does distance finally annihilate the influence of the earth on other bodies in the universe?

Yours curiously, H. W. HAMMOND.

WINCHENDON, MASS., May 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed fifty cents for trial subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER. It seems to me to be just what people ought to read to keep them posted on all kinds of salvation schemes and worn-out chestnuts. This town is at present enjoying a general uprising against the devil. Evangelist Chubbucks is the means used to oust the old gent from his stronghold in the churches. A. B. CLONEY.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 7, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: "That which we obtain too cheaply, we value lightly." I made a personal canvass among my Liberal friends with this result. I find in going the rounds that those who evoluted from the church, where they formerly contributed largely, were very illiberal Liberals when it came to do anything for a noble cause like the Bruno statue.

Let the next statue be to Thomas Paine.

I send the names of seven subscribers I hav secured.

Yours in Universal Mental Liberty, J. B. ELLIOTT.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been talking to some of my friends, and find many of them Freethinkers, but ash med to publicly express it, or indifferent about it. I may probably, and will try my best to, hav a couple of subscribers before my three months are out.

Let me ask a question through the columns: Where did the holding up of the right hand while swearing originate?

Let us hear some discussion on freedom of the will, which, I think, will benefit some of the readers, myself included.

Yours in love and liberty, J. C. STRONG.

OPHIR, CAL., May 8, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I took notice of a little article at the head of the "Odds and Ends" column in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 27th, from the Jewelers' Weekly, where it says a scarf-pin shield that will protect its wearer from entanglement with a girl's hair would be a boon to mankind. Since ninety-nine per cent of all the girls are more or less religious, or creed-bound to some extent, I recommend all young men that hav a mind of their own, and are not afraid to use it, to purchase one of Otto Wettstein's Freethought scarf-pins, price $4; can be had at Otto Wettstein's, Rochelle, Ill., or at Putnam & Macdonald's, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal. And I will assure them that it will act as a good preventiv from becoming entangled in girls' hair. Try it!

Freethought please copy.

Yours for science and humanity, LEWIS KAISER.

CLEVELAND, O., May 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The Secular Union had a treat last Sunday in the form of a lecture by Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, on "Evolution of Thought and Progress of Ideas." As is well known, Mrs. Krekel is superior to most and second to none of our lecturers. Her argument is constructiv rather than destructiv, she believing that it is time to discontinue dragging the patriarchs from their graves who hav been dead several hundred years. She is very eloquent at times, and always instructiv. We had intended to hav a lecture in the afternoon also, but owing to the short time we had to make the affair known, and the fine weather, the afternoon program was not carried out.

I hav neglected to report before, that we held a Washington inaugural memorial service on Sunday, April 28th. Three addresses were delivered and there was a good attendance. May 8th Mr. See, the president, delivered an interesting lecture on "Materialism and Idealism." F. S. MERRILL, Sec.

PITMAN GROVE, N. J., May 9, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: A few months ago I started in business in this place. It is the camp-meeting grounds of the Methodist Episcopal conference. And it would be just as reasonable for a Catholic church to attempt to exist without holy water, or for a Methodist church to run without hell, as for one of my views to expect to succeed among such a priest-ridden set. Now, what I would like is this—to know if any of your readers can tell me of a small place where a first-class tin and sheet iron worker can make a decent living, said place to be within three hundred miles of Philadelphia, any direction. And if there is any young man within reading distance of this who has a couple of hundred dollars to invest along with my eighteen years' experience and a few tools, I will giv him a chance to learn a first-class trade in a workman-like manner. The writer of this is a sober, steady, industrious married man, who never joined a church and never will. I would like to hear of a place having no tin shop at present.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty,

JOSEPH G. JOHNSON.

BARRE, MASS., May 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to call the attention of your readers to Heston's cartoons, now being published on the last page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. You all remember his ridiculous pictures, recently, of old Balaam, and the series begun in May 4th, which will ultimate in the "Fall of Jericho," promises to be as rich in design and faithful in execution. My request is that every reader, who is interested in these caricatures, read the account in the holy scriptures, in order to refresh his memory, and for the better comprehension of these unique portraitures. The account commences in Joshua ii, and continues on through chapter iii, culminating in the great "fall" in chapter vi. But nothing will be lost by beginning with Joshua, chapter i, and reading carefully the entire holy miracle, which for fiction, mythology, and lies equals anything found outside the lids of the holy Bible. The genealogy of "our blessed Lord and savior, Jesus Christ," is traced in the Bible directly to this Rahab the harlot, the "deliverer of the Jewish nation," who was a fit progenitor of David, the man after God's own heart; Solomon, the wisest man that ever lived, or should liv, and other illustrious characters in the long line of ancestry down to the father (Joseph) and the mother (Mary) of God.

I am much pleased with your blows against old Romanism, and as much surprised at the apathy of professed reformers on that vital issue. The contest will wax hotter and hotter until this republic conquers or is conquered.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

HANOVERTON, May 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As the time for renewal has arrived, I take pleasure in sending you $3 to pay for another year. I hav often thought I would write a scrap to the paper, but hav invariably been nonplussed by finding the letter which I intended sent in by some other person. I don't believe there is another paper extant that has as many contributors as THE TRUTH SEEKER. If they get a little thicker, the Editor will hav to take a back seat or step down and out. Well, I guess I will let them talk, but they must agree better. The old quarrel between Mr. Reynolds and Jamieson was of no good to the general public. It ought to hav been a private affair and of a milder form. And now there is a row in the camp in behalf of Spiritualism—an ism without a handle, an ism undemonstrable, an ism that never conveyed any intelligence to mankind of the slightest benefit. The Spiritualists' tricks and sleight-of-hand manipulations hav been detected and exposed often enough to satisfy all who are willing for the truth to reign. Dr. Severance arrogantly and opprobriously makes a thrust at Colonel Ingersoll for one of his eloquent and truthful utterances. It is unfortunate. It is only opening the way for a new fight, which is damaging to our good cause. The tendency is to weaken us and strengthen the enemy. It should be remembered that in union there is strength—"united we stand and divided we fall." My best wishes now and forever. Amen. J. T. JOHNSON.

TRENTON, TEX., May 13, E.M. 289.

MR. EDITOR: The distinguished Freethought lecturer, J. E. Remsburg, entertained the people of Trenton and vicinity on the 7th inst. with two of his earnest, direct, convincing discourses, "The Fathers of Our Republic" and "False Claims." A good audience of ladies and gentlemen greeted him in the Trenton high school academy—kindly tendered him on the occasion by the Liberal-minded professors, Fairchilds and Hunt. And the profound attention paid him was evidence of the deep interest the people are taking in the Secular movement, and the scientific and critical investigation of the past and present claims of ignorance, superstition, and priestcraft. Among the many and good utterances of this benefactor of our race were his statesmanlike periods leveled at the insidious efforts of the Blair bill supporters, in and out of Congress, to keep the Christ myth in our public schools, and fix its bloody, liberty-destroying presence in the Constitution of the United States.

Indeed and of a certainty, the Liberals here, elsewhere, and everywhere are proud of our Remsburgs, Bells, Shaws, Ingersolls, and all others who are raising their voices against this traitorous effort to unite church and state, overthrow the republic, and destroy human liberty. I note with pleasure the neat, chaste letter of our fellow-townsman, Dr. William C. Holmes, to your paper, May 4th.

I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER, I think, almost from its beginning, and wish never to be without it, though I am growing old and blind. I wish its presence in my house till I hav to change cars.

Wishing continued and increasing prosperity for THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am, Ever yours for truth, justice, liberty, and humanity, DR. T. H. MANGUM.

COLUMBUS, O., May 12, 289.

MR. EDITOR: I am not a subscriber to your paper, but often read it through the kindness of a comrade in the cause of human liberty, H. M. Lyndall. Heston is grand. Your position on the religious frauds is definit and to the point. But you overlook the great cause of man's ignorance, superstition, and slavish obedience to priests. That is, his industrial condition. How can a man be free mentally when he is physically a slave? How can a man be free and think for himself when he has to work from ten to eighteen hours a day? Where is his time or desire to think or study? His body and mind are wearied and worn in the effort to coin gold for some Christian, his master. In your article, "Two of a Kind," April 6th, I am surprised at the words you attribute to Ingersoll: "This is a free country; men are free; there is no excuse for any resort to force" (by labor, but by money power there is).

I wish to ask Ingersoll, if this is a free land and people are free, why is it he is called on so often to defend men before the courts for their beliefs and their disbeliefs? What was the need, if this is a free land, of his defense of C. B. Reynolds in New Jersey? If man is free, why is it so many men are begging for work and bread? If this is such a grand, glorious, free country, why do so many men tramp from city to city begging work and bread, while sisters, wives, daughters, ah, alas! and mothers, by the hundreds, are forced to sell their virtue for a crust of bread?

You compare Ingersoll to Paine and Voltaire. Oh, for shame! Wherein does the likeness exist? Where is the devotion to humanity, the sacrifice for the cause of humanity? Ingersoll—riches, ease, luxuries, and the right of man to think for himself on religious subjects. Paine and Voltaire—devotion, sacrifice, imprisonment, persecution by church and state, valiant fight for liberty, justice, and humanity; religious, political, and industrial liberty; free, free, in all things that are right.

The reason that I am not a subscriber is, in this land of the free (free to starve, but not to liv without asking consent of your Christian master) I hav not the cash.

E. T. ADAMS.

May 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Will you be so kind as to publish in your paper that the Liberal phrase "Mother of harlots and abominations of the earth" is, in my opinion, meant for the church? To convince yourself you hav only to find out the true meaning of the word "priest," which reversed makes "tigers." The spirits of these animals are, in my opinion, incarnated in those priests, rabbis, etc., who hav shed so much innocent blood as to horrify humanity.

I believe that the rabbis (tails) and the Catholics (cat-tails) are the same family. The word Catolico is thus framed—Cat-coli (tail cat or tiger). And as the word God is the reverse of dog, it is easy to find out its origin, which in my opinion is Spanish, for the word "Biscain," a nativ of Biscay, implies twice Cain, and from there the priest St. Cruz and others equally ferocious hav been born.

If you reverse the letters to the Spanish Catholic title "frailes" you will find Israel. Now, the word Israel is formed of El-iras, "God of ire," who in my opinion is Jupiter, which means, You-Peter. Another Catholic title is "monge," which revised is "demon," or devil. All words hav their meanings, sometimes in one, two, or three languages, for example: California is formed Cain-fia-lor—meaning Cain givs the gold. By this you will understand that the rich owe their fortunes to Cain, and that the priests, etc., ought to know it by this time. JUSTICE.

ENSENADA, LOWER CALIFORNIA, MEXICO, April 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: In Mr. A. J. Grover's article entitled, "Truth and Knowledge, Fact and Fable," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 6th, we see much that strikes our reasoning faculties very agreeably. The comparison of the human race to flies is very good. It is a demonstrated fact, that all human effort at the creation of a God is simply expression of the person's ideal of a God. Prattle about God seems to me to be a waste of time, only so far as worshipers of a cruel, vindictiv, and changeable God can be led to think that such a God is a myth and thus turned to nature's laws for truths to act upon. How sublime a truth is the idea expressed by Brother Grover, that "there is more value in one little grain of truth than in all the Alps of fable of all the creeds!" So, also, the sentiment, "Let us look for all revelation in the facts of nature and science." The above and many other statements in the article would stand the criticism of all the philosophers of earth.

I will now review that portion wherein I differ from the brother. "Possibly pain and suffering, mental and physical, are processes by which spiritual ripening goes on, and such processes of ripening are the best that infinit wisdom could employ. These facts, if facts they be, would be more comfort to know than all that theology has yet been able to impart." One would infer from the above that no fact whatever had been established as yet in physiology. Now the science of physiology tells us, and our senses confirm it, that pain is a beneficent monitor to inform us when anything abnormal is in the living system. Were it not for the nerves, distributed on the surface of the vital organism, so closely that you cannot put the point of a cambric needle on your skin without its coming in contact with one or more, you could be cut to pieces in sleep without realizing any danger. So also if a subtle, deleterious element, by some accident, malaria, or other cause of disease, finds lodgment in the vital organism, how quickly and persistently these little monitors declare the fact in an outcry of pain! Then we set ourselvs about finding and removing the cause. The human race would surely be extinct before one generation could liv its time out, were it not for the susceptibility to pain. The same nerves that we feel pain with are also susceptible to pleasure. So without these nerves, life could neither be sustained nor be worth living. I am not aware that it has required a God to organize the nervous system. Nature seems to be equal to processes of organization.

"At any rate, we must endure the suffering and pain as they come to us, whether they tend to rot or ripen us." Not so, brother; better that we study the laws governing our physical organism; then we can so comply with nature's laws that we can liv to a good old age and suffer little or no pain. We admit that physiology is a deep study, and that the regulars hav led the people astray on that science, as the clergy hav on our spiritual welfare. Yet, with all the mistakes of would-be leaders, facts are the same. And whosoever violates physical law shall pay the penalty, in pain and premature death. Not only he that sinneth, but progeny conceived by diseased parents shall bear the penalty also. It is astonishing how even Liberalists adhere to the old Bible idea, that sickness, pain, and premature death are inevitable and must be endured. It is no wonder that Bible believers think sickness and pain unavoidable.

So also if we in our limited knowledge violate moral laws we hav mental anguish.

What will to-morrow bring forth? is the all-important question of our lives. We reap and enjoy the harvest to-day that we sowed yesterday. To-day we sow seed for to-morrow, day after, etc. Therefore, in order to attain the highest pinnacle of happiness, we must see that we sow seed to-day that will yield us a harvest of happiness, not misery, to-morrow. N. A. PICKENS, M.D.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, TEX., May 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been thinking, and hav not recovered from the effects of the same up to date. My thoughts hav been caused by somewhat that I hav noticed in my capacity as book agent the last few years, and the object of this letter is to say a few words of praise for this much maligned individual, and to see if I cannot get the publishers of Liberal works to benefit by what is shown and act accordingly. In this state, outside of the towns, nineteen out of twenty of the books you find in the libraries of the people hav been sold by agents, by subscription. Who are the authors? Talmage, Buel, Wilford Hall, Alex. Stephens, Godbey Bros., and a few others of like merit. Buel writes by odds the most subscription books, and he is not liked by the mass of the people, but they must hav books, and they will buy what the agents hav to sell.

I am the only agent who has ever offered to sell Freethought works, and you would be surprised how the people take them—just from hearsay, as I hav no prospectus to sell from. If there is a subscription-book house in the Liberal ranks, I am not aware of it, and when I see that all the books sold in the country (and this is where most of the reading is done) are sold by agents, and that agents hav to handle such books as the "Beautiful Story," "Sea and Land," "Light in Darkness," etc., instead of the works of Ingersoll or Bennett or Draper, or any of the hundreds of authors any of whom would do more for the enlightenment of humanity with one of their productions than all the Buels, Talmages, etc., ever will, I ask, is it not time our publishers, and officers of the Secular Union, wake up to the necessity of working on this line?

One good book will do more in a community than a dozen lectures, because it is read and talked of by all the neighbors, and I know there are plenty of the boys who show the people the necessity of buying books that would only be too glad to sell Bennett's "Truth Seeker Around the World" if the publishers would only furnish the prospectus and about fifty per cent commission.

The churches never allow any chance to escape where it costs them nothing, and they keep more people believing in the superstitions of the Jews through their subscription books than in any other way. Why will not Liberalism take advantage of this opening? I would like to hear what the publishers hav to say on the subject. E. E. PARK.

HELIX, ORE., May 13, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your last issue a communication from A. Moot(e), in which he rather insinuates that I condemn the effort to introduce a new and easier mode of spelling, and perhaps you entertain the same idea. Please allow me to vindicate myself. Up to the time of the receipt of the rules of spelling you so kindly sent me in explanation of your manner of procedure I will confess that I was in ignorance of any such associations as the two you mentioned. And the "strong language" Mr. Moot accuses me of using was by no means calculated to offend you—and I do not think it did—but was, rather, a surprised questioning into the motivs for your doing so. I hav never marveled at the complaints made by foreigners who hav tried to master our language, when we ourselvs are lost amid the labyrinths of so many words whose meanings are one, and one word with a variety of meanings and a different way to spell each meaning. Our language sadly needs reformation, and, like the coming light on past ages, it is slowly but none the less surely advancing, and believe me, there is no one who will more gladly hail its coming than will I. And when the time does come there will be found no one more willing to "omit two silent letters of her name"—or even more—than will I, and think it "just as nice," too.

There is only one church here, and it is Campbellite, as is the seeming belief of a large majority of the population. I say seeming, for the reason that it is my firm conviction, gained by close observation, that there are many so-called church believers who, if they could be brought to confess the truth, would be found to be thorough unbelievers.

But the Christian religion is the same as the Catholic faith in one respect—it has been "born and bred in the bone" for so many ages that it has become a blind superstition, and can never become wholly eradicated from the minds of a certain class of people, for the reason that they willfully blind their eyes and close their ears to any new thought, praying "not to be led into temptation." And in my opinion, the person who prays that prayer is a coward, and has not sufficient control over himself to withstand temptation, whether it be good or bad. Such persons are the most difficult ones to convince. Like the hunter in "A Search for Truth," I believe in climbing on and on. Knowledge does not kill. It is the "uses that abuse," and, although we can hav no hope of beholdiug truth, we can feel the glad assurance that we are doing what we can and paving the way for those who follow after, and whose feet shall one day stand on the summit of that seemingly insurmountable hight, and view the grandeurs that our one "feather" has helped them to attain.

LIZZIE COLLIER.

LEXINGTON, KY., May 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Since God does not hasten the march of true evolution, then let man do better than his deity, even though C. Lamb supposes that a great genius is sure to leap "moral fences," so great is his love for freedom. Wickedness is hideous to a noble nature, inasmuch as there is always something stronger than the ruling passion in such a heart, and perhaps in all. Most evolutionists believe that brute force and enterprise causes the survival of the fittest; and this is sometimes the road to ruin. Bible evolution was conducted on that plan, and the old career was as wild and strange as that of climbing plants.

The "Vestiges of Creation" givs us hints, showing that the order of nature is evidently on the advance, even though the products of one age are completely distinct from those of another. The word "adaptivness" is not mentioned in that precious book.

God's idea of evolution is to deal out destruction with an iron hand. A "pure spirit" is not so much as hinted at to the end of the chapter, and all through might makes right. Dogs exterminate ground-moles, and the dog also is bound to go on the same principle, which is presented for the instruction of the world, whose only salvation depends on the idea that the ruling passion tends downward in the scale of being. Savage progress amounts to very little. Often no link can be found between successiv creations, but an increase of power, combined with what Darwin styles "certain conditions," produces an improved result.

Materialistic forces cause vast motions and changes in the universe, and the activity of hopes, desires, exertions, and powers of all descriptions can be traced to the same source. From God, or nature, no principle is visible which makes for righteousness. We must look for that in the noble nature of man. Do ideas evolute like the amphioxus or star-fish? Evolution is not the triumph of the strong, but the result of a demand of the inner nature to press forward into brighter and better paths. Leibnitz says that a monad has a divine tendency to become more perceptiv.

Some say that women hav not improved or left any permanent mark in literature, "like Keats, Byron, or Burns." Hav not Mrs. Browning and George Eliot written well enough? What hav men been doing in the way of evolution since the days of Confucius, who observes that "man is greater than any system of thought?" They hav invented a variety of machines, which enable them to treat the honest men precisely as if they were criminals, at the same time raising the meanest men they can find to hights of power and influence. Women are not waiting for their brains to evolute, but when they come nobly to the rescue, nature bounds forward to aid them. Great thoughts arise suddenly from confusion and calamity, though God's grace, like a wind from the desert, would fain stifle their highest aspirations. When gospel forces fail, nature's principles can be brought into exercise, and are able to bring about great reforms. Good forces must converge somewhere soon, or all is lost. Opposit polarities combining, create good in the midst of evil, and the roar of the elements is then the harbinger of prosperity.

Useful labor, with adequate compensation, is a sweeter song than that of Moses and the lamb.

Do the clergy contribute anything to the legitimate unfolding of the universe, or are they like "gall-flies," causing blots on its fair surface?

Amidst useless cabals and the wire-pulling which passes for good government, a clergyman must be a fiend, an officer of Satan, to keep the masses in ignorance, their time spent in tremulous fear, and all the failings of groveling minds.

Well do the clergy know that the strict observance of the Sabbath plants their foot upon the neck of the nation. Devotion to religion has not furnished honorable business for the laborer, has not prevented misery and crime. Does the Sunday-school enlighten the minds of children? How much longer will the clergy dare to refuse to engage in important moral and scientific investigations, slighting as they do the whole field of literature? Such knowledge alone can raise the mind from degradation, exposing the craft of religionists in their attempts to rule the world. ALHAZA.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Having occasion to notify you that I hav changed my address, I will add the suggestion that, being a Materialist of Atheistic or Agnostic proclivities, I cannot consistently acknowledge any infidelity but of man to man. Hence, I find that there are two distinct and antagonistic types of Infidels who may be respectivly designated in plain English as God-be-praised Infidels and God-be-damned Infidels. There is no difference between them that I can appreciate. They are both more concerned about a myth they call God than about the well-being of man. The first profess a desire to preserve their myth, the other to destroy it. Myths being but phantoms of the imagination, I think it obvious that when out of mind they are out of being. Therefore, the surest method of destroying myths is to ignore and forget them. Nevertheless, I shall waste no time commenting on the absurdity of assisting religious fanatics to keep their myths in being on the pretense of destroying them, but shall persistently urge the expediency of endeavoring to find a better method than we hav for enabling human beings to liv as they should liv.

I am pleased to note that three or four of your correspondents hav bestowed some thought on this last-named subject. One of them is so confident "that only by taxation can the people be robbed of their lands or homes," that he challenges any person to dispute it. And in response to my suggestion that except for ownership taxation, robbery, and slavery would be impossible, he charges me with being incapable of thinking intelligently. I shall acknowledge the compliment and that he has a more convenient than convincing method of combating incontrovertible facts. He further suggests that "the only liberty Mr. Tuttle has to offer to his fellow-men is to rob them of the best, the greatest, truest attribute of freedom, the liberty of owning a place to lay one's head." He has omitted to suggest the proportion of the human race who are robbed by ownership of the liberty of possessing a place to lay one's head in freedom from molestation and danger of eviction. He has evidently yet to learn that ownership is not an ordinance of nature but a device of man, hence the abolition of ownership will effect the restitution of our natural and inalienable right of possession, and should enable every man, woman, and child to liv in peace, plenty, and prosperity, "and none will molest or make afraid." Those who are thus robbed will hardly need our sympathy.

Another correspondent appears to think agrarianism and Socialism are identical, and asserts that ancient Socialists proposed equal distribution of wealth, but modern Socialists propose to destroy wealth. History informs us that modern Socialism is identical with the most ancient theory on record, and it does not propose to destroy wealth unless ownership constitutes wealth. I am of the opinion that ownership adds nothing to the wealth, value, or utility of the earth and its products, and they constitute all wealth. Socialism does not propose to abolish them, but to make them serve their legitimate purpose much better than ownership is capable of doing. Hence, ownership being nothing to wealth but an expensiv encumbrance whose results are a disgrace to civilization, it is obviously an unnecessary evil that should be abated. That is all that Socialists propose to do.

Another correspondent fishes a little deeper than the others, and finds that ownership was originally instituted by ignorant savages with a view to securing to everyone the product of his own labor. But experience has long demonstrated it to hav the opposit effect. Therefore, I think it expedient that we should return to the first principle or law of nature, the ordinance of ignorant savages in violation of that law to the contrary notwithstanding. He does not appear to recognize the obvious fact that ownership is the power behind the throne greater than the throne, and must be abolished to remedy the evil that he complains of. There is no reasonable hope that ownership will be abolished until it has caused a calamity that will make its abolition a necessity for the self-preservation of those who hav the power to abolish it. Such a calamity is likely to be upon us in the near future.

J. A. TUTTLE.

INDIAN GROVE, MO., May 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: My opinion is that our lawmakers as a body are honorable, conscientious men, and if not always with thorough, at least with fair, conceptions of the interests, needs, and desires of their constituency. It is these qualifications that constitute and stamp them as representativ men. Most of the laws made by them and placed on our legal statutes are good, equitable, and just, though perhaps not always perfect, but sometimes defectiv in many respects. Yet, if administered in the spirit of justice and equity that gave them birth, they would conserve the common good for all and work no ill for any. But unfortunately, however, unprincipled and designing men, and combinations of men, take advantage of the defects of law, and instead of the salutary effects contemplated and designed by the spirit of the law, the statutes become the instruments of oppression and cruelty, fostering the evils they were intended to remedy. The great difficulty with the Anarchists evidently is this—either they do not recognize, or they totally ignore, the true source of their ills, and instead of waging a relentless warfare against those that pervert the righteous statutes of the law, and thus vindicating and sustaining the supremacy of the law, they array themselvs against all law, as an arbitrary, oppressiv tyrant that rules only by a usurpation of power with no genuin sovereignty, and that should at once be hurled from its lofty position of power. Although we admit numerous exceptions to the rule that laws are wholesome and just, the grievances complained of are often more imaginary than real. For instance, the St. Louis Secular Society has officially declared itself, and in fact has placed itself on record through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as being opposed to any system of taxation whatever. She declares emphatically, there can be no such thing as just taxation; that taxation is a burden and should therefore be abolished—however, they are in favor of equal taxation of church property so long as taxation is needed. Could anything be more absurd? Taxation of every species unjust and therefore robbery, yet demanding equal taxation of church property now and so long in the future as needed; that is, we desire and are agreed that the unjust taxation should be continued as long as needed, and we are further agreed that the unjust taxation will be needed for all time to come, at least so long as churches continue to exist! Now, the correct view on the matter is simply this: We all know that it requires funds to run the legal machinery employed in the administration and law. It requires funds to support our educational institutions. Without revenue the majestic structure of state would collapse in a single day. Without some system of taxation or gathering revenue our national existence could not be sustained. And to advocate such theories or to giv space in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER for their dissemination will doubtless circumscribe its circulation to quite a limited number. To successfully combat the pernicious influence of superstition, the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER should not be open to the propagation of those absurd revolutionary politico-economical theories. Of course our St. Louis friends hav a right to ventilate their visionary economical theories. And our exclusiv chattel property owners hav a right to advocate their single tax theory. Under this latter theory the landholder would put on cheaper and less commodious improvements, to reimburse himself, for excessiv real estate tax would exact from the tenant heavy rent for the holdings occupied by him.

Now, Mr. Editor, not that I wish to dictate, but I am very much in love with the valuable old TRUTH SEEKER, and I send my papers out on missionary work both at home and abroad. Many of them go into different states. And to tell you the plain truth, I would as soon enter an Inquisition as approach a lukewarm Christian or a Liberal-minded friend, solicit a subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, present him sample copy, and see his eye glance over such an item as the paragraph referred to in the St. Louis Secular Society's report. It is only in this way that we need apprehend danger from the promulgation of such ideas, as there is not the remotest probability that those wild, chimerical theories will ever be submitted to a practical test.

I hav the promis of Prof. Thomas Shands for a subscriber to your paper as soon as he becomes permanently located.

Fraternally yours, W. E. WATTS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower.
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Victor and Vanquished.

There are plaudits enough for the heroes
That struggle and win the day;
But there's not even sympathy lavished
On those that go down in the fray—
On the poor unfortunate mortals
That stumble and fall by the way.

They are Oblivion's children;
They the unlucky unknown—
The men to whom Chance, in her capers,
Gives neither scepter nor throne;
Gives neither money nor glory,
But leaves them to struggle alone.

'Tis the same whether you are a warrior
Or only a fun-making clown—
Succeed, and the world will applaud you,
But fail, and they'll trample you down;
The herd of human cattle
Will trample and trample you down.

Whatever you do, then, do something,
And though you should do it by fraud,
You'll find that mankind are immoral
Enough to stand by and applaud;
But fail in the same undertaking,
And they'll trample you into the sod.

There's something in human nature—
A something not understood—
That praises victorious evil
And censures the vanquished good;
That loves success regardless
Of whether 'tis evil or good.

Osceola Mills, Pa. WILLIAM SCOTT.

The Story of Grumble Tone.

There was a boy named Grumble Tone who ran away to sea.
"I'm sick of things on land," he said, "as sick as I can be.
A life upon the bounding wave will suit a lad like me."

The seething ocean billows failed to stimulate his mirth,
For he did not like the vessel, or the dizzy, rolling berth,
And he thought the sea was almost as unpleasant as the earth.

He wandered into foreign lands, he saw each wondrous sight,
But nothing that he heard or saw seemed just exactly right.
And so he journeyed on and on, still seeking for delight.

He talked with kings and ladies fair, he dined in courts, they say,
But always found the people dull and longed to get away,
To search for that mysterious land where he should like to stay.

He wandered over all the world, his hair grew white as snow,
He never reached the bourne he sought. The reason would you know?
The reason was that, north or south, where'er his steps were bent,
On land or sea, in court or hall, he found but discontent;
For he took his disposition with him everywhere he went.

The Illustration.

[The following is the illustration used by the editor of the Corner in a lecture, to which Mr. J. Henry alluded in THE TRUTH SEEKER a short time since, with a desire to see the same in print.—ED. C. C.]

There are men in the world who possess certain gifts that enable them to control wild beasts and hold them at bay. A story is related of a popular tamer of wild beasts that, once upon a time, he was prevailed upon to giv an exhibition of his powers in a large theater. The greater part of this man's life had been given to the study and practice of taming wild beasts, and all acknowledged that he was master of his art. Upon the occasion alluded to he brought upon the stage a number of reptils and wild animals—lions, tigers, hyenas, wolves, and wildcats, together with several species of birds and reptils. With them he performed, playing with the animals as though they were children. The vast audience that thronged the large building looked on in awe and wonder at the man's splendid nerve, and the remarkable control over the creatures that crouched and cringed, obedient to his every command.

As a grand finale to the exhibition he was to introduce an enormous boa-constrictor to the audience. This huge creature, thirty-five feet long, was a special pet of its owner. He had taken it when it was three days old, and "brought it up," as it were. It had now reached the age of twenty-five. Every day from the time the man had first received it, he had handled and petted the creature—had fondled it in his bosom, fed it with his hands, carried it about with him, and had learned to love this strange companion that he had watched grow from a tiny reptil into a monster of terrible proportions. It was with great pride that he exhibited the creature that he had spent so many years in training and caring for.

At a signal the red curtain of the stage arose and displayed a woodland scene in distant India. Wild and weird and slow there floated upon the air the peculiar strains of oriental music, seeming to come from amid the thick foliage of trees in the distance. A soft sound of crackling reeds, a low swish and rustle of long grass, and the cumbersome, heavy reptil advances, making his way slowly through the undergrowth of brush and brier.

It stops midway of the stage. It lifts its head and looks around. Its eyes glint and sparkle like diamonds. Parting the shrubbery, a man appears, dressed in the scarlet and gold of a fanciful costume. Slowly he approaches the serpent. Their eyes meet, and the huge boa-constrictor quivers, quails, and cowers. Man is master. Superior power, a higher intelligence, has the supremacy. Slowly, and with effort, the serpent performs a number of tricks. Preparation is then made for the final feat. The master waves his hand, and the reptil comes nearer. It reaches its master, and begins slowly to wind itself in coils around him, while low and soft the strange, sad music is heard in the distance. Higher, higher still the coils of the monster rise, until trainer and serpent seem blended into one being. In a moment the head of the great serpent rises above the head of the master. A faint scream from the man, and the audience bursts into a wave of applause. But the applause dies away upon white lips, as the trainer utters a wail of agony and drops. A thousand times had that serpent coiled around him and he thought he had gained perfect control of the fearful object. But this was the last embrace. The vast audience saw with horror and dismay the cruel folds tighten and tighten, but could render no assistance.

As long as the tamer of wild beasts kept his eye upon the serpent he was safe, but when it reared its head higher than his own, and he could no longer hold that glittering eye, he was lost, and his playmate of twenty-five years became the master and crushed the life from its too confiding victim.

If the Goddess of Liberty ever drops from her pedestal of glory and renown, it will be because she is strangled by a serpent more dreadful and deadly than any ever found amid the jungles of India.

The Queen's Tobacco-pipe.

One evening as Uncle Cap gazed meditativly at the smoke wreaths from his cigar, he said, "Children, who, do you think, has the largest tobacco-pipe in the world?"

"Emperor William," answered Jackanapes.

"The sultan," said Bryce.

The little girls wondered, but could not even guess.

"No," said Uncle Cap, with a smile, "you are all wrong. The largest pipe in the world is known as belonging to a certain lady of whom you hav all heard."

"A lady!" exclaimed the children, in great astonishment.

"Yes; and her name is Queen Victoria. In her pipe, which is called the 'Queen's Tobacco-pipe,' hundreds of pounds of tobacco are consumed at a time. It is a huge furnace built in the center of the vast tobacco warehouses at the London Docks, and in it is burnt all damaged or unsaleable tobacco arriving at that port. It stands in a spacious room by itself, and is of the same conical shape that you may see in glassworks. In it an intense glowing fire is maintained day and night from one year's end to another; and a fireman is always on hand to feed it with the material with which the room is filled, and which is constantly replenished from the warehouses. Besides tobacco, many other things are thrown into this enormous pipe, such as cigars, teas, spoiled meats, and even manufactured articles."

"I should think there would be a horrid smell from it," said Lady May.

"Oh, no; the draught is so strong and so constant that every bit of odor, as well as the smoke, is drawn up the tall chimney, and so not noticed. The tons of ashes from this queer pipe are sold by auction to farmers and gardeners for fertilizers or for killing insects, to soap-makers and to chemical manufacturers. On one side are piled cart-loads of nails and other bits of iron that were thrown into the furnace with broken casks and boxes, and hav since been sifted from its ashes. These are eagerly sought by gunsmiths, and used in the manufacture of gun-barrels."

"But why is it called the Queen's Pipe?" asked Miss Blue.

"Because it stands in what is known as the government or queen's warehouse, and on its iron door are painted the royal crown and the letters 'V.R.,'" answered Uncle Cap.

Correspondence.

CORINTH, ILL., April 22, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I write to correct a mistake in my letter of March 20th. My grandpa and grandma liv at St. Johns, Ill. In writing grandma's name I failed to put the word grand, which made it appear that my ma livs at St. Johns. I hope you will excuse me. I will try and be more careful from this on. My ma likes to read THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Your friend, MINNIE BELLE ROGERS.

[Minnie is very excusable. Everyone is liable to make mistakes. We must all learn to be careful.—ED. C. C.]

BALLSTON, May 12, E.M. 289.

DEAR MISS WIXON: The following are the names of only three donors to the Casey fund:

C. Monholland, Brooklyn, E. D.	$ .25
Geo. Johnson, Oregon City, Ore.	.25
William Thorpe, Ballston Spa, N. Y.	.10
Total	.60

If anyone wishes to aid the aged couple, they will please send the money to Mr. R. M. Casey himself, or to Mrs. E. D. Slenker. I hav kept the sixty cents quite a little time, as I thought more might come in; but as it did not, I sent it to Mr. Casey.

Well, pa has gone to England, and we do not expect him back till the last of June.

Wishing success to the Corner, I will close.

Your Liberal friend, SADIE THORPE.

PARK, ORE., April 23. 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write you a letter for the first time. My age is eleven. We had four months' school last winter, but it is out now. I studied spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography. Our teacher's name was William L. Forrester. He was a splendid teacher. We hav lyceum and literary meetings here every Saturday night in the winter time. My uncle livs with us and takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I enjoy reading the Children's Corner and looking at the pictures. I hav two brothers and two sisters and I am the youngest. We liv in a little valley called the Park, with high mountains on each side. There are ten families living in the Park. Hoping to see this in print, I will close. As ever, Your friend,

LILLIAN SOUTH.

OAK MILLS, KAN., May 5, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Children's Corner. I am thirteen years old. I hav been going to school all winter. I am studying arithmetic, reading, grammar, spelling, geography, physiology, and writing. I go to a country school. Our teacher's name is Miss Schiffbauer; she is an Infidel. Her father was once a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and she says that when she goes home she is going to get him to subscribe for it again I read the "Story Hour" very often. It is a book that all fathers and mothers should buy for their children. Its stories are interesting and good. To-day is Sunday. People are passing by on their way to church. I went to church the other night, and it almost made me sick to hear and see the preachers act the fool. I like the stories which are being printed in the Children's Corner lately very much. I would like to hear some good Liberal lecturer speak. Ingersoll visited Atchison and Leavenworth several years ago, but I did not get to hear him. As I cannot think of much more to write, I will close for this time, hoping to see this in print. From your Infidel friend,

C. B. REMSBURG.

PALMYRA, May 13. 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write you a letter, as you wish to hear from your little Freethought friends. I should like to see this in print. Mr. Marsh takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we like to look at the pictures. Mr. Marsh calls my sister Ada his little Agnostic friend, for she does her own thinking. I am now at my friend's home, and to-day we buried her little pet—it was a white rat—whose name was Snowball. We put him in a little box full of flowers, tied a red ribbon around his neck, and decorated his little grave with flowers. We didn't say any prayers, but we think he will go to rat heaven all the same, for he was a good little rat, and was Agnostic, for he didn't know. I am eleven years old, and my friend is fifteen years old. We send you Mr. Marsh's book on Evolution. My little sister Ada's picture is in it. We hav read one of your books, and think it is real nice.

From your little friends,

DORA M. CORRIGAN.
MARY G. COLLINS.

[Many thanks for the little book on Evolution. The editor of the Corner has read it with much interest, and she thanks the author for writing it. It is none the less interesting for the bright little pictured face that adorns its first page. We shall always be pleased to hear from her as well as Dora and Mary.—ED. C. C.]

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

MIRACLES AND MIRACLE WORKERS.

By JOHN PECK.

"The miraculous is the impossible. Anything within the realm of the possible is no miracle."

Price, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,
As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,
Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order o Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

LIBERALS SUPPLIED

With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.
tf

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.

144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculativ, each proved affirmativly and negativly by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.

By W. H. BURR. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MATERIALISM:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON SOCIETY.

BY DR. LOUIS BUCHNER, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose. Cal
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 359 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates

We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures, (illustrated). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42 History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Museum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Ex-
No. 51. } change. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double
No. 59. } By Charles Darwin. } Nos.

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a double No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Nature Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Financc; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol.
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O., N.Y.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposde by the press, but Dr Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt.
W. A. Collier, Box 1[illegible], Jersey City, N.J.

A Black Soul in Paradise.

HOW A SINNER CREPT IN UNDER COVER OF HIS WIFE'S WING.

Never in the memory of the good St. Peter had a Vauvertois been able to get into paradise.

Not that at Vauvert they were more wicked or more quarrelsome than elsewhere, and not that they went to confession less, or cheated the housewives more than was reasonable; no, not at all; it was simply because they loved bull-fights far too well. When a bull-fight was announced, all else was abandoned, and in the whole of the city, in the streets of an evening, under the trees of the sidewalks, before the cafés, and above all, upon the steps of the houses, nothing was heard but a discourse upon bulls, their origin, their form and possible strength, their agility, and their power of muscle.

On days like these the occasions for sin were multiplied, and the exuberance of passions knew no limit or restraint. The Recording Angel, writing on high in his great book the actions of men, found the columns devoted to Vauvert on the evenings of these courses stretching to an interminable length.

No, a Vauvertois had never entered paradise, whether from this or some other reason, till the day when Mark Sistré attempted the enterprise and succeeded.

This Mark Sistré was a scamp of the first water, lazy, quarrelsome, drunken, brutal, a liar, and I know not what besides; he made a martyr of his wife, a veritable saint; he ran after the bull-fights like a perfect lunatic. Every time a fight was billed for Vauvert, Mark was the first to know it, to examin the animals, to proffer his advice; and then, upon the day of the courses, no one drank, gambled, swore, and fought as he did, till even the Vauvertoises declared among themselvs that, of all its many miscreants, Mark Sistré was the one for whom the devil watched with the most impatience.

Well, one evening, as the result of repeated libations, and while discussing the singular fate of the Vauvertoises unable to enter heaven, Mark Sistré swore by all the heathen gods that he, at least, would enter there—he, in person—and there he would remain, despite the fact of which they warned him, among other things, that he would certainly weary of passing eternity in the singing of hymns. The more they argued, the more firmly did he hold to his promis.

Meanwhile, as these scenes were occurring, Marion Sistré, worn out by chagrin, broken with sorrow, and crushed by the brutalities of her husband, was passing away, like running water. She, whom they had known in her youth so gay and fresh, had now become pale, wan, and shrunken as a winter leaf, and so chagrined that day and night she wept and sobbed, and, at the moment of our story, was unable to leave her bed, even to go to mass. The doctor, when they asked him about her, shook his head with an air of mournful augury, for well did he know that she was sick unto death.

This illness of his wife, however, in nowise hindered Mark from going as usual to pass his hours at the café, to play at billiards or bet at piquet with gay young bloods, who twirled their mustaches and prolonged their orgies till morning. If anything, he went more than ever. But on a certain Sunday, Marion Sistré was given extreme unction, as they knew not if she would last till night, and this same Sunday was the day appointed for a grand bull-fight at Vauvert.

Still, Sistré had no idea of absenting himself from so beautiful an occasion of gaining cockades and prizes, and then the monade of bulls was handsomer than usual and conducted by a cuadrilla renowned from Saint-Gilles to Remoulius. He would go, if for nothing else than to show these toreros, whose names were posted in big letters all over the walls and fences, how they did things at Vauvert, for they had jeered him at the cafés till he had accepted battle with a bull whose horns had been specially sharpened for the fight.

Truly a "master toro," in the language of the experts, and one who had "ripped" many a better and more skilful player than Mark could boast of being.

Alas! at the very moment, when he, Mark Sistré, was striving to hold his own, she, Marion Sistré, was in the last agony, all white and cold, in her little chamber with closed shutters, blessed candles at her head and feet, and the good curé of Vauvert reading beside her the lessons and psalms of peace, while neighbors came and went about the bed, sprinkling it with holy water, and walking upon the points of their toes for fear of disturbing her dying hours.

Suddenly there was a terrible tumult in the street below, the cries and shouts of an excited crowd; then the sound of footsteps on the stairs, and the entrance of two men bearing on their shoulders a stiffened corpse, pale and bloody. Marion, half dead already, raised herself with a gasp of horror—to fall back dead. Mark was already dead, his body transfixed by the bull's horns.

Chance had settled everything; the rascal and the saint had gone together, and their two souls, destined to a fate so different, abandoned at the same instant their mortal remains to meet again upon the road precisely at the turning when one was gaining hell, the other heaven.

The black soul of the husband spoke first.

"You Marion!" he cried, astonished, "and whither go you, my little one?"

"Where God has called me," said the soul of Marion.

"Good—and is it far?"

"Very far; yonder—on high."

"To paradise, then?"

"Yes, to paradise."

"Zounds! how lucky we met; I'm going there, too; we can go together," declared this black soul, as if he saw not the ineffable whiteness of the other, he, as black as an oven door, as black as soot itself, and spotted with sins.

"You to paradise?" repeated Marion. "But, Mark, do you not know that the mass of your iniquities weighs you down and that hell awaits you?"

"Me? pooh!" laughed Mark. "Calm yourself, little one. I hav told you I am going to paradise, and I tell you again, I am going."

"But how? How will you enter there? Did you take out the indispensable passport before starting? Or die in prayer, receiving upon your limbs the unction of holy oils?"

"Pooh, pooh! no, certainly not; I had too much to do."

And the white soul, veiling her face, sought to flee this vile companion, but Mark caught her by a wing and held her fast.

"A minute," said he. "You say that one must hav a passport to enter above there? Hav you a passport?"

"I? Of course."

"Good! so much the better. It will serve for both."

"What—for both!" exclaimed the white soul, in horror.

"Yes, for both. I shall hide behind you; you will present your passport, and, hoop-la! once in, I ask nothing more."

This was too much. Horror paralyzed the white soul. She strove to murmur a "Get thee behind me, Satan." But, without disquieting himself at the exorcism, Mark only held his sides with laughing, and repeated:

"Yes, you must smuggle me in like a bale of tobacco."

And with his brutal hand he still held her fast by the tip of the wing, and still she continued to struggle.

"You are a wretch!" she cried; "a wretch, I say. Do you think for a moment I would deceive St. Peter?"

"My dear little wife, my dear little love, my precious flower! You would not abandon your husband, whom you love so much and who loves you so well?" And Mark, giving to his voice the tenderest inflection, with bowed head and lips wreathed with a smile, softly caressed with his free hand the white plumes of Marion, seeking to convince her at once by speech and gesture.

Nothing moved her, and Mark, reduced to violent means, proceeded at last to tweak out a feather, heedless of the victim's shrieks of pain.

"I'm your husband," he declared, as he pulled a second one; "your husband, whom you must obey!"

"Obey—that order? Never—never!"

And this was Marion, formerly so gentle and submissiv, who dared to speak in this way! Mark tweaked all the harder. What mattered it to him, the hardened ruffian, the prayers, lamentations, and refusals of his wife? He was too well accustomed to making her obey to heed either pain or indignation.

The habit of the yoke is so strong, that presently, despite her horror, this poor white soul of Marion's, faint and conquered, abandoned itself to the worst, consented to become the accomplice of the criminal project, and at least to attempt the introduction of this miscreant into the kingdom reserved for the just.

From this on they went together, Mark smiling and proud to be the first from Vauvert to enter the happy realms; doubly proud at the trick he was going to play upon the good St. Peter, and with Marion dragging after him, sighing and sobbing pitifully.

But why, why was the devil not waiting for his own at the cross-roads? Ah! what would you? Upon that day, as it happened, Beelzebub was celebrating his birthday fête, and at the moment when Mark died he was about to dine upon a truffled turkey presented him by his friend Belial, and so much to his taste that he would not hav stirred from the table to hav greeted a pope. Moreover, what respectable demon would hav dreamed that Mark, the miserable scamp, would hav chosen a day of bull-fighting to depart the earth?

The one dragging the other, and, after long fatigues, the two souls arrived at the gate of paradise. And what a spectacle! that great golden door, studded with precious stones, shining like an illumination, and with St. Peter, pen in hand and keys at belt, receiving upon one side the necessary passports, and pushing back on the other the hypocrits and knaves who sought admission under cover of the crowd.

But when he raised his head at the name of Vauvert, and saw that it was Marion Sistré who stood before him, that noble woman who weekly burnt a candle in his honor, he threw open the door without more ado.

"Enter, my child," said he.

She entered, feeling always behind her the black soul of Mark, making itself as small as possible, despairingly hooked to her wing, and scarce daring to draw a breath for fear of being discovered. And when night came, and St. Peter still pored over his hieroglyphics, in his quality of apostle, reading all languages, he never for an instant suspected that Mark Sistré, that rascal watched for by the devil, had forced himself, through the complicity of his wife, into paradise.

During the first days all went well with Mark; he came and went, and filled his lungs with the delicious air; boated upon the great blue lake, with its silver swans; wandered under the trees from which, in a perfumed rain, fell flowers of ideal beauty; listened to the concerts of the seraphim and angels; slept eight hours in twelve—in short, continued the life of indolence so well begun when living upon the earth.

He, the first Vauvertois—despite the fact that he had done nothing to deserve it—who had ever crossed the sacred threshold! He was greatly amused, and, placing his eyes at one of the loopholes through which from above they regard the earth, he gazed upon his old home, tranquilly sleeping upon the bank of the Vistré; even the café, in which he had played his billiards and made his wagers for mugs of beer, showed plainly beneath him. Mark sighed as he thought of the café; heaven was pleasant, but there were no cafés there.

The simple pleasure of seeing Vauvert for a while sufficed him, and might hav continued to suffice him, had it not been that one Sunday, when the saints were all at mass and he, as usual, peeping from his hole, he saw a sight that stirred his blood. A sight indeed—a monade of bulls, such as Mark had never seen before; Spanish bulls escorted by toreros in velvet costumes, covered with passequilles and gay cockades; nervous and agil bulls, lustrous of skin, brilliant of eye, and with long and slender tails ending in a houppette of silky hair; superb animals, one brown, one black, and so elegant of form, so proud of bearing, that never in its greatest day had Vauvert known the like. Before them marched the toreros and the picadores, lances in hand, behind them a gaping multitude.

From that instant Mark was weary of paradise. He had enough of eternal promenades beneath the trees and eternal boatings upon placid lakes. The country was beautiful, truly, but there were no billiards, no cafés, no games of piquet. He was tired; tired even of the endless perfume, the long sleeps, the continual serenity of everything.

Ah! if he had not been sure that hell awaited him, and that even at that moment the devil was rummaging the world to find him, how quickly he would hav fled from this delicious sojourn that wearied him so terribly for lack of bulls and races! He had only to say the word to go, but that word—Mark was not willing to pronounce it. Satan waited with uplifted fork to pop him into the vat where already, for centuries, perhaps, had been boiling and roasting players of games and runners of bulls such as he. Sooner than enter that yawning furnace he would bore himself in paradise—if needful, since it was the custom on high, sing hymns like the others.

Yet this bull-fight at Vauvert, with its chulos, its banderilleros, and its two thousand francs' worth of prizes in a lump, ran in his thoughts and dreams; and he saw always pass and repass before him those two beautiful bulls, tossing their sharp white horns, agitating their slender tails, with the houppette of hair at the end of them.

. . . . . .

Perhaps you think the devil did not jump, though he had dined so well on truffled turkey, when his valet came to inform him that at last Mark Sistré was dead.

"And where is he, the brigand?" he cried out, joyfully.

"No one knows, my lord."

"What? And they hav let him escape?"

"My lord forgets; he charged himself personally with securing him; no one dared to forestall your lordship."

"Ha! the rascal!" cried Satan, furiously, "to profit thus by my natal fête! All the same, he doesn't escape me; wherever he is I will find and take him!" and swearing an oath that made even his myrmidons tremble, he leaped from his bed and shot like a bomb on his way to earth. But at Vauvert he learned nothing, save that Marion Sistré was dead, and upon the same day as her husband. In purgatory it was the same thing—no one of the name of Sistré had been heard of by the guardian of that somber place, and none of Sistré's comrades who encumbered hell could giv tidings of the missing one.

Frantic at his ill success, Beelzebub was going into a terrible rage, when suddenly an idea occurred to him: Mark Sistré was a cunning rascal, and doubtless was precisely where he had never been sought for—that is to say, in paradise! Instantly, all excitement, the enemy of the human race spread his bat-like wings and speeded away to the celestial hights.

"Rat-tat-tat-tat-tat!" sounded upon the golden door.

"Who's there?" St. Peter demanded.

"'Tis I, friend Peter—open the wicket."

The wicket opened, but closed immediately, not, however, without allowing to pass a cry of terror, to which the devil responded with a shout of laughter.

"Ho, there!" he cried; "truly, Peter, you are stupid; do you think I hav come to invade your paradise with a legion of evil spirits? No, listen to me."

And, as the wicket remained obstinately closed, the devil, who knew nevertheless that St. Peter was listening, resumed:

"Open it, I say, it is for a damned soul I come."

A damned soul in paradise! Impossible! The devil was fooling him—he was too old to be mystified thus! What! he, Saint Peter, allow a black soul to pass without suspecting it! And yet—well, he had better open the wicket and see what the devil—he was too big to pass three gratings one upon another—was talking about!

He opened a slit in the wicket.

"Ah!" cried Beelzebub, "now we can talk. Tell me, St. Peter, if in your flock of white sheep you hav not one by the name of Mark Sistré, from Vauvert, who has departed the earth, and of whom I can find no trace."

"Mark? Mark Sistré? Why, no—not Mark Sistré, but Marion Sistré! She is a saint who has naught to do with you or your infernal regions—she is——"

"Imbecil!" cried the impatient devil, "if he is not on your register or in your memory, then Mark Sistré cannot be here; yet, if not here, where can he be, for I hav rummaged everywhere?"

"True!" said St. Peter, "and should he be here, how recognize him in so great a crowd?"

Satan reflected a minute, finger on forehead.

"Ah-h!" said he at last, "I hav it; we'll find him; but I shall need your assistance, St. Peter!"

"And you shall hav it—anything to discover the knave."

"Then," added Beelzebub, "be not astonished at whatever happens, and presently, when I return and knock upon your door, open it and be not afraid, for I promis you that none of mine shall cross its threshold."

"Agreed!" said St. Peter; and he closed the wicket—to open the gate as agreed upon at the appointed knock—to find before it a throng of—

Devils?

Exactly—but devils metamorphosed into gay toreros in brilliant costumes, their velvet coats and yellow breeches covered with pasquilles and bands of gold, the chulos coiffed in scarlet handkerchiefs, the picadores on prancing horses, and, in the midst of the throng two Spanish bulls, one brown, one black, and with houppettes of silky hair on the tips of their tails. Beelzebub himself, as a superb espada, in a plumed montera and clothed like a fairy prince, headed the procession, and speedily, with the voice of a stentor, began the musical halloo, that well-known warning of the bull's approach.

Scarce had he cried it twice, when Mark Sistré, bounding barriers, leaping brooks, and coming like a shuttlecock thrown from a racquet, his face and eyes aflame, crossed the sill of paradise, and hurled himself into the cohort of imps waiting to receive him. And from there, into the depths of Tartarus, falling, falling, falling, Mark Sistré shot like a shooting star.—Translated for the Argonaut from the French of Chalon by E. C. Waggener.

PIONEER PITH.

THE GIST OF LECTURES ON

RATIONALISM.

By CAPT. ROBT. C. ADAMS,

President of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club.

A useful compendium of scientific and critical lore. The best handbook of its size for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.—British-American.

It is the author's aim to condense the main facts of Rationalism into a small compass. It contains more than other books many times its size.—Freethought.

Salient facts, arranged with remarkable perspicuity.—Tyler, Tex., Leader.

Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

For sale at this office.

DID MAN FALL?

The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.

IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?

$5,000 REWARD.

By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"

Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.

Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.

Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

Paper, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

GODS AND RELIGIONS

OF

ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Christian Absurdities.

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cents; six copies for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Deathbed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light." "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Reign of the Stoics.

THEIR

History, Religion, Philosophy, and Maxims of Self-Control, Self-Culture, Benevolence, and Justice.

With Citations of Authors Quoted from on Each Page.

BY FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND.

Read the philosophers, and learn how to make life happy, seeking useful precepts and brave and noble words which may become deeds.—Seneca.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

This book shows that many Christians might learn much from these ancient heathen.—American Bookseller.

One of the most valuable helps for those who would understand the character of human progress in all ages.—National Quarterly Review.

The author has shown himself a diligent student, an ardent admirer, and a faithful interpreter, of some of the most remarkable monuments of ancient thinking.—New York Tribune

Reading this book, we find the doctrins of the Stoics to be almost identical with the views held by the broadest and most enlightened minds of the present day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Lecky says of Marcus Aurelius: "The purest and gentlest spirit of all the pagan world." Merivale says: "Of all the line the noblest and dearest." Taine says: "The noblest soul that ever lived." John Stuart Mill says: "He preserved through life not only the most unblemished justice, but the tenderest heart."

Extra Cloth, 12mo, 248 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

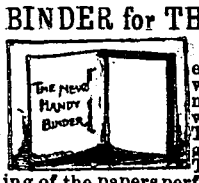
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S

OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY

in the suit of the

Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company

against the

Western Union Telegraph Company

So many hav asked for copies of this famous speech that THE TRUTH SEEKER has obtained a supply and can mail them to those who desire them, for ten cents each.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right,

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 190 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

News of the Week.

FLOODS in Austria hav drowned one hundred.

RAILROADS are being built throughout Japan.

HUNGARY is restraining emigration to this country.

GERMANY and Austria are thick with violent and disastrous strikes.

BRADLAUGH is demanding "a reduction of the wages of Queen Victoria."

IN Ohio Toledo will hav a $11,000 parochial school; Canton, a $28,000 one.

IMMIGRATION at Castle Garden last week, 13,987; same week of 1888, 16,108.

THE pastor of Baltimore's finest church committed suicide on the 26th ult. A widow.

AT Odessa, Russia, two huge bombs hav been found beneath streets over which royal visitors usually pass.

THE preëminently Christian state of Delaware still sticks to the whipping-post as a method of punishment.

THE House of Commons by a vote of 201 to 160 has rejected a motion to repeal hereditary seating in the House of Lords.

AN important political move will be the czar's fulfilment of his announced intention to crown himself king of Poland.

A MUNICH newspaper has been confiscated and the editor arrested for publishing unpleasant particulars about the late queen.

THE New Hampshire House of Representativs contained in 1881 6 Catholics; in 1883, 9; in 1885, 10; in 1887, 19; in 1889, 24.

HENRY GEORGE says that his land-tax doctrin has taken root most deeply in Scotland. He goes to the Labor Congress at Paris June 6th.

RUMOR says that the czar was recently shot at twice, and wounded in the arm, by a Nihilistic army officer, who then killed himself.

THERE is excitement over the assassination of Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, suspected to be perpetrated by the Clan-na-Gael, to which he belonged.

A MILLION copies of the K. of L. Declaration of Principles, in French, are to be distributed among the workingmen at the Paris Exposition.

THERE are extensiv strikes throughout Italy, attended by conflicts with the military in which one striker has been killed and many hav been injured.

THE shah of Persia in his present trip through Europe is under guidance of his astrologers and will by their direction remain in England not over twenty-five days.

THE international convention of the Y. M. C. A. showed remarkable growth of that society, which now exerts considerable influence on outside business and other affairs.

A REVOLUTIONARY plot of republicans and labor radicals at Sueca, Spain, has been discovered. The conspirators, all peasants, were to take the town and sack the houses of the wealthy.

ENGLISHMEN in Paris are signing an address to the French president regretting the ill-manners shown by Premier Salisbury and the queen in withdrawing from his presence at the opening of the Exposition.

A DAILY paper says that the Catholic University has rejected American professors because of their comparativly free ideas, and imported European professors with monarchical tendencies.

IN New York a man has been committed as insane because of wild conduct proceeding from the idea that he was harassed by devils. The others who are only moderately injured and incapacitated by this idea are still at large.

WHILE it is natural that the conservativ monarchies should refuse participation in the Paris Exposition, it is thought that Premier Crispi of Italy and Sagasta of Spain should hav induced their countries to take part, and that England in withholding is totally inexcusable.

AT Scranton, Pa., Rev. John King, a Salvation Army minister, has been arrested for raping a fifteen-year-old girl of his flock. On being locked up he declared that his arrest was an outrage against "a Christian minister," but later on consoled himself by singing Salvation Army songs in his cell.

Gems of Thought.

MEN in all ages hav personified their highest conceptions of goodness in a supreme being, making a god to stand for their notions of good. The Hebrews thus made Yahweh the representativ of the best traits they knew, and as they gained knowledge from Greece, Persia, India, and Egypt, they improved his attributes. Christians hav made the mistake of continuing this God in the condition in which the Bible writers left him; and as goodness grows with knowledge, and the God of the Bible does not change, we find that their God is inferior to current morality and no longer represents good. It therefore becomes imperativ that friends of good should be foes of God. Taking warning from the past, and recognizing that goodness constantly advances, they will no longer personify good in a form that in a short time may be obsolete and a hindrance to progress. It is doubtless a help to many to personify their highest conceptions in a god, just as children personify heroism in Jack the Giant-killer, and virtue and grace in Cinderella; but it marks mental advancement to be able to contemplate goodness abstractly. If men personified present ideas of good as god, it would not be so objectionable; but when they make the goodness of two thousand or three thousand years ago their god, as all do who worship the God of the Bible, then their god is an injury to man.—Robert C. Adams in Pioneer Pith.

SAVAGE and furious nations, perpetually at war, adore, under divers names, some god conformable to their ideas—that is to say, cruel, carnivorous, selfish, bloodthirsty. We find in all the religions of the earth a "god of armies," a "jealous god," an "avenging god," a "destroying god," a god who is pleased with carnage, and whom his worshipers consider it as a duty to serve to his taste. Lambs, bulls, children, men, heretics, Infidels, kings, whole nations, are sacrificed to him.—D'Holbach.

WE hav often observed already that the Israelites, like everyone else, conceived their god after their own likeness, and ascribed to him whatever they regarded as most noble and glorious in man. The level of culture which they had reached at any period was reflected in their conception of their God. At a low stage, when the pleasures of sense were supreme, they described Yahweh as eating and drinking, put into good humor by the pleasant smell of a sacrifice, and made merry by wine. When prowess in battle was held to be the greatest virtue, Yahweh became a mighty warrior, brandishing his sword and spear, and rushing upon the foe with a war-cry like the lion's roar. The stern moralist, on the other hand, saw in Yahweh a being of moral holiness and of strictest justice, rewarding every man according to his work; and tender hearts would sometimes rise to the thought of Yahweh's pitying love. The proverb makers or "sages," for their part, saw in him the perfection of wisdom, the god who had deliberately adapted everything to its purpose.—The Bible for Learners.

IT is better, far better, that we admitted, if it were possible, a thousand devils to roam at large, and to preach publicly the doctrin of devils, if there were any such, than that we permitted one such impostor and monster as Moses, Joshua, Samuel, and the Bible prophets, to come with the pretended word of God in his mouth and hav credit among us.—Paine.

CHRISTIANITY has been the cause of more unprovoked strife and war and more unmerited suffering than any other religion of which history gives an account.—B. F. Underwood in Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

THE church of Rome has shed more innocent blood than any other institution that has ever existed among mankind.—Lecky.

THEY ARE BUT GIANTS WHILE WE KNEEL.

Good People! put no faith in Kings, nor in your princes trust,
Who break your hearts for bread, and grind your faces in the dust!
The Palace Paupers look from lattice high, and mock your prayer:
The Champions of the Christ are dumb, or golden bit they wear!
O but to see ye bend no more to earth's crime-cursed things!
Ye are God's oracles: stand forth! be Nature's Priests and Kings!
Ye fight and bleed, while Fortune's darlings slink in splendid lair;
With lives that crawl, like worms through buried Beauty's golden hair!—
A tale of lives wrung out in tears their Grandeur's garb reveals,
And the last sobs of breaking hearts sound in their Chariot-wheels!
O league ye—crush the things that kill all love and liberty!
They are but Giants while we kneel: ONE LEAP, AND UP GO WE.

Trust not the Priests, whose tears are lies, and hearts are hard and cold;
Who lead ye to sweet pastures, where they fleece the foolish fold!
The Church and State are linkt and sworn to desolate the land.
Good people, 'twixt these Foxes' tails, We'll fling a fiery brand!
Up, if ye will be free, to golden calves no longer bow:
The Nations yearn for liberty—the world is earnest now!
Your bent knee is half-way to hell!—Up, Servils, from the dust!
The Harvest of the free red-ripens for the sickle-thrust.
They're quaking now, and shaking now, who've wrought the hurtling sorrow,
To-day the desolators, but the desolate To-morrow!
Loud o'er their murder's menace wakes the watch-word of the Free:
They are but Giants while we kneel: ONE LEAP, AND UP GO WE!—Gerald Massey.

Odds and Ends.

THE modern American girl, without any violent effort, can draw a good beau.—Yonkers Gazette.

FOND lover (after a long-delayed proposal): "Perhaps I've been too sudden, darling." Darling girl (regaining her composure with a mighty effort): "Yes, George, it is very, very sudden, but" (and here she became faint again) "it is not too sudden."—Texas Siftings.

A NEBRASKA paper narrates this educational incident: A high school girl, class A, being told by her teacher to parse the sentence, "He kissed me,' consented reluctantly, because opposed to speaking of private affairs in public. "He," she commenced, with unnecessary emphasis and a fond lingering over the word that brought crimson to her cheeks, "is a pronoun; third person, singular number, masculin gender; a gentleman, pretty well fixed; universally considered a good catch. Kissed is a verb, transitiv—too much so; regular—every evening; indicativ mood—indicating affection; first and third person, plural number, and governed by circumstances. Me—oh! everybody knows me," and down she went.

BIBLICUS wants to know who was Cain's wife. This is a question, Biblicus, that has been standing like a big interrogation point right in the pathway of every generation. It is a very imperativ and important question. It ought to be settled; it ought to be settled right away, even before we do the chores. Yet it has remained unsettled all these years, while men hav wasted their time in discussing the tariff, learning the multiplication table, and taking their regular meals. This conundrum has stalked unanswered down the ages, while men hav blindly gone on asking such questions as: "Is marriage a failure?" or "Hav you read 'Robert Elsmere?'" But yet the question is an easy one. Cain's wife was the sister-in-law of Abel and Seth, and the daughter-in-law of Adam and Eve. Go and do chores, Biblicus, and don't forget to tie the setting goose upon her nest.—Munsey's Weekly.

ONE of Socrates's pupils one day stood up to read his essay, and began: "A poor man who derived a precarious subsistence from the sales of a patent medicin which he manufactured"—— when the philosopher smote him across the jowl with a board-slat, exclaiming: "Measureless liar! wilt thou make all Athens think I am conducting a school of journalism?" The pupil wept, as under the rules he was entitled to do, for the space of a brief while, and then arose to read his amended composition: "A wealthy beggar who was pastor of a rich and fashionable church with Yale locks on the pews and pass-keys for the outer doors"—— "That," said the philosopher, 'sounds something like a composition. Now fix yourself up and show the class how you strike a cotton seed oil man for a chime of bells and a new baptistry."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A HEATHEN GOD.

(Transported from Easter Island to adorn the facade of the British Museum.)

Who is it with the noble nose,
And hollow eyes, with sorrow sore,
That stands in inartistic pose,
To guard the dull museum door?
"A stranger from a distant shore;
A god beneath a southern star,
Men worshiped me in years of yore;
I'm Hoa Haka Nana Ja.

"What though I hav nor teeth nor toes,
Nor hair nor eyebrows any more?
Time was the pious came in rows
And knelt upon my temple floor.
Those colored saints hav gone 'before;'
We heathen gods are scattered far;
And no man now sets any store
By Hoa Haka Nana Ja.

"The silly student comes and goes,
Blue-stocking glum, professor hoar,
Each passing pause to flout my woes,
And mock the mighty name I bore.
The vials of contempt they pour;
They greet me with a rude ha! ha!
The schoolboy even tries to score
Off Hoa Haka Nana Ja.

"In vain such insults I deplore,
Some day you'll find what fools you are;
And all the orthodox will roar
For Hoa Haka Nana Ja."

—Francis H. Gribble.

MAGAZINE EDITORS.

Do they really, in reading a manuscript, aim
For the barefooted merit about it—
Entirely unnoting the ultimate name?
Well, maybe they do—but I doubt it!

Do they proffer to genius the very same show
With fame ready won or without it?
Do they read Jones's poem, if Jones they don't know?
Well, maybe they do—but I doubt it!

Do they ever, when Tennyson writes to exploit
His dotage in doddering flout it,
And snap at a classic by Smith, of Detroit?
Well, maybe they do—but I doubt it!

Are they any worse snobs than their readers, who know
No more than the fashion about it;
Not, "It is So and-So," but "It's by So-and-So?"
Well, maybe they are—but I doubt it!—Time.

"DON'T! STOP!"

She said: "Don't! stop!" How could I know
The nicer shades of prosody?
I soon forgot—her eyes shone so—
Where punctuating points should be.

The distant band tripped tenderly:
The lights were dim: her tones were low—
She said: "Don't! stop!' How could I know
The nicer shades of prosody?

Soon ecphoneme and comma flee;
From far off where the waltzes go
The perfumed notes swell to and fro—
Her lovely form was close to me—
She said: "Don't! stop." How could I know
The nicer shades of prosody?"—Town Topics.

BIBLE INQUIRER;
OR,
A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking
Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS
OF
HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM

By DR. FREDERIC R. MARVIN, Professor of Physiological Medicin and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Paper, 12mo, 68pp., cloth, 50 cents.

His analysis of nervous and mental phenomena is sharply scientific; his pathological theories are rational, clear, and modern.—Medical Review.

His language is strong and well chosen, his style admirable in its directness and brilliancy, his thought clear and logical.—Liberal Christian.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.

PRICE, - - - - - - - 15 CENTS.

Your treatment of the "Conflict" is excellent.—Harry Hoover.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI-PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which each point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:
A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

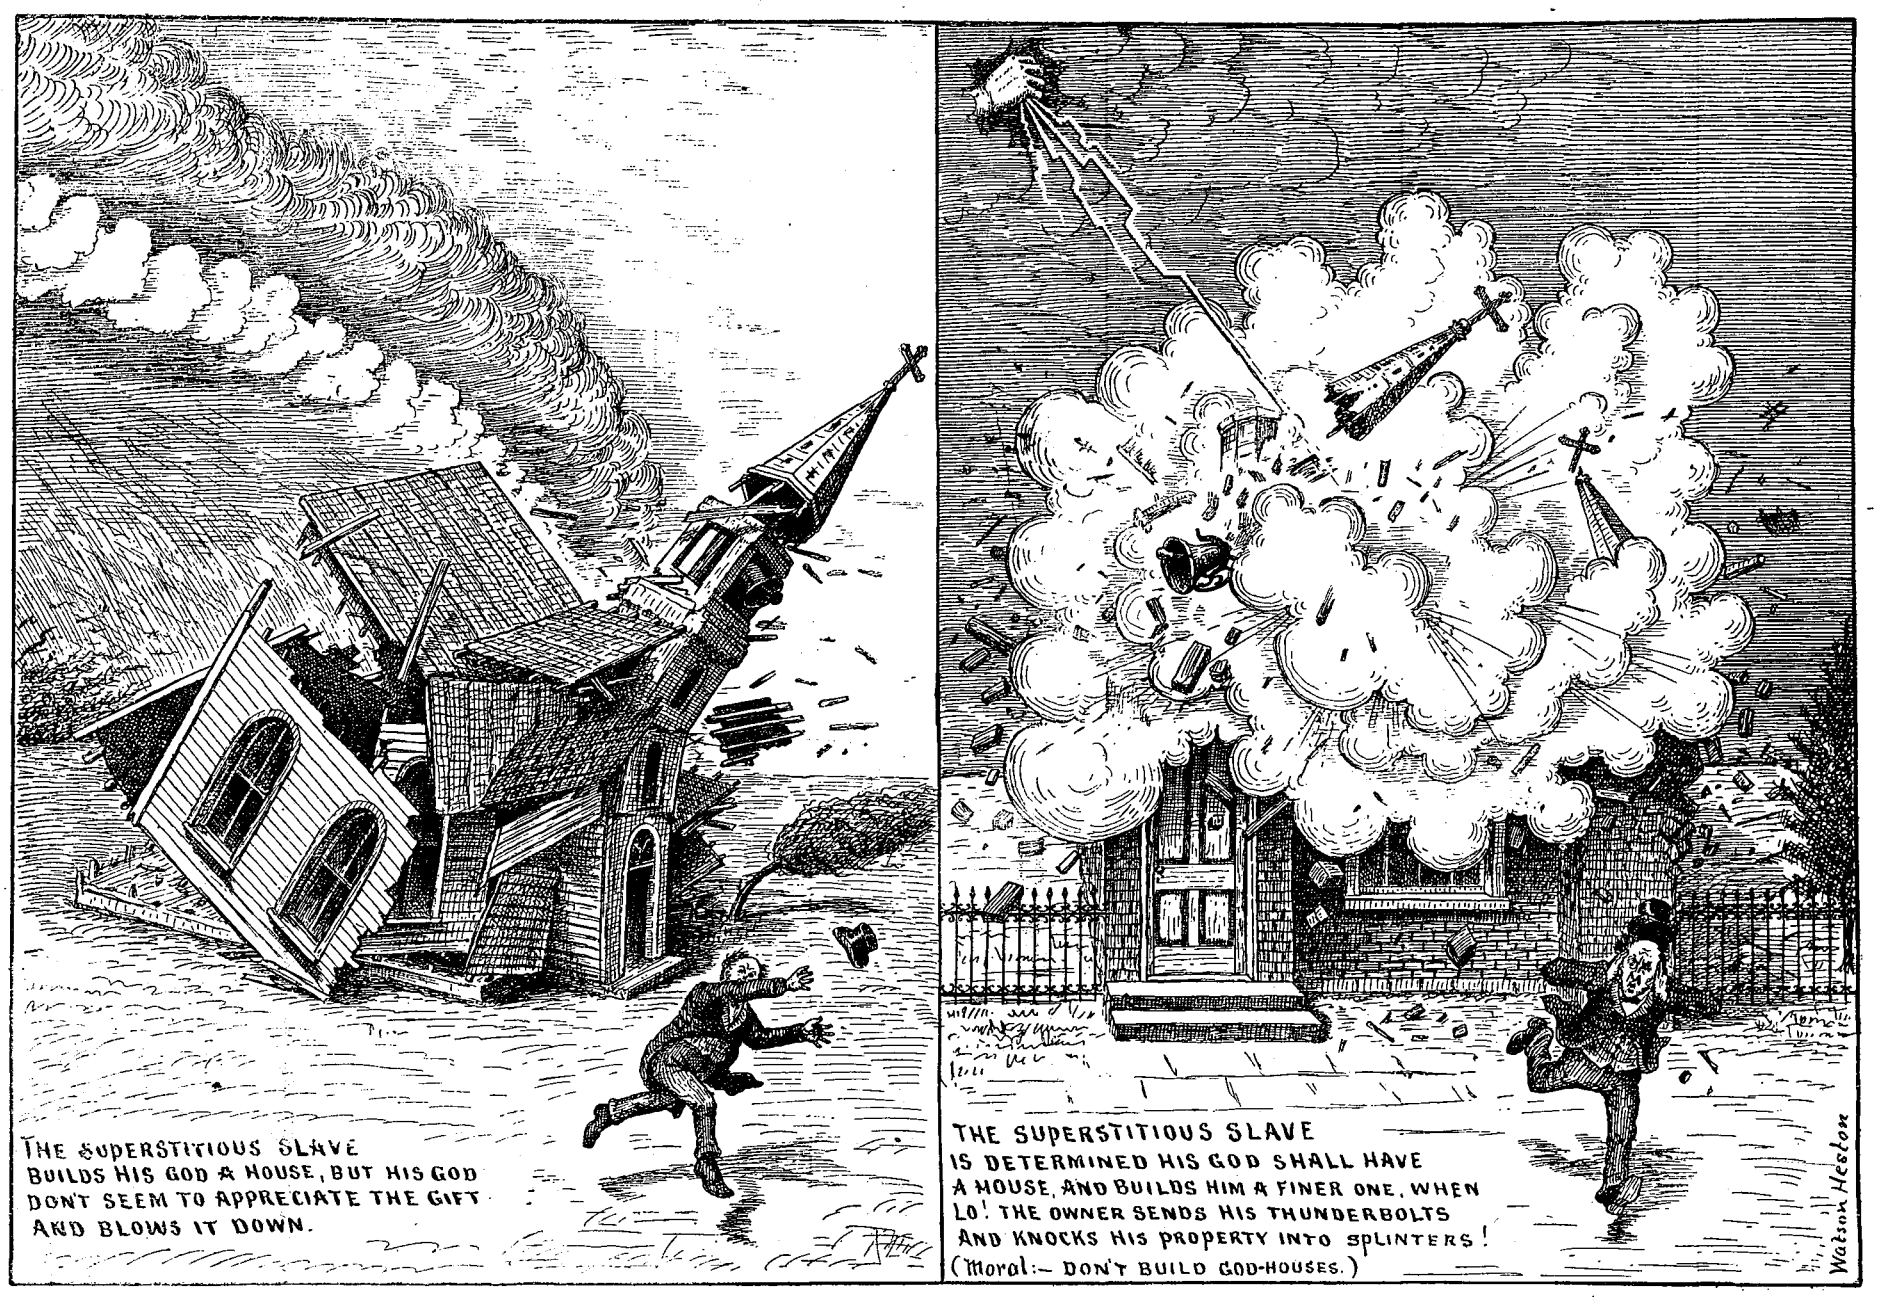
Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY FIVE CENTS



For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 23. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, June 8, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

CHRISTIAN FOLLY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE women of Boston hav named a committee of fifty to carry out the plans for taking the city schools out of politics and sectarian interference, and managing them for the public interest alone.

ELDER ELLIOTT F. SHEPARD has at last received a foreign mission. He has been appointed by the Presbyterian general assembly a delegate to the international Sunday-school convention to be held in Paris next September.

QUEEN VICTORIA, Julia Ward Howe, and Walt Whitman hav celebrated their seventieth birthdays within the last few weeks. Victoria is in the best health of the three; but, then, she has not had to work so hard as Julia and Walter.

A PETITION is now being circulated and signed asking for the revocation of the appointment of Thomas R. Fretz as postmaster of Fleetwood, Pa. It is understood that Postmaster-general Wanamaker remains firm and refuses to consent to a revocation. Young Fretz is preparing for the Presbyterian ministry, and is an activ church and Sunday-school worker.

IT is proper to report that Col. Elliott F. Shepard, president of the American Sabbath Union, went out last Sunday afternoon in a horse-car of the Harlem line, and paid his fare to the conductor, just as if he had not regarded the day as sacred. In our judgment, says the Sun, the transaction was perfectly innocent and proper; but how can Colonel Shepard reconcile this practice of traveling on Sunday on a wicked Sabbath-breaking line, and encouraging the sin by the payment of fare? Is not this just as bad in principle as publishing a Sunday newspaper and advertising in one? Ought not Colonel Shepard to go on foot when he is obliged to go out on Sunday? Is it not sinful and wrong for him to contribute in any way toward the violation of the day of rest?

THE Baroness Gripenberg has started a woman's rights paper in Finnish called Home and Society. Besides the woman question it treats of temperance and the higher education. The men are aghast, but the baroness says it is American and progressiv for women to edit newspapers, and having the means to publish it, she sees no reason why she should not make the women of her country acquainted with her twentieth century ideas.

AT a recent meeting in Boston Mrs. M. A. Ehlers, superintendent of the Baptist Southern Missions, made this statement: "The masses of the colored people of the South to-day are morally wretched. A large proportion of the pastors of our Baptist churches in the South are immoral men. Many of them are drunk the whole year through; many of them are of abandoned character, and not worthy to be intrusted with the teaching of anyone."

A MINISTER of the gospel who is daily seen on Fifth avenue taking an airing and enjoying the promenade is Dr. John Hall, who has made a million out of the pulpit, and who is in every sense the fashionable clergyman of the day. Dr. Hall is the leading pulpit orator of New York, with an income ranging anywhere from $75,000 to $100,000; $20,000 is paid him as pastor of the Fifth avenue Presbyterian church; $10,000 more is paid him by Mr. Bonner, or rather his sons, for a weekly contribution to their story paper. His wealthy congregation givs him $10,000 a year more in gifts, and the wealthy young men and the wealthy papas of the upper ten in New York pay him magnificently for his services in marrying their sons and daughters. He has managed by investment to accumulate $1,000,000.

ONE of the busts which attracts most attention from visitors to the Metropolitan Museum is that of Darwin, executed in terra cotta, and wonderfully good as a likeness. It stands on the park side of the main hall. A similar bust of Herbert Spencer, quite as faithful in its portraiture, is in the possession of Miss E. A. Youmans, Mount Vernon, N. Y. It was given by Mr. Spencer to her brother, the late Prof. E. L. Youmans, the first expounder of evolution in America.

COURT journals aver that President Harrison will visit this summer the old stone house in which his mother was born, near Chambersburg, Pa., and afterward may drop in on the homestead in Suffolk county, Long Island, in which his grandmother was born and grew up to womanhood, ending his cruise at the birthplace of his great-grandmother in Virginia. Meanwhile, Vice-president Morton is to make a pilgrimage to the old country store in Vermont in which he was trained up to water the molasses and sand the sugar, and to the Boston shop in which he learned to temper his fineness with piety and to mingle usury with prayer-meetings. Afterward, Brother Wanamaker may expect to be called in to pronounce the benediction. This is a sweetly sentimental administration, comments the Mercury, and the saints and sinners are so similar and harmonious that it puzzles the ordinary man to tell which is which.

AN Illinois preacher, while officiating in his pulpit on Sunday, was struck down by a bolt of lightning and knocked senseless. After half an hour he recovered, but will be blind for life. In Wisconsin the lightning played havoc with a congregation, killing two and stunning others, but sparing the preacher. If these afflicted gatherings had been Sunday excursions or theater parties, says the Mercury, they would hav formed admirable texts for sermons against going to fish on Sunday and attending the theater. But what sort of conclusions could be drawn from the above incidents as a text? Logically they would demonstrate the danger of attending church and the peril of being a preacher.

HON. CHARLES MITCHELL, of Georgia, avers that for ten days he was in hell; not the earthly purgatory prepared for the public servant by place-hunters and corporations with little axes to grind, but the literal lake of fire where the boodle alderman and the man who stops his paper without paying up arrears wiggle evermore. Mr. Mitchell's description of the kingdom of Pluto is very vivid. He says that he saw a countless multitude wading with redhot legs in a shifting sea of fire, and hammering each other with mighty blazing brands. Whenever a man begins to see such sights, says the Galveston News, it is time for him to take the stump for Prohibition, and call upon the entire nation to put its faith in pink lemonade in order that he may be saved.

Communications.

Principles of American Liberty.—Concluded.

The work of the American Secular Union is based upon the following

NINE DEMANDS.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.

2 We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3 We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4 We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5 We demand that the appointment by the president of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6 We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitution of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

These demands are broad, liberal, just. They recognize the rights of everyone. They are in perfect harmony with the spirit of our American institutions and the strict letter of our Constitution, which recognizes religion as an individual affair and as no concern of the state. It was never the intention of the American people to make the church a state institution. It is managed and controled by individual corporations. Why then exempt $1,000,000,000 worth of church property from just taxation? Church edifices are protected by the state. If church buildings take fire, the fire companies are on hand to save the buildings; if they chance to be destroyed by a mob, the state is responsible for the damage; why then should they not contribute their just proportion to the expenses of the state? When this vast amount of property is exempt from taxation it makes the burden proportionately heavier upon those who do pay taxes. Then people are compelled by taxation to contribute to the support of religious and sectarian institutions. The donations to churches in exemptions from taxation is in round numbers $10,000,000 annually. If the population of the United States is sixty millions, then for every man, woman, and child there is paid from public money sixteen and two-thirds cents annually for the support of ecclesiastical establishments.

We may search our Constitution in vain for some article providing for the hire of ministers of the Christian religion by the government. Yet, if such an admission was wisely made, many ministers are so hired to offer worthless prayers for the prosperity of the country and success of our institutions, when everyone knows that our prosperity depends upon the industry of the people. Money is thus appropriated from the national treasury to pay chaplains in the Congress, army, and navy of the United States. We, as Secularists and lovers of our country, will not object to the expenditure of money that will add to the material prosperity of our country, or that will contribute to the success of our institutions. But can anyone say that our laws are more just, or that their effects upon the people are any better, because prayers are offered in our legislativ halls? The success of the armies of the North in our late unpleasantness has never been attributed to the prayers Congress paid for with the people's money. The success of the North has generally been attributed to the fact that we had a greater number of men and more of the munitions of war. But if the prayers we hav had to pay for were of any avail, then the success of the North should be attributed to our having a greater number of soldiers, more of the sinews of war, and because our chaplains prayed with more unction than did the chaplains of the South. Cromwell advised his men to put their trust in God, but added the necessary precaution to keep their powder dry.

In the army there are thirty-four of these useless incumbrances, drawing from the taxpayers of this country a salary, varying from $125 to $175 per month. Upon retiring they are pensioned at a rate of $112.50 to $157 50 per month. In 1884 thirteen of these worthless appendages were getting this pay. In the navy affairs are the same. The sum of what Congress unconstitutionally pays out to establish the Christian religion is about as follows:

Chaplains in Congress	$1,800
Chaplains in army	84,600
Chaplains in navy	60,000
Total	$146,400

During the late war the North had a million men in the field. A chaplain went with each regiment, which consisted of nearly a thousand men. The North, therefore, in round numbers had a thousand chaplains at $1,500 a year who prayed God that the North might prevail. One thousand times $1,500 is $1,500,000 per year spent during the war. In four years $6,000,000 was added to our national debt to pay a lot of men whose services were worthless. The expenditure for the purpose of the navy could not hav been less than $2,000,000. The people hav been paying interest on that $8,000,000 ever since. Since the war closed some $3,000,000 more hav been squandered on these religious drones. In the last quarter of a century Congress has devoted not less than $11,000,000 to the establishment of the Christian religion, and is continuing at the rate of nearly $150,000 annually.—Truth Seeker Annual, 1886.

Add to this the amounts paid to chaplains for their good-for-nothing services in the several state legislatures, and in asylums and penal institutions, and we can then begin to realize what the people are contributing to the support of a state religion. But even then we should hav but a small amount of what is actually given to the support of these ecclesiastical leeches. I hav no means of ascertaining how much is filched from the pockets of the taxpayers for the support of sectarian institutions, under the guise of charities, or educational establishments. But taking New York, where more than $24,000,000 has been given in ten years to the various churches, as a basis for calculation, the people of the United States must contribute, from public funds, not less than $25,000,000 annually to the support of a state religion. Cook county of Illinois was contributing $20,000 yearly to the Chicago Industrial School for Girls, an institution with an innocent name but really a Catholic and sectarian school, better known as the "House of the Good Shepherd." But to the credit of E. A. Stevens, in behalf of the American Secular Union, the law was applied to this case, and this drain upon the treasury of Cook county was stopped.

We therefore, on the ground of equity, demand that all religious services now sustained by the national and state governments shall be abolished, and that appropriations from the public treasuries for the support of sectarian institutions shall be discontinued.

We also demand that the president of the United States and governors of the several states shall not go beyond their constitutional authority and recognize a state religion by calling upon the people to observe one day of the year as a general thanksgiving. If religious people wish, through their churches, to appoint days of thanksgiving, fasting, or festival, it is their own affair; but when the executiv of a secular government assumes this power, he is doing that which is not required of him, and his action is an insult to every intelligent citizen.

We further demand that the Bible, whether used ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book for religious worship, shall not be used in the public schools. It seems that the justice of this demand is evident, the Bible being a book devoted exclusivly to religious purposes, and its use in the schoolroom is for the purpose of religious and therefore sectarian ends. Then Bible-reading is that far supporting religious exercises by public money.

Our public schools are supported by taxes drawn from all classes of people—from the Catholics who object to the Protestant Bible; from Protestants who object to the Catholic catechism; from Jews who reject the New Testament and Christian religion; from Infidels who believe all religions to be worthless superstitions. It is not the business of the state to teach religion—to prepare people for the kingdom of heaven—but to fit them for good and useful citizens of this republic. The Bible being the central point from which all these various beliefs diverge, it is certainly best to keep such a "bone of contention" out of the public schools. Then, too, if the Bible is to be used as a textbook, teachers would be required to teach it as they would history or literature, comments and explanations would be necessary; and then the logical consequences would be a complete breaking down of our public school system, for whenever any religious denomination was numerically strong enough sectarian schools would flourish—institutions where a child's brain is molded after a pattern made hundreds of years ago, or else squeezed entirely out of his head. The adherents of one creed would not tolerate the exegesis of a teacher of a different creed. Then, too, teachers would be required to pass an examination in theology before they would be considered capable of taking charge of a school; and the final standard would be, not the teacher's educational ability, or his moral fitness, but the soundness of his orthodoxy. If churches want to foster schools for the purpose of perpetuating their ignorance, let them do so, for ignorance is the bulwark of superstition; but our free, non-sectarian schools are the defenses of our American institutions, and intelligent men and women, coming therefrom, form the standing army of our great republic.

We demand that the oath in courts of justice, and in every department of the state, shall be abolished, and simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, be established in its stead. "An oath is an invocation of the protection and blessing of God, or his indignation and curse, upon the person swearing, according as his assertion is true or false, or as his promis shall be observed or violated." The form "so help you God" expresses the idea that underlies an oath. It is therefore a religious custom, and has no place in a secular government.

The general impression is that the oath necessarily makes men more honest and truthful; but the oath does not in any sense enhance one's obligation to tell the truth or fulfill a promis. This duty is entire and perfect on the ground of intrinsic fitness. The pains and penalties of perjury would meet the case just the same when witnesses made false statements or an officer was unfaithful to his trust. The tendency of the oath is simply to make a lie respectable, and too often places the testimony of the unscrupulous on an equality with that of the honest. Its effect is pernicious. Christ no doubt understood the evil influences of an oath and therefore forbade swearing.

Peabody says in his "Moral Philosophy:" "But the tendency of oaths is to establish in the minds of men two classes of assertions and promises, one more sacred than the other. He who is required under the solemn sanction of an oath merely to tell the truth, or to make a promis in good faith, arrives naturally at the conclusion that he is bound to less rigid accuracy or fidelity in ordinary statements or promises. The law of the land . . . bears an important part in the ethical education of the young, and by means of the legal distinction created between assertions or promises under oath and those made without that sanction children and youth are trained to regard simple truth-telling and promis-keeping of secondary obligation." Then so far as oaths' insuring truth and fidelity is concerned, they tend to undermine the reverence for truth which is the surest safeguard of individual veracity. It is a notorious fact that corrupt or incompetent tribunals or unprincipled advocates find no difficulty in buying any amount of testimony, and even when justice is administered as fairly as possible witnesses often flatly contradict each other. The only conclusion is that one of them has been guilty of perjury. What then is the object of retaining the custom of administering oaths? It is merely a recognition of religion, and in some states recognizing the superior sanctity of the Bible. The oath as generally administered with a "so help you God" has in all Christian countries, and does yet in some of our states, debar the Atheist from giving testimony in a court of justice. In Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee the unbeliever is not permitted to testify. Through this legalized religious outrage the family of an Atheist might be murdered before his eyes and if there were no other witnesses than himself, he could obtain no redress unless he would turn traitor to his convictions. "The Christian dogma of the necessity of belief is thus practically exemplified in the union of church and state," and this will be universal if the Reform Association succeeds in its mission. "Christian morality" assumes that there is one day of the week that should be devoted exclusivly to the worship of God, and that the state has a right to and should enforce the religious observance of this day. Here again the church establishes a false standard of right and wrong: that an act done on Sunday is wrong, though if performed on any other day of the week it would be meritorious. It is not the day when an act is done that makes it either right or wrong, but it is the intrinsic fitness of the act. Under this mistaken idea of "Christian morality" and "Sabbath observance" there hav been furnished too many long-faced, hypocritical Sunday pietists who believe it wicked to enjoy oneself on the "Lord's day," but who hav no compunctions about giving light weight or short measure, or otherwise cheating their fellow-men, on Monday. What we may expect if the "reformers" succeed in their theocratic schemes is a reënacting of the barbarous code of Massachusetts and Connecticut, where a man could be fined for kissing his wife on Sunday, and everyone was compelled to attend church, and the death penalty, according to the Mosaic law, could be inflicted for violation of Sunday laws. That the Protestant church looks upon all work or recreation on Sunday as criminal is evident from pulpit utterances, where the statement is often made that the person who "desecrates the Sabbath" is worse than a thief and even as bad as a murderer.

But Secularism, based upon natural morality and equal rights, says there is no one day of the week better than another, no day too good to be devoted to the service of man. We say that those who wish to devote Sunday or any other day of the week to religious exercises, who wish to spend that time listening to the reading of impossible tales and nonsensical discourses, hav the right, and should be protected in that right. But we also insist that if we wish to make our day of rest a holiday, engage in such pursuits, seek such recreations and pleasures as shall be consistent with the rights of others—that if we wish to go on pleasure excursions to the hills and groves where we can commune with Mother Nature in all her variations, listen to the babbling brooks, the music of the leaves, the sweet caroling of woodland songsters, or go to the theater, where human nature is portrayed in all its manifoldness, where truth and right are represented as triumphing over might and wrong, or to go to the opera and listen to the soul-thrilling symphonies of a Wagner or Beethoven, we hav the right and should be protected in that right.

When any organization secures legislation for their own benefit, for the sake of propagating their particular doctrins, it is unjust; but when it comes to religious denominations forcing people, through class legislation, to abstain from this or that amusement or occupation on a certain day of the week, it is an insult which no civilized people should hesitate to resent.

The desperate struggle of the church to enforce the Sunday laws is an admission on their part that they can neither entertain nor instruct. The Sunday laws are for no other purpose than to draw the people to the churches by forbidding their going elsewhere—to giv the preachers a good living by working one day of the week, while the great mass of mankind manages to eke out a miserable existence by drudging through the other six.

Are we going to submit with supine indifference to the church and allow a horde of ecclesiastics to establish a theocratic form of government, or are we going to maintain our rights and demand that religious legislation shall cease, and that all laws shall conform to the laws of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty, and that the administration of the same shall conform to the principles of American liberty?

If our hosts were properly organized, there is no reason why we should not succeed in secularizing our government, for we certainly hav the brightest intellects of the age with us, and, what is yet better, our principles are founded on equality and justice. But as a class Liberals are content with theoretical advantages, and consequently the orthodox reap all practical benefits. There are too many professed Liberals who giv no support to Liberal propaganda. They buy no books, read no papers, contribute to no lectures; their whole energy is bent to the acquisition of wealth, disregarding those noble principles which, if carried into effect, would contribute to the welfare and happiness of themselvs and their fellowmen.

There are others who will contribute to the support of the church and a system they know to be false, and who in the privacy of their closets will whisper in your ear that they too are Freethinkers, but as Christianity is popular it is policy to countenance it—it would ruin their business to oppose it. Such as these are found among our business men, but most particularly among politicians who are seeking notoriety through some petty office. They must pander to popular prejudice; sordidly selfish, they are willing to sacrifice principle for profit, preferring the ephemeral praise of their "beloved constituency" to the lasting plaudits of a grateful posterity. Such men as these, wherever found, are cumberers of the ground; they are stumbling-blocks in the path of progress; they are to be feared, for they are treacherous friends and dangerous foes. For the sake of popularity they are willing outwardly to conform to the ceremonies of any religion. For the sake of wealth or power they would uphold the cross or kneel before the crescent, they would sacrifice to Brahma, or worship in a temple to the sun.

I do not wish to be understood that I would like to see Liberals raise a clamor on every street corner, or thrust their religious opinions in the face of every passer-by; I would not hav any Liberal make a nuisance of himself. But it is necessary that we be stanch and true to principle; never afraid to stand for the truth. We should ever be ready and willing to help along a cause we believe is right; ever ready to lend a hand, helping our fellow-men to a higher plane of right living, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselvs and our posterity.

Let us carry out to a practical realization that liberty and independence to secure which this government was organized, which will be the grandest monument, the most glowing tribute, to the Author-Hero, Thomas Paine, whose dreams of liberty gave birth to our Declaration of Independence, and glorious Constitution, and who first uttered these words: "The United States of America." Let us as Liberals and exponents of liberty and justice put forth as much effort as do the enemies of liberty, and God will never get into the Constitution.

Let us organize wherever possible, for organized effort may accomplish great work, while individual effort only brings contempt and persecution. Let us giv our moral and financial support to the Secular Union. We must also bear in mind that liberty can only be secured by a struggle and maintained at the price of eternal vigilance. Let us press this intellectual contest on bravely, firmly, courteously. To falter now would be to giv up the fruits of a long and weary struggle; the scenes of that thousand years of midnight darkness would be acted once again, and the battles for freedom would hav to be fought once more. GEO. H. DAWES.

Pittsville, Wis.

The Great Problem of Life.

It is only by profound meditation upon the philosophy of human nature, that the magnitude and complexity of "the great problem of life" is fully disclosed and appreciated. It necessarily involves every abstruse principle known to the sciences, and still there is a "missing link," essential elements found wanting, by which to demonstrate the correctness of any given theory or conclusion. It cannot, however, prove otherwise than an interesting theme for review, by individuals as well as philosophers and statesmen, with the view of correcting the prevailing errors of our times and estimating the future possibilities of the human race.

There is but one true solution to this eminently important question, and the views herein submitted are designed to be logical deductions based on tangible and material facts.

It is not apparent in the world's history, that any government was ever founded prior to the last century with the view of legislating directly in the interest of the people and promoting the common cause of humanity.

Every important principle tending to the solution of "the great problem" was at this period wisely incorporated in the organic act of the American Union. This "experiment," this peculiar system of government, justly conferred equal rights and privileges, and it opened wide the door to laudable ambition, to honor, wealth, distinction, and happiness.

It dispenses equal justice, encourages virtue, disseminates knowledge, and lavishly contributes to the speedy realization of the ideal world and the attainment of the greatest possible measure of happiness of which human nature is susceptible. The negativ influence which militates most forcibly against this desirable acquisition is found in the passiv submission of the large majority of mankind to the dictation of royalty and asserted claims of divine right to rule. When these assumed rights shall hav been ignored, the most complicated features of "the problem" will hav been mastered, and a timely and happy result can only be dependent on uniform and practical methods. There is evidently a natural tendency to grow wiser, more virtuous, and more happy, and as available and efficient means are known to be among the possibilities of nature, the fact invites speculation as to possible human attainments and the probable remoteness of its realization. The highest reward due a well-conducted life is the full enjoyment of the physical and moral senses. These senses, as compared in individuals, are disproportionately developed, as is made manifest by the great diversity of natural endowments and the varied preferences in the gratification of human desires.

Pleasure is the anticipated reward of every rational act, and it is the ruling passion which directs every instinct of animal nature.

Perfect happiness implies perfect wisdom, and its achievement lies not within the bounds of mortality, but it cannot reasonably be affirmed that mankind hav already reached the highest possible standard of knowledge and moral excellence.

Knowledge, though not a virtue, is indispensable to its promotion and success. Figurativly, it givs dignity and strength to its simplicity; it is a teacher of rewards and penalties; it is the advance guard of substantial pleasure, and it is an effectiv pioneer on the borders of the world's civilization.

The theory of life and the general principles involved are already indicated. The ideal world as thus conceived, though dependent on abstract questions, is withdrawn from the mythical realms of revealed theology and founded on a substantial reality. That mankind hav the capacity for a much greater comprehension of material things is unquestioned; but the degree of wisdom, happiness, and perfection attainable is inconceivable, an unknown quantity. To pursue this thought, the fact becomes evident that there is no assurance of continued opportunities. The summit of human possibilities may to-day hav been reached, as what great changes may come over life's dreams! What sudden catastrophe may be precipitated to check or suspend human progress and transfer it to its primitiv condition! Hence a rational conception of future possibilities is restricted to the evidence of probabilities. The question, therefore, being one of conditions, the conclusion must also take a conditional form, and is embodied in the following summary: When the limits of universal knowledge and moral excellence shall hav been reached, the mission of life will then hav been served, the cup of human happiness will be full and the great problem of life will hav been solved. Meditations prompt extended remarks on human nature as viewed in its original simplicity. External surroundings indicate but two sides to life—the dark and the bright side, or their synonyms, good and evil, vice and virtue. There cannot reasonably be a doubt as to a unanimity of choice, as no person would knowingly and intentionally select vice for misery's sake, nor evil for the calamity it might inflict. This fact alone is sufficient to inspire the thought that it is to ignorance that we may consistently attribute half of the ills which befall mankind. The most serious impediment to moral progress arises from natural depravity. Although a proper conception of inherent rights and legal obligations apparently exists, yet a temporary relaxation of moral restraint reanimates the debasing instincts of their nature and it at once asserts the supremacy. This mental phenomenon is made more comprehensiv by separating mind and instinct and resolving them into their constituent elements. Mankind is a compound of the intellectual and animal nature. These qualities unite in varied and unequal proportions, giving the great diversity of character and genius which distinguishes individuals. As a result, education can not literally change these qualities, nor the relations which exist between mind and the instinctiv promptings of a brutal nature. The cultivation of the faculties simply develops the full capacity to reason, but the inordinate desires are only temporarily diverted from their natural channel. These peculiarities often tend to unlawful acts of violence, and Justice, in the amplitude of her mercy, grants pardons for the indulgence of a depraved nature, disguised in the attire of "emotional insanity."

Nature is extremely partial in her distribution of mental endowments, and as a result the limits of human responsibilities are not easily defined. Man is a free moral agent, or in other words is master of his own fortunes within the area of circumscribed limits, but his power to design and to execute is subordinated to a higher law, hence personal acts are unimportant so far as they may tend to defeat or delay the laws controling inevitable results. Man—in a figurativ sense—is the motor power which turns the great thread-wheel of human events. The wise and the proudest, inspired by the nobler impulses of their nature, joyfully keep step in the grand procession on its march to the summit of its hopes and the destinies of the unknown future. There is much in the nature of surrounding circumstances to justify the faith in a spiritual life. It is reasoned that there must be another plane of existence to giv significance to this one. The barbarous and the civilized of every age hav indulged the faith, and continue to cherish the hope. Extravagant enthusiasm, excessiv religious ardor, has given such degree of scope to spiritual enterprise as to transcend the bounds of physical law, invade the sacred precincts of the mighty invisible, and unlock the secrets of immortality, while reason stands abashed at the wonders of the revelation, the excessiv assurance and the boldness of the assumption.

Consistency and truth are claimed to be the fundamental principles of theology. This asserted fact could be more easily recognized were the "faith" so modified as to place it in harmony with reason, God's highest and best gift to man.

Governmental policy is wisely tolerant and passiv as to any expression of opinion on the subject, while public sentiment instinctivly clings to the traditions of its fathers, and with characteristic pertinacity resists any attempt at innovation.

The powerful influence which education exerts on the youthful mind, is in this regard most forcibly illustrated. Even though they cease to be activ communicants, they ever remain partisan adherents and maintain in some degree a respect for the principles inculcated. While tracing effect to cause, it is pertinent to arraign and condemn a contemptible class of pharisaical and obsequious parasites, who toady to popular prejudice, while absolutely indifferent to the success of any secular interest. They never originate an idea, nor giv any support unless tested by popular approval. They luxuriate in their own shrewdness and self-importance, and though they regard neither the principles of honor nor the terrors of sheol, they are ever as ready with the fagots and torch, as with their sarcasm and wit, to burn out the heresies of the nineteenth century. This class controls the public press; it occupies the highest positions of honor and trust; it sits in judgment on the spiritual qualifications of individuals to affirm a truth, or hold a public office, and the man who possesses the moral courage to publicly question the agreement or harmony of the "faith," be he never so erudite a scholar, sagacious a statesman, or profound a philosopher, is immediately voted as a dangerous rival and is publicly ostracized, covered with reproach, and literally banished from the councils of the nation. SILAS A. HANE.

Butte City, Mont., May 4, 1889.

Freethinkers to the Front in Kansas.

The first member of Congress elected in the second century of the republic under the Constitution is a Freethinker. Gen. Harrison Kelley, just elected in the fourth Kansas district, is, or was when I met him last, a subscriber and reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER. His only opponent was the Union Labor candidate, John P. Heaston, the leading Freethinker of Morris county. The Democrats had no ticket in the field. Their candidate in this district last fall was Hon. David Overmeyer, of Topeka, an old contributor of the Ironclad Age, and who is now defending the Harmons and Walker against the infamous prosecution instituted by the bigots of Valley Falls.

J. E. REMSBURG.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 324 W. Madison st., Chicago.

A Judicial Dodge.

The appellate court has just rendered a decision in reference to the St. Mary's Training School, the case brought by the American Secular Union, which has been so well ventilated in THE TRUTH SEEKER that it is scarcely necessary for me to briefly state that it is to restrain the county board from contracting for the care of dependent children with this sectarian institution. This court dismisses the case on the ground that, involving a constitutional question, the appeal should be made to the supreme court. This shows that they do not dare to decide it on its merits, and merely desire to shift the responsibility upon the supreme court. As already outlined, you will remember that I did not hope for a favorable decision of the appellate court. Still, this may be considered in one sense a favorable decision. Shall we take it up?

ORGANIZED ASSASSINS.

In the annals of criminal conspiracy no more diabolical crime has ever been perpetrated than the cruel, cold blooded murder of Dr. P. H. Cronin of this city by his brother "patriots." This revolting butchery is enough to create consternation in the entire community, especially when it is known that from the ranks of these organized assassins—the Clan-na-Gaels—our Chicago police force is largely recruited. For years it has been "an open secret" that the surest pull for a candidate on the police force was to become a member of these Irish revolutionary bandits. From pretty good authority I learn that out of the nineteen hundred policemen on the force, not more than two hundred and fifty are not Catholics, and the major portion of those are Irish. The "cause of Ireland" has controled our municipal politics as it has too largely shaped our national destinies. These boasted "loyal Irish Catholics" who tried to make so much capital out of the fact that none of their race had been hanged for Anarchy, when thoroughly unmasked rise before us a set of murderous miscreants ready to ply the dagger or pull the deadly trigger upon an unarmed and unsuspecting victim, proving that society has much more to fear from that quarter than from the vaporings of a handful of hair-brained, misguided enthusiasts.

Before this infamous crime was perpetrated, arrangements were made, it is now apparent, to checkmate investigation and shield the assassins. The mayor of the city of Chicago, we are informed, is "troubled;" for hours and days at a time he has held secret conferences on this matter with his chief of police, and the "trouble" which he encounters is the grave suspicion that these "limbs of the law," these salaried servants and guardians of the peace, are doing more to conceal this crime than to lay bare its horrible revelations. For once in the history of Chicago it has been necessary to select policemen who do not owe more allegiance to the pope of Rome, or the pope of Ireland, to carry out the orders of the department.

As surely as "murder will out," and as the revelations are unfolded one by one, it just as surely proves the ramifications of this murderous influence and the complicity of rascals in high places.

Heretofore we hav been charitable enough to assume that these dupes who preferred to perpetuate the "cause of Ireland" on American soil, were merely being lured by demagogs; now we know that they are controled by scoundrels and atrocious villains. To such dastardly assassins our political leaders hav bent in most abject debasement; to placate this Church of the Holy Murderers hundreds of thousands of dollars are annually illegally granted, and an important diplomatic mission is disgraced by a craven administration in the appointment of a newly imported Irish assassin.

This statement, by one of Dr. Cronin's confrères, suggests a delightful state of peace and security enjoyed by American citizens in this nineteenth century, and the elevating tendency of the patriots who desire to liberate Ireland from British bondage, who hav made a hollow mockery and an empty phrase of the assertion that this is the "land of the free and the home of the brave:"

Dr. Cronin was murdered at the instance of at least a portion of the Clan-na-Gael Society. He was tried, convicted, and condemned to death without his knowledge, and this revolutionary order with its high binding oaths carried the sentence out to the letter. Every leader in the plot was a Clan-na-Gael man. The job was too desperate to let out to men outside of the order. The men chosen to carry out the death sentence were chosen by secret ballot. Each had a distinct and specified task to perform.

The plot was planned and executed with a cruelty born of bigotry and hatred. From the instant that Dr. Cronin was listed for death nothing but the sudden extinction of his enemies could hav spared his life. There was no escape for him. He knew that his life was to be taken in a cowardly manner. Silent friends within the circle warned him of his peril, and his own keen observation convinced him that death was but a little way off. His conversation and actions during the last days of his life showed that he had prepared himself for the worst. Every time he left his home or his office on a mission he seemed to feel that it was more than an even thing that he would not return alive. He had seen his enemies skulking in his shadows, and rumors of his impending death had reached his ears. Such a life as Dr. Cronin led the past three years would hav killed an ordinary man before the assassin could hav found his chance to strike.

Dr. Cronin expected to be assassinated in the street at night. I remember several instances when he asked friends to accompany him home. He did not seek this precaution so much for himself as he did for humanity, for he reasoned that if his life should be taken for the secrets he held the identity of the murderers might possibly be established. The plot was devilishly ingenious. Dr. Cronin was taken unawares. He thought he was going to minister to an employee of his friend Sullivan. The sick man was a myth, the man who lashed the white horse down Ashland avenue was one of the men chosen by ballot to perform such work as might be assigned to him, and when the doctor entered the bogusly lighted slaughterhouse the blackest fiends of the Clan-na-Gael fell upon him and took his life. The doctor had no chance to cry out more than once. The plot thus far had been too well executed.

Here is a lovely state of things. Here is a government erected within and superior to our government, for the perpetration, if necessary, of crime. What is that but treason? The above statement is from the columns of the Chicago Herald, and the following extract is from their editorial of to-day, May 30th:

The testimonies multiply that dozens of villains were directly implicated in killing the victim and bearing false witness immediately after his abduction. The police force itself, though it now bends before the popular command, is not the less in a disgraced and humiliated posture through the unexplained favor in which one of the suspects was held for a week after his probable guilt had been reported to his superior.

Upon this situation of colossal crime, inculpating all manner of once reputable citizens, and re-stigmatizing a large company of disreputable persons, the grand jury is reported to hav confessed. . . . The jury has indicted Sullivan, the ice-man, whose guilt was abstractly established by the people a week before his detention. The jury has indicted Coughlin, the detectiv, who was detailed to look into the admirable charges of the people and the press that he himself was one of the murderers.

Dozens of the murderers walk the streets of Chicago and other cities, still unhampered by the network of popular retribution that closes gradually about them. The reported action of the grand jury is satisfactory only as it faintly hints of the indictment of a company of greater wretches. That the public press or the body of the people will rest with an inadequate statutory reprisal, or that any public officer can safely play with this fire which is now lighted in the state, are ideas not to be entertained in any logical mind.

Without the voice of the press the people of Chicago would never hav known that a great conspiracy existed for the "removal" of objectionable persons, "and the murderers on the police force," as the Herald remarks, "would hav held their places in office, and equity would hav been as completely cheated as it is possible to conceive."

The sad irony of coincidence remains in the fact that at 1 P M. to-day the unveiling of the monument to the memory of the police who fell at the so-called "Haymarket riot" occurs, and for which the Irish element monopolized all the glory. But the blood of every victim of that night of terror can readily be traced to a now disgraced police official. The whirligig of time seems to more and more strongly establish my utterances in THE TRUTH SEEKER of that terrible period as almost prophetic.

Will true Americans arouse and sustain the only organization whose principles can possibly defeat this subversion of our system of government—an organization which affirms the original Declaration of Independence and seeks to practically maintain it by its second declaration, the Nine Demands? The success of the American Secular Union means the relegation of these diabolical purposes to the age to which they belong, and to purify our social and political atmosphere from the control of organized assassins.

It takes money to do this. Are you willing to aid—you supposed Freethinkers from whom we hav never yet heard financially? Don't you feel somewhat ashamed of yourselvs? Just to inform you that we are not rolling in wealth, I will state that there has not been enough money received during the month of May to pay office rent and the average incidental expenses, to say nothing of the secretary's salary. There has got to be more of the spirit of sacrifice manifested, or we shall lose the foothold our organization has given us by strong and sturdy battle for freedom. Don't say, "I can't afford." Can you afford to submit to ecclesiastical slavery? If you can, you are adapted to that sort of condition and deserve no better fate.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

Last evening the members of the Chicago Secular Union assembled at the residence of Brother J. M. Stiles to do honor to the birth of Treasurer Jehu Barr. A dance was arranged, and Mrs. Stiles made everyone happy with her benignant smiles, to say nothing of the supper she and Mrs. Augusta D. Holmes, our secretary, had prepared for the guests. Brother Barr had been invited to tea by the secretary, and when the guests arrived was taken next door to the Stiles residence. Notwithstanding the distance and the stormy weather there was a regular crush, for besides the universal popularity of Brother Barr Mrs. Stiles's parties are so enjoyable that, to use a popular expression, everybody is "bound to get there." A pleasant surprise awaited Brother Barr when the guests were called together for supper. Our host, Vice-president Stiles, in his most felicitous yet impressiv manner, presented to his chief guest of the evening a handsome album, containing the portraits of the members, and other appropriate gifts. Brother Barr was visibly affected, and remarked that he did not think he had done for the Union sufficient to deserve it. To that the writer replied in grateful acknowledgment of Brother Barr's untiring devotion to the service of Secularism, which received the hearty indorsement of those present. About 3 A M. a vote of thanks was unanimously tendered Mr. and Mrs. Stiles by their guests for the royal entertainment they had received.

E. A. STEVENS,
Secretary American Secular Union.

With the People.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I should hav written sooner in regard to my recent lecturing trip, but I came home prostrated by my journey. I trust my many kind friends will pardon the delay. Mr. Stevens has already given an account of the annual meeting of the Fayette county Union, election of officers, etc. I believe it is the custom to import a lecturer upon such occasions, and this year, owing to the recommendation of Wm. Redfield, the choice fell upon myself.

At Stanley I was entertained at Mr. Redfield's pleasant country home. Mrs. Redfield as well as her husband is Liberal, and my stay was a delightful one. The farm comprises six hundred acres inclosed by eight miles of wire fence. Here I found all the latest Freethought books—for the owner of this country home is proud of his library—all the magazines and papers, five or six years' files of THE TRUTH SEEKER bound, a large collection of coins belonging to many nations, ancient and modern, and numberless views of noted places in the Old World—Mr. Redfield having made the collection while in Europe. At Maynard, whither Mr. Redfield accompanied me, I gave one lecture. We were entertained by the secretary of the Union, E. D. Godney, and his Liberal wife. Other Liberals of Maynard are E. Frost, S. T. Barnes, and John Pember. There are many more, but I hav forgotten their names.

At Olwein Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, from West Union, were present. I was introduced to the audience by Alexander Risk, whose farm of a thousand acres adjoins Mr. Redfield's. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer accompanied Mr. Risk to his home, and on Sunday afternoon we all went to Aurora, where I lectured in the school-house to a large audience. At the conclusion of the lecture an Advent preacher announced that he would reply to Mrs. Freeman on the next Sunday afternoon. Monday morning Mr. and Mrs. Redfield, Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, and myself, took the train to West Union, where I lectured in the evening. This is Mr. Brewer's home. For several years he had been president of the Union, but this year Daniel Davis, of Fayette, has been elected. There are many pleasant Liberals in West Union—among them C. H. Carpenter, Thomas Beecher, and Charles Woodard and wife, at whose house I was entertained. Mr. Putnam is a favorit here, and his happy laugh is still talked of as something to be remembered. At the conclusion of my lecture I was kindly greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey, who had come from Maynard.

My kind friends had, apparently, not yet tired of me, as, on Tuesday morning, they announced their intention of accompanying me to Postville, where I lectured in the evening. We were met at the depot by J. W. Ward Mr. and Mrs. Redfield and Mr. and Mrs. Brewer were taken to the hotel, while I was given over into the keeping of Mr. Taylor and his pleasant family. Mr. Ward, a well-to-do merchant—prospering in spite of bigotry—is the activ Liberal here. Mr. Taylor is a radical Spiritualist. From this point I had to wend my way alone. I bade good bye to my friends who had accompanied me on my route through the country, and found myself next in Charles City. Here I was met by the kind John Mahara. I gave three lectures. Mr. Mahara was raised a Catholic, but himself and wife, son and daughter, are thoroughly Liberal. Plenty of work is needed in this section, and iconoclastic work, too. Only twenty miles from Charles City, where the Catholics were strong enough to elect school commissioners, parochial schools hav been established, nuns imported as teachers, and the school-houses offered for sale.

At Delevan, Minn., I gave three lectures. S. W. Horton met me at the depot. Mr. Horton is a well-posted Radical, and a favorit in the town, too, as he carries a handsome gold-headed cane won by having received more votes at ten cents each than his less fortunate competitors. The votes ran up to two or three hundred dollars, I believe. James Geddes is a well-to-do farmer, and with him and his intelligent wife I felt very much at home. W. S. Bell lectured here last winter. George Dawes was here, and Mr. Jamieson has done some good work in the past, having held a debate with some unfortunate orthodox clergyman at this place. Experience has made them wary, and of late years they usually manage to keep out of Mr. Jamieson's way. R. E Scott is another stanch Liberal here, and George E. Hassing, who attended my lectures—a convert of Mr. Putnam's on the Pacific coast. He was formerly a Catholic, but hearing Mr. Putnam "preach," he became a most pronounced Radical. Mrs. Pond came in from her home, ten miles distant, to attend the lectures, accompanied by her husband, daughter, grandson, and granddaughters—all readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, well posted and intelligent.

I parted reluctantly with Mr. and Mrs. Geddes, taking the train for Minnesota Lake. At Wells I had to wait several hours to make connections. The landlord of the hotel, learning that I was a Liberal lecturer, told me of a case that had just been tried in that town. The parents of a young girl insisted that she should be confirmed, accepting the Catholic faith. She refused. They locked her up. A family with whom she had been living demanded her release. A suit was instituted. It was brought into court, and when asked why she refused to be confirmed, she replied that she had seen enough of Catholicism. Her parents were poor and ignorant, she said, and for some neglect or disobedience she had seen the priest take out a whip and lash them over the head. The decision was that the parents had no right to coerce her; that she should be left free to choose her religion. Here I was met by E. S. Glick, an intelligent young man, who had been instrumental in having me come to Minnesota Lake. The ride from Wells to the latter place is only about nine miles. What was my astonishment upon clambering down from the car to find Mr. and Mrs. Geddes, of Delevan, complacently awaiting me in their carriage! They had driven across the country with their dashing team, and had arrived first. We put up at the same hotel and had a good time. I may as well state, though, that it would hav been difficult to put up at any other hotel, as I think it was the only one in town. I spoke in the school-house. The audience was small, but attentiv. I remarked to Mrs. Geddes that I was glad she came, for, as there was but one other woman present, if she hadn't been there I couldn't hav commenced, "Ladies and gentlemen." Mr. A. B. Friedman is the one other Liberal of this place. Mr. Glick had to pay the expenses, with the exception of a couple of dollars, I believe. It didn't seem quite right, and I felt troubled about it afterward, "but," said the generous young fellow, "if I can get off with paying for a lecture once or twice a year, I don't think I shall be doing too much for Freethought."

I again said "Good-bye" to the Geddes—this time for certain, as Beaver Dam, my next place, was too far for their fleet team. Feeling this, I left them sadly. I was met at the depot by Mr. Thorp, an old reader of the Boston Investigator and THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mrs. Thorp is a Liberal, intelligent lady. The sun and daughter are also Liberal. I gave three lectures in this place. The moving spirit of the town is Dr. G. E. Swan, of whom the Freethinkers are justly proud. The doctor is owner and proprietor of Vita Mineral Spring, whose world-renowned water he is shipping by the barrel and bottle to every part of the country. The pavilion built above the spring is a gem of art. The part in which it is located contains Hotel Villa, a handsome summer resort, surrounded with lovely shaded walks, beautiful flowers and fountains, air castles, swings and slides, electric lights, boats gliding over the water, band playing at night—everything that a lavish expenditure of wealth could provide to make it attractiv. "I believe in a heaven on this earth," said the doctor, "and this is my idea of it." He has just purchased another park beautified with an old picturesque mill and a lake. This is being stocked with young fish and will furnish ample sport for the anglers summering at Vita Villa. The doctor kindly took Mr. Thorp and myself over his grounds, but there were so many attractions that it was impossible to note them all. He impressed me as a genius, and as he spoke carelessly of $10,000 put on this place and $20,000 invested over there, and so on, I found myself impertinently wondering. But he seemed so calm, so assured of success, that the grandeur of his undertakings seems already an accomplished fact. He has done more for Beaver Dam than all its orthodox citizens together. It is a lovely place. No fences; green grass, green trees, flowers, electric lights everywhere.

Andrew Willard, an ex-member of the Wisconsin legislature, introduced me to the audience. Mr. Willard has taken the Boston Investigator for thirty-eight years. Among other Liberals were Henry Davis and wife, Mr. and Mrs. McMullen, Mr. and Mrs. Bushnell, Dr. McClure, and N. M. Banks.

At Earlville, Ill., I gave two lectures; was to hav given three, but a terrible rain-storm compelled the canceling of one. Thomas Perdieu, an old Freethinker, the best-posted man in the county, I was told, and the one with whom I had corresponded, was, unfortunately, too ill to attend the lectures, but Mr. Walker made all necessary arrangements. At Paw Paw, eight miles from Earlville, I gave two lectures also. Dr. Broffett is a pronounced Liberal in this town, and has been the means of creating a large Liberal sentiment throughout the community. At both these places John Remsburg has spoken. Mr. Walker said he thought Mr. Remsburg's lectures had done great good in their town. At Paw Paw I had a large house, afternoon and evening. I spoke in a hall. At Earlville the houses were not large. I spoke in a church. Churches do not draw. The church always seems to me to take the life out of the audiences. An imaginary sanctity hovers over the place; the shadow of the pulpit oppresses the people. My head only came to the pulpit top. I had to stand on one side at the very corner. One step forward and I would be in danger of toppling over. I did not take the step, but I had to be cautious. No, I do not like speaking in a church.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN.

Huxley's Story of His Life, Aims, and Works.

From Our Celebrities.

Why I was christened Thomas Henry I do not know, but it is a curious chance that my parents should hav fixed for my usual denomination upon the name of that particular apostle with whom I hav always felt most sympathy. Physically and mentally I am the son of my mother so completely—even down to peculiar movements of the hands, which made their appearance in me as I reached the age she had when I noticed them—that I can hardly find any trace of my father in myself, except an inborn faculty for drawing, which unfortunately in my case has never been cultivated, a hot temper, and that amount of tenacity of purpose which unfriendly observers sometimes call obstinacy. My mother was a slender brunet of an emotional and energetic temperament, and possessed of the most piercing black eyes I ever saw in a woman's head. With no more education than other women of the middle classes in her day, she had an excellent mental capacity. Her most distinguishing characteristic, however, was rapidity of thought. If one ventured to suggest that she had not taken much time to arrive at any conclusion, she would say: "I cannot help it; things flash across me." That peculiarity has been passed on to me in full strength; it has often stood me in good stead; it has sometimes played me sad tricks, and it has always been a danger. But after all, if my time were to come over again, there is nothing I would less willingly part with than my inheritance of mother-wit. I hav next to nothing to say about my childhood. In later years my mother, looking at me almost reproachfully, would sometimes say: "Ah! you were such a pretty boy!" whence I had no difficulty in concluding that I had not fulfilled my early promis in the matter of looks. In fact, I hav a distinct recollection of certain curls, of which I was vain, and of a conviction that I closely resembled that handsome, courtly gentleman, Sir Herbert Oakley, who was vicar of our parish, and who was as a god to us country folk, because he was occasionally visited by the then Prince George of Cambridge. I remember turning my pinafore wrong side forward in order to represent a surplice and preaching to my mother's maids in the kitchen, as nearly as possible in Sir Herbert's manner, one Sunday morning when the rest of the family were at church. That is the earliest indication I can call to mind of the strong clerical affinities which my friend Mr. Herbert Spencer has always ascribed to me, though I fancy they hav for the most part remained in a latent state.

My great desire was to be a mechanical engineer, but the fates were against this, and while very young I began the study of medicin under a medical brother-in-law. But though the Institute of Mechanical Engineers would certainly not own me, I am not sure that I hav not all along been a sort of mechanical engineer in partibus infidelium. I am now occasionally horrified to think how very little I ever knew or cared about medicin as the art of healing. The only part of my professional course which really and deeply interested me was physiology, which is the mechanical engineering of living machines; and, notwithstanding that natural science has been my proper business, I am afraid there is very little of the genuin naturalist in me. I never collected anything, and species work was always a burden to me; what I cared for was the architectural and engineering part of the business, the working out of the wonderful unity of plan in the thousands and thousands of diverse living constructions, and the modifications of similar apparatuses to serve diverse ends. The extraordinary attraction I felt toward the study of the intricacies of living structure nearly proved fatal to me at the outset. I was a mere boy—I think between thirteen and fourteen years of age—when I was taken by some older student friends of mine to the first post-mortem examination I ever attended. All my life I hav been most unfortunately sensitiv to the disagreeables which attend anatomical pursuits; but on this occasion my curiosity overpowered all other feelings and I spent two or three hours in gratifying it. I did not cut myself, and none of the ordinary symptoms of dissection poison supervened; but poisoned I was somehow, and I remember sinking into a strange state of apathy. By way of a last chance I was sent to the care of some good, kind people, friends of my father's, who lived in a farmhouse in the heart of Warwickshire. I remember staggering from my bed to the window on the bright spring morning after my arrival and throwing open the casement. Life seemed to come back on the wings of the breeze, and to this day the faint odor of wood-smoke, like that which floated across the farmyard in the early morning, is as good to me as the "sweet South upon a bed of violets." I soon recovered; but for years I suffered from occasional paroxysms of internal pain, and from that time my constant friend, hypochondriacal dyspepsia, commenced his half-century of co-tenancy on my fleshly tabernacle.

(Presently he became a surgeon in the navy. At Hasler he was under Sir John Richardson, and he afterward served in the Rattlesnake under Captain Owen Stanley. It was this voyage which induced him to begin writing upon scientific subjects.)

During the four years of our absence I sent home communication after communication to the "Linnean Society," with the same result as that obtained by Noah when he sent the raven out of his ark. Tired at last of hearing nothing about them, I determined to do or die, and, in 1849, I drew up a more elaborate paper and forwarded it to the royal society. This was my dove, if I had only known it. But, owing to the movements of the ship, I heard nothing of that either, until my return to England in the latter end of the year 1850, when I found it was printed and published, and that a huge packet of separate copies awaited me. When I hear some of my young friends complain of want of sympathy and encouragement, I am inclined to think that my naval life was not the least valuable part of my education. Three years after my return were occupied by a battle between my scientific friends on the one hand and the admiralty on the other, as to whether the latter ought or ought not to act up to the spirit of a pledge they had given to encourage officers who had done scientific work by contributing to the expense of publishing mine. At last the admiralty, getting tired, I suppose, cut short the discussion by ordering me to join a ship. Which thing I declined to do, and as Rastignac, in the "Pere Goriot," says to Paris, I said to London, a nous deux. I desired to obtain a professorship in either physiology or comparativ anatomy; and, as vacancies occurred, I applied, but in vain. My friend Professor Tyndall and I were candidates at the same time, he for the chair of physics and I for that of natural history in the University of Toronto, which fortunately, as it turned out, would not look at either of us. I say fortunately, not from any lack of respect for Toronto, but because I soon made up my mind that London was the place for me, and hence I hav steadily declined the inducements to leave it which hav at various times been offered. At last, in 1854, on the translation of my warm friend, Edward Forbes, to Edinburgh, Sir Henry de la Beche, the director-general of the geological survey, offered me the post Forbes vacated of paleontologist and lecturer on natural history. I refused the former point-blank, and accepted the latter only provisionally, telling Sir Henry that I did not care for fossils, and that I should giv up natural history as soon as I could get a physiological post. But I held the office for thirty-one years, and a large part of my work has been paleontological.

The last thing that it would be proper for me to do would be to speak of the work of my life, or to say at the end of the day whether I think I hav earned my wages or not. Men are said to be partial judges of themselvs—young men may be, I doubt if old men are. Life seems terribly foreshortened as they look back; and the mountain they set themselvs to climb in youth turns out to be a mere spur of immeasurably higher ranges, when, with failing breath, they reach the top. But if I may speak of the objects I hav had more or less definitly in view since I began the ascent of my hillock, they are briefly these: To promote the increase of natural knowledge and to forward the application of scientific methods of investigation to all the problems of life to the best of my ability, in the conviction, which has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength, that there is no alleviation for the suffering of mankind, except veracity of thought and of action, and the resolute facing of the world as it is, when the garment of make-believe, by which pious hands hav hidden its uglier features, is stripped off. It is with this intent that I hav subordinated any reasonable or unreasonable ambition for scientific fame which I may hav permitted myself to entertain to other ends; to the popularization of science; to the development and organization of scientific education; to the endless series of battles and skirmishes over evolution; and to untiring opposition to that ecclesiastical spirit, that clericalism, which, in England, as everywhere else, and to whatever denomination it may belong, is the deadly enemy of science.

J. E. REMSBURG has returned from his Texas trip, and will now make a tour through Nebraska, Iowa, and Dakota.

Communications.

The Absurdity of Oaths.

Not long ago the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER appeared before a New York court to resist a barbaric attempt on the part of a few law officers to make him comply with a superstitious ceremony styled oath-taking before exercising a right of citizenship. On his refusal it appears that there was a disposition to exclude him from the exercise of the most important of all social privileges—to relegate him to the political condition of a Chinese, or an idiot, or a minor, or a criminal.

Fortunately, this attempt to politically kill a fellow-citizen collapsed; but the question as to whether an individual may be partially, or wholly, deprived of civil privileges dependent on his willingness to conform to religious requirements, still remains unsettled. That a religious test should precede the exercise of a civil function; that an invocation of the supernatural should necessarily precede the enactment of affairs purely terrestrial, may appear incongruous to those accustomed to divide reason from religion—fact from faith.

Should a Liberal take an oath? or even affirm? Is not the same principle involved in both? In the application of an oath the object desired is to compel honesty; the means employed, the instruments of fear. Integrity is here made to hinge upon the fear of consequences, that is, corporal punishment, and in no wise appeals to the inherent love of truth.

It cannot but be disgusting to an honest man to undergo the same formula as that applied to a criminal to make him truthful—threaten him to jail, or to the vengeance of the Gods.

But the ridiculousness of making men honest by threatening penalties cannot be understood by those who conceive that force or fear induce religious belief. Human weakness produced this custom, and human frailty still preserves it.

The basis of an oath is fear. It is an endeavor of an individual to frighten himself to accomplish that which his ordinary volition cannot; to make promises whose non-fulfilment will entail on him punishment, the fear of which givs rise to feverish exertions to avoid.

Just as the ancients at their sacrifices, previous to expeditionary embarkations, made tremendous promises of future propitiations in case of success; bound themselvs to unreasonable self-atrocities in case of failure—in their endeavors to awaken every element of prowess, inflame every spark of courage and passion, sought, by making almost impossible promises, to render themselvs desperate and ferocious through fear of failures, so do the moderns by invoking the same imaginary, but differently named, deities, promis to serve them more faithfully, to strive for the further extension of their spiritual kingdoms, increase of success, and call down their vengeance if failure is due, in any sense, to their human weaknesses. The magnitude of sacrifice was always proportionate to the expectation of success or failure.

Where arms could easily prevail, deistical intervention was seldom invoked; they had then no need to seek the inspiration of fear.

The same method men used to frighten others and to render them tractable and obedient.

Men who, by fear of punishment, may be forced to comply with certain conditions, otherwise unattainable, necessarily consider others to be subject to the same influence—hence the oath.

The basis of the oath is fear, absolute fear. Some one seeks to frighten some one else by a method he knows very well would frighten himself.

Why does a boy beat himself with a stick, or scratch himself with a knife, when he seeks to accomplish an act of a difficult nature? Or a savage commit similar acts before engaging in combat? Or soldiers vow themselvs to self-destruction in case of defeat? Or whole migrating peoples destroy home and country previous to departure? To inspire themselvs with terror; through the stimulating agency of fear to better concentrate mental determination, and command obedience to intellectual demands.

This is the philosophy of an oath. This is the instrument men bring to bear upon themselvs and others to compel obedience. It is in every sense a cowardly thing; it is a crutch; a recognition of helplessness, of feeble mental concentrativness. And he who does not object to its taking, does he not, even in his own case, admit its efficacy?

What is self-respect, or rather, what is self-abasement, if, while giving testimony, one willingly submits to the application of such a degrading instrument? Is it not a legal recognition that all citizens are liars when courts declare that each shall tell the truth, and threaten him (or make him threaten himself), before he has uttered a word?

Is not an oath a stimulant? What is the difference between a timid athlete, who, to aid him to accomplish a difficult feat, seeks unusual strength in alcohol, and the witness who, to giv truer testimony, must hav, on like principles, administered to him a dose of dishonesty-cure to make him, temporarily, a little more apt to tell the truth?

Is not a person, then, justified in resisting such an insulting, insinuating instrument preparatory to giving testimony?

It is presumed that the law recognizes the guilty to be innocent until the contrary is proven; yet here we hav the ludicrous spectacle of a government recognizing all of its citizens as being rogues, in the sense that all require the beneficial application of this judicial thumbscrew to insure a high grade of court morality.

H. W. HAMMOND.

Orange, Mass.

Poverty and Riches.

How few, if any, of the most devout Christians do now or ever hav practically accepted and lived up to the teachings of Christ in regard to poverty and wealth!

Let any intelligent person with the mind's eye take a view of the lives of those Christians of their acquaintance, and see if they can find just one who for an instant seems to recognize and practice the injunctions, precepts, and practices of the master who taught, "Blessed be ye poor," "Take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed," also, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." What kind of a needle's eye he referred to may not be known, but evidently it is intended to represent a tight squeeze. Again, the story of the rich man and Lazarus, who was a beggar who laid at the rich man's gate. "The dogs licked his sores." He died "and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom." "The rich man also died, and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." "He saw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom," and implored him to send Lazarus that he might dip the tip of his finger in water to cool his tongue. But he could not, for between them a great gulf is fixed. Many other quotations might be given to show that poverty leads to heaven and wealth to hell. This is true if the Bible is God's inspired word. Then let Christians of wealth, the high and mighty ones, beware! Popes, cardinals, bishops, laymen, all ye who are rich, remember well that, if the teachings of your blessed savior are true, you can hardly hope for heaven. For there is nothing in the story of the beggar and rich man indicating that the poor one was the better man. Do you say, this is only a parable? Very well, then; it is an allegorical illustration to show more plainly a principle and a fact.

If these precepts were practiced, our nation to-day could hardly be advanced beyond the primitiv state of the aborigines—if the teachings of Jesus, as herein illustrated, had been adopted. Where would hav been the much vaunted "Christian civilization" of to-day if the so-called Christian nations had put in practice the principles he taught? And yet we are told that his teachings hav done more than anything else to advance the arts and sciences, and cultivate and develop the mighty improvements that are the pride of the civilized world in these closing years of the nineteenth century. And what would now be thought of a band of strolling men who should be found traveling over the land, without any visible means of livelihood, teaching that we should "take no thought for the morrow," and whose leader should proclaim, with evident satisfaction, and as a pattern well worthy of imitation, that "the foxes hav holes, and the birds of the air hav nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head?"

This subject and these thoughts were brought to mind by reason of the prevalence of different opinions at the present, and the great amount of discussion, in regard to the disproportion in the distribution of wealth, especially in our nation. We hear so much in regard to the power of wealth, the danger of a plutocratic government, monopoly, etc., on the one hand, and the oppression of the poor, the inadequate compensation of labor, that land is a natural inheritance to which each individual has a just and inalienable right, that the situation seems almost "confusion worse confounded." Undoubtedly there are many and growing evils that should be corrected; our political system has become in a measure corrupt, money is often and largely used to influence the ballot and to control legislation in the interest of those who possess wealth, and the poor are often made to endure privations in consequence; and probably it is also true that organizations in the interest of labor fail to attain their desired ends on account of bad management, and unwise as well as dishonest acts of those who are ostensibly working for the best interest of the poor, while really they are scheming for self-aggrandizement.

Manufacturers and others who hav wealth enter into trusts and various combinations to secure the largest profits possible from their business. This is natural, and not dishonorable if conducted in compliance with law, and honestly, according to recognized rules in the business of every-day life. Laboring men who are employed by such organizations also hav their societies, labor unions, etc., by which they hope to secure and maintain their rights, and the greatest reward for their labor. All these are right legally and morally if conducted honestly, with due regard to justice for all concerned. In business humanity is naturally selfish, and we must, in the nature of things, be somewhat selfish to maintain our rights. It is only when selfishness degenerates into mere hoggishness that we should call a halt, set ourselvs right, and apply the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as you would others should do unto you." Let us teach and strive to practice in all our business and social relations everything conduciv to harmony, honesty, economy, temperance, and all the virtues that will tend to make society, wherever our lot is cast, in such a condition that the world at large will be better, and each one's life more enjoyable. And in order to accomplish this we must not forget that it will be necessary to concede to others what we claim for ourselvs in matters of opinion or belief. Bigotry and intolerance are a prolific source of the wrongs that afflict mankind, and religion, in the numerous phases it has assumed, in the aggregate has been more productiv of dissension and strife than all other causes combined.

The reason is obvious; because, if a sect or organization believe that they derive their opinions from an infallible source, they naturally imbibe the idea that they know they are right, and in the nature of things those who hold to the contrary must be wrong. And when they believe, as most religionists do, that the welfare of nations and individuals in this world largely depends on their religion, and also their happiness or misery in an eternal future state of existence, it is no wonder that people who really believe the religion they profess should be unwilling to concede to others the right to a different belief, because it is a matter of greater consequence than anything else possibly can be—it involves the greatest interest of all mankind, both in time and eternity.

If it be true, as Christianity teaches, that an all-wise and good creator, infinit in all his powers, has given to the people of his creation an infallible, inspired guide, so plain that "he who runs may read, and the wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein," why is it that so many different creeds and sects exist that look to that inspired book for their guide, each of the from fifty to two hundred different sects claiming their creed is right and all others wrong?

In view of this, is it not better that a spirit of charity control our words and acts, that we cultivate forbearance, and cease contending in an intolerant, vindictiv manner in regard to matters pertaining to belief, religiously, politically, or socially?

It cannot be that the Bible is a plain, infallible guide given by an all-wise creator to teach mankind the right road to happiness here and hereafter, for if it were, so many conflicting opinions could not be derived from its teachings. Then let us be Liberal, kind, and forbearing toward each other, honestly seeking for the better way, and trying to walk therein.

CONVERSE CLOSE.

Grattan, Mich.

More Fact than Fancy.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn needs no introduction to TRUTH SEEKER readers. She is one of the few remaining old-time Spiritualist speakers who hav not the fear of God before their eyes, and cannot be clasped in an iron jacket. The leading subject of the first of her present course of lectures before the Progressiv Spiritualists of Lynn was: "What is the Use of a God; Is Not Nature Sufficient?" This is how she handled her theme:

The moment you ask that question two pictures present themselvs. One, of the time of systems, when the people were in their kindergarten age and wanted a personal God, an image like unto themselvs, to amuse them, just as the boy does a hatchet or a sled and the girl a doll or a jumping-rope. And for the same childish reason many want a God to-day; they would feel quite as lost without one as a baby without its rattle. Just so long as the world is ignorant it will want a God. The other is a picture of the better day when the people hav become truly men and women. When they can see and think and act for themselvs they will not be afraid to exercise their own responsibility, but will put forth their power, satisfied to supply their own requirements. Then they will break their leading-strings, put aside their playthings, and forget that they ever had a God, for they will hav no use for one. Then there are other reasons that some people want a God. Just as children are made to obey by force, taught to dread the rod and the lash, so a God is kept before the mind to awe people into subjection. Those who assume to rule want a God to say to the others, "You shall and you shan't; I'll punish you if you do, and I won't bless you if you don't."

Those who hate somebody find it very convenient to hav a God at hand to damn those they call their enemies.

Nature is sufficient for some but not sufficient for others. Some are so poorly born and badly bred that they cannot trace the chain of causes and effects; they do not understand the law of right, and as a consequence of their ill condition they need a hell ordained of God to keep them straight. I don't know what we should do with some of those whose minds heredity has malformed if we did not hav a hell to hang before their imaginations and frighten them into some respect of decency.

For a child, it is right to be fed on milk; but there comes a time in the growth of the individual when persistence in that diet alone would insure idiocy. So, as the world matures, the preacher's milk for babes must be passed by and the stronger meat of philosophy sought for to sustain mental life. If it were so that the idea of God answered its professed purpose to build up character and preserve the peace of society, there would be smaller cause to say a word against it. But go out on your streets, see the drunkards on their reeling way along the sidewalk. What has their belief in a God done for them? Rum will craze a believer in God as soon as it will anybody else who drinks it. The saloons flourish just as well now as they would if nobody believed in a God. The trouble is in the generation of human nature. The fire of hell has been bred in the bone, imbibed with the mother's milk, formed by the father's example, and cannot help but burn on in the children and the children of children that are yet to be.

When the law of heredity shall hav done its work, when the evil has been outbred by natural evolution, there will be felt no need of a God, for man will know how to govern himself without one. People hav wanted a God to prop their hopes, under the old teaching that there must be some one for the masses to lean on, some royal authority to be responsible for them. The people were pleased to be told by the priests that they would go to God after death and hav a crown and a harp, sit around the parks of heaven doing nothing but fiddle and sing, and be idiots forever. The work is slow to migrate out from under the reign of pedagogry, and escaping from the schoolmaster of the traditional and conventional law. Step by step we are learning not to believe in gods and devils, and heavens and hells, but to be the men and women that, according to nature, it is possible for us to be, and rely upon ourselvs.

Forty one years ago, when Spiritualism came in its modern force and significance, one of the first ideas which it brought was that there is no devil and no hell; no horrible fiend created and commissioned by God to take his misbegotten and misguided children and torture them for his own satanic pleasure; no awful, ever-burning lake where madness dwells, where men yell, women shriek, children cry, and babies fry for the glory of a loving God. If Spiritualism has not done more than that, it has by that done enough to at least entitle it to the respect of Freethinkers. The effect of that message from the spirits has Liberalized all the churches. Why, a Chicago minister the other day said to a reporter, and it was printed in the papers, with long comments: "I don't know about a God! Every argument you adduce for a God needs another argument to support that, and so on without end." When the Methodist church said to Dr. Thomas, "We hav no further need of you in our pulpits," the people said, "We hav need of you," and they built for him the People's church, and it is thronged every Sunday by earnest listeners to his advanced thoughts. He played the part of a man, as few preachers hav, and swung out of the narrow rut of prejudice and creed and became a leader in the broad way of reason and humanity. And so will it be with all who essay to think, when heredity shall hav done its work well enough to permit it to be so—and not till then. When theologians and Christian scholars were asked to revise the Bible, to make it conform to the language and learning of the age, they said, "Oh, yes; we hav known for twenty years that the Bible needed revision." Then they admitted that they been lying for twenty years by preaching from a false book. They, by undertaking to improve the word of God, or what they called the word of God, proclaimed themselvs frauds, and the people are forgetting to respect their pretensions.

The ministers hav gone farther. They used to say, "You must know God." They now own that the finite cannot comprehend the infinit—just what Spiritualists said forty years ago. There is no sense in having a God unless you understand him. Unless you comprehend God, you do not know how to use him. When you get a God you can comprehend, you lose him, for to comprehend God is to decompose him. The moment that you can say, knowingly, that God is, can tell truthfully what he is, then that moment you hav not got any God. You hav destroyed him by solving him. God admits of no limitation; that is, he has no definition. And that which has no definition, is not a thinkable quantity. For the well-to-do there is no necessity of a God in all their thoughts. Jay Gould's child can be trained to agreeable behavior without having the fear of a God, for its wants are supplied before it even knows of them. But the child of the slaves, the child of Portland street or of North street, Boston, for instance, has no way to meet its wants but to steal. That child is to be controled by fear, as it does not know what kindness is; and therefore it is told of a God and a hell. When you are ready to go down and minister to such people, they do not understand you. They are selfish all through, and believe you are. You must wait for better conditions to environ them, and for the law of heredity to develop them, before you can do them much good by fine theories or acts of charity. Therefore, let them keep their God. Everything that makes a man better, whether it be one or ten gods, whether it be Jehovah and the devil, or Jesus and the Bible, let him hav them, say amen to them, but do not let him impose them on you. People hav the things they hav because they need them, for the time Thus there were the tabernacle and the temple; thus there is the church with its organ and choir and educated preacher, and also the Salvation Army, with its barracks and its racket and its ungrammatical exhorters. If one poor outcast of society is uplifted and turned to the light by the Salvation Army, then be glad for the tambourine and drum.

Let us see if nature is not sufficient. When we hav examined nature we may find that it is just as grand, just as sacred, as all that has been called God. Ask the mother of a wayward child—the child of a miserable man; she may know what circumstances before its birth made it as it is. She can tell you from the depths of her loving motherhood—for it is her child still, whatever it may do—that she does not believe God will damn it for what it is not to blame. Her instinct is her judgment. Nature is sufficient for her; shall it not then suffice for us all? Nature must work out the world's solution by the law of heredity. Henry C. Wright said: "What is needed is not so much regeneration as right generation." [Professor Fowler said the same thing.] Even the clergy are now finding this out. Henry Ward Beecher said in a ministers' meeting: "We must hav good children, and then we shall hav good Christians." Another way of saying the same thing. Yea, nature is sufficient, and nothing but nature will ever succeed. When you are broken down or at your wit's end of trouble, who do you call on? There are ten thousand gods to call on. When President Garfield lay low, suffering from the bullet of a professedly God-inspired assassin, millions of prayers were offered to the God of heaven to save his life. Did they avail? No; they failed. When Garfield died they said: "God's will be done!" They might as well hav said that in the first place. When there is a fire you look to your engins more than to God. A certain ship was wrecked off the coast. There was a mysterious signaling seen on shore. Were the onlookers invoking heaven with enchantments? No. The signs were made to a dog, not to a God. The dog, not the God, when he understood his instructions, took a rope in his mouth and swam out to the ship, and thus the people on board were saved. Their savior's name was not spelled G o-d, but d-o-g. Will you say, God sent the dog? Then God caused the wreck as well. However, it took nature to do the work. [Giv us the dog, God or no God.]

But shall we be angry? Anger is a vice or a virtue according as to whether it is a person or a system that is the subject of our wrath. If it is a wrong system, then get angry at what has injured you, and by that anger be stimulated to remove it. Some people are too lazy to get angry. If you talk of woman's rights and the reformation of society, there are women who will say, "I hav all the rights I want." One is told, "Colonel Ingersoll is coming to lecture." She says: "Oh, he ought to be hanged, the horrid Infidel! He is said to hav a throat trouble, and we are told it was sent by God to stop his lecturing." Why doesn't God stop his writing then? We hav not the women themselvs to blame for such irrational speeches, but we hav the system to fight which made such women. Ingersoll has followed nature and led the ministers, that is all. He has spoken for that liberty which all shall enjoy when the later results of heredity shall hav made it possible. Colonel Ingersoll is simply a man born ahead of his time. The time is coming when we shall not ask what you believe but what you do. It will not then be asked, Do you giv money to send the blessed gospel of damnation to the heathen? but, Do you giv your wife enough to keep her as she should be kept? Oh, but you may say, She has enough to eat and wear. That may be, and so may the pauper hav. You pay your housekeeper. She is independent of your will. She uses her wages at her pleasure. Pay your wife. Respect her. Treat her so she can respect herself. Then, and not till then, you will hav respectable children.

Mrs. Allyn finished with a fine peroration and the auditors were demonstrativly satisfied. If any were worked up on account of the way God was done for, they gave no sign. It would be well if that kind of talk were more frequent on Freethought rostrums.

JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD.

Notes of Travel by W. S. Bell.

I cannot say as much for the Freethinkers of Utah as some of the lecturers hav who hav preceded me in this field.

Those who hold to the Secular work in this region are few and far between. I hav not found them numerous or enthusiastic. I hav tried to get subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, in vain. In fact, I was more than once disappointed in not having arrangements made for my lectures.

On the 12th inst., I spoke in the Opera House to a large audience, but it was not half as large as it would hav been if there had not been another Liberal meeting held at the same time. The Freethinkers are badly broken up here.

This week I hav been swinging round the circle, lecturing at Morgan City, Coalville, and Park City. My lectures were well attended, and were received tamely in these small towns, with the exception of Park City.

Mr. W. Wellock is the gentleman of this city who arranged for my lecture in the Opera House of this city at a cost of $35, and advertising $15. The lecture was well received by a large audience, and was very generously praised by the Tribune—a paper that has had no love for Freethinkers. I am under a thousand obligations to Mr. Wellock for his self-sacrificing efforts on my behalf. His health is not good, otherwise he would wake the Salt Lake mossbacks up in a way that would put new life into them and the Liberal cause.

I shall start in a few days for the Pacific coast; I expect to get there about June 1st, and on the 2d to lecture in Oakland, and on the 9th to speak in San Francisco.

The weather has been cold, wet, and disagreeable. I hav worn my heavy overcoat a large part of the time while traveling during the past month. I expect after leaving here that two days' travel will take me from the mountains and snow into the regions of roses and summer. W. S. BELL.

Salt Lake City, May 18, 1889.

That Right Arm Again.

That superstition dies hard, is a fact no one can deny, and one which becomes more and more exemplified every day of our lives, but when superstition finds its way with arrogance among our city officials, it becomes a state of things to be generally deplored.

"Hold up your right arm," was the order given to a friend of mine, who, having recently arrived in this country, made an application at the county court for his naturalization papers, and being of the same opinion upon matters relating to religious topics as myself, he naturally declined to do so, stating that his grounds for doing so was, that it was nowhere required by the laws or the Constitution of the United States that a man should be compelled to hold up his arm while making an affirmation, at the same time having as a good precedent for our refusal the action taken by our esteemed Editor, E. M. Macdonald, last fall, when Judge Barrett decided in his favor.

Upon refusing to hold up his right arm the clerk closed the book with an officious bang, refused to giv us the papers, and referred us to the United States court, probably feeling fully convinced within himself that he was there to make the law, and not merely to administer it. Perhaps they are ignorant of the law, either intentional or unintentional, and would much rather prefer to make little laws of their own. But this must not be. The lawmakers are not to be found in the city hall, though they be law-breakers, and we must teach these pompous dignitaries and-would-be despots that might is not right.

We turned away disappointed, but not deceived, because we had anticipated some such trouble from these Catholic upstarts of Irish-Tammanyism, but firmly resolved to fight out this question to the bitter end. Does not this instance again show that the spirit of religious persecution is not yet extinct even in our day, but that they would be just as arrogant and just as imperious to-day as they were in ages gone by, if they dared, or if they could only recover that power once more which for ages they held over the civilized world?

The only wonder is that these vassals of Roman Catholicism hav not attempted to introduce in our statute-book some formula by which all aliens, before they can become naturalized, shall express themselvs as slaves of the pope. Say, for instance, why not establish some deputy popes whose toes they would hav to kiss before they can be made citizens? or why not import a few feathers from the left wing of the Angel Gabriel, or a few parings from the toe-nails of St. Peter, or the green gingham umbrella under which St. Paul preached at Corinth, or some such like articles of ecclesiastical curiosity, before which all strangers must fall down and worship before they can take upon themselvs the rights and duties of citizenship? And yet not one of these could be any more ridiculous than holding up the right arm while making a simple affirmation.

This is only another instance, affording sufficient proof that the time is near at hand when Freethinkers should unite in one loud and clamorous demand for the removal of all such obstacles that prevent them from enjoying their rights as citizens, and to teach these tyrannical religionists that in maintaining and insisting upon our rights we shall not be insulted with impunity. JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 8, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

WE very strongly urge those of our subscribers who are in arrears to forward the money at once, as it is needed in our business. The paper dealers and the printers and the landlord cannot be satisfied without cash, and that cash must come from our friends who owe it to us. Hundreds are owing from one to three dollars each, and this amount, small in individual cases but large in the aggregate, we depend upon to pay our bills. We hope no one in arrears will longer put off his plain duty.

Supporting Church Institutions.

Since last week there hav come to light some more facts concerning the practical marriage of church and state in New York. Inspired by sectarian ill-feeling, a Protestant writer has been copying the books of the comptroller's office, so far as they show money and land given to the churches in this city, a large proportion of which is of course held by the Roman Catholic denomination. The account is large:

ROMAN CATHOLIC.	Valued.
Sisters of Mercy of St. Joseph Industrial Home, Fourth and Madison avenues and Eighty-first street, leased for ninety-nine years, $1 per year; 20 lots	$ 300,000
Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, Fourth and Madison avenues, Fifty first and Fifty-second streets, as long as used for asylum purposes, $1 per year; 32 lots	500,000
Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, Madison and Fifth avenues, Fifty-first and Fifty-second streets; sold outright for $1; 32 lots	1,200,000
St. Patrick's Cathedral block, Madison and Fifth avenues, Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets; sold for $10; 32 lots	1,600,000
Foundling Hospital of the Sisters of Charity, Lexington and Third avenues, Sixty-eighth and Sixty-ninth streets; leased ninety-nine years; charge $1 per year; 33 lots	600,000
Total	$4 200,000
PROTESTANT.	Valued.
Association for Improvement and Instruction of Deaf Mutes, Lexington avenue, Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth streets; leased ninety-nine years, $1 per year; 12 lots	$ 225,000
Church of the Redeemer, Fourth avenue and Eighty-second street, leased two years at $400 per annum; four lots	15,000
Hahneman Hospital, Fourth avenue, between Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth streets, leased ninety-nine years at $1 per year; 10 lots	200,000
German Hospital, Fourth avenue and Seventy-seventh street, leased for ninety-nine years at $1 per year; 18 lots	300,000
Orphan Asylum and Home of Protestant Episcopal Churches, Lexington avenue and Forty-ninth street, special lease for twenty-one years; 12 lots	175,000
The Ladies' Home of the Society of the Baptist Churches, Lexington avenue and Sixty-seventh street; leased for ninety-nine years at $1 per year; 10 lots	150.000
Total	$1.065,000
HEBREW.	Valued.
The Hebrew Benevolent Society, Lexington and Third avenues and Seventy-seventh street; leased for ninety-nine years, as long as used as an asylum; 17 lots	$ 100,000
Mt. Sinai Hospital, Lexington avenue, Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh streets; leased for ninety-nine years, at $1 per year; 14 lots	275,000
Mt. Sinai Hospital, between Lexington and Third avenues, 57x100 feet; leased for twenty-one years at $630 per year; 2 lots	1,500
Total	$ 373,500
NON-SECTARIAN INSTITUTIONS.	Valued.
The Chapin Home, Lexington and Third avenues, Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh streets; leased for ninety-nine years at $1 per year; 14 lots	$ 175,000
The Nursery and Child's Hospital, Lexington avenue, Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets; leased for $1 per annum during the pleasure of the common council; 18 lots	175,000
Total	$ 350,000

According to these figures the various churches are squatting on nearly six million dollars' worth of the people's land, for which they pay the princely rent of some one thousand and thirty-nine dollars. Of course the Romish church gets the lion's share, as the Tammany folk who hav ruled and still rule the city are mainly Roman Catholics. In addition to this land the city has within nineteen years made the Roman church a present of some twenty millions of dollars. From 1880 to 1888, inclusiv, the figures are:

Foundling Asylum, Sisters of Charity	$2.235,701 67
New York Catholic Protectory	2,024,344 18
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls—Appropriation accounts and excise license	67,444 61
Roman Catholic House of the Good Shepherd	55,830 57
St. Joseph's Institute for Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes	161 320 92
Mission of the Immaculate Virgin	630.586 23
Institution of Mercy	818.340 30
Missionary Sisters, Third Order of St. Francis	346 485 84
Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary	224 796 10
Asylum Sisters of St. Dominic	234 737 31
St. Joseph's Asylum	301 324 15
St. Agatha's Home for Children	62 128 60
St. James's Home	91 002 38
Asylum St. Vincent de Paul	66 664 65
St. Michael's Home	20 664 78
St. Ann's Home	46 005 83
St. Stephen's Home for Children	249 326 09
Society St. Vincent de Paul	32 469 00
French Benevolent Society	6 583 00
Roman Catholic Orphan Asylums	59.305 00
St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum	3 999 00
St. Vincent's Industrial Home for Girls	2 212 00
St. Joseph's Home for Aged	22 329 57
Home for Aged of Little Sisters of the Poor	19 985 00
House of Mercy	2,112 00
St. Joseph's Hospital of Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis	1,800 00
St. James's Home for Boys	530 00
The Sisters of "Bon Secours"	60 00
The Sheltering Arms	7.775 00
St. Francis Hospital	24 456 00
St. Vincent's Hospital	9,102 00
Other Roman Catholic Institutions	1,200 00

Twenty years ago, when the Tweed ring controled Tammany Hall and the city, as much as $800 000 were given this church in one year—1869. In 1870, says this writer, petitions from more than one hundred thousand citizens caused the legislature to repeal the law, the repeal to take effect near the end of that year, imposing a perpetual tax of nearly $250,000 on this city for their parochial schools. Hence the falling off the next year, 1871, in the subsidy. On Washington's birthday, 1872, a detailed exposure of this Tweed ring subsidy for the three preceding years to the extent of $1,396 389.51 was made, and the subsidy in consequence fell that year to $421,674 03. In the autumn of 1872 the Tweed ring were driven from power in both city and state. At Albany nearly the entire sessions of 1873 and 1874 were employed to expose and denounce this class of legislation, and the annual sectarian appropriation bills, that had grown to over $1,000,000, were wholly defeated. The subsidy in this city was, in consequence, reduced for 1873 to $338,336.24, and for 1874 to $326,797.90. Constitutional amendments were prepared in 1873, and finally adopted in 1874, which, had they not been interfered with by two pestilent clauses introduced into the amendments to Article VIII, would hav cut those subsidies up by the roots.

It occurs to us that this year of grace would be a good one in which to begin another crusade against the iniquitous voting away of the people's money, and the petitions should protest against subsidizing Protestantism as well as Catholicism. The Protestants and Jews benefit some half million dollars annually from the public treasury, and this robbery should cease. This part of the question is disposed of very cleverly by the copier of the foregoing figures by saying, "Some of the Protestant denominations receive a small donation from the public treasury in this city for their charities, but they are opposed to the whole business, as recognizing the principle of a union of church and state, and would be glad to hav each church support its charities with its own money, and not with the money of others; but the Roman Catholics oppose it." This, we take it, is not entirely true. From the strong efforts made by the Protestants to climb into the public crib we judge they are as willing to receive alms as their more orthodox brethren. At any rate, they cannot escape the odium of their acts by saying they rob the city just because the Catholics do. Mr. Jones's theft cannot be condoned by Mr. Smith's peculations.

The Museum of Natural History.

During the last sessions of the New York legislature a bill was passed allowing the New York city authorities to issue bonds to the amount of $400,000 to build an addition to the American Museum of Natural History. The bill originated in the senate, where an attempt to make the gift to the museum conditional upon its being opened on Sunday failed. The bill passed the senate, and was sent to the assembly, where some public-spirited individual obtained the Sunday-opening clause. It went back to the senate, the amendment was agreed to, and the bill became a law. At least, this is our information, obtained from one of the senators.

Promptly after the signing of the bill, Mr. Jesup, president of the museum, appeared in the mayor's office asking for the $400,000. Mayor Grant asked him if he would open the buildings on Sunday. Mr. Jesup wouldn't. But if the Board of Estimate and Apportionment would vote the money, after the new building was erected, he and his fellow-managers would talk it over. Mayor Grant refused to vote for the issue of the new bonds on those conditions, and up to date Mr. Jesup has not received the cash. The mayor's action is commended by all the reputable papers, and there can be no question at all that public sentiment is strongly in favor of Sunday opening of both museums.

While the commendations of the mayor's action were being printed, it occurred to us to inquire how the board of Estimate and Apportionment had any choice in the matter, in view of the amendment put on the bill in the assembly, and we dropped a note to the mayor calling his attention to the law as it was reported passed. We append the reply:

"MAYOR'S OFFICE, New York, June 1, 1889.

"E. M. MACDONALD, ESQ., 28 Lafayette place, Dear Sir: I hav the honor to acknowledge, by direction of the mayor, the receipt of your favor of May 29 h with reference to the act of the legislature appropriating $400 000 for the Museum of Natural History in this city. Mr. Beekman, late corporation counsel, was shown your letter and he says that that part of the bill which provided that the museum should be kept open on Sundays was dropped as unnecessary, owing to the fact that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of this city has power in the matter.

"The mayor desires me to assure you of his appreciation, and thanks for the interest which you hav shown in the matter. Respectfully, THOS. C. T. CRAIN, Secretary."

No doubt it is all as the late corporation counsel says, but it seems funny that the amendment was dropped after both houses had agreed to it. What we should like to know is, were all the legislativ reporters and a senator deceived as to the passage of the bill as amended, or hav some irresponsible clerks at Albany taken to making our laws?

There can be no question of the mayor's sincerity in the stand he has taken, and we certainly hope he will hav the moral and political stamina to adhere to it. The great public is with him, and will back him up. There should be no paltering, no compromise. His predecessor, Mayor Hewitt, assumed the same position as to making the annual grants for the support of the two museums, but was induced to compromise on evening opening, with the result that one museum has ignored the bargain and not opened at all, while the other opened two evenings each week during the winter while the legislature which had its bill under consideration was in session, and then closed its doors. Consequently, so far as seeing the exhibits of the museums, the people are as badly off as before.

But at its best evening opening is no substitute for Sunday opening, especially if the evening opening is confined to the winter months. Sunday, and in the summer, is when the people visit Central park. Every fair Sunday at least fifty thousand people listen to the music on the Mall. These enormous assemblages are largely composed of poor people who gather because it is free, and who could not go on any other day. The Art Museum on the east side of the park would be crowded by these were the doors open, and the residents on the western side would more than fill the Museum of Natural History. Some poetical individual has very fairly described the situation in the World, in a dialog between Mr. Jesup and a poor man:

"PRESIDENT J.:
Good fellow, what is this complaint I hear?
As long as you your victuals hav and beer,

I scarcely see why you should dare complain;
I hope you won't let it occur again!

"THE POOR MAN:
Good fellow-citizen, I still maintain
That 'public benefactions' are in vain,
Unless the public may enjoy them! So
One thing of you alone I ask to know:
Is the museum you on Sunday close
One of our public or your private shows?

"PRESIDENT J.:
Such impudence I never heard! If you
Can't go in daytime, as you ought to do,
Why don't you go up evenings, and so stop
Your wicked patronage of the rum-shop?
Why don't you go to church on Sundays and
Thank heaven you liv in this enlightened land
Where museums are built and run for you
By folks whose blood is rich as well as blue?

"THE POOR M.:
Go up at nights, is it, good sir, you said?
Why, fellow-citizen, I go to bed!
If you, perchance, should work from 7 to 7,
At night you'd rather go to bed than heaven!
If I can't go on Sundays, when I've leisure,
When wife and children, too, might share the pleasure,
I fear I cannot go at all, and then
The museum must be for richer men!

"But ere we close our conversation, pray
When do the rich their rum drink, night or day?"

The policy now pursued by the directors of these institutions is narrow, bigoted, selfish, and hypocritical. They are simply using the city's money for the pleasure of the wealthy and religious class. It is an outrage upon the taxpayers and an infringement of the right of the American citizen to look at his own property when he pleases.

The present Board of Estimate and Apportionment should put no trust in fair promises, but stand firm on the plain proposition of no Sunday opening, no money beyond the $15 000 the law requires to be voted. Perhaps it will be done; we hav confidence in Mayor Grant on this question, and hope to visit both museums on some pleasant Sunday in 1890.

Which?

The following letter is from Judge Sprott, of the 6th Judicial Circuit of Alabama:

"LIVINGSTON, ALA., May 28, 1889.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your paper of May 18th, which some one has been kind enough to send me, I find the following paragraph in an article headed. 'Religious Persecution in this Year of Our Lord.' 'Our subscriber sued a man for money due him in the Circuit Court of Tuscaloosa. Judge Spratt [should be Sprott] refused to allow him to make an affirmation and rejected him as a witness, in consequence of which he lost his case.' This is absolutely false; no such case ever came before me in Tuscaloosa, or elsewhere. I hav never refused to allow witnesses to affirm in my circuit, but, on the contrary, hav allowed many to affirm who had conscientious scruples against taking an oath. If your subscriber misses the truth, generally, as far as he missed in this case, he ought not to testify in any court, for he is unworthy of belief.

"Will you please publish this, inasmuch as you published what your subscriber had to say on the subject?

"Very respectfully, S. H. SPROTT,
"Judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit of Alabama."

The letter we received from our subscriber, Mr. H. J. Ward, of Coaling, Alabama, and upon which we based the statement, reads as follows:

"I sued a fellow on an honest account; they refused me my testimony on affirmation. In the circuit court at Tuscaloosa, Judge Sprott charged the jury not to let an Infidel testify."

We giv our subscriber's name, because the issue is direct, and we do not propose to be deceived into harshly censuring any judicial officer. It must be an easy matter to prove this, one way or the other, and Mr. Ward and Judge Sprott will greatly oblige if they will settle the question between them.

Mr. Charlesworth's Friend.

On another page (359) Mr. Charlesworth relates the refusal of the county clerk's office to allow a man to affirm without raising the right hand. The refusal was aggravated by general insolence of demeanor and an abrupt and discourteous declination to listen to the facts of the law.

Mr. Charlesworth's friend has of course his remedy at law. Unquestionably the county clerk's deputy or representativ would be compelled to receive the affirmation should Mr. Charlesworth's friends resort to the mandamus business, but this involves a loss of time and money which he can ill afford. He will therefore probably try another court.

The question is, has every Freethinker in New York got to get out a writ of mandamus every time he takes the legal obligation to tell the truth? Is there no way of making the rule known to the Irish Roman Catholic politicians who hav been placed in office by Tammany Hall? At the present time the matter is a legal hodge-podge. In the courts, where the presiding officers are usually gentlemen of education, a Freethinker has no trouble. The inferior officers do not hav a chance to show their authority. But in the city offices where the clerks are Irish Roman Catholics a man must tread very gingerly indeed to avoid being insulted by the ignorant upstarts who owe their positions to the amount of work they hav done for some Tammany Hall politician. These clerks are usually known as "workers" in a district, and are selected on that ground alone. Their position is their reward for early voting and their capacity to influence other early voters. Placed in authority they are insolently dictatorial, and their bearing toward the citizen discloses that they imagin themselvs to be tin gods on wheels and gifted with omnipotence.

Why would it not be a good plan for the Infidels of the city to organize a society for securing their civil rights, and mandamus every official who refuses them, and then sue him for damages?

The Ill-Smelling Clark Braden Again.

Mr. C. B. Reynolds has located in Walla Walla, Washington, from which point of vantage he proposes to enlighten the people on the subject of religion.

He had hardly located himself in the town when Clark Braden turned up and wanted to "discuss." Mr. Reynolds, after remodeling Braden's propositions, consented to meet him. The debate began some time during the week ending May 18th, and closed on that date in a high old row. The daily Statesman tells us how it was. The meeting was in Small's Opera House, and a large audience assembled. The proposition affirmed by Braden was:

"That the teachings of the Bible and Christianity ever hav and do now in every respect tend to the promotion of the highest morality, the greatest liberty to men and women, and the advancement of human happiness."

Braden had the first speech, and it is significant that his opening remarks consisted of an apology for misconduct on the previous evening. Then he expounded his thesis. Mr. Reynolds followed, and Braden arose to rejoin. The champion of Christianity began his second effort by making personal remarks concerning one of the moderators, who thereupon arose and said that he could not sit still and hear himself continually abused and insulted, when the conditions upon which the Freethinkers had entered upon the discussion were that no personalities should be allowed, and begged leave to withdraw. Mr. Reynolds then took the floor. The gist of his words was that he considered himself vilified beyond the boundary line of human endurance, and felt it his duty to follow the example of Mr. Rosenow, the moderator. Braden then resumed his speech, and was greeted with hisses, shouts, and general uproar. After this had lasted some time, comparativ silence was obtained, and Braden began again. The burden of his last song was like unto the melody of the first, and the audience filed out of the hall as fast as the size of the exits would permit. The "debate" was ended.

The Walla Walla Liberal Club met the next day and adopted these whereases and resolves:

"WHEREAS, The notorious Clark Braden challenged ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds to a public debate in this city upon propositions of a most ambiguous and intangible nature; and,

"WHEREAS, C. B. Reynolds, lest he encounter misinterpretation on the part of a comparativly strange community, ignorant of Clark Braden's true character and antecedents, accepted such challenge, but upon his own propositions and conditions; and,

"WHEREAS, Such discussion furnished to the witnessing audience, through the personal conduct of the representativ of Christianity, a most appalling exhibition of the corrupting influences of a dogmatic school; while at the same time bringing out the sterling qualities of C. B. Reynolds as a propagator of Liberalism, by his manly and humane attitude and his irresistible illustrativ logic in presenting the facts in the case; so that in a local paper commonly accepted as an organ of the church circles, it was admitted that "the discussion is making thousands of Infidels," and that the Christian denominations who had provoked the same should be held responsible; be it

"Resolved, That the lasting gratitude of the Walla Walla Liberal Club—nay, of the Liberals of the United States—is due to C. B. Reynolds for the noble work accomplished by him in the cause of humanity; and be it further

"Resolved, That this expression of acknowledgment shall be made known through the Secular press to all Liberals throughout the land."

The Christians got together in the Methodist church, and put in their whereases and resolves, which read suspiciously like Braden's own work:

"WHEREAS, A discussion between Clark Braden and C. B. Reynolds was recently held in Small's Opera House in this city, in which Mr. Braden appeared for the Bible and Christianity, while Mr. Reynolds stood for Infidelity and Liberalism; and,

"WHEREAS, The discussion, which was to hav continued through eight evenings, was terminated on the fifth night by Mr. Reynolds, who gave up the fight and withdrew from the field, on the pretext that he was being insulted by Mr. Braden; therefore,

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Christian people who were present at the discussion that, while Mr. Braden might with greater propriety hav ignored what he saw objectionable in the course of his opponent, yet the coarse language and brutal blasphemies employed by the champion of Infidelity in his reference to the Bible, Jesus, and Christianity richly merited the scathing rebukes that fell from the lips of the defender of the faith.

"Also the following:

"WHEREAS, Rev. Clark Braden, in his zeal and loving devotion for the truth, which to us is dearer than all things else, has so ably maintained and defended the same against boasted opposition; therefore,

"Resolved, That we extend to him our sympathies and heartfelt thanks for the valuable service rendered to our common cause, and we will ever pray that he be able to continue in the work to which he is so well adapted.

"C. W. WELLS, Secretary."

It is a great pity that the Walla Walla Liberals would not believe Mr. Reynolds when he told them that Clark Braden is an unfit person for any gentleman to associate with, but insisted upon having it proved. Unquestionably they are convinced now. We hope the Liberals of other towns will be satisfied with the Walla Walla experience, and not ask to hav it repeated, as such scenes are a disgrace to Liberalism as well as to Christianity. Braden is an adventurer who would do anything, no matter how mean and dirty, for the gate money, and it is a matter of constant surprise to us that Liberals will allow him to use them as tools.

A Modification.

Mr. H. O. Pentecost now says:

"Seeing how my recent statement that some Liberals are very illiberal has offended some Liberals I am sorry I said it; not because it is not true, but because I dislike to hurt anyone's feelings. I supposed that everyone knew it, including the editors of the Liberal papers, and it is surprising to notice the asperity with which the statement has been resented by my brother editors of the Liberal sect."

We are glad to observe that Mr. Pentecost is hedging. The way he puts his statement now is not the way he put it originally. It was first printed this way:

"The name Liberal describes a number of persons who are about as illiberal as it is possible for human beings to be."

In this original form the plain reading is that all persons described as Liberals are illiberal. In his new form, the meaning is that some Liberals are illiberal.

Liberal editors may be supposed to possess as complete knowledge of Liberals as Mr. Pentecost—a recent recruit, who will hav difficulty in persuading the public that he did not sit before a mirror when he wrote his definition of Liberal—and therefore that they did not agree with Mr. Pentecost may be taken as fairly good evidence that he spoke hastily and without sufficient information. His last statement, that some Liberals are illiberal, is without doubt correct. We know a few ourselvs. But that is no basis at all for the sweeping assertion made by Mr. Pentecost.

The Kansas Trials.

We had no time last week to more than mention that Messrs. Harman and Walker would be compelled to stand trial, the judge having overruled their demurrer. It is not likely that the trial will take place before the October term of court, and perhaps not then, as we understand from a letter of Mr. Harman's attorney to him that an appeal can be taken on the decision on the demurrer, and the case brought to the notice of the highest court in the land.

Mr. Harman's own paper does not enlighten us further, for he seems to know as little about when he will get into the penitentiary as anyone. But whether the matter is still further prolonged in its preliminary stages, or the trial occurs at once, the defendants will need the sympathy and aid of all their friends.

Letters from Friends.

JASPER, ALA., May 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The bill in Congress called the Sunday Rest bill is worded as follows: "A bill to secure to the people the enjoyment of the first day of the week, commonly known as the Lord's day, as a day of rest, and to promote its observance as a day of religious worship." Now, if this bill is again agitated in Congress, is there a member of Congress who has courage enough to amend it so as to read as follows: "A bill to secure to the people the enjoyment of the first day of the week, and let it alone there?"

What right has Congress to legislate in the interest of religion as against individual liberty? Every individual has a natural right to exercise all his natural powers and functions when they do not injure the majority's similar rights.

J. K. DEARTH.

FRANKLIN, MO., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav not time to say much, but will say I am more than pleased with the way you conduct your valuable paper, and, like a great many others, I express my thanks for having such an organ in this priest-ridden land, and hope all people who love their fellow-man will giv you a helping hand. I see considerable talk about the Secular Union. Now, I, for one, would say the Secular Union has got in its Demands all it ought to hav. I think all the people of this country hav got to do is to keep the monster, Church, from getting a controling interest in the state. The Christian religion is so insignificant in itself, when it has to stand upon its own merits, that it is more than pusillanimous, and all that any man need care for, that has a desire for the complete annihilation of the whole Christian system, is freedom to express his thoughts in the way that seems to him best.

There is just one thing more I would like to say to the Liberals of this country, and that is, wherever each may be, however isolated, as I am at the present time, let him use his influence to break down the artificial distinctions that priestcraft and kingcraft hav raised in mankind. He will find he has done his whole duty. We need hav no fears of the final result of priestcraft in this country if it remains free, and in order to keep it free we must work to prevent, as far as possible, by legislation, people from becoming very rich or very poor. You cannot domineer over a man that is not poor or ignorant. WILLIAM H. COMPTON.

OLD RIPLEY, ILL., May 19, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The churches are dying hard. I feel sometimes that I would like to withdraw to some place where a Bible, priest, or preacher had never corrupted society; and yet when I hav a controversy and note what vague and weak excuses the church adherents and Bible believers make for their God, I take courage and think they must be ashamed when they come to reflect. I like to go to town or get on a train and get afoul of a deacon, elder, or preacher, get a crowd around us, and see him squirm and try to get away. If all our Liberal friends were thus in earnest and thus courageous, orthodoxy would soon get ashamed of its threadbare arguments, and the church would be obliged to open her doors to the teachers of the only true religion, science, and superstition would find no adherents. The Bible would be treated as a fable, as it should be; Christianity convicted of its sin against humanity, and mankind would return to the true worship of humanity instead of living off the credulity of one another—thus inaugurating the millennium.

The ruling classes are making a desperate effort to fasten the shackles of superstition on liberty to mold the mind of every child in hypocrisy, but I hope, by the grace of our Almighty Ingersoll, growth for the love of liberty and the comfortable communion of the Holy Secular Union, here and hereafter, henceforth and forever. Amen.

Your sincere friend in Liberty's cause,

EX-REV. JOSEPH N. MAXEY.

MONTE VISTA, COL., May 20, 289.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. Mr. Brooks, of this place—a Campbellite ranter—had something to say of Thomas Paine. I addressed an epistle to him, and inclosed the first two leaves of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing the cartoon where the priestly drones had dug up the coffin of Paine, and were stabbing their inquisitorial butcher-knives into the same. They also contained Professor Huxley's article, etc. Among other things, I wrote the following: "My dear sir, I am informed that on the last pagan Sunday night you dug up the corpse of the illustrious Thomas Paine and attacked his clothes. Whether this is true, I know not, and I had hoped that the people had so far evoluted from savagery as to do justice even to the dead; but this I know: such conduct is characteristic of paradise-conductors. Giv us logic and common sense. Refute Mr. Paine's arguments if you can; do not attack his clothes. The people who sit in your pews understand logic when it is given, and are fully up to, and sometimes far above, in intellectual caliber, the man who addresses them from the pulpit," etc.

Well, I slipped in to hear him rant the next Sunday night, and you ought to hav heard him bray. About two hundred pairs of eyes were focused upon me. Whether they were fascinated by my comeliness I do not know. He said he did not think the author of the epistle was a gentleman, because he had written over a nom de plume. He then pitched into THE TRUTH SEEKER in the ranter's usual style. He held the two leaves up to the gaze of the audience, but kept the cartoon next to his holy body. He said that was the size of the paper. Any fool knew better, however, for one article did not end with the last sheet. He said it had a circulation of fourteen thousand, and did not contain a single advertisment (that night I counted eighty-four advertisments in it, however), and that even Infidels themselvs would not patronize it, while his sect had about fifty papers, one of which had fifty thousand circulation. He further stated that Hobbes said that "Infidelity is a leap in the dark;" that Webster said that an Infidel was, so and so. I looked in Webster and found that some pious scoundrel had interpolated in fine print between the lines these words: "The Infidel writer is a great enemy to society" (Knox). He wound up by saying he would treat my epistle after the manner of the boy who was kicked by the calf—he would not notice it. I noticed, however, that it occupied his whole time. He said he granted everyone the right to follow "Tom Paine" if he chose. How kind he was! Don't you think so? About every other word he said was, "Tom Paine," or "Ingersaul."

JOHN TRUEBLOOD.

ADRIAN, MICH., May 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to speak of a volume now issued by the analytical author, John R. Kelso, "The Universe Analyzed." I hav a profound respect of its merits. Evolution is scientifically explained. The author has made plain propagation and growth. It is easily read, and to an unbiased mind would seem conclusiv. His scheme of the elements that go to make up the universe is reasonable and scientific. I would commend it to all—to Liberals and Spiritualists, and it is the best of works for the orthodox consideration. It will awaken new ideas. The author has truly analyzed the working of nature and exploded the Bible plan of creation. You sky-pilot fraternity, if you will prove a God that can demonstrate the weight of a two-inch auger-hole of any depth, build a tree around a knot-hole, or build a sawbuck or construct a clothes-pin out of nothing, I will enlist in the Salvation Army "during the war." If you will prove that there is or ever was a God that could bring into being one atom of the matter that constitutes the universe—that matter which science tells us is indestructible and uncreatable, and must hav existed forever—then I will cheerfully take the orthodox medicin for sinners doled out by that God and promulgated by his anointed and resignedly abide with the devil, their chief of staff, through eternity, and eulogize his Godship, and his able lieutenant, Old Split-hoof, with his spear tail and horned cranium, and shout their praises though choked by sulphurous fumes emanating from the pit of dark despair, and deem it a mercy of omnipotence. O. S. BARRETT.

LITTLE ELK, ORE., May 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: As the country is becoming somewhat agitated on the subject of revealed religion, as to its truth or fallacy, a few words from this secluded place might not be out of order and might interest some that don't know of such a place. I tell you that people are waking up to investigate matters that hav been heretofore taken as facts without proper investigation. A great many persons are entirely or in part ignoring the Old Testament, but still holding that the New is genuin and inspired of God. This is strange, as Christ said not one jot, one tittle, should pass from the law till all be fulfilled, thereby acknowledging that the law was binding even on him, and his acts must conform to the law. How then could he and disciples go into a man's corn on the Sabbath day and pluck and eat the corn like a pack of swine rather than reasonable men, and yet be blameless? What right could they hav more than others to appropriate private property to public use, at the same time teaching the people to observe the law? He also makes acknowledgment that he is subject to the law. He says to his disciple: Go cast a line into the water; open the mouth of the fish that is caught; you will find two pieces of silver; that giv for you and me. Was it necessary to observe the law in one case and not in the other? It certainly should be as binding in one case as in the other. Orthodox will urge that the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof and that he could do as he pleased, but the law of consistency should apply in all cases alike. In our day cases of trespass would be punished by law. Even if a boy should go into a neighboring melon-patch on a week-day he would be considered culpable, but to go on the Sabbath would be an outrage. Z. S. DERRICK.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., May 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Barrett thinks money issued by individuals to circulate at what it would fetch—the program of Anarchists—would not do, because any man could repudiate another man's money or his own. Much the same argument is used by the author of the article on Scientific Anarchism in the March number of the Political Science Quarterly. He says the mutual banks of Proudhon and his school would be like the "wildcat" state banks before the smash-up of 1857. It seems to me that these writers do not understand their own proposition. What is meant by repudiating? To repudiate representativ currency or promissory notes is to refuse to giv real value for them. Now, a man who dealt so with his notes would soon be out of the market. Whether he would giv real value for another man's notes or not would depend on his opinion of the maker. The result of good banking therefore would be that good notes would displace bad and become the only currency. The trouble with the wildcat banks was that they were required by law to redeem not in value but in specie, a particular form of value. Very much the same is the trouble with the representativ money issued by governments. It is all alleged to be redeemable in the precious metals, and its value depends on the probability that it will be redeemed, which is less in the case of governments than in that of good individuals, as shown by the depreciation of Russian, Austrian, and American government paper, while good men's paper is cash the world over. It is, indeed, possible for a government to issue a paper currency which is not alleged to be redeemable in specie. Such a currency would depend for its value wholly on its volume, and the temptation to inflate it beyond the limits of possible redemption in anything is far stronger in the case of a government than an individual, for the individual has something to lose by personal insolvency, while the persons who compose an administration hav nothing to lose by national insolvency. Why government should lend money at one per cent or anything per cent I am at a loss to imagin. Interest springs from the power which the law confers upon those who are called proprietors to withhold what is termed their property from use. If there were no law to confer this power—under the system of Anarchy, that is—no one could exact a consideration for the use of anything. C. L. JAMES.

SONOMA, CAL., May 20, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: A neighbor of mine is a reader of your paper, and he has asked me to write you of my opinions, as he is one of your converts, and I am a Christian. Yes, I say that I am a Christian, and a true one—not a Protestant, nor a Catholic, but a follower of Jesus Christ. Catholics are not Christians, but the Bible calls them the Babylonians, that is, Catholics and Protestants together (Rev. xvii; xviii). The Catholic church is "the Mother of Harlots" (Rev. xvii, 5). Hence, if she is a mother, she must hav children; and those children must be harlots also; and the Protestants must be her children. And therefore the Bible calls them all one "beast" (Rev. xiii, 1, 2; Dan. vii, 7, 8). And we say therefore that they are not the followers of Jesus Christ. If you read the Bible with care you will find that the Bible teaches a different kind of a doctrin from what these Babylonians are teaching. Christ hath but one way. Paul in Ephesians iv tells that "there is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling: one Lord, one faith, one baptism: one God and father of all who is above all and through all and in you all." So you see, Mr. Editor, that his doctrin is not multiform and contradictory; but, "there must be no division among you" (1 Cor. i, 10-13; xi, 18, 19; xii, 25-27; 2 Cor. xiii, 11). The Lord himself has told that such things were to come. See Matt. xxiv: "Iniquity shall abound: the love of many shall wax cold." "Many false prophets shall arise to deceive." Read also 2 Thess. ii, 3-11, and 1 Tim. iv, 1-3; 2 Tim. iii, 1-9; iv, 1-4. These and many other texts in the Bible show that they knew of such things, to come on the earth, in the olden days: "Time will come when they will not endure sound doctrin, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselvs teachers having itching ears." Yes, these leaders are to hav a "form of godliness," "creep into houses, lead captiv silly women." "They are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

Well, these few words hav I written to you as an introduction only, so that if you think me worthy to write more I will do so, on any subject of Bible doctrin. I am not ashamed of my doctrin. Nor am I ignorant, as you may find out hereafter, if I am permitted to write for your readers. With respect to all, I subscribe myself,

J. A. STROMBERG.

CARIBOU, ME., May 12, 289.

MR. EDITOR: While I lived in Fort Fairfield last winter, that town passed through the most fiery ordeal and almost deadly conflict that it has experienced for many long years! It was in the form of a great religious revival and excitement—though not reformation, for there was but very little of that article present. My wife went to the meeting a dozen times or more, and brought home to me reports of speeches so silly, nonsensical, and disgusting that I decided not to go near them at all, and I did not. But I frequently stood upon the ramparts of the fort and listened to the theological artillery below, together with the smaller arms of young ladies and gentlemen and boys and girls who thought they were doing big business, talking to the aristocracy of the air, the hobgoblins of the clouds, and the phantoms of the skies. And how disgusting it was! And one was about as sensible as the other, and no more so.

One of their prominent men, who delights in the term "Infidel," told the clergy last winter that he would giv them a thousand dollars if they would convince him that the orthodox God was the genuin, true, and living God, that Jesus Christ is the only-begotten son of God, and that the Bible is the ever-existing and unchangeable word of God. At last accounts, however, those gentlemen of the cloth had not attempted the accomplishment of such a mentally laborious job as that would hav probably been. The clergy are physically weak, and mentally not very strong, so I suppose they happened to know better than to undertake the performance of such a piece of work.

I told my wife that if that town passed through such an ordeal as that without somebody being sent to the insane asylum, I should be mistaken. And so it proved. One of the strongest-minded men in town (to all appearance) became insane upon the idea that he and his family were to be forever shut out from the endless felicities of heaven's eternal joys. That man is now in the insane asylum at Augusta. A very illiterate woman, also, became excited in the meeting, and then became sick, and then when their buildings were burnt that upset her completely. She is now in the insane asylum too.

And that is about all that great excitement amounted to, only that at their town meeting they elected a good, solid, sound, sensible, and intelligent Infidel supervisor of schools, as against the Christian candidate who was put forward on the ground that he had been talking in meeting. So the town of Fort Fairfield has kept its reputation good, and has not become so idiotic as I was afraid it would when that revival commenced.

I told them there was not theological force enough in town to convert me, and I can truly say, with Brother William Williams, that I hate the very name of religion. I love the name of Colonel Ingersoll to-day better than I ever did that of Jesus Christ. W. S. and "74" are writing some first-rate articles. I read lots of excellent "Letters from Friends." I hav loaned five Infidel books to a neighbor. Nature speed the day when theology will pass, and common sense take its place. Very respectfully, H. H. GILMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It has been quite a long time since I felt impelled to drop you a line. Although not on your lists any more as a regular subscriber, I never fail to purchase a copy every week, and every column, from the first page to the last, is interesting.

I am, perhaps, most interested in the discussion going on between Spiritualists and Materialists. From my standpoint, the former hav the best of the argument. Maybe that is because I want it that way. It is surprising how much this wanting it our way has to do with our opinions. It seems even to hav thrown our beloved champion of free speech, Colonel Ingersoll, off his base, when he made that dogmatic assertion for which Dr. Severance gave him such a severe rap over the knuckles. Surely the term Agnostic has not already evoluted so much as to hav become obsolete in the colonel's vocabulary. The fair Juliet hit so hard, a couple of the colonel's doughty yeomen rushed instantly to the rescue, only to be placed hors de combat in a twinkling, and thus pay dearly for their temerity. Is it possible that there can be an Agnostic or Materialist in the land who can not see that the position taken by Dr. Severance is impregnable, and that Colonel Ingersoll has made a serious blunder, and which is calculated to indicate that he, too, is not what he professes, or else is affected by his prejudices, and somewhat highly tinctured with dogmatism or bigotry, or some other of those detestable influences or complaints which Materialists profess to abhor when manifested by their opponents? Now that the great Ingersoll has been fairly caught napping, wouldn't it be a good idea for the Materialist to giv up his favorit weapon of warfare? Who knows but that the colonel made the blunder just to let people see that there is nothing supernatural about him? I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that this is the only way the colonel can get out of the scrape, just to acknowledge the mistake and to say that there is nothing any more supernatural about him than there is about other people—that he who does not believe in ghosts is just as liable to be mistaken as he who does, because all natural people make mistakes; the other kind don't.

Now, there is that word, "ghost." Perhaps some one can tell how that word first came to be used—why it was made. Suppose a man without the faculties of speech and hearing, and also without knowledge of the fact that others speak and hear, can you imagin anything that would suggest the use of those two words, "speech," "hearing?" Having no use for the words, would he manufacture and apply them to something he knew nothing of, and yet hav them properly applied, and they be properly descriptiv of this something about which he knew nothing? R. M. ROBINSON.

SNOWVILLE, VA., May 25, 289.

To N. A. PICKENS, M.D.: In reply to thine of May 25th I would say I am ready and willing to "reason together," and will guarantee "good feeling" so far as I am concerned.

I would rejoice to know I could liv on a few hundred or thousand years yet to come, and still be myself. Of course, I would want to be sure the coming years would be as the past hav been; that is, that they would contain a full average of sunshine, peace, love, and happiness. Not perfect bliss unshadowed by pain, want, or sorrow, for that is an impossible condition, but that each coming year should be as each past one has been for me, a little more full, complete, and satisfactory than any preceding one. Only this could make continual life really desirable.

But our wishes will not create a future or deprive us of it. What is to be is inevitable, and we shall be compelled to accept it.

Truth is always preferable to error, and I am seeking truth in all these reasonings. If thee has a truth which I hav not, I will be glad and grateful to receive it. I hav no idea what evidence I would need to convince me of eternal life. But I am always open to conviction.

As to Lulu Hurst, I hav read all I could about her "wonderful powers," both in press and private correspondence, but I am not at all sure she can move heavy pieces of furniture by simply laying her hand on the top. If she does, it may be through electrical conditions which are stronger in her than in the average human being. We know there hav been men who could read a newspaper just once over and repeat the contents word for word, memory being thus abnormally developed. Some are somnambulic and some hypnotic. We are only beginners at the great school of natural science. We see effects, but must wait for the knowledge of causes.

I deny taking "for granted all that has been said of the enemies of Spiritualism." I hav tried to hear all sides and see all sides, and get at the real truth.

If fifteen millions of Spiritualists are any proof of the ism being true, how about all the millions who hav believed in all other religions and mythologies?

I do not deny that there are strange things, unexplained things, and real things, all the while occurring, that seem to point to the existence of a something that continues after death. I am compelled to believe many of the stories of phenomena. But the causes are beyond my ken. I hav studied the subject carefully ever since the advent of the Rochester rappings, and hav taken from one to six Spiritual papers regularly, but I hav never found proof that death does not end our identity.

I hav lived over sixty years, and never had any experience that was not simple and natural and easily understood.

There are no doubt truths underlying the philosophy of Spiritualism, Theosophy, and all other kinds of occultism. But I believe they are all in us, and hav no connection with a life to come.

I hav no idea what clue led Mr. Church to think thee was in Ensenada. But perhaps there was one, and he failed to realize it. We dream many curious dreams; in a majority of cases we are able to trace these dreams to their causes, but often the clue is lost and forgotten.

No, I do not think Spiritualists, as a class, are "lacking in veracity or clearness of judgment," nor do I think Christians, Mohammedans, or Jews lacking in these qualities. Heredity, education, and environment make us what we are. Some minds are impressed by one class of occurrences, ideas, and experiences, and some by another. No two believe alike in all things demonstrable, and because I object to something thee believes is no proof that I am at all superior in judgment or ability, but merely that we view from different standpoints, because of our different individualities and experiences. We are the outcome of all the past and soon we shall be a part of that past, and our children will take our places, and they in turn will pass away leaving fruit for the future.

Thou but the apples, long, long, long a-growing,
The fruit of all the old ripening to-day in thee.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

DETROIT, MICH., May 20, 1889.

We trust that those Liberals who think that the time is past when Christianity needs to be shown up, and that the period has arrived when we can afford to let evolution do its perfect work, unassisted by attacks upon the Bible and aggressiv warfare upon the churches, will change their minds after reading this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER (TRUTH SEEKER, May 18, 1889).

MR. EDITOR: The above editorial and the reading of THE TRUTH SEEKER of same date giv most ample and unequivocal evidence that the Editor and ninety-nine hundredths of the readers and writers of all Liberal papers are blind leaders of the blind in the one great object they all hav in view. They are certainly blind to the most simple truth that every right that any human being can desire rests upon the untrammeled liberty of all to their life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. The Liberals are making the self-same mistakes that are made by Socialists, Communists, and Anarchists. They all believe that this is a free country; that the people of this country hav for the past one hundred years enjoyed, and do now enjoy, the rights that were claimed in the Declaration of Independence as the inalienable right given by birth to every person born. This is a fatal delusion. For not one shadow of liberty has ever yet been enjoyed by the people of this nation, and not one ever will be enjoyed unless the people's eyes are opened to the truth that by the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, giving power to Congress to tax the people, to declare war, and punish crime, every iota of the liberty the people had fought for and had won was at once blotted out. My friend C. L. James, of Eau Claire, Wis., in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 4th, says: "Mr. J. H. Wood's letter in reply to me shows clearly that he is 'almost persuaded' to be an Anarchist. He believes in no taxes. So do I. But he wants government to issue all the money. Why would it not be simpler, cheaper, and better, for every individual to issue his own money, to circulate at actual value, as ascertained by free competition?" I answer, simply because such a system would be Anarchism run crazy, and endless nuisance, as no one would ever know whether what he had, called money, was worth a mill or not. We want one money, not fifty millions of individual irresponsible promises or debts to hunt up and collect. I hav lived through many years of that kind of currency and hav had plenty. But Mr. James is greatly out in saying that I am in the least inclined to be an Anarchist. And more, Mr. James does not know that he and all other Anarchists believe that they now enjoy the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness in common with all of the people of this country, and finding in despite of these rights all of the evils of poverty, slavery, war, vice, crime, and misery which afflict all other nations on earth, they conclude that they can improve upon the Declaration of Independence by substituting a visionary condition which no one can describe so that the general public can understand it. And the same is true of the Socialist, Communist, and all other seekers after better conditions; and the same, I am sorry to say, is too true of all Liberals and Spiritualists. They accept the Constitution of the United States as protecting the people in the inalienable rights according to the Declaration of Independence—which is another mistake and fatal to all hope of better conditions. The persecutions in three countries by Christians referred to by the Editor, are all by people who are suffering the penalties of the same delusion as Freethinkers. It is the enslaving power wrongfully delegated to Congress and to legislatures that oppresses all classes and conditions of the people, who are differently affected as their education and beliefs are different. All are enslaved. All ask for liberty. But as all are blind to the fact that they are enslaved, and believe that our government is in accord with the declaration of their inalienable rights, they each turn upon the other as arbitrarily encroaching upon their inalienable rights. Liberty will never come from any such methods. The Liberals ought to be the first to see the light. They do in many things believe in cause to effect. But in this case they never seem to see any way but to climb over the dead body of sectarianism. Now, no man or woman can need to feel a greater wish or will for the destruction of all sectarian religion than I do, but war will never overcome superstition and fanaticism. Giv liberty to all, and all sects will die out. They are born of oppression and wrong. They liv and thrive by strife and contention, just as do all other evils. We can overcome evil only by placing good in its place. Everybody ought to read and think upon the declaration that all persons are by their birth endowed with the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. And all should demand with one voice that our government shall be so reformed as to conform to that declaration. Do not let us fool our lives away trying to correct others by law. Law has always been the coward's best weapon. It must be destroyed before there can be peace on earth. So long as we are deluded with the belief that we hav liberty we shall never be free. J. H. WOOD.

LEICHHARDT, SYDNEY, N. S. W., March 10, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Being one of those who are marching in the ranks of freedom's cause, I suddenly seize the idea of penning to you the condition of Freethought in the Australasian colonies. As I am at present in New South Wales, I shall commence with a brief account of the Secularistic cause here. The lecturer W. W. Collins is doing good work, although at present under difficulties owing to the despotism of the New South Wales premier, Sir Henry Parkes, who issued an edict to the detriment of Sunday night lecturers who were using theaters for their anti-theological discourses. Notwithstanding this tyrannical barrier, Freethought is spreading with astonishing rapidity. Sunday in Sydney is devoted to excursions, exhibitions of aquaria, music, Sunday afternoon concerts. At night the theaters are open and splendid programs of concert given, also a good Freethought lecture; all being well patronized. It has been estimated that fully fifty thousand people avail themselvs of Sunday festivities in Sydney. The number of Freethinkers in New South Wales is enormous. Having traveled the provinces, visiting sixty-seven towns and numerous mining centers, I hav found skepticism rampant and a great deal of republicanism. There are two Freethought organs here—the Liberator, edited by Mr. Joseph Symes, of Melbourne, Victoria, and the Freedom, by Mr. W. W. Collins, of this city, both doing very fairly. Democracy is very strong and the working classes hav tremendous power in their respectiv trade councils. The Sydney Bulletin, a weekly Republican journal of very great circulation, and the Australian Star, an evening paper, are the favorit periodicals of the working class. We hav other newspapers, but they pander too much to imperialism and are the aristocrats' favorit organs. Recently a debate exciting much curiosity took place at the Temperance Hall between Mr. W. W. Collins and a Mr. Isaac Selby, an ex-Freethinker and lecturer who has by some mysterious miracle (which he cannot explain) found there is a God. So on the strength of his discovery he challenged Mr. Collins to a two nights' debate, and after Mr. Selby's rambling, stupid assertions on behalf of God, Mr. Collins rose and utterly crushed his opponent. On the second night Mr. Selby was so disgracefully beaten that he had not a vestige of defense left except exhorting people to believe in a God. It is rumored that Mr. Collins meets a Rev. Mr. Sutherland shortly in debate. The Secular association occupy a large building called Tattersalls Chambers. In the same is a lecture-room capable of holding about five hundred persons. Sydney is by far the most Liberal of Australian cities. You will scarcely believe it when I state I hav seen thirteen hundred people in one mass listening to a Freethought lecturer in one of our principal city squares. In the New South Wales legislativ assembly are two Freethinkers, Mr. H. Copeland and Mr. Thomas Walker, also several radicals, and numbers with Rational proclivities. The excitement of the general elections has subdued, each side being satisfied at the result. Protection is marching ahead splendidly. The free trade party only hav a majority of five out of one hundred and thirty-four members. The parsons and their dreary-faced followers hav been trying to close all places of amusements on Sunday, but they were hopelessly beaten. The moderator of the Presbyterian church asserts that the majority of the Sydney population are raised on the milk of Secularism and that the place is becoming a pandemonium, or something to that effect. On Sundays open-air Freethought meetings are held in the domain, and are well attended. Newcastle, the coal city, some sixty miles north, has a Secular association and a number of Freethinkers. Republicanism is rampant, and is showing itself everywhere, even to the abolition of the queen's head on our stamps. Riots hav taken place, some two years back, in which Republicanism mustered strongly and broke up the royalist meetings at last. The military had to be called out, and even then they broke the ranks at the exhibition and rushed on the platform. Lady Carrington caused the disturbance to stop—more through respect to a woman than to her position. In the neighboring colonies Freethought is spreading fast; in Melbourne especially, where Mr. Joseph Symes seeks the suffrages of the electors of Collingwood in the forthcoming parliamentary election. Open-air Freethought lectures are rendered on the Queen's wharf on Sunday afternoons, and in a large tent at Victoria Parade at night. Mr. Symes is being continually persecuted by the bigots of Melbourne. He was fined £50 some two weeks back at the Fitzroy court for erecting a tent and not consulting the board of health—Mr. Symes being ignorant of such a by-law. However, he appealed to the district court and got his appeal, so he gained a victory over his persecutors. The tent is always crowded, as are also numerous lectures on the wharf. Queensland Freethought is progressing favorably. Mr. Wallace Nelson, a regular fly blister for the clergy, lectures at the Gaiety Theater on Sunday evenings to good audiences. Mr. Nelson has just demolished a reverend antagonist named Rev. Mr. Watts. Mr. Nelson occasionally tours Queensland, and always meets with great success. South Australian Freethought is just fair. Having no man of ability to rouse them into action, the Freethinkers hav sunk into a state of lethargy. Tasmania's lecturer, Mr. Downes, tours through the Isle of the South and meets with fair success—and considerable difficulties, but still he perseveres in the glorious cause. At New Zealand, especially at Auckland and Dunedin, Freethought is very fair, most notably at the latter place. The Freethinkers are dreadfully annoyed at Mr. Robert Stout accepting a knighthood. They are of opinion it is very wrong in such an institution as Secularism. Everything predicts a glorious future in the sunny south. Ingersoll's name is mentioned always with tender respect. They recognize in him a champion of great ability. Best wishes to all American Freethinkers.

SYDNEY L. BROUGH.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Red Rose at the Window.

Once a pretty song of rhyming
Came to me,
With an eager, airy chiming
Like the sea;
Morning bells, ocean spells,
Evening tales, spicy gales,
Mother songs, naught of wrongs;
All of these and something more
From a dim and dreamy shore,
While a lark sang overhead
As I slept below in bed,
And a red rose sighed at the window.

Wand'ring there among the flowers
Glad and gay,
Thinking not of falling showers
On my way;
Melody soothing me,
Sweetest bird ever heard
In the leaves 'neath the eaves:
And I waked and walked abroad,
Where the vi'lets deck the sod,
And I lost my threads of song,
For the morn was fair and long
While the red rose called from the window.

Sweet the prairie meadows glistened
In the sun,
And the birds sang, or they listened,
Every one;
Happy wrens in the glens;
Azure bells down the dells;
Fields of wheat for my feet,
And though my spirit sighed
For the song that came and died,
I was gladder on the plain,
And the roses in the rain
Whispered, "'Tis true," at the window.

And that bright rose at the window
Had been born
Where the zephyrs and the wind go
Through the corn,
Free and wild as a child;
Saw the rills seek the mills;
Kissed the breeze from the seas,
And the blushes on her cheeks
Yet reveal the joy of weeks;
While she missed her silver threads
For her mornings on the meads,
'Tis her dream of dreams at the window.

Clearwater, Neb. MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Language of Animals.

I am sure that animals hav a language by which they communicate among themselvs. I believe that power of expression in animals and birds exists in proportion to their mental power. Man has large power of expression because he, of all animals, has the largest power of thought.

I hav heard mother hens and turkeys say in language which the young turkeys and chickens understood instantly and without mistake, "A hawk, a hawk!" or, "A snake, a snake!" Another expression just as well understood is, "Come, here is a worm!" Also, "It is time to go to roost!" I hav heard a mother horse say to her colt in horse dialect which the colt understood, "Look out for that dog!" I hav heard a colt say to a dozen colts, "I am thirsty—let's go and take a drink!" and the others respond, "All right!" and suiting the action to the word, start off at once in line for the water tank half a mile off. I hav often heard one colt say to the others, "There comes a strange horse, let's go and hav some fun with him!" and they would all start off to hav some fun with the stranger. I hav noticed, also, that a young colt a day old will understand every word the old mare says to it.

If she says, "snake," it will leap from it instantly; if "dog," it will run to its mother and keep a sharp lookout from behind the safe breastwork of its mother's body.

I hav noticed among cattle expressions of pity, fear, alarm, and caution. I hav seen the herd gather about a sick animal and try to lift it to its feet by their horns, as carefully as a nurse would raise up a sick patient in bed.

I hav seen tears of pity roll from the great beautiful eyes of the cattle when one of their number cried out in distress. The whole herd would run from all directions to the suffering animal and gaze at it with expressions of sympathy, anxiety, and alarm, quite as intense as I ever saw expressed in human countenances. I hav heard both cattle and horses say to their associates, "Come, I hav found a gap in the fence! come on!" and all understood and acted accordingly. I hav seen a herd of fifty cows and heifers gather about a new calf, with as much interest, and apparently comment on its appearance, as intelligently as women and girls gather around and comment upon a new baby. They seem to say, "How like its father or mother it is! What a big fat calf it is! See its great, brown eyes!" and like expressions, which human beings use on similar occasions.

I hav known Old Gray to slip her halter at night, open a slide in the spout from the oat bin, let out what oats she wanted, eat them, and go back into her stall, and look guilty of stealing in the morning.

I hav seen her often open a slide-gate fourteen feet long, composed of five fence boards, by shoving it endwise sufficiently to get through, with her teeth, and then turn round and say to the other horses and colts in the pasture, "I hav opened the gate, come on!" and all would understand and get into the corn together. When caught in the mischief, Old Gray would make all sorts of excuses, with her eyes and ears, in horse language, exactly as boys and girls do in human language when they are caught in mischief.

I hav a very knowing Hambletonian colt, who likes mischief as well as Peck's "Bad Boy." We named him Hermes because of his tendency to mischief, and because he was swift of foot, though he had no "winged sandals" on his feet like the old Greek god by that name. He learned to untie his halter, take off a rope-fastening from a gate, help himself to oats, and to do many other mischievous tricks before he was two years old. He will deliberately put his foot in a hole in a bridge to see how deep it is, and just for the fun of the thing. He would see some person eating an apple, candy, or something else, and always act as if his mouth watered for a taste just like a boy. We began to offer him a bite, and he seemed delighted, and learned to eat everything that boys will eat—apples, bread and butter, sugar, candy—and to drink milk. And nothing suits him better than to get half a pailful of sweet milk. He is a very spirited animal, but when we hitched him to a cart for the first time, though he was afraid of the harness and the confinement, we assured him it was all right, and he seemed to know and believe what we said to him, though he does not understand English as well as horse language—not quite—but is learning rapidly. He is two years old, of the finest Hambletonian blood; a coat as fine as silk, a beautiful dark chestnut color; fifteen hands and a half high, and ideally perfect in form, with a face and eye as intelligent in expression almost as a human being. I always speak to him as if he understood me, and I believe he does measurably. If there is another life, I hope horses as well as men and women will be partakers of it. I think they must reflect a little at times—that they feel and reason much more than is generally supposed. If I was in God's place, I should giv eternal life to such horses as Hermes. A. J. GROVER.

[We trust our boys and girls will always be kind and gentle toward the animals, whose intelligence and reasoning faculties are so well depicted by our friend. We can learn much from our dumb friends by studying their habits, attachments to those who care for them, and their love for music, etc.—ED. C. C.]

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

A little girl was eating green corn by gnawing it from the cob, when her teeth got entangled with a corn-silk. "O dear!" she said, impatiently. "I wish when they get the corn made they would pull out the basting threads."

A child who had just managed her catechism confessed herself disappointed, "because," she said, "though I obey the Fifth Commandment and honor my papa and mamma, yet my days are not a bit longer in the land, because I'm still put to bed at seven o'clock."

Mrs. B. (calling, takes Emma, aged four, on her knee): "Emma, I want to tell you about my baby Willie. He is only ten months old, and this morning he dashed his bottle on the floor and broke it all to pieces. What do you think of a fit of temper like that?" Emma: "I don't know anything about it. I never was a bottle baby."

A little boy had some young ducks for pets, but the ditch near the house had no water in it, and he had to giv them water in a pan to see them swim. His mother noticing a rain coming one day looked for him, and when she found him, said: "Come in, Alvin; don't you know it's going to rain?" "Course I does. I asked the Lord to make it rain, and full up the ditch so my ducks can swim."

Several years since an Episcopal minister of this city was called to a charge in Plainfield, N. J., of which a superannuated clergyman was rector emeritus. One afternoon the old rector visited the Sunday-school, and after addressing the children, said: "Now, if any of you little boys or girls would like to ask any question on the scripture I will be happy to answer it." Up went a little hand. "Well, sissie, what is it?" said the rector. "If the angels hav wings, why did they walk up and down on Jacob's ladder?" asked little Tot. This proved a puzzler to the aged rector, but he extricated himself very nicely by remarking: "Now, perhaps some other little boy or girl can giv an answer to that question." Up went another little hand. "Well, sonnie, why was it?" asked the rector. "'Cause they was a-moulting," replied the boy.

THE
MARTYRDOM OF MAN.
A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.
By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.
You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.
His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.
The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.
Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 548pp., $1.75.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

MIRACLES
AND
MIRACLE WORKERS.
By JOHN PECK.
"The miraculous is the impossible. Anything within the realm of the possible is no miracle."
Price, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.
PRICE, - - - - - - - - 15 CENTS.
Your treatment of the "Conflict" is excellent.—Harry Hoover.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.
PRICE, 15 CENTS.
Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.
I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.
A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI-PROHIBITION.
PRICE, 20 CENTS.
The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which each point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

FAITH AND REASON.
A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.
With elaborate index.
By HALSEY R. STEVENS.
A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.
Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BIBLE INQUIRER;
OR,
A Key to Bible Investigation.
Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.
BY A. JACOBSON.
Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.
Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.
Price only 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

POINTERS:
A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,
CONTAINING
Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams
Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.
More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.
ONLY TWENTY FIVE CENTS
For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WILL THE COMING MAN WORSHIP GOD?
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, . . . 10 cents.

EVOLUTION:
A SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE.
By CAPT. R. C. ADAMS.
"One of the cheapest and best books on the subject."
Paper, 15 cents.

Advancement of Science
The Belfast Address.
By PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.
With Portrait, Biographical Sketch, and Articles on Prayer.
Paper, 12mo, 105 pp., 25 cents.
Address and Portrait only, 69pp., 10 cents.

AGE OF REASON.
INVESTIGATION OF
TRUE AND FABULOUS THEOLOGY.
By THOMAS PAINE.
Paper, 8vo, 112 pages, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.
With EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES, pap. 40c.

ALAMONTADA,
THE GALLEY SLAVE.
By J. H. D. ZSCHOKKE.
"A philosophical romance."
Paper, 25 cents.

LIFE OF JESUS.
HIS CHARACTER AND DOCTRIN.
Being a chapter from "Analysis of Religious Belief."
By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.
Paper, 8vo, 170pp., 25 cents.

Answers to Christian Questions and Arguments.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 146pp., 25 cents.

AWFUL DISCLOSURES OF MARIA MONK.
CONVENT MYSTERIES.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

GHOST OF ST. JOHNS.
By M. BABCOCK.
Price, 15 cents.

RELIGION OF HUMANITY better than
ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.
By M. BABCOCK.
Price, 10 cents.

ROARING LION ON THE TRACK.
By M. BABCOCK.
Price, 10 cents.

SUPERSTITION:
RELIGION OF
"BELIEVE OR BE DAMNED."
By M. BABCOCK.
Price, 15 cents.

Why Don't God Kill the Devil?
By M. BABCOCK.
Price, 25 cents.

THE CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.
A LIBERAL STORY. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.
Price, 25 cents.

JESUS CHRIST:
His LIFE,
TEACHINGS, and IMPERFECTIONS.
By W. S. BELL.
Price, 25 cents.

RESURRECTION of JESUS:
CONTRADICTIONS Involved In.
By W. S. BELL.
Price, 10 cents.

FIRST EPISTLE of
BENNETT, Apostle, to TRUTH SEEKERS.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Price, 10 cents.

GODS OF SUPERSTITION.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Price, 8 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.
H. Adler. cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co.. 359 Superior st.. Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade. 3.706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick. Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of

Relief Printing Plates

We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.

Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address

MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St., New York.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY

—OF—

POPULAR SCIENCE.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. (19 illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature, (with numerous illustrations). By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No, 7. The Conservation of Energy, (with numerous illustrations). By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Hebert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music, (numerous illustrations), By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel.
No. 12. } By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. (Not sold separately).

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens, (thirty-two illustrations). By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity, (sixty illustrations). By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures, (illustrated). By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo Rawlinson, Oxford University.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. (numerous illustrations). By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology, (numerous illustrations). By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D.

No. 30. } The Study of Words.
No. 31. } By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. (Illustrated). By Prof. T. H. Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. (Illustrated). By Prof. John Tyndall.

No. 38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald
No. 39. } Geikie, F.R.S.

No. 40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By George J. Romanes, F.R.S.

No. 41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.

No. 42 History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.

No. 43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Prof. Huxley, Prof. Agassiz, and others.

No. 44. } The Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary,
No. 45. } of the British Museum.

No. 46. The Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No, 47. The Childhood of Religion. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 48. Life in Nature. (Illustrated). By James Hinton.

No. 49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.

No. 50. } Money and the Mechanism of Ex-
No. 51. } change. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.

No. 52. The Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.

No. 53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays, By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.

No. 55. The Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
No. 57. }

No. 58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double
No. 59. } By Charles Darwin. } Nos.

No. 60. The Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.

No. 61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 62. The Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Univ. of Oxford. (Double number).

No. 63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., President of Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford.

No. 64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russell Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.

No. 65. Conditions of Mental Development: and other essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.

No. 66. Technical Education: and other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. By J. F. C. Hecker, M. D.

No. 68. Three Essays. By Herbert Spencer. Special Number.

No. 69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Double number.

No. 70. Essays Speculative and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, Ph. D. With Appendix on Archæology. By E. B. Tylor, F. R. S.

No. 72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.

No. 73. Evolution in History, Language and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science and Literature.

No. 74. } The Descent of Man, and Selection in
No. 75. } Relation to Sex. (Numerous Illustrations)
No. 76. } By Charles Darwin. Nos. 74, 75, 76 are
No. 77. } single Nos.; No. 77. is a double No.

No. 78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. By William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.

No. 79. Scientific Aspect of some Familiar Things. By W. M. Williams.

No. 80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work By Grant Allen. (Double number).

No. 81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two Essays by J. Allanson Picton.

No. 82. Illusions of the Senses: and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six Essays. By Sedley Taylor, M.A.

No. 84. Studies of Animated Nature. Four Essays on Natural History. By W. S. Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 85. The Essential Nature of Religion. By J. Allanson Picton.

No. 86. The Unseen Universe, and the Philosophy of the Pure Sciences. By Prof. Wm. Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 87. The Morphine Habit. By Dr. B. Ball, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine.

No. 88. Science and Crime and other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 89. The Genesis of Science. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 90. Notes on Earthquakes: with Fourteen Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 91. The Rise of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. (Double number).

No. 92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Earth Worms. By Charles Darwin, LL.D. F.R.S. (Double number).

No. 93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. By J. Mount Bleyer, M.D. (Special number).

No. 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 95. The Diseases of Personality. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.

No. 96. A Half-Century of Science. By Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, and Grant Allen.

No. 97. The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart.

No. 98. Cosmic Emotion: Also the Teachings of Science. By William Kingdon Clifford. (Special number).

No. 99. Nature Studies. By Prof. F. R. Eaton Lowe; Dr. Robert Brown, F.L.S.; Geo. G. Chisholm, F.R.G.S., and James Dallas, F.L.S.

No. 100. Science and Poetry, with other Essays. By Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E.

No. 101. Æsthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. By Jas. Sully and Geo. Croom Robertson.

No. 102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. By William Nelson Black.

No. 103. The Coming Slavery; The Sins of Legislators; The Great Political Superstition. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 104. Tropical Africa. By Henry Drummond, F.R.S.

No. 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. By Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena. With a Prefatory Note by Prof. Huxley.

No. 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. By Grant Allen.

No. 107. Ultimate Finance. A True Theory of Wealth. By William Nelson Black.

No. 108. English, Past and Present. Part. I. By Richard Chenevix Trench, (Double number).

No. 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. By Richard Chenevix Trench.

No. 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd. (Double number).

Single Nos. 15 cents; Double Nos. 30 cents.
Nos. 1 to 111 inclusive, cloth, plain edges—separately or together—10 vols., $2 per vol.
Also same in cloth, extra, red edges, gold back—in sets only—13 vols., $1.75 per vol.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,

OR,

NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,

FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The autnor is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.

DEVOTED TO

Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.

It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:

TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 Warren St., New York.

THE

SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM

Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ For all Diseases of Eyes or Ears. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t23 Shakers P. O, N.Y.

DR. FELLOWS

STARROPHORE

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exponde by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch Liberal is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co., N.Y.

Poetry.

Jesus Christ.

'Tis writ "he had not where to lay his head;"
A homeless tramp, by vagrant fancy led;
Drumming up deadbeats, needy cranks, and bums,
Still making each and all his welcome chums.
A wizard of the times, he showed them tricks
Outdoing Mose' or Aaron's biggest licks;
Or yet the trieky Pucks of modern days,
Who greet their dupes in Spiritistic phrase;
Plying their art in necromantic gloom,
Back in the shadows of a darkened room.
He beat them all: Right in the public walks
The blind man looks to see, the dumb man talks,
The lame leap up, pack up their duds, and start,
Asking no odds of hack or drayman's cart.
A legion of foul fiends from out one man
Rush madly forth, as demons only can,
And seeking refuge in a herd of swine,
They perish, snorting, in old ocean's brine.
A dame, diseased and poor, puts forth her hand,
And she is cured forthwith at his command.
A ruler's daughter—pretty girl, no doubt—
Though dead, waked up alive and toted out.
Beggar and noble were to him the same:
He healed the young and cured the wrinkled dame;
The helpless cripple by Bethsada's side,
Waiting the troubled waters to divide,
By angel help, was told to get and git,
And at the word took up his traps and quit.
Then at a wedding—would the gift were mine—
He turned the water into ruby wine.
When out of cash, he to Saint Peter says,
"Go catch a fish, old boy, and make a raise."
The saint obeys, throws line, and hooks a cod,
And in its mouth a dollar coined by God.
Nothing could balk him in his magic power,
At all times ready, master of the hour.
Five thousand men marched hungry in his train,
And so for three long days did they remain;
Then with five loaves and little fishes two,
Which he so blessed with mercy, they all grew
To such proportions that the starving host
Stuffed them all full with baked and boiled and roast.
And after each and all so entertained
Had had enough, they picked up what remained,
And lo, twelve basketsful! And here I warn
No reader to dispute the vouched-for yarn.
And yet, to hav my say, I must confess
I cannot see one's chances for distress,
Who could get out a silver piece, or more,
By hook and line from fish along the shore,
And hav the power besides, as told above,
To feed so big a crowd and hav to shove
Twelve basketsful aside from such a few
Small loaves of bread and fishes only two.
No need of banks, economy, and such
To one who could command at sight so much.
Gods! what a boon for strikers in our days,
Could they a leader like to Jesus raise!

Le Roy, N. Y. 74.

In Christian Russia.

I am twenty-two years old, and already exiled forever from my country. Four years ago I was a student in a university in one of the largest cities of Russia. In American universities, I understand, it is the custom for two young men to "chum" together. In Russia we are not so rich, and three or four contribute toward the common expenses. I was one of a group of four. One of these four was, unknown to the others, a Nihilist. This could not well happen here. It can readily happen in Russia, where one half of the population spies on the other half. The government has its spies in the schools, the universities, the streets, the shops, the cafés. The revolutionists hav their spies in the police, the army, the palace, and the body-guard itself.

My brother had incurred the enmity of a commandant of gendarmes. He had been arrested as a political suspect and sent to Siberia. Since my brother's arrest I had been, unknown to myself, under police surveillance, though I belonged to no Nihilistic circle, read no Nihilistic literature, and had accepted my poor brother's loss as one of those inevitable cruelties to which the Russian who is not a noble is hardened. One evening when I came home from the theater I found my room full of gendarmes, who arrested me at once for political crime. I was then and there searched. The police pulled to pieces everything in the room that could contain books, pamphlets, or papers, but found nothing of a compromising nature. I was then put into a covered drosky and taken to prison. I was first taken before the colonel of police, the man whose enmity exiled my brother. He asked me who my friends were and what they were doing. I demanded the c use of my arrest. No explanation was given me, and having nothing to confess I had no information to giv. I was marched off at once to my cell, to wait there until I was prepared to enlighten the government on a subject of which I knew nothing. I learned months afterward that I had been arrested because a few days before written proclamations had been circulated by the Nihilists. The handwriting resembled mine, and I had been seen purchasing fifty postage stamps at one of the government offices.

My cell, shall I ever forget it? It would be unjust for me to pretend that all the cells in a Russian prison were like mine. I was purposely sent to one of the worst, that, being young, I might be frightened into a confession. The rack and the whip are not now used in Russia, but there are civilized methods of torture that can compel confession as severe as those of the Inquisition of Spain or the secret councils of Venice. I felt when the door was opened as if I were entering a grave. Picture to yourself a square hole in the middle of a stone seven feet long, seven feet wide, and six feet high. For once I blessed my short stature. There was no window in this hole but a glass over the door; no light but what came from the oil lamp that hung outside. An iron bedstead, fastened to the wall, cut off a foot or so of space from my narrow limits. Everything is made fast, that the desperate may not commit suicide, for those who go insane in prison are not few. A wooden table was locked to the floor at one end of the den, and by its side was fastened a wooden chair. On the wall hung an icon, a sacred picture of a saint, to encourage devotion. I had plenty of time for devotion. There was no light for books or the small industries in which prisoners employ themselvs. I was allowed to do no work. The gilded lines of that hateful figure, the only bright object in that murky darkness, burnt themselvs into my brain. I could see them repeated in the empty air in every corner of my cell, and even now they come back to me at times when I am in total darkness.

On the bed was a straw mattress and two blankets. That straw was changed but once a month. On entering the prison I had been submitted to a search beside which the search at my room was child's play. I was even made to open my mouth that the police might be assured that there was no dynamite concealed there. They discovered nothing more formidable than my tongue. I was allowed to retain my underclothes, but instead of my outer garments I received a long woolen robe like a dressing-gown. With this for day use and my blankets by night I was never cold. Who could be cold in an atmosphere like that of my cell? If the cell was warm enough, it was hardly dry. Water trickled constantly over the stone walls and waked me by trickling on my face. After a number of weeks of this solitary confinement my nerves became so shattered that when this happened I would leap from my bed in shuddering agony. In that damp cave I contracted an affection of the lungs from which I hav never recovered.

The meals in a Russian prison are simple, and not conduciv to dyspepsia. In the morning I had black bread and tea, at noon cabbage soup, in the evening black bread and tea and five cigarets. Soup as the only dish does not form a very substantial meal. The soup served to prisoners was simply the water in which the meat served to the gendarmes and guards had been boiled. Into this cabbages were cut. It sustained life, but that was all. The cigarets were a boon. In Russia everybody smokes. I used to save these cigarets and smoke them slowly through the day like a child that nibbles a bit of barley sugar "to make it last long." Sunday was a gala day. We had pork and beans for dinner instead of soup. Do not imagin the Russian dish resembles the Boston one. Our beans were hard and poor, miserably cooked, and with small bits of pork, the size of dice, buried in a wilderness of lentils.

Whenever the door opened at meal-times two gendarmes entered with the bowl and stood beside me with loaded revolvers while I made my frugal repast. The food was served in a wooden bowl, and both bowl and spoon were instantly removed by the guards when the prisoner had finished. There is no chance of making chisels out of one's table furniture in Russia. The abbe of Dumas's novel would hardly hav constructed that remarkable tunnel from my cell.

In this hole I lived for months, and no man who has not suffered the horrors of solitary confinement can appreciate what I suffered. The cell doors are not opposit each other, so that it was impossible for me to see the window of the man confined across the corridor. More than this, the little window of my own cell was usually occupied by the eyes of a gendarme who had me under inspection. It is terrible, this inspection, and one cannot grow accustomed to it. Those eyes, always shining through that hole in the wall, had a horrible fascination. I hated them, and yet I looked for them. It is bad enough to be alone, but to be confined with a pair of silent eyes is more horrible still. At first I used to ask the officer of the guard what my offense was and what would be my fate, but after having been answered that I was doomed to Siberia, I learned wisdom and was silent. My only amusement was the formation of various crazy plans for escape. How I escaped lunacy I hardly know myself. After I had been confined for two months I heard one day, toward evening, a tapping against the wall of my cell. Those who hav read Mr. Kennan's admirable articles will know at once what it was, but I did not guess the cause for some time. Finally I guessed that it was some plan of communication from another prisoner, and such it proved. I need not repeat here what has been told so well elsewhere of the mode of talking by taps. There is in nearly every cell in some obscure corner, observable only by the eyes of men who, like bats, hav grown used to the darkness, a little plan scratched in the stone, if by nothing else, sometimes by a broken tooth of a prisoner. In this plan the letters are so arranged that by a combination of taps it is unnecessary to tap twenty-three times for the twenty-third letter. Of course, at first, before I discovered the compound method, my next-door neighbor tapped once for a, twice for b, and so on. When once I had mastered this method of communication I felt no longer alone. Tapping is forbidden, and the government knows that it exists, but the key of the tapping alphabet they hav not yet discovered, even through their spies.

The wall separating me from the next cell was the wall behind my bed, so that when lying on the bed I could tap the wall away from the door without being noticed by the gendarme. One unhappy evening I was discovered and the next day was sentenced for punishment to confinement in one of the towers in the four corners of the inclosure that walled in the prison buildings. These towers were designed not by men but by devils. Iron stairways surround them, on which the sentries stand day and night. The towers are circular and about fifty feet in hight. They contain from eight to ten rooms, one on top of the other. I was led out of my cell through the corridor and thence across the open courtyard. The glare of light was torment to my darkness-dulled eyes, and I had to close them. If the light was a torment, however, the air was a cordial, and gave me strength for what was to follow. I was conducted up the iron stairway to the fourth cell from the ground. There was air enough there, but if my first cell was small this was a pill box. The hight was but four and a half feet, and it was not long enough for me to lie at full length, and I am a short man. The diet was bread and water twice a day. In this torturing den I was kept for three or four weeks, till I lost my senses from exhaustion. Some time previous to this I had begun to spit blood from my lungs. In spite of the pain of this place of confinement, the chief mode of punishment, it was preferable to the mental and nervous torments of the dark hole in which I was confined. The window was grated and painted white, but it did admit light, and there was plenty of fresh air.

From the tower I was taken, like a corpse, to the infirmary. The beds here were separate and there was at least fresh air and better food. For breakfast there was white bread and oatmeal, for dinner beef or some other good meat, and for supper white bread. Sometimes articles were sent to the sick prisoners by the charitable. I fell heir to a handkerchief with a coronet sent by some noble woman or other who sympathized with us. Of course it was taken from me when I left the prison, and there was some excitement in guessing who the donor was. The physician who inspected us was a personal acquaintance of my father's, and I saw the tears in his eyes when he came to me. But he could do nothing for me, for the physicians themselvs are watched at every moment by the gendarmes, and the slightest suspicion of connivance with the prisoners is followed by heavy punishment. After two weeks of hospital life I was sufficiently recovered to be taken before the authorities for the "do-pross," or official examination, and then for the first time I learned the nature of my crime.

I was too weak to walk, and was carried to the examination-room. It was hung with black, like the hall of the Inquisition. Behind the table covered with black sat the general of police, the minister of justice, the state attorney, and a secretary with the protocols. I was carried to the prisoners' cage and made to stand while the charge against me was read, though I was mercifully allowed to sit when the questions were asked. A gendarme, with revolver loaded, stood on each side of me, and two more guarded the entrance. The general of police asked the questions and the attorney wrote down the answers.

At first I declaimed against the czar and his government, but the pistol barrels stopped that. I was then asked if I belonged to any society, and names of my friends, and what they had in view. I answered that I did belong to such a society, and that its intention was to kill the czar and destroy the government. The names of my friends I declined to disclose in St. Petersburg, but I promised to do so if sent to Odessa, where, I said, I need not fear assassination. All the officers rose when I told these lies, and promised me everything under heaven if I would disclose the names then and there; but I stuck to my purpose. At first they tried to make me sign my testimony without reading it, but I declined to sign till I was shown all that had been written, and then with great difficulty, so weak was I, I signed my name. This false testimony was part of a plan of escape. In spite of constant watching, solitary confinement, and stone walls, I had had word from my friends, and my escape in all its details was planned before I had left the prison.

After my examination I was taken back to the infirmary, and as it was supposed that I was going to aid our paternal government by betraying my friends, I was fed on the best of fare. Roasted fowls and sound wine came to my table instead of sour soup and black bread. I kept up an exhibition of sickness as long as possible, in order to receive this life-giving regimen, but at the end of three weeks I was unable to sham any longer, and was pronounced well enough to move. Since my examination I had got back my own clothes, and it was in them without chains that I was put into a covered drosky and taken to the railroad station. A squadron of cavalry surrounded the vehicle. There was a gendarme on the driver's seat beside the isvostchik and two with me inside. The station was cleared of people, and a crowd collected on the outside, believing that I had attempted to assassinate the czar. Through a double file of gendarmes I was conducted to a special car on the express train. People in the crowd threw me cigarets, but most of these were kept by my guards. At last the train started and we were fairly on our way, the guards to Odessa and I to freedom.

In the carriage in the rear were two friends of mine. The escape had been arranged to take place after leaving a certain station. I was to be warned which by hearing at the station previous the name of that station called loudly, as if to some tourist, three times under my window. Finally the signal came, and at the next stopping-place I was in a tingle of excitement. The train stopped, and as usual at the large stopping-places, one of my three guards left the carriage and returned with a big urn of tea. As usual, also, they offered me a drink, but I declined. They all crossed themselvs and soon finished the tea. The train started, and in five minutes my three gendarmes were sound asleep and snoring. The waiter had been bribed, and my three gendarmes had taken a pretty substantial dose of laudanum. Once assured that they were asleep, I made my way through the little corridor to the rear of the car. I hav said that I was in my own clothes and without chains, and, watching as well as I could in the dusk, jumped at last into what looked like a soft ditch. It was soft, very soft. I went into the mud up to my neck. However, I was not hurt, and in this I was more fortunate than my friend, who also leaped from the train. He sprained his ankle badly. To cover his tracks he had bought a ticket only half-way to Odessa, and had bribed the conductor to let him ride farther—a practice common enough in Russia. When, therefore, the police tried to ascertain if any of the passengers who had bought tickets for Odessa had left the train before reaching that place, there was no missing ticket and no Odessa passenger to be accounted for. Making for the woods, we struggled to the first little town, and there hired a kibitka and went straight to Odessa, as the place of all others where we were the least likely to be looked for.

My poor companion had but $37, an amount barely enough to take us to Odessa; and so, though forged passports had been provided for us, I was obliged to wait in Odessa till remittances arrived from some friends. In Russia there is a sort of free-masonry among the students, and so I was at once welcomed among the friends of my friend, and, of course, immediately assumed a disguise that I might not be recognized, for within a day or two all the region along the line of the railroad on which I had traveled was placarded with offers of a reward of 2,000 roubles for information that would lead to my capture. At that time the unfortunate Jews in Odessa were undergoing that strange persecution that attracted the attention of the civilized world. Mobs formed in the streets, largely of students. I saw a Cossack strike with his riding-whip a student who was protecting some Jews, and I fired a revolver at him. A mounted officer, whom I afterward discovered to be the general in charge of the garrison, saw me fire the shot and rode his horse at me. Then I remembered what in my excitement I had forgotten, that I had about me the names of people who would giv me assistance, and considerable correspondence that would insure the arrest of some of my friends. I ran like a hare down the street, but four feet are better than two, and, as the fleet horse overtook me, scarcely knowing what I was about, I leaped to one side and leveled a blow at my pursued. My heavy student's staff fell with a thud on the general's illustrious leg, and at that appropriate moment his horse slipped and fell. I did not wait to see his fate, but, knowing that now death within twenty-four hours awaited me, I again took to my heels, and, dodging and doubling, escaped my pursuers, and at last gained the open country and the woods, where I struggled on till I fairly fell from exhaustion. I passed the night in the open air where I fell, and on awakening in the morning was racked in every joint by pain and stiffness. I hobbled along with my back to the rising sun till I saw smoke issuing from a cabin.

I went boldly to the hut and told the woodman who came to the door that I was an escaped prisoner from a convoy on the way to Siberia—a pretty sure passport to the kindness and hospitality of the ordinary Russian peasant. He took me in and I remained with him two days. He informed me at length that he was a smuggler, and offered to show me a secret way across the boundary. I was obliged to swear secrecy on the blade of a dagger, and to promis that I would from the other side aid him to secure contraband goods. How I was to do this I am sure I don't know. On my oath the smuggler closed his cabin and we pursued our way through by-paths and lonely roads and across treacherous quicksands till we were fairly across the Austrian frontier. Here I bade good-bye to my friendly guide and scrambled along to the first railway town, where I used what little money I had to procure a ticket to a point as near Vienna as possible. I got no farther than Brod. There I was at my wits' end. The town was full of starving Jews, who had fled from Odessa. Suffering for food I went with them up and down the streets asking for bread. On the day on which I took to public mendicancy an order had been issued to arrest these pauper immigrants and to ship them back to Odessa. I was seized with the rest and sent back. At the Odessa prison I was, with the others, stripped and put through the bath. My false beard and complexion disappeared in the process. My photograph was at once forwarded to St. Petersburg, and was recognized as that of the wicked Nihilist who leaped from the train. My complicity in the unhappy accident that kept the commandant of the garrison in bed for six months was never suspected, and proof of my personality as the assailant was left behind in the bath.

I was sent back to St. Petersburg, this time not only in a special car, but in a special train. Surrounded by a body of cavalry, I was conveyed to the Petro-Pavelsky prison, whose arrangement those who hav read the articles of Mr. Kennan sufficiently understand. I was taken at once before the governor of the prison and told to name those who had aided my escape. Of course I refused. I was then taken to my cell. Beside the first cell that I hav described this narrow room was luxurious. The food, however, was the same, and the inspection, if possible, more rigorous. From this prison I was transferred to the Litoffski Zamok, where I had the luxury of two windows, which were, however, painted white, that I might not see what was moving in the outer world.

After six months' further imprisonment, no proof of any conspiracy or Nihilistic knowledge being found, I was pardoned by the czar, but ordered to be kept under police surveillance for five years, with loss of civil rights—that is, without the protection of the law against theft or even against assault and battery. My entire property, or rather that which I should hav inherited, had been confiscated. My first task was to visit the graves of my father and mother, and then, having accumulated enough money for the necessary bribes, I made my way to Siberia to try to help my brother. I found it impossible to aid him to escape, but having eluded police surveillance in my escape to Siberia, I was in no mood to return to it in Russia; so I made my way to Hong Kong and thence to San Francisco.—L. L. in New York Tribune.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Oberver (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Oberver relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 Cents.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

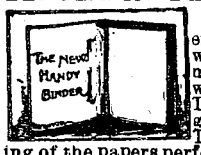
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Brooklyn Philosophical Association.

Meets at Fraternity rooms, Bedford avenue and South 2d street, Brooklyn, E. D., at 3 P.M., every Sunday. Admission free. Discussions follow lectures.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - - 15c

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right.

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 190 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, Eng.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

News of the Week.

THE Berlin masons, who are striking, are out of work a third of the year, earning about $250.

A MONUMENT to Confederate soldiers who fell at Alexandria, Va., has been dedicated at that place.

ILLINOIS has rejected Prohibition.

EVICTIONS, attended by violence, continue in Ireland.

THE national debt reduction during May was $7,500,000.

THE shah of Persia is the guest of the czar at St. Petersburg.

A RIOT at Guthrie, Oklahoma, has been prevented by soldiers.

THE Boulangists hav resolved to contest all elections in France.

NORDEN, Neb., fears an Indian raid, and is preparing against it.

REV. MR. GAGE, of Philadelphia, committed suicide on the 31st ult.

KING HUMBERT of Italy has met a warm reception on his visit to Berlin.

MILITIA hav been dispatched to several Illinois mining towns to keep peace.

THE Haytian generals Hippolyte and Legitime are still fighting over the presidency.

QUEEN VICTORIA, in honor of her seventieth birthday, created three baronets and a knight.

AS an example of the reactionary lengths to which John Bright's senility carried him, he remarked not long before death that the House of Lords should be composed of the noblemen owning the largest estates, to be elected by other landowners.

THE recent Mormon conference reported 12 apostles, 70 patriarchs, 3,719 high priests, 11,805 elders, 2,069 priests, 2 292 teachers, 11,610 deacons, 81,899 families, 115.915 officers and members, and 49,302 children under eight years of age, a total Mormon population of 153,911.

EMILE LAVELEYE urges that a special treaty be made between England and the United States providing for the peaceful settlement of all disputes, and publicly appeals to Mr. Gladstone to take the lead in this particular movement at the international arbitration conference to meet in Paris in June.

THE statistics of divorce in the United States reported by Commissioner Wright show its prevalence to hav been exaggerated. Divorces average one to five hundred marriages, and are most numerous in the West and New England—in the latter because of many going there to avail themselvs of the liberal laws.

HEAVY storms for several days over the upper half of the country east of the Mississippi, extending into Canada, hav raised the rivers, flooding cities and washing away bridges, and doing other damage of every nature, with considerable loss of life in many states. At Johnstown, Pa., a city of 10,000 population, there occurred the greatest accident in the history of the nation. About 5 P.M. on the 31st ult. a dam on the Conemaugh river, just above, broke, and the city was swept away. A great pile of wrecked houses lodged against a bridge and took fire, and a large number of persons were burnt to death. The highest estimate places the lives lost by drowning at 13.000 and by burning at 2,000; the lowest places the total at 5,000. Sensational scenes were presented by robberies of the dead, and mutilations of fingers and ears to get jewelry, with the lynching and shooting of the robbers by law-observers. The Pennsylvania railway received damages it will take years to repair. Subscriptions are being collected for the sufferers everywhere.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4: mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

JOSHUA MEETETH THE LORD'S CAPTAIN.

And it came to pass, when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold there stood a man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand: and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?—Joshua v, 13.

Gems of Thought.

AT the end of the thirteenth century, the enemies of nature had reached the zenith of their power; and, at that time, it may be said that, without a single exception, the countries of Christian Europe were worse governed, more ignorant, more superstitious, poorer, and unhappier than the worst governed province of pagan Rome.—Professor Oswald, M.D., in The Secret of the East.

FEUDALISM was a concentration of all scourges. The peasant, stripped of the inheritance of his fathers, became the property of ignorant, inflexible, indolent masters: he was obliged to travel fifty leagues with their carts whenever they required it: he labored for them three days in the week, and surrendered to them half the product of his earnings during the other three; without their consent, he could not change his residence or marry. And why, indeed, should he wish to marry, if he could scarcely save enough to maintain himself? The abbot Alcuin had twenty thousand slaves, called serfs, who were forever attached to the soil. This is the great cause of the rapid depopulation observed in the Middle Ages, and of the prodigious multitude of monasteries which sprang up on every side. It was doubtless a relief to such miserable men to find in the cloisters a retreat from oppression; but the human race never suffered a more cruel outrage, industry never received a wound better calculated to plunge the world again into the darkness of the rudest antiquity. It suffices to say that the prediction of the approaching end of the world, industriously spread by the rapacious monks at this time, was received without terror.—Blanqui's History of Commerce.

WHAT now concerns, in conclusion, the influence of Materialism upon society, will easily be established from what has been said before. This influence can be only a beneficent one; for, in the first place, it must giv to every individual a previously unknown peace and cheerfulness of mind by delivering him from those agonizing doubts and fears to which the systems of the past subjected him; while in the second place it directs the attention of every individual, and consequently of society, to what is real and practical, or in a word, to life itself, and compels him to seek the ideals which formerly appeared to his vision only in the distance, in his immediate proximity.—Dr. Buchner in Materialism: Its History and Influence Upon Society.

THE Christian has always the dread before him that God, in fierce displeasure or infinit mercy and loving kindness, may see fit to thwart all his schemes, destroy his property, bereave him of family, and wreck his earthly happiness; but he tries to enjoy the consolation that it will be for his spiritual and everlasting welfare. The Secularist, on the other hand, is free from this element of uncertainty in his calculations. If his plans are well laid, his efforts commensurate, his knowledge sufficient, and his work in accord with nature's conditions, he will succeed, and he need not fear that a loving but meddlesome father will interfere, snatch away the fruits of his toil, and giv them to some lazy scoundrel who has done nothing to deserve them. If he does fail, it is owing to the limitations of human knowledge; and its lesson is not submission to God and the study of apology for conduct on his part, which, if indulged in by a fellow-man, would be considered mean and cruel, but the misfortune stimulates to a study of its causes and to future efforts to remove the obstacles to human progress, which are solely those that man's conquest of natural forces will overcome.—Robert C. Adams in Pioneer Fith.

IT is absolutely necessary to destroy theology.—Voltaire.

THE liberty of man is not safe in the hands of any church.—Ingersoll.

CHRISTIAN education consists in training small Christians, from their earliest infancy, in the healthful habits of making as little use of their reason as may be, of believing all they are told to believe, of hating all who do not believe what they believe—all to the end of raising up for the state sensible and reasoning citizens, orderly fearing God, and above all humbly submissiv to the clergy.—Voltaire.

THE strength of early association is a fact so universally recognized, that the expression of it has become proverbial.—Dr. Carpenter.

WE should hav Freethought colleges and Secular missions, and even isolated Liberals might do better than "drift with the stream." They might let their children pass their Sundays in the freedom of the forests and mountains to worship the God of Nature in his own temple.—Prof. Felix L. Oswald in The Bible of Nature.

AFTER all, the poorest bargain that a human being can make, is to giv his individuality for what is called respectability.—Ingersoll.

ON every hand are the enemies of individuality and mental freedom. Custom meets us at the cradle and leaves us only at the tomb.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

IT was the woman who saw the first snake, but since then the men hav attended to that sort of thing.—Leisure Hours.

A WESTERN minister has been preaching Dr. Talmage's sermons, but his friends expect to prove that he is insane.—Life.

A VERY interesting sight is to watch a minister try to open a car window. The dramatic effect comes from what he doesn't say.

SHE (at the charity bazar): "It was like Lord Pancake's impudence to ask me to sell him a kiss. How absurd! I wonder what the other girls would hav thought? What a nuisance they were so near!"—Once-a-Week.

THE Rev. Dr. Primrose: "Do you believe in the unselfishness of human nature?" Indigent artisan: "Yes, sir. I'm a cutlery-grinder by trade, and there's no truth in the saying that every man has an ax to grind."—Life.

JENNY: "Here comes Jack, auntie. I wish you would come down and stay in the room." Auntie: "Why?" Jenny: "I'm afraid he's going to propose, and I can't trust myself—he looks so poor and so handsome."—Munsey's Weekly.

AMONG the folk songs of Oklahoma are said to be the following: "Derned Be the Man Who Jumps My Claim," "Here's to My Trusty Rifle," "Drive the Stake in Firm and True," "Back to the States I Wearily Tramp," and,

"Tenderfoot, tenderfoot, hear me sue,
Gimme your wad or the day you'll rue"
—Oil City Blizzard.

MISS GERTRUDE: "Oh, Mr. Searnly, I'm so glad you've come; can't you do something for poor Towser? He ran a nail in his foot some time ago, and to-day he was taken with the lock-jaw." Mr. Y. Searnly (sympathetically): "I'll do what I can for the poor dog. Miss Gertie—er—don't you think I'd better come around every night, now, until he is better?"—Detroit Free Press.

ST. PETER: "Any credentials?" Newly arrived soul (confidently): "I spent my life getting up stories about Atheists struck dumb, profane men struck by lightning, etc., to be telegraphed by the press associations. Highly moral work, sir." St. Peter (confidentially): "Come in, then. The place across the way claims a larger population than we hav, and I can make you useful in the census department."

To the true-born Westerner, in whom the instinct of moving on to find a more desirable country never dies, not even the Pacific ocean can be a barrier. A man of this class who had lived successfully in a number of states and territories between his nativ Ohio and his present home in California, one day had a revival of his migratory longing. He must "pack his grip" and "go West." "But how can you get any farther west than California?" he was asked "Pshaw!" he answered. "There's plenty of West left, all down through Mexican California and South America. There's Peru, now; I'd giv a good deal to see the mines down there. I tell you, sir," he cried, warming with his subject, "it must be real good and Westy down in Peru!"

UNANSWERED.

O Japanese bird, on the gilded screen,
With your legs at an angle wide,
With your wings outspread and your head between,
And your neck in a bow-knot tied,
If you only could speak
With your yellowish beak
What secrets could you confide!

Oh! tell me, my friend, when you screened the face
Of your dear little mistress, Rose—
With her deep blue eyes and her dainty grace,
Who blooms as her namesake blows—
Hav you heard lovers sigh
(As, for instance, did I)—
Hav you heard them, perhaps, propose?

Has she ever, by chance, dropped the slightest hint
That she liked me, a little mite?
Hav you noticed her cheek take a deeper tint
When I happen to come in sight?
What! you've nothing to say?
Well, she'll tell me—some day.
I'll forgiv you, old bird; good night!—Judge.

"No, sir." said a quiet-looking traveling man to a companion on the train, "I can truthfully say that I am very little given to fear. I never was afraid of anything or anybody in my life." "That is more than I can say." "It's a fact nevertheless." "By the way, I should think a man of your age would hav been married long before this." "How do you know that I am not married?" "I gathered it from your conversation."—Merchant Traveler.

TO A CHINESE IDOL.

Once you ruled, a god divine,
In a sacred, steady shrine
Near a river dark as mine,
'Mid the trees,

And to you the mandarins,
With their smooth, unshaven chins,
Prayed absolvence from their sins
On their knees.

Tiny-footed Chinese maids,
With their raven hair in braids,
Sought you in your quiet shades
'Neath the bonghs;

Haply, for a thousand years,
You beheld their smiles and tears,
Listened to their hopes and fears,
And their rows.

Now above her escritoire
In my lady's pink boudoir,
Ever dumbly pining for
Last repose,

You sit stolid day by day,
With your cheeks so gaunt and gray,
Stony eyes and retrousse
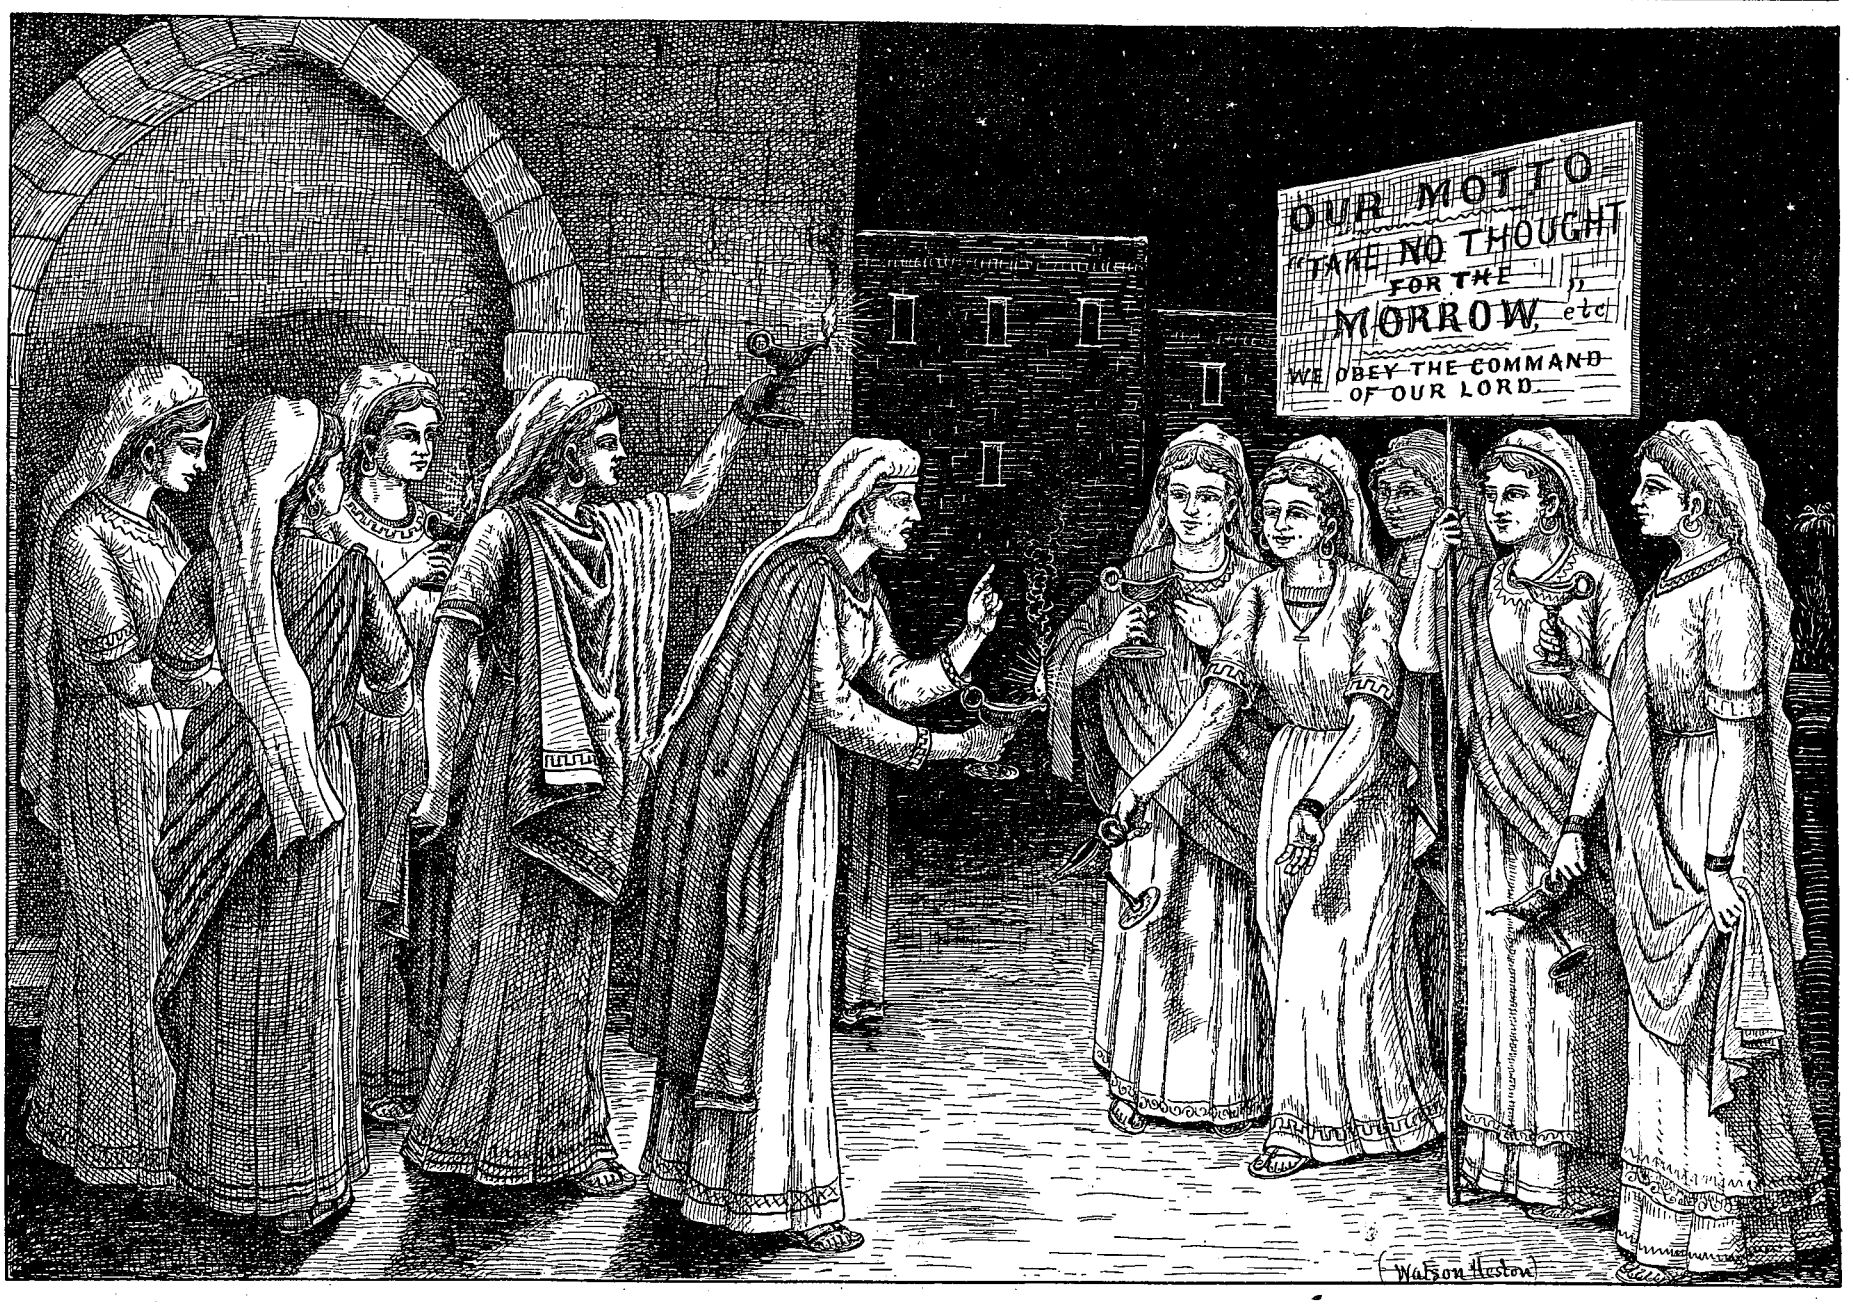
Little nose.

Where the sunlight glinteth o'er
Persian rug and polished floor
You will frown forevermore,
Grim as hate;



A divinity cast down,
Having neither shrine nor crown,
Once a god, but now a brown
Paper-weight!—Clinton Scollard.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 24. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, June 15, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

WHY THE FOOLISH VIRGINS HAD NO OIL.

Notes and Clippings.

IT has been decided in Russia that women may be physicians; but they must confine their services to children and adults of their own sex.

A DEBATING society in Cleveland, O., is to discuss the question: "Who is the more truly pious, Postmaster-general Wanamaker or Col. Elliott F. Shepard?"

A TRAVELER recently returned from Turkey says that the dress of the ladies of Constantinople has become so much like that of their "Infidel" sisters that a wife of the sultan would attract very little attention in an American street.

THE globe in the Paris Exhibition represents the earth on the scale of one-millionth, and is nearly one hundred feet in diameter. Paris occupies about a third of an inch. All the great lines of communication by land and sea are shown in detail. The earth's daily rotation will be precisely imitated by clockwork, a point on the globe's equator moving an eightieth of an inch per second.

ENGLISH-SPEAKING peoples hav never before suffered so great a loss of life in calamities caused by floods as in the Johnstown disaster. Yet two tragedies of recent years, the Sun recalls, far surpass the Johnstown horror in the sacrifice of human life. The great waves, forty feet high, that swept the shores of Sunda strait after the Krakatoa explosion drowned, it is believed, over forty thousand people, and probably several hundred thousand perished a year ago when the Yellow river flooded a great area with many feet of water.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S motion to abolish perpetual pensions has shown up the peculiar history of one of them. On the list is a small pension standing to the credit of a Scottish peer for the fulfilment of a sinecure office. For two generations not a penny has gone into the family coffers. This peer's grandfather, being in need of ready money, sold the pension to a Portsmouth Jew, whose heirs and assigns draw it to this day.

THE French government is trying to put a stop to the emigration from France to the Argentine Republic, which has recently been growing large, so that last year over eighteen thousand Frenchmen sailed for Argentine ports. The Argentine Republic has proved to be a very inviting field for the Frenchman. In the greater part of it the climate is temperate and healthy; it has a moderate and progressiv government; it has vast areas of fertil and unoccupied land, and it offers many advantages to immigrants like those it has been getting from France.

THE Commercial Advertiser thus lectures the postmaster-general: "The complete separation of church and state is decreed in our Constitution, and the principle of perfect abstinence from governmental interference with theological affairs is deeply imbedded in our system. Mr. Wanamaker had better let it alone and giv his attention exclusivly to the duty of perfecting the postal service. If his conscience will not let him preside over a department in which Sunday work is necessary, there is nothing to prevent him from resigning the office he has bought and going back to his shop, where he can put up the shutters every Saturday night without objection on the part of anybody."

A FEW out of a large number of cases of distress to whom the committee of the Clergy Corporation hav recently given assistance are thus described: A curate with eight children under eight years of age, and a stipend of £126 a year; a vicar with five young children, and an annual income of £100; a vicar with six children under fifteen years of age, and an annual income of £134 and a house; a vicar with eight children under eighteen years of age, and £117 annual income; a curate with six young children, and a stipend of £120; a vicar with eleven children under fifteen years of age, and an annual income of £189.

CANON WILBERFORCE writes to a London newspaper that his belief in miracles has been strengthened by a miracle performed upon himself by means of anointing and prayer. "My internal ailment," he writes, "was of such a nature that leading surgeons declared it to be incurable except at the cost of a severe operation. At last I sent for elders—men of God, full of faith—by whom I was prayed over and anointed, and in a few weeks the internal ailment passed entirely away." The canon takes pains to say that he is confident that he was healed by "the Lord's blessing upon his own word; but, as in so many cases, there was sufficient margin of time and possibility of change of tissue between the anointing and the recovery to justify the skeptic in disconnecting the two."

IF at all, surely God does move "in a mysterious way." At least, one would be justified in so thinking, says Secular Thought, after reading the account of that awful catastrophe in Johnstown, Pa., which happened last week. There, through the breaking of a reservoir, a whole town was devastated, and thousands of human beings, young and old, were suddenly engulfed in a "watery grave." Where was this alleged "Providence," with his "all-protecting hand," at that moment? We are told in the New Testament that even sparrows "shall not fall on the ground without your Father." This may be so, but it is clear that mothers, fathers, and babes may be drowned without warning, and the "father" make no effort to save his despairing children. In the face of such horrible scenes as the above sad calamity presented, what becomes of the delusiv teaching of "God's providence?" "O ye of little faith!"

THE mayor of New York, says the Boston Herald, could hardly hav hit upon a better plan for fortifying his position in favor of opening the museums in the metropolis on Sundays than by applying to the mayor of Boston for information as to the results of our experience in this direction. The figures gathered by the mayor of Boston show that nine-tenths of all the visitors to the Art Museum go there on one of the two free days of the week, Saturday and Sunday, and, as between these two days, the latter accommodates by far the larger number of visitors, indicating that the ennobling influence of art makes itself felt among the poorer classes, where it cannot fail to do good. It is to be hoped that these statistics will furnish Mayor Grant with sufficient material to overcome the foolish prejudice that prevails among the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and Museum of Natural History against opening the doors of these institutions on Sundays henceforward. Boston is only too proud to act the part of a missionary in such a cause.

Communications.

The Origin of Christianity.

To F. M. HOLLAND: I cannot understand how the Rabbi Schindler can hav any belief in the Jesus story—so absurd, impossible, incomprehensible; such a violation of all physical laws—and considered it necessary to quote the statement of the English lawyer, "that the sanhedrim never condemned anyone to death, on the day of his trial, or on account of his own admissions therein."

As almost everything related of Jesus is impossible, it is satisfactory to know that his biographers, the unknown authors of the story, blundered in their account of the imaginary trial.

If I remember aright some two or three conversations that you and I hav had upon the subject, you think it probable that there existed a living person—a flesh-and-blood, not a purely spiritual, being—from incidents in whose life the Jesus story originated. And here I wish it to be understood that I do not believe in a spiritual Jesus, in spirits or spiritual beings. To me these words convey no meaning. They originated in ignorance, and are perpetuated by ignorance and fraud. When a man says that a spirit did anything, it is equivalent to saying that he is ignorant of the cause. When an intelligent man talks of spirits as realities, I question his honesty.

I never did, I never could, believe the Jesus story, though born into the most intense orthodox surroundings, and fed on the very cream of the orthodox word as dispensed in Park street church, Boston, with the Assembly's Catechism as the dessert. Perhaps, in the same circumstances, your stomach would hav rejected it, as mine did. My Jesus was a God—a far more important personage than his father, Jehovah—while yours was the carpenter's son, of whom many things are related which you may disbelieve without being damned for it, or think you may; but the damnation is there, in the New Testament, with the fire and brimstone, the same that are prepared for the devil and his angels, threatened by Jesus; and, if there is any truth in him, his hell is as great a certainty as his heaven, and the sneer of the Infidel at the Christian expectation of the latter is as reasonable as the Unitarian Christian's doubt of the former. As the Rev. George Ellis said, "If the scriptures are the standard, the orthodox are right."

Now as to the origin of Christianity. I suppose you will admit that the savior of Christianity was not Jewish, but Buddhist; was not the fighting man predicted in the Old Testament, who was to conquer and subject the world to the Hebrews, but a teacher and savior who was to instruct and elevate humanity, not to fight or die for it—or rather for an insignificant fraction of it, "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." The atonement was an after-thought, developed long after the adoption of the Hebrew scriptures by the early church of which, as we shall see, Paul was a member, and which finally became the "church of Rome."

And here I refer to James Freeman Clarke, who says: "The resemblances between Buddhism and medieval Christianity are so great that it seems, at first, as though one must hav copied from the other. We find in both monks living in monasteries; mendicant orders taking the three vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, telling their beads on a rosary, going about begging with bare feet, shaven crown, and a rope around the body. We find in Buddhism and medieval Christianity bells, images, and holy water; a service in a dead language, choirs, priests, processions, incense, abbots, monks, nuns, the worship of saints and angels, confessions, fasts, and purgatory, reverence for a divine mother and child, relic worship, pilgrimages to the shrines of the saints, and even a pope, in each, with his triple tiara. And yet history shows us that neither could hav been borrowed from the other, that there was no contact or intercourse between the two systems, but each developed these remarkable coincidences of ritual, independent of the other, out of common human needs and tendencies."

When I read the last sentence of the foregoing, I was astonished at its untruthfulness. What could hav been his object in so grave a misstatement, certain to be observed and exposed? Where is the history which shows that Christianity could not hav been taken from Buddhism? It is a pity that he has not informed us. And it is certainly remarkable that, in his enumeration of the points of resemblance between the two religions, he omitted the fact that Jesus, like Buddha, had twelve disciples. He certainly could not hav forgotten it, and he should not hav left his audience ignorant of it.

It might hav been interesting had he informed us why humanity needed a wretched superstition, ridiculous and degrading ceremonies, monks, nuns, and such monstrosities as child-bearing virgins.

Mr. Clarke must hav known that Christianity could hav been borrowed, or hav been an outgrowth from Buddhism; that Buddhism was the older religion by at least five hundred years, and that from the time of King Asoka, some three centuries before our era, Buddhist missionaries had preached their savior and teacher in Egypt, Greece, and Syria. When the pope was informed, by his missionaries, of the resemblance between the two religions, knowing the origin of his faith, he would not allow the fact to be published; but Mr. Clarke, while he does not suppress it, is not only unwilling to acknowledge the cause of the resemblance, but denies it. Yet in his next lecture he says, but without any explanation of his previous misstatement, "Christianity took from oriental systems the ascetic and monastic systems, and then laid them aside." Here is a partial contradiction of the former statement, followed by a grave mistake. Christianity was not an established faith that took anything from "oriental systems"—by which Mr. Clarke means Buddhism—but was a legitimate product of Buddhism, which became known as Christianity after its adoption of the Hebrew scriptures and the consequent change in the character of its savior from a divine teacher to a divine sacrifice. Mr. Clarke seems to hav wished this fact suppressed. Certainly Mr. Clarke knew that God's infallible vicar, the pope, with his triple tiara, his monks, nuns, and the child-bearing virgin, and all his inherited ceremonies and observances, is a power throughout the world to-day, entirely unconscious of having laid anything aside, and not only not repudiated, but treated with the greatest respect, notwithstanding his infamous claim to represent God, by the little band, hardly known outside of Massachusetts, that parades under Mr. Clarke's banner; and one of Mr. Clarke's last publicly expressed wishes was for the success of this ancient superstition—the most formidable organization for the degradation and oppression of humanity that the world has known. "As for the Catholics, I wish them every success," said Mr. Clarke. Multitudes of our most intelligent citizens can only feel contempt for the author of such a wish.

But what especially connects Buddhism with early Christianity—with the Christianity of Paul—is the idea of a savior and teacher who resembles the Buddhist savior, and has nothing in common with the messiah, said, by many, to be predicted in the Hebrew scriptures. And I am confident that the fact can be established that a church based upon this idea—the result of the labors of Buddhist missionaries—whose savior was a purely spiritual being (mark this distinction) existed till the third century of our era, when the adoption of the Hebrew scriptures, after a long controversy, of which I shall present satisfactory proofs, resulted in the substitution of a material for a spiritual Jesus, and our gospels were written to take the place of earlier gospels which were suppressed; for the writings of the early fathers not only show no knowledge of our gospels, but they prove the existence of a widespread belief in a purely spiritual or phantom Jesus, which originated long before Christianity. Such is the conclusion of a scholar who has made an exhaustiv examination of the literature of that period.

But for this change in the faith of the church—this radical change in the character of its savior, and the consequent issue of our false gospels—it would not hav been necessary for the triumphant faction in the church to hide its origin in a mystery which would hav been impenetrable but for the light, feeble though it be, thrown on it by the controversies of churchmen. I say "our false gospels." If the story of Jesus in our gospels and the Acts were true, Josephus, who was born in 37, would hav found Jerusalem a Christian city, with not an adult unbeliever among its inhabitants, as anyone will see by an enumeration of the converts under the preaching of the apostles, as given in the Acts and epistles. For Jerusalem never contained twenty thousand inhabitants. His silence proves the entire Jesus story false. The silence of Philo of Alexandria—a contemporary of Jesus, if there was such a person—many of whose peculiar opinions hav come down to us through the fourth gospel, is equally significant. But Philo, who may be said to hav created him, as he is presented in the fourth gospel, never heard of him.

The story of the destruction of the children, by King Herod, is taken from an incident in the life of Christna, the Hindoo savior. In fact, the authors of our gospels borrowed very freely from the life of the Buddhist savior.

But there is said to be positiv proof, in the Talmud, and other Hebrew and Christian records, that Paul and Peter lived about one hundred years before the time of Pontius Pilate; and there was a legend of one Jeshu who, about that time, was stoned to death and hanged for sorcery; but the Talmud does not mention the Jesus of our gospels, certainly a very important fact in its bearings upon the question of their authenticity. Now, while Paul and Peter may hav been contemporary with a Jeshu who claimed to be the son of God and the Virgin Mary, and was said to hav been put to death about one hundred years before the time of Pontius Pilate, I cannot believe, legend or no legend, that they were his disciples, or that they were connected with any church of his founding—if he ever founded a church—because I can present facts which prove that the church to which, certainly, Paul belonged, was established at an earlier period, and did not recognize any such Jesus, especially a crucified Jesus. The forgers of the Jesus story, and of our gospels, may hav taken the name of a person stoned to death, and hanged, for the sake of having something apparently historical in their narrativ, but the apostle Paul is entirely out of place there, as will appear; for his Jesus was but the semblance of a man—was the spiritual phantom of the Gnostics. The proof of the statement will be found to be incontrovertible.

Consider, for a moment, the character of the God recognized by many, if not all, of the Gnostic churches. He was a benevolent being, like the Supreme God of the Persians—the representativ of the "good principle," of whom no graven form was to be made. When these churches became acquainted, through the collection of the Hebrew scriptures made by Ptolemy, with Jehovah, the national God of the Hebrews, they gave him credit for an accurate description of himself, and denounced him as only a second or third class deity, and the enemy of the supreme God and of humanity. Their Jesus—the son of the supreme—a purely spiritual being, came to our earth to defeat the purpose of Jehovah, and to enlighten and to save man, who suffered through ignorance, not to punish him. Remember this fact. This was their theory.

How happens it that these early churches giv us Jehovah's rank and character exactly as the first two chapters of Genesis giv them to us, while the Christian world, in our day, recognizes the petty ruler of Palestine as the supreme, and ignores the Elohim—the beneficent gods, not God, of the first chapter; and even Jehovah recognizes the "other gods," and claims worship from the Hebrews only as his subjects? How happens it that the last revisers of the Bible virtually perjure themselvs in failing to correct the mistranslation of the word "Elohim," and the layman livs and dies in the belief that the Elohim (Gods) translated God, in the first chapter, are the "Lord God" of the second chapter? This, it seems to me, is one of the strangest facts in the history of Christianity. For, if we examin the character of the Gods of the first chapter, we find them humane, creators of man in their own image, bidding him increase and multiply, giving him dominion over the whole world, imposing no conditions, making no threats, leaving him absolutely free; while the Lord God—the Jehovah—of the second chapter, dooms the man of his creation to ignorance, and threatens him with death if he endeavors to elevate himself. How happens it that the beneficent Gods are deposed, and we are worshipers of man's enemy, Jehovah, while the primitiv Christianity, to which Paul and Marcion belonged, denounced him as the enemy of the supreme God and of man?

A careful examination of the account of Marcion in the second volume of "Supernatural Religion," throws a flood of light upon this question, and upon the history and character of the church which, taking its officials, its ceremonies, its savior, from Buddhism, became known after several centuries, and its change of faith consequent upon its adoption of the Hebrew scriptures, as the "church of Rome."

From Marcion's opponents—the best possible witnesses under the circumstances—we learn what Marcion believed, what his predecessor and teacher, Paul, believed, and, of course, what Christianity was long before, probably two hundred and fifty years before our gospels were forged, or anyone had proposed to substitute for the purely spiritual Jesus and the supreme God, the father, the flesh-and-blood son of the Hebrew Jehovah and the virgin Mary; Jehovah being only a second or third class deity, in the estimation of the primitiv church, as they learned from his scriptures. Of course, nothing can be so absurd as the idea of a purely spiritual Jesus, except the Jesus of our gospels. Both are impossible. But the question to be decided is, What was the faith of the primitiv church, of the church of Paul? And to Marcion we look for an answer. Who was Marcion, what did he believe, and what do we know, with absolute certainty, of his belief?

The object of the author of "Supernatural Religion," in his investigation, was not to learn what Marcion believed, but whether he could discover any evidence of the existence of our gospels in his time. This he failed to do, though all the literature on the subject was at his command. But he calls Marcion the great heresiarch of the century—that is, the leader or founder of a heretical sect—forgetting that he could not hav been a heretic, as our gospels were not written in his day. He evidently does this because Marcion's opponents had done so. Had he given the subject any thought, he would hav discovered that they were the heretics, and that Marcion was for maintaining the primitiv faith in its purity. This fact our author makes very plain, although he strangely overlooks it; and it is the more remarkable, as the point is not without its bearing upon the question of the existence of any of our gospels in the second century.

Marcion, our author says, was born in Sinope, in Pontus, near the Black sea, of which place his father was bishop; and although it is said that he aspired to the first place in the "church of Rome," the presbyters refused him communion on account of his peculiar views of Christianity. We shall presently more fully refer to these opinions, but here it will be sufficient to say that he objected to what he considered the debasement of true Christianity by Jewish elements, and he upheld the teaching of Paul alone in opposition to that of all the other apostles, whom he accused of mixing up matters of the law with the gospel of Christ—that is, the gospel of Paul's purely spiritual Jesus, not the Jesus of our gospels—and falsifying Christianity, as Paul himself had protested. What is this statement but the most satisfactory evidence that they refused him communion on account of their peculiar views and their determination to corrupt Christianity, in opposition to which Paul, his predecessor by some two centuries, had spent his life, Peter being his most formidable opponent? Here we hav an intelligible explanation of the hitherto obscure controversy between Peter and Paul, which divided the church till long after Marcion's time, and resulted in the triumph of the "peculiar views" of his opponents—that is, in the debasement of true Christianity by Jewish elements. Still our author speaks of Marcion as a heretic, though admitting that he could ever hav had any knowledge of the New Testament (remember that he was living A.D. 150) "was a mere ecclesiastical imagination," and "that, in his day, the New Testament canon had not even been imagined!"

"Marcion came to Rome about A.D. 139, and continued teaching for some twenty years. His high personal character and elevated views produced a powerful effect upon his time, and although, during his own lifetime, and long afterward, vehemently and with every opprobrious epithet denounced by ecclesiastical writers, his opinions were so widely adopted that, in the time of Epiphanius, his followers were said to be found throughout the world!"

Again, our author errs in speaking of Marcion's opinions as though they were new—as being widely adopted. Now, Marcion, as our author expressly states, was not the advocate of new opinions, but was simply protesting against the corruption of the primitiv faith—the faith of Paul, which, long before his time, as this statement proves, must hav been spread throughout the world, and was being corrupted by the introduction of these Jewish elements. Observe, too, this proof how extensiv had been the spread of Christianity before one of our gospels had been written!

Marcion is said to hav recognized, as his source of Christian doctrin, besides tradition, a single gospel and ten epistles of Paul, which, in his collection, stood in the following order: Epistle to Galatians, Corinthians, 2 Romans, Thessalonians, 2 Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon. None of the other books which now form part of the canonical New Testament were either mentioned or recognized by Marcion. This is the oldest collection of apostolic writings of which there is any trace, but there was at that time no other holy scripture than the Old Testament, and no New Testament canon had yet been imagined! Now, here I call especial attention to the fact that though Marcion had this gospel and these epistles of Paul—and no other epistles than those which Marcion possessed can be genuin—he still recognized tradition as one of his sources of doctrin. Many of the early fathers relied entirely upon tradition. But observe how Marcion's recognition of tradition dates Christianity back. Two hundred, or two hundred and fifty years before his day, was Paul, with his gospel and epistles, and beyond that was the era of tradition, which he recognized as an authority for doctrin; but we are told, and it is infinitly to his credit, that he neither claimed canonical authority for these writings, nor did he claim inspiration even for the apostle Paul; a fact which ranks him above all theologians of ancient and modern times, proving his intelligence, his integrity, and his sound common sense.

The primitiv Christianity of Paul and Marcion knew no virgin and child, no divine sacrifice or crucifixion, no inspired or infallible vicar of God. Their savior was a spiritual being.

We hav already seen, says our author, the animosity expressed by contemporaries of Marcion against the apostle Paul. And now we can understand the cause of this animosity, which existed, we are told, for many centuries. This church, with its officials, its ceremonies, its savior—all of Buddhist origin—had existed for some three hundred years; its converts were spread, as they would hav said, throughout the world, and, this is a most important consideration, its savior was a purely spiritual being—a mere phantom or semblance of a man who could not be crucified. Until after the adoption of the Hebrew scriptures our Jesus had not been imagined, and Paul, who was Marcion's predecessor by some two hundred, or two hundred and fifty, years, had preached and written his epistles in support of this purely spiritual Jesus and his worship, and in opposition to the recognition, by the church, of the Hebrew scriptures and the law. Is it not a significant fact, in this connection, that Paul never saw Jesus, save in a vision? And this controversy was raging in Marcion's time, and he, Paul's disciple and equal, opposed, with all his ability, the debasement of the true, the pure, the primitiv Christianity, by the introduction of Jewish elements, as Paul had done. After Marcion's death, when the heretics had become a majority in the church, had adopted the Hebrew scriptures, fabricated the story of Jesus, and written our gospels, the followers of Marcion taunted their opponents with taking their doctrins from four adulterated gospels, while they received theirs from one—the gospel of Christ, which was the gospel of Paul and Marcion; that is, the original and only gospel of the spiritual Jesus, with which Paul did not wish Judaism or the "law" of the Old Testament mixed. Here was abundant cause for animosity against Paul as well as Marcion. Certainly Marcion's followers knew the history of this controversy and of these gospels, or they could not hav hurled this taunt at their opponents. Would it hav occurred to them to make such a charge if it had not been true? Would they hav dared do it? How strange that our author does not see that, if Marcion was a heretic, Paul, also, was a heretic, and a corrupter of the pure Christianity. How strange that the animosity expressed by contemporaries of Marcion against Paul, as well as Marcion, and by the corrupted church, for centuries after it became supreme against Paul, did not open his eyes!

In the remote province of Pontus, where we might expect to find the primitiv faith in its purity, was the church of which the father of Marcion was the bishop, with its gospel of the spiritual Jesus, and its ten epistles of Paul, with which Marcion went to Rome, protesting against the corruption of the faith which Paul had preached some two hundred and fifty years before, and making himself known throughout the world, so widely was Christianity spread, before one of our gospels was written, or the New Testament canon was even imagined; and yet our author speaks of the exclusivness of the people among whom Christianity had originated, as though Christianity was of Jewish origin, and the story of Jesus, and Calvary, and the resurrection, written, as we are expressly told, that the scripture, against which Paul and Marcion had protested, might be fulfilled, was a fact happening in Jerusalem, the last place to look for Christianity, as the silence of Josephus shows. And now, that it may be seen that there was no Judaism in the Christianity of Paul, I giv our author's statement of Marcion's belief. "Jesus was a divine being sent to reveal to man a wholly new spiritual religion, and a hitherto unknown God of goodness and grace. The Jehovah of the Old Testament was different from the God of grace who had sent the spiritual Jesus to reveal the truth, to bring salvation and reconciliation to all, and to abrogate the Jewish God, who was opposed to the God and father of the spiritual Jesus, as matter is to spirit, impurity to purity. Christianity was in distinct antagonism to Judaism; the spiritual God of heaven, whose goodness and love were for the universe, to the God of this world, whose chosen and peculiar people were the Jews; the gospel of grace to the dispensation of the Old Testament. Christianity, therefore, must be kept pure from the Judaistic elements, which were so essentially opposed to its whole spirit."

Marcion pertinently asks, "If Jehovah be good, prescient of the future, and able to avert evil, why did he allow man, made in his own image, to be deceived by the devil, and to fall from obedience to the law into sin and death? How came the devil to be made at all? After the fall God became a judge both severe and cruel; woman is at once condemned to bring forth in sorrow, and to serve her husband—changed from a help into a slave; the earth is cursed which before was blessed, and man is doomed to labor and death. The law, as given by Jehovah, was one of retaliation, not of justice; it was eye for eye, tooth for tooth, stripe for stripe."

After many other objections to the character and conduct of Jehovah—and no modern has criticised that potentate more sharply—as his instigating the Israelites to spoil the Egyptians, his inciting them to work on the Sabbath day by ordering them to carry the ark for eight days round Jericho, to break the second commandment by setting up the brazen serpent, repenting that he had set up Saul and doomed the Ninevites, soon Marcion denies the applicability to his spiritual Jesus of the so-called messianic prophecies. The Emanuel of Isaiah is not Christ; the virgin, his mother, is simply a young woman, according to Jewish phraseology, and the sufferings of Isaiah are not predictions of the death of Jesus. There is a complete antagonism between the God of Marcion's gospel and Jehovah. The one was perfect, pure, beneficent, passionless; the other subject to all the passions of man, cruel, and changeable. And the Law—the Old Testament—was barbarous, inhuman, contradictory, and detestable. We see from this that Marcion was the great theologian of his age, the great theologian of all the ages. He dared tell the truth of that infamous and comparativly modern Hebrew conception which has come down to us as Jehovah, and of that collection of infamies and absurdities which our theologians, even our boldest and most liberal theologians, though they know that Marcion's view of it is the true one, and admire while they fear to follow him, still call, from lack of moral courage, "divine revelation."

But Marcion believed in the doctrin of the impurity of matter, and carried it to its logical conclusion in speculation and practice. Asserting the incredibility of an incarnate God, he denied the corporeal reality of the flesh of Christ. His body was a mere semblance, and not of human substance; was not born of a human mother, and the divine nature was not degraded by contact with the flesh. In other words, his God and Christ, like the God of our Christians, were spirits, whatever that may mean. If there is any inconsistency or absurdity here, they are not peculiar to Marcion. But Marcion finds in Paul the purest promulgator of the truth, as he understands it, and emboldened by the epistle to the Galatians, in which that apostle rebukes even the apostles "for not walking uprightly according to the truth of the gospel," he accuses the other apostles of having depraved the pure form of the gospel doctrins delivered to them by Jesus—the spiritual Jesus—mixing up matters of the law (of the infamous Jehovah) with the words of the savior, Jehovah's spiritual opponent. With these facts as to Paul's belief concerning Jesus, we see that, with the exception of the epistle to Philemon, not one of the epistles attributed to Paul could hav been written by him; for in every one we hav a crucified Jesus, of whom Paul could hav had no knowledge, instead of the spiritual Jesus whom he preached. The only thing worthy of note in these epistles is the following in 2 Cor. xi: "In Damascus the governor, under Aretas, the king, guarded the city of the Damascenes, in order to take me; and through a window was I let down in a basket by the wall and escaped his hands"

Now, as the reign of this king, Aretas, terminated 62 or 63 B.C., if the above account was written by Paul, it is a confirmation of what I hav written, and makes him Marcion's predecessor by at least two centuries.

S. PALMER.

The Bruno Statue at Rome.

Since the closing of the subscription as announced in the last TRUTH SEEKER, the following sums hav been received and forwarded:

A. W. Sturdy, Attleboro, Mass., now at Munich, Bavaria	$10 00
Liberty S. McKinney, Galveston, Tex	5 00
John D. Brannan, " "	5 00
Total	$20 00

Which, with $1,120.15, makes $1,140.15 as the total amount sent.

There let the matter rest; for it is not convenient to send small subscriptions, and they cannot reach Rome in time for the celebration on the 9th of June.

The pope has made public his protest, which was expected, and for which we are obliged to him, for it will add interest to the occasion.

T. B. WAKEMAN,
Secretary and Treasurer American Committee.
No. 93 Nassau street, New York City.

[Copy of letter sent to be read at unveiling of the Bruno monument:]

OFFICE OF
AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.
President, R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D.
Vice-presidents:
COL. R. G. INGERSOLL, Ex-president. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Ex-president. T. B. WAKEMAN, Ex-president.
Otto Wettstein, Treasurer, Rochelle, Ill.; E. A. Stevens, Secretary, Chicago; E. B. Foote, Jr., Chairman Executiv Committee, 120 Lexington avenue, N. Y.; Mattie A. Freeman, Chairman Finance Committee, 402 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.
SECRETARY'S OFFICE, 558 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

SIGNOR GIOVANNI AMICI, Secretary Bruno Monument Committee, Honored Sir: On behalf of the board of directors of the American Secular Union, I send you hearty greetings that your labor of love is at last crowned. Every honest heart in America throbs with enthusiasm at the consummation of your significant triumph—the rescuing of that Infidel hero, Giordano Bruno, from the oblivion his murderers had hoped to thrust him in.

As Rome has been the center of a system of superstition, ignorance, and despotism, may we not indulge in the hope that modern Romans may yet raise it to the Eternal City of science, justice, and love?

It will be the proudest remembrance of our board of directors that they hav had the honor and privilege to aid in such a glorious undertaking.

We salute thy statue, O Bruno, the noblest martyr who ever died for man, and by this circumstance we realize that "this old world is growing brighter."

All honor to you and your colleagues. Sincerely and fraternally,

E. A. STEVENS,
Secretary American Secular Union.

As to the pretense of anything supernatural, philosophy teaches us to view it only as a certain and incontestable mark of imposture, by whomsoever advanced. Prophecy? The very name of such a thing is a surrender of all pretense to evidence; 'tis the language of insanity! The fetor of the charnel house is not more charged with admonition to our bodily health to withdraw from the proximities of death, than the cracky sound of the thing is, with warning to our reason, that we are out of the regions of sobriety wherever it is so much as seriously spoken of: no honest man ever pretended to it.—Taylor's Diegesis.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 324 W. Madison st., Chicago.

Shall We Balk on $300?

Seven hundred dollars hav been pledged toward the $1,000 fund proposed to be offered as a premium for the best scheme or manual to show teachers how to teach morality in our schools without teaching religious dogma. The list now stands thus:

R. B. Westbrook, Philadelphia	$100
G. E. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis	100
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O	100
L. Geiger, Hudson, N. Y	100
W. H. Forwood, Fort Snelling, Minn	100
W. H. Pepper, Petaluma, Cal	100
Friends in Hudson, through L. Geiger	50
Dr. E. B. Foote, New York city	25
F. C. Mende, Philadelphia	25
Total	$700

Now, friends, let us hav the balance of the $300 pledged before the Fourth of July! Do not wait for others, but let us hear from you at once. Write to Secretary Stevens or to the undersigned directly.

R. B. WESTBROOK, Pres. Am. Sec. Union.
1,707 Oxford street, Philadelphia.

The Roll of Honor.

Thomas Goddard, Du Quoin, Ill	$7 00
Dr. J. H. Day, Walla Walla, W. T	5 00
C. C. Rodgers, Boulder Creek, Cal	2 00
A. F. Neunert, Portland, Ore	1 00
O. Z. Ide, Dorr, Mich. (charter fee)	5 00
Charles T. Griffith, Des Moines, Ia. (charter fee)	5 00

Received at the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, for the American Secular Union, the following:

H. B. Maxwell, Maitland, Mo	$1 00
S. H. Hodge, " "	1 00
T. D. Roberts, " "	1 00
F. B. Spring, " "	1 00
A. E. Smith, Berea, O	1 00
Irving Zimmerman, Princeton, Minn	1 00
John Collins, Athens, Tex	1 00

Goddard, of Du Quoin, is a name that has adorned every worthy effort for mental freedom that we remember in the struggle for years. Though long past life's meridian he does not idly wait the summons to his anticipated summerland, but, filled with a lofty enthusiasm, he still labors with the vigor of youth for the cause he loves so well. O that the fire and fervor of these venerable pioneers could find lodgment in the hearts and aspirations of the skeptical youth of to-day! What a glorious future might then be the heritage of our posterity! It is sad to contemplate that such men—men who hav assisted in making this world more broad, tolerant, and civilized—who by their lives consecrate themselvs to the good of their fellow-men—are so seldom emulated by younger people of the Secular party. Brother Goddard's being an Englishman probably accounts for his enthusiasm. He and his dear life partner are noble allies in the Spiritual wing of the Secular forces. May such splendid service be their source of increased satisfaction in this the sunset of their lives.

Dr. Day, of Walla Walla, is a stalwart Freethinker from "old Virginia," and a graduate of William and Henry College. We had a pleasant chat with the doctor, who recently made us a social call. For many years he has confined his activity to assaying, and his study of nature's laboratory gave him a wholesome contempt for a so-called religious system which attempts to account for the creation of this vast universe by a six days' incubation story, or which distorts the plain processes and facts of growth, physical, animal, or vegetable, to fit the fiat of an individual. Brother Day has the intelligence to see the necessity and appreciate the work of the American Secular Union, and proposes to become one of its life members and sustainers. Alone he has held aloft the Freethought banner till he has seen it become quite popular. He has donated, under proper conditions, to the local Liberal society of Walla Walla a valuable scientific and miscellaneous library. That is a splendid work for one man. Who will follow his example in every city?

Brother C. C. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, Cal., another stalwart prominent Western Liberal, with willing heart sends his token of esteem and aid. As Brother Rodgers is in our friend Putnam's territory or constituency he can be relied on for faithful and earnest endeavor in the future. Putnam can inspire and enthuse if anyone can.

Our good friend A. F. Neunert, of Portland, Ore., does not forget us, adding another donation to his already generous contributions. He is one of the Liberals who can spare a dollar for Freethought almost any day, for the churches get no picking out of him. He is consistent and gives no comfort to the enemy.

It is a pleasing surprise to note that Michigan, which seems to hav been dead and lifeless so long, is, through the activity of Brothers Strong, Averill, and Ide, going to do good work, and that, too, in an unexpected quarter. Though Dorr is quite a small town, the Union already numbers eighty-six members, and they feel confident of counting one hundred and fifty in the near future. May the Secularists of Dorr make those of Grand Rapids ashamed of their inactivity. When will the majority of Liberals realize that organization must be met by organization, and that nothing in the world was ever accomplished for their welfare unless some one had to sacrifice for them—sometimes their lives, at other times their liberty, again their entire property? Now it only needs that we relinquish a little comfort. Yet so few are willing to do even that.

Another charter has gone to Iowa's fair capital. Those are the places where Unions could do the most valuable service—at each of the state capitals. For then they could make protests, or inform the national secretary of every measure which the orthodox element hav in view to crush freedom or control the government. Our brothers and sisters of Des Moines are activ, brainy, aggressiv, and we predict for them a record of what the church will term "pernicious activity." Des Moines is figuring on inviting the next congress, so is Minneapolis and also Chicago. We are open for the best inducements. While the issuing of the charters givs us encouragement, the financial outlook for the month of May is anything but that. We now hav in addition to the other expenses office rent to pay. There are a good many pledges made at the Pittsburgh congress remaining unpaid. We hope it will not be necessary to further remind our friends that the money is needed. Our case against the archbishop's training-school has, by order of the appellate court, been turned over for the supreme court to decide. As that involves more expense we hope to hear from every honest, earnest Secularist who has not already helped us at once.

THE TRAIL OF THE SERPENT.

Judge Prendergast, Rome's devoted representativ on our bench, in a speech at the anniversary of the Catholic Union, tried, as usual, to stab the state institutions for the benefit of the church. The Herald reports him as follows:

Judge Prendergast, who spoke on "Charities," referred to the insane asylum investigation as illustrating the rottenness of modern civilization. The horrors which had been uncovered in Chicago existed all through the country, for the reason that the care of the insane and the poor had been entirely divorced from religion. Prior to the foundation of the Catholic church by Christ charity did not exist. The civilization of ancient Rome had no hospital, refuge, or orphanage, and paupers or sick persons were allowed to die without the hand of charity being extended to them. It was Christianity which first began to care for the helpless and the sick. The full fruition of Christ's idea of charity was to be found in the Catholic church. Other forms of Christianity and other denominations had established hospitals, but only in the Catholic church had charity for the suffering been thoroughly carried out. Charity consisted of more than simply paying taxes for the support of institutions in which the poor were fed. Not a day had passed in forty years when the daily press had failed to furnish proofs of horrible brutalities and neglect of persons in asylums and other public institutions. The speaker said that he violated no professional or court etiquet when he stated, from his own personal knowledge, that the system of public charities in Cook county was utterly and irredeemably bad. He quoted the testimony of Ex-County-Commissioner Aldrich in regard to the administration of public charities in Chicago. Mr. Aldrich, although not a Catholic, testified that the only body which worked for the benefit of the poor without fee or reward was the sisters of charity, and that it would be well to turn over all the charities of Cook county to them.

When it is known that Dr. Keirnan and the majority of his assistants at the insane asylum where these brutalities hav been practiced are nearly all Roman Catholics, we can see that these scoundrelly and traitorous officials are there very largely for the avowed purpose of bringing those institutions into disrepute, as well as giving vent to the depravity for which their religious system is responsible.

His assertion that, prior to Christianity, charity did not exist, substantiates my charge of last week that Romanism is a system for "the perversion of history and the inversion of intellect." Prendergast is not a fool, and consequently must be a deliberate falsifier. He knows, if he knows anything of history, that hundreds of years before the dawn of Christianity hospitals were established in every city throughout the Indian empire; that the corn laws established by the Roman tribunes, the Gracchi family, amply provided for the wants of the poor; that the Moors founded the greatest hospitals, and furnished the world its best physicians; that in Mexico and Peru, before Christianity had blighted their splendid prosperity, institutions of charity were everywhere maintained; that in no country in the world are the aged and infirm more tenderly cared for than in heathen China, while it took Spain—Catholic Spain—fourteen hundred years before it founded an insane asylum. In every country and in every age the human heart has responsivly throbbed to suffering and woe, while religion has caused the greater portion of it. If Commissioner Aldrich made the remark attributed to him, it only shows how contemptible a politician can become.

At the same meeting Archbishop Feehan put popery above patriotism by telling the young men that there "was no higher title than that of Catholic. It was greater than that of the ancient Roman, civis Romanus sum." How is that for a good American doctrin? It is for such traitors and their schemes we annually exempt millions and millions of property, besides other millions they pilfer through their political influence—omnia ad dei glorium.

ANOTHER ASPIRANT FOR PLATFORM HONORS.

Sunday evening Mrs. Augusta A. Holmes, the present secretary, made her début on our platform, meeting with marked success and merited applause. The Chicago Union is proud of Mrs. Freeman's oratorical genius and well-earned fame, and it seems as though Mrs. Holmes might soon follow in her footsteps, for her treatment of her subject, "God and Godly Women," decidedly demonstrated exceptional ability. The way in which she boxed God around the compass of reason was exceedingly damaging both to his assumed divinity and his personality, and her brief glance over the mythical traditions somehow suggested the lines of Moore—more especially the last:

> See grave theology, when once she strays
> From revelation, what tricks she plays;
> What various heavens—all fit for bards to sing—
> Hav churchmen dreamed from Papias to King,
> While hell itself in India's naught but smoke,
> In Spain's a furnace, and in France—a joke.

Mrs. Holmes is evidently destined to do great service in the Secular cause.

The Tribune reporter made in a synopsis of Dr. Goodwin's sermon on "God's Supply of His People's Needs," at the First Congregational church, the following remarks:

The Christian's needs would be supplied by God, though sometimes the plans of God are different from man's more selfish aims. Needs should not be governed by desires, said the speaker. A child wishes confectionery when it should hav wholesome food, or it cries to play with the thing it should be protected against. Mr. Goodwin contrasted the manner in which Christianity supplies the wants of man with the way in which Infidelity does, quoting a letter he had received from the Secular Union demanding the abolition of all religious forms and offices in connection with the functions of government. Continued the speaker: Infidelity says to the sick person or one in distress: "There may be a God, but he does not care for you; he will not help you. Set your face against all discouragement; fight it out." Christianity says: "You shall not want for anything. All things shall work together for good. Cast thy burden on the Lord." It comes with promises of a life to come, so that even if it were a cheat, it would be a glorious cheat, a great inspiration, far above that of Infidelity. But it is not a cheat. Christianity works out its promises. All who hav been in trouble hav felt it to be so. They hav been sustained, assisted, comforted.

It was very unfortunate for Dr. Goodwin's logic that most of his congregation had just read of the terrible calamity in Pennsylvania in their vile, unholy Sunday morning papers. That bald fact of "God's visitation" was liable to unsettle his flimsy reasoning, and amply contradicts his assertion about being "sustained, assisted, comforted." "You shall not want for anything. All things shall work together for good," sounds like the jeering of a pitiless wretch in the face of such appalling horrors. "Infidelity," as he is pleased to call it, deals in no such hollow mockery, but encourages to self-help, self-culture, and the broadening processes of reason.

"'TIS SWEET TO BE REMEMBERED."

Thursday evening, June 6th, a number of our members, ladies and gentlemen, tiptoed up the steps of the Stiles residence, all bearing mysterious packages, and took possession of their parlor. The writer was delegated to inform the lady of the house that her uniform kindness, her interest in the cause, and the trouble she had taken to provide entertainment for members of the Union had endeared her to all, and they had taken the liberty of calling on her on the anniversary of her birth, and concluded by reading an original poem by Mrs. Woodman. Then the tables were loaded with presents, many of them valuable pieces of jewelry. The fair hostess, overflowing with grateful surprise, feelingly replied, kissed all the ladies, and thanked the gentlemen. Mr. Stiles came to her rescue, and, with his usual ease, made a most happy acknowledgment, after which we had a social time of it.

ANOTHER TRAVESTY ON JUSTICE

Has been perpetrated by Judge Shepherd's compounding a felony with the notorious jail-breaker and boodler McGarigle, who so unaccountably slipped through the fingers of Canute R. Matson, sheriff of Cook county, while taking a bath. This "influential" thief returns, pleads guilty to several indictments, releases his bondsmen of an obligation of $50,000, pays a fine of $1,000, holds an overflowing reception at his house that evening, and will sue the county for $2,000 for services. I should not wonder if "Mc" is not invited to take his old position as chief of police. His conduct certainly qualifies him for consideration in the selection of soft berths in this city. Bad as he is, he is not, in my opinion, half as heinous or base as this betrayer of the people on the bench. It was this same Judge Shepherd, I believe, who allowed a couple of self-confessed ballot-box stuffers to go scot-free several years ago, and who, instead of wearing the ermin, should hav colors of the zebra put on his back. A local rhymester gets off this screed on the flippant transaction:

> McGarigle the other day wended his way
> To the sheriff's official headquarters, they say,

And without much ado he made the avowal:
"Canute, if you please, I've come back for the towel."

Tascott, Snell's murderer, should walk into court and claim the $50,000 reward, plead guilty, pay a small fine for assault and battery, and start into the detectiv business. E. A. STEVENS,
Secretary American Secular Union.

Cleveland, Ohio, Liberals Awake.

The Secular Union of Cleveland, roused by the efforts of the clergy of that city to prevent "Sabbath desecration," hav issued the following letter:

GENTLEMEN: We see by Tuesday's issue of this paper that you hav held a special session preparatory to a crusade against what you choose to call "Sabbath desecration." Knowing this means the destruction of our individual liberties and rights, guaranteed by the Constitution to every citizen in the "pursuit of happiness," we wish to enter our protest against the contemplated wrong and injustice, and state some of our reasons therefor.

It would seem that reform, like charity, should begin at home; and it is, to say the least, hardly consistent for those who do their hardest work on Sundays to despotically assert that others shall not. It is not strange that "vested rights," seeing its power slipping away, should seek to stem the tide; but when that struggle means theocracy and the desecration of freedom, it is time some one speak and such desecrators listen. Desecration is a shibboleth invented by a certain class to be used as a sort of mental club to pound the minds of another class into subjection. To desecrate has been supposed to be an awful sin or crime that must be paid for with some equally awful retribution or punishment, just what nobody has ever known, and the inventors of the word hav never attempted to explain. It is a platitude used in place of an idea. To desecrate a day means to consecrate it to the use of the people or devote it to the happiness of mankind. Likewise to consecrate anything is to despoil it of its usefulness to humanity. A few months ago Louis Jacob, a seventeen-year-old boy, was arrested in New York for selling a loaf of bread over the counter of his sister's bakery on Sunday. Through ministering to the wants of humanity this youth was, from the theological standpoint, engaged in "Sabbath desecration." In Georgia at the present time a similar indignity is being perpetrated by the backers of theocratic despotism. D. Conklin, lately removed from Michigan to that state, has been indicted by the grand jury for working on Sunday. What heinous crime do you think he had committed? He cut a few sticks of wood to build a fire. Horrors! what an awful sin! But to fully appreciate the absurdity of this case it must be borne in mind that Mr. Conklin is an Adventist and observes the seventh day as the Sabbath, as authorized by the Bible. Elder M. Hoffman, in a letter to Rev. George B. Starr, superintendent of the central Bible school for home and foreign missions, at Chicago, regarding this case, says:

"They hav in this state a 'chain gang,' where those who violate the law are taken, and with a ball and chain fastened to one leg, they are made to work on the public roads and railroads. Many of them are treated worse than brutes; many hav been whipped to death, and doubtless if he should be taken there for working on Sunday he would be compelled to work on the Sabbath."

To bring the matter home to the people of Cleveland we will cite an instance which occurred in our own city. A poor laborer, living on the south side, was arrested for painting his house on Sunday, brought into the police court and fined, although he showed that he was too poor to pay for having the work done, and Sunday was the only day on which he had time to do it. The police judge, having some sense of the ludicrous, remitted the fine, but the defendant had to stand the costs. And so in all cases the definition holds good as given above: desecration useful, consecration useless, to mankind. These instigators of outrages pretended to be done to please God (as if he could not take care of himself and his interests without their help) conveniently forget the teachings of him who said: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath," and persecute their fellow-men for following in his footsteps.

One would naturally infer from the turmoil raised by some about the "desecration of the Sabbath" (Sunday) that there existed some religious authority for its observance, or at least that it possessed biblical sanction. Such is not the fact, however, as anyone can easily ascertain. Sunday is not the Sabbath! "Holy Sabbath?" Will you kindly inform us when and where and by whom Sunday, the first day of the week, was made holy? Until then we shall hold, with Christ, "that the Sabbath was made for man."

It is time the people understood the truth about the Sabbath so-called, and learn why the clergy claim the privilege of abrogating their inalienable rights on the first day of the week. Will you be candid enough to enlighten them and us on this important subject? We hav at various times put the query, but hav never been answered.

The first reference to the Sabbath in the Bible is found in Gen. ii, 2, 3:

"And the Lord blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Again we get the same injunction in Ex. xx, 8-11. When we were taught, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," in the guilelessness of youth, we supposed it referred to Sunday, the first day of the week, but now on perusing the whole excerpt we find our instructors misapplied the quotation, and that it was spoken of the seventh day, viz.:

"But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work. . . . For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." In Exodus xxxi, 14-17, the command is repeated and the observance is made a perpetual covenant. Then the reason is that the Lord rested on the seventh day, therefore the seventh day, Saturday, should be observed as a day of rest or the Sabbath. In the fifteenth verse of the fifth chapter of Deuteronomy another reason is given, but this need not be noticed, since it is never advanced nowadays. All the passages in the Old Testament place the Sabbath on the seventh day, Saturday. Those who are not familiar with the passages may refer to Lev. xxiii, 3; xxv, 4; xxvi, 2, in addition to those given. It will be seen that up to the time of Christ the seventh day was the only Sabbath known. Did he abrogate it and in its place establish Sunday as the Sabbath? By reading Matt. xii, 1-8, it will be seen that Christ recognized the seventh day as the Sabbath, but did not hold himself bound by it, as the son of man was lord of the Sabbath. In Mark xxviii, 1, even after the death of Jesus his disciples regarded the seventh day as the Sabbath; "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." Christ himself used the seventh day for Sabbath purposes (Mark vi, 2): "And when the Sabbath day was come he began to teach in the synagog." To know that the followers of Jesus recognized the sanctity of the Sabbath (Saturday) one has but to read (Luke xxiii, 26): "And they returned and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." It is apparent, then, that Christ and his disciples and followers in his time recognized the seventh day as the Sabbath, and Christ says nothing about observing the first day of the week as the Sabbath. If Christ and his apostles did not institute the Christian Sabbath, who did, and when?

Such expressions as "the sanctity of the Sabbath," the "Lord's day," are often heard. When did the first day of the week become the Lord's day and who instituted it? What makes a day sacred, and when and by whom was Sunday sanctified? If you know the answer to these questions ought not you, in the sacred name of truth, to giv your knowledge to the people? We know, you must, and all who care to investigate may, that there is no scriptural authority for the observance of the first day of the week as the Sabbath. Honor bright, now, why not let people know the facts in the case? Surely the cause of morality was never injured by making the truth known.

It would seem a sad fact that party lines and creed fences are drawn so fine and built so high that good, honest, noble men and women are separated. All are brothers, and when virtuous, loving, and honorable people cannot work together for the welfare of the race there is something wrong in the system which separates them.

Sabbath occurs many times in the New Testament, but is never there applied to the first day of the week, and the word Sunday is not used in that book even once.

Calvin, in 1550, said: "The fathers frequently call the commandment for the Sabbath a shadowy commandment because it contains the external observance of a day which was abolished with the rest of the figures at the advent of Christ. . . . Christians therefore should hav nothing to do with a superstitious observance of days."

Martin Luther, who has received a good deal of praise from those who uphold the Christian Sabbath, says: "As regards the Sabbath or Sunday, there is no necessity for keeping it. If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake . . . then I order you to work on it, to ride on it, to dance on it, and to do anything that shall reprove this encroachment on the Christian spirit of liberty." Has Martin lost caste as an authority?

Sunday was set apart for the Sabbath simply as a matter of convenience. You will not deny this, we are sure. That being admitted, then what binding force should it hav on those who do not care to observe it? Is it not a direct wrong for a certain class of citizens to try to oblige other citizens to observe their religious days? Is it not a violation of individual rights for a religious sect to endeavor by law to force other sects or systems to observe their ceremonies?

You can easily set us right if we are wrong in these claims. If not, is it any more than justice and serving the best interests of truth and morality that you admit the fact?

These attempted wrongs against the individual rights of citizens, a good example of which is the Blair bill, hav already driven nearly all the deep thinkers and philosophic minds from the church and lost to her inestimable mental wealth and the flower of the youth of our country. Are we to think from your favoring such laws that you desire to return to the days when chains were stretched across the streets of New York city to prevent the passage of vehicles and persons, when young girls were stripped to the waist and publicly whipped for walking in the fields and groves, when men were forbidden to kiss their wives on that day? We do not think the people wish to again witness and endure such atrocities.

The body of the people believe that Sunday has divine sanction for being observed as the Sabbath. It is not so, as all people posted in religious questions know. Why should this deceit be practiced any longer?

"Come, now, and let us reason together," said the Lord. "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor." "The Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded."

Truth was never injured by candor. If our statements are not true, let them be answered. If they are true, frankly admit it.

CLEVELAND SECULAR UNION.

May 30th.

San Francisco Freethought.

I see them bearing their flowers to-day
To the spot where the heroes sleep,
And I think of an unmarked soldier's grave,
Where Virginia's breezes sweep.
And I wonder if some one plucks a flower
By the rivulet of Bull Run,
And lays it above the dust of him
Who made me a soldier's son.

The day that is gone we liv no more,
But I close my eyes and think,
As the chain of memory stretches back,
And I follow it link by link,
And, spanning eight and a score of years,
I return to a Christmas day
When the streets are full of marching men
And the air with their banners gay.

But I hav sight for only one,
A man with a bearded face
And a kindly eye, and a firm, strong tread,
As he walks in a forward place.
I watch the train move out of town,
With its smoke and its clanging bell,
And the smoke takes form of clouds of war,
And the clang is a funeral knell.

He wore the blue as a soldier should,
He was honest and true and brave;
He gave his life for the nation's life,
And his pay was a soldier's grave.
A random shot, and above his corse
On rushes the battle's tide,
And while the stars shine out that night
They bury him where he died.

So I watch them strewing their flowers to-day
On the spot where the heroes sleep,
And I think of an unmarked soldier's grave
Where Virginia's breezes sweep.
And I wonder if some one plucks a flower
By the rivulet of Bull Run,
And drops it above the dust of him
Who made me a soldier's son.

G. E. MACDONALD.

Mr. Henry George's Illogical Position.

J. P. Gilmour in the National Reformer.

Mr. Henry George, who has just concluded a lecturing itinerary in Scotland in advocacy of the single-tax principle née land nationalization, in the course of his tour delivered two Sunday addresses, one at Dundee and the other in Glasgow, which were chiefly devoted to a homilectical exposition of the nondescript doctrin touched upon in "Progress and Poverty," viz., That God, who is the all-father, never intended that the land should become the property of individual owners; that on the contrary he meant it to be the common inheritance of the people after the system patented by Mr. Henry George. We hav never been able to work up a very fervent admiration for either the logic or the rhetoric of the "Prophet of San Francisco" as displayed in his masterpiece, which in point of folly unquestionably deserves that title, if only for its crassly ignorant treatment of Malthusianism and Evolution; but we hav hitherto given him credit for more common sense than he seems to possess, if the self-contradictory proposition quoted is to be taken seriously, and not as mere strategical sentiment. In the former alternativ, Mr. George has the assurance to invite us to believe that God who is all-powerful intended to do a thing which he has not done, or has been unable to accomplish through the perversity of man—that is, either he never intended to do what Mr. George says he meant to do—for with an almighty being intention is tantamount to fulfilment; so that if God had intended the land to be nationalized it would be so, and Mr. George's agitation unnecessary—or, since God's intention has not been carried out and man has got his own way, we are committed to the reductio ad absurdum that the creature is more powerful than the creator; in other words that man is a species of Frankenstein whom his maker has framed but cannot control—a pretty piece of logic for an authority on political economy. What Mr. George strangely enough fails to see is the mutual incompatibility of providence and political economy. Assume the existence of the first, and you leave no room for the second. Providence is the term used to denote the care and superintendence exercised by the deity, who is said to interfere from time to time to succor and help his creatures in distress and danger. Political economy is an account of the laws governing the production and distribution of wealth; and these laws are as fixed and inexorable as the law of gravity, of the diffusion of gases, or of chemical affinity. Nonconformity with an economic law entails certain retribution in the shape of famin or some similar evil; but if Mr. George's patent providence steps in at every critical juncture and suspends the law, it ceases to hav that character and becomes a mere fiction. Science may be the providence of man, but providence is not the science of life; and a political economist who comes from the United States to enlighten the countrymen of Adam Smith should hav more respect for his memory than to perpetrate such an outrage on his philosophy.

A Few Minutes With the Bigots.

A "sacred concert" advertised to be given in the Opera House, Port Jervis, N. Y., Sunday, May 12th, was forbidden by the civil authorities.

The Philadelphia Sabbath Association proposes to test in the courts the right to sell cigars, candy, etc., on Sunday in that city.

The supreme court of Massachusetts has decided "that cigars sold by a tobacconist in the ordinary way are not drugs or medicins within the meaning of the words as used in the statute," and that consequently the sale of this article is a breach of the state law.

The general assembly of the Presbyterian church (South), in session at Chattanooga, Tenn., adopted, May 25th, the following:

Resolved, That we favor the signing by our people of the petitions to Congress for a law against Sunday work, except works of necessity and mercy, so far as the jurisdiction of the general government extends, with the usual exceptions in favor of those who observe another day of the week as Sabbath.

At the Southern Baptist convention, Memphis, Tenn., May 14th, the following was adopted:

WHEREAS, The American Sabbath Union is laboring to secure such national legislation as will allow to all employees of the national government one day in seven as a day of rest; therefore,
Resolved, That we fully sympathize with this important object of the American Sabbath Union, and request our brethren to promote its work as far as practicable.

The Chicago branch of the American Sabbath Union has written the following open letter to the postmaster-general:

We submit to your consideration the following points as some of those on which orders or recommendations from you ought to bring the postal service more fully into harmony with the proper uses of the civil Sabbath as a day on which the government should protect its citizens against interruptions of their rest and worship:
1. No post-office to be opened at the usual hours of worship.
2. No postal employee required to be on duty at hours that would take from them the opportunity to attend church.
3. Stamp clerks to be entirely free from Sunday work.
4. Mail bearing special delivery stamps to be uniformly held in the office as other mail, unless personally called for.
5. No mail matter, except letters, to be stamped or sorted on the Sabbath.
6. Any post-office to be wholly closed on the Sabbath where a majority of the people of legal age petition for its closing.

We trust you may be able to find other ways in which to reduce the Sunday work of postal employees, and that you will co-operate with the national movement to hav a law by which this Sunday work shall be wholly and permanently discontinued.

Lectures and Meetings.

JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD, our emphatic Prohibition correspondent, is prepared to lecture on Freethought topics, and would like immediate engagements in Connecticut; also calls to the South and West, to be answered in the fall and winter. His terms are reasonable. Address him at 19 North Colony street, Meriden, Conn.

MR. GEORGE H. DAWES has been engaged to teach school in Oregon, and desires lecturing engagements on his way, anywhere on or near the line of the Northern Pacific railroad from Minneapolis to Portland. He leaves home about July 10th. During his residence in Oregon he proposes to lecture at McMinnville and neighboring towns on Sundays. Address him at Pittsville, Wis.

CONTRARY to previous announcements, Mrs. Mattie Krekel will not visit California until next winter. She will spend the summer lecturing in Oregon and Washington territory, and desires to hear from individuals and societies requiring speakers. Last Sunday she spoke at Alliance, O.; she will deliver the Fourth of July oration at Red Oak, Minn., and then wend her way Westward. We trust she will find the opportunities for work that her talents deserve.

Communications.

The Unity of Infinity and Form Not Possible.

This postulate presents itself in so clear a light, even to ordinary intelligence, that it should be generally accepted as are the tabulated axioms provided for the use of college students.

Why, then, has it not been placed among these axioms? There can be but one answer, viz., that it would be fatal to the current belief in the existence of God.

In traversing the times and conditions that gave birth to the theory of an infinit godhead, maker and director of all things, one should not, in the present state of the race, be willing to freely accept so important an issue, emanating from so much of dense ignorance and superstition as must then hav existed. We hav better guides, now; and this age should not undervalue its opportunities for the acquirement of highest and truest attainable intelligence. All error should be made to giv way to the truth.

Laying aside the transmitted reports pertaining to gospel events of early times as unworthy of belief, in large part, there will be left to us of the present age, and to all who may follow, a vast array of modern history, centuries old, from the beginning to our own time, which reliably contains an endless record of religious barbarities, persecutions, crimes, and destructiv wars, in the very nature of the several cases by force of the organic bases upon which those classes, at least, had founded their religious faith. Those classes, by the same license, went farther and deeper into the depth of their organic licenses—they charged up to the alleged infinit and all-merciful God—the affected source and object of their adoration—the directing power and responsibility for all these barbarities and crimes. Even malice should stand aghast at this!

Admitting the plea in hand to be of easy solution, it still may be well to treat briefly of the postulate originally given—infinit existence, represented by boundless space, seems to stand alone within the conception of rational thought as the eternal and unchangeable of the universe. Forms, of whatever nature and dimensions, are but finite things, subject to be brought within the compass of intelligence for measurement and placement amid the variable things which giv to the world its every aspect, living or inert.

The argument, so far presented, has brought us to the consideration of the actual in contrast with the speculativ, grounded in faith by the masses of superstition, against the dicta of reason.

It is stated, and believed by these masses, that the God they worship is in human form, and yet is, in every essential, infinit. The alleged narration of Moses, sustained by "holy writ," makes his size to hav been that of a man, and the same as to his form, so far as seen. That measure of size, then, must hav given the extent of his physical infinity, so to speak.

Halting at this stage of inquiry we are led in wonder to imagin how, so circumscribed, that infinit God could spread his presence and infinit power consecutivly, and at all times, over all space—infinit—and among the spheres all in his charge—infinit—for rational thought may never entertain a conception to the contrary. Infinity admits of no curtailment. With it there can be no border lands nor spaces. Unlike country areas, hedged on all sides by stone walls and Virginia fences, its range is all and ever.

Taking these views, we are necessarily brought to consider the possibility of so arranging an object in the form of a man as to develop its every feature, as to form and function, in such manner as to simultaneously spread its several parts throughout infinit space—continue ever. It does occur to me that the projection of a finished arm or leg, say into any part of infinit space, would vacate the residue of the space in that particular, and would thus defeat the ends of such a travesty of so great an endeavor. The true sum of the case is that a unity of form and infinity is impossible. D.

Signs of the Times.

There are many sound reasons justifying those who maintain that our present form of civilization (and the systems, social, industrial, and financial, on which it rests) is near its termination.

The fact is, that war, slavery, and superstition, which are its foundations, are now all under ban, though they all hav been serviceable in the past.

There are vast differences between savage, semi-civilized, and enlightened human beings.

Taking the Negrittos of the Philippine islands as the lowest forms of human beings now existing (though even they hav been in contact with superior races for more than two centuries), the following description of them is given: "Hight rarely exceeding four feet eight inches; paunches large; legs and arms small, often crooked. They do not liv in villages, will not labor, and their only domesticated animal is the dog."

As the Negrittos are now, our ancestors were, in all probability, in the remote past. The question is, By what agencies hav we been improved?

The answer is: Physically, by war; intellectually, by slavery, and esthetically, by superstition.

Down to the time of the ancient Greeks and Romans, success in war depended mainly on the personal strength and bravery of the combatants.

Temperance and exercise are the factors of strength and the developers of the harmony and beauty of our bodies.

Daily attention was given to that work by the citizens of ancient Greece and Rome, and they hav left in marble models of the results of their training.

War is useless now; it is an unmitigated evil. Things are of more value than men in modern war; Omphale with a derringer is master of Hercules with a club.

The intellectual improvement in our race has been effected by slavery, which still exists in a modified form, for ten hours' daily arduous toil cannot rightly be dignified by the name of labor.

Every advance made by workers extends their intellectual powers. Six regular excavators will do more than a dozen men not accustomed to that work.

But slavery has been and is condemned by the civilized world, and the millions are now engaged in modifying it. Reasonable manual toil is a necessity for a healthful existence.

Superstition has been requisit to develop the esthetical or spiritual element in mankind.

All superstitions, from fetich-worship to Christianity, hav been in their time beneficial; but the labors of modern scientists hav proved them all erroneous, and their bibles of fictions are melting away before the researches of modern scientists and philosophers.

But the savage who worships a toad is a step in advance of the savage who passes his life gorging and sleeping, whose spiritual nature has not been awakened.

Many, if not most people, hope that the spirit exists or can exist separate from the body, but no man really knows anything on that subject.

No one of the millions of fantastical or brutal deities set up by human beings has injured mankind. They are simply puppets, but the priesthoods who rule the puppets hav been and are everywhere very detrimental to human happiness.

But the most advanced thinkers of the peoples and the foremost scientists of the age believe that war, slavery, and superstition are passing away, and that their annihilation is now near at hand.

The world has a growth as well as we who liv upon it. The garments that fitted us in childhood do not suit us in mature age. Anyone who regards grave passing events can readily perceive that fate is measuring the world for a new suit of clothes, and that the worn-out old one will be discarded. Wise are they who can perceive the incoming of a new order of civilization. R. W. Hume.

Secularism in St. Louis.

At the request of our worthy and energetic secretary of the American Secular Union, we furnish The Truth Seeker with the official list of the St. Louis Secular Society. The undersigned was elected president; R. M. Stender, secretary; C. L. Haskell, W. C. Bohannon, and A. Longly, vice-presidents; S. A. Rendl, financial secretary, and E. Giclaz, treasurer. This new organization of sixteen members is the result of Mr. Stevens's recent visit to our city. He gave us two most excellent lectures, one on "God in the State," and the other on the "Blair Bill."

If mental dynamics are governed by a law similar to that controling the physical, namely, that the larger body tends to retain its inertia just in the proportion that it is times larger than the smaller exercising its force on the former, then we concede that the Liberal ball here must swing often and with a wide sweep before the mental inertia of the orthodox bulk will be overcome. This is a stronghold of Romanism. It is the third in rank where the pope holds the balance of power in this country. Absolutely the Washington centennial was here not much else than a papal procession which consumed nearly four hours in passing a given point. Our Secular emblem is the flag above the cross. But on Washington's day the Romanists here had the stars and stripes furled, and in all instances surmounted with the cross. As I stood in the shade of an educational institution viewing the procession, it seemed as though I was under the shadow of the Vatican. We had all the conditions except the geographical locality. The spirit was here.

This unusual exhibition of the cross above every other symbol, though seemingly overdone, is a most significant indication of what the church power would do, if it had the opportunity. The persistency with which all branches of the orthodox church urge the adoption of the infamous Blair bill shows, like a straw, which way the ecclesiastical wind blows. As illustrating this, together with what E. A. Stevens said in one of his lectures about the Jesuitical surveillance exercised over many of our daily papers, we reproduce the following, written to the editor of our most influential daily, the day after our organization was secured:

Editor Globe-Democrat: In your issue of to-day your reporter, in speaking of the organization of the St. Louis Secular Society, says, "Its object is to oppose religion and the churches." He certainly was not present when the constitution stating its object was read. If he was, then we candidly submit this question: Can it be possible that apparently the only qualification for a Sunday reporter for "the great religious daily" is a manifest inability to tell the truth? The general object of the American Secular Union, of which the St. Louis Secular Society is auxiliary, is, according to article 2 of the Constitution, "To accomplish the total separation of church and state, to the end that equal rights in religion, genuin morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in human life be established, protected, and perpetuated." For this purpose we cordially invite the cooperation of all, of whatever opinion, with the assurance that the expression of their views will be treated with the utmost deference.

It is useless to state that this letter was never published. It of course "miscarried," or was lost—in the wastebasket. Had that reporter told what Carlyle terms "the essential God's truth," we do not doubt that the very religious editor of that very religious daily, the Globe-Democrat, would hav rejected the work of his own hireling. We present this as corroborating the fact that such is the stupidity of some orthodox dailies, that their newsmongers are compelled to tell falsehoods in order to get a hearing. Zoa Topsis.

1,454 Wright street.

C. B. Reynolds and Wife out West.

After eighteen months of solid work on a tour reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific and return, making my engagements while en route, I arrived home at North Parma, N. Y., March 8th, full of bright hopes, anticipating the joyous good time I would hav, and the amount of work I would do in writing up "Facts and Fallacies of the New Testament" in book form.

I arrived home in excellent health. Three days after I was taken down with inflammatory rheumatism in the left shoulder. I was confined to my bed three weeks. I hav not yet recovered the full use of my left arm.

I left home five weeks and one day from the time of my arrival there, in response to urgent calls from Walla Walla, accompanied by Mrs. Reynolds, who was advertised to deliver a lecture on "Woman, Past, Present, and Future," at the city hall, Cleveland, O., on Sunday evening, April 14th.

We found the Liberals of Cleveland organized and zealously at work, holding aloft the banners of Freethought, and doing valiant battle to elevate the flag above the cross.

Mrs. Reynolds met with a most kind and enthusiastic reception.

From Cleveland we started on Monday morning for Kalamazoo, to spend a few days with our dear friends, the ever stanch Liberals and zealous workers for The Truth Seeker, Elias H. Gault and wife. On Sunday evening, in compliance with many urgent requests, Mrs. Reynolds delivered a lecture in the parlors of the Gault mansion to a large company of friends, who expressed high appreciation of the lecture and enthusiastically applauded the lecturer.

We left Walla Walla, Washington territory, via the Chicago & Alton railroad, April 17th.

A pointer. From Kalamazoo to Kansas City be sure to buy tickets via Chicago & Alton. It is the very best possible route. Reclining chairs, lavatory—everything strictly first-class and no extra charge.

From Kansas City to Portland via Union Pacific railroad there are daily through trains with Pullman tourist sleeping-cars, which afford the greatest comfort and every convenience—clean, comfortable, roomy beds; tables between the seats; curtains to secure privacy whenever desired; efficient and obliging porters—everything clean, neat, and orderly, and the fare for a double berth—two persons when desired—only $3.

Let travelers studying economy take due notice and govern themselvs accordingly.

We arrived at the beautiful city of Walla Walla (many waters) Tuesday, April 30th, and were received by a committee of the Liberal Club, foremost among whom were the ever-genial Sol Center, the facetious, scholarly Dr. Calder, and A. Rosenow, whose loyalty to principle, generous nature, and chivalrous bearing hav won for him the title of the Prince. His fairy little daughter Margurette presented Mrs. Reynolds with a very beautiful basket of flowers. We had a right royal reception. Everything possible was done to insure our comfort.

Walla Walla, Washington territory, is a thriving, prosperous city, of between four and five thousand inhabitants and rapidly increasing. The city is admirably located in the center of an immense tract of the best farming land that can be found on earth. The streets are wide and very picturesque. A large number of palatial dwelling-houses hav recently been erected. All the houses hav gardens. Nearly all hav very beautiful flower-beds; bright, well-kept green lawns, and handsome shrubbery; fruit-trees loaded with budding fruit, roses of a hundred varieties. Flowers abound in richest profusion. The climate is delightful—quite warm just now during the middle of the day, but deliciously cool and invigorating evenings and nights.

There are gas, electric light, street-cars, fire department, water-works, and the best, purest, soft cold water—the supply unlimited.

Merchants of the city are men of energy, enterprise, and public spirit. The leading business men of the city are Liberals. Competition requires them to do business on small margins. They hav to depend on extensiv sales to insure satisfactory returns. There is but very little difference in the prices of provisions and clothing between Walla Walla and the Eastern cities.

There is a large and influential Liberal society, first organized at the time of my visit here last fall. It has made grand growth and is still growing—numbers to-day ninety male members, comprising the best and most cultured and highly esteemed citizens. The attendance at the hall of the Liberal Club each Sunday has been good. The past two Sundays every seat in the capacious hall has been filled, and the ladies and gentlemen vie with each other in making the meetings alike interesting and instructiv.

The regular scientific course by Dr. Calder will be reinaugurated next Sunday afternoon. There are musical rehearsals at the hall every Wednesday evening. There is a public lecture—admission free, positivly no collections—every Sunday evening at the Opera House.

Mrs. F. C. Reynolds next Sunday afternoon will deliver her much admired scientific lecture, entitled, "Facts, Fancies, and Fallacies." This will be her last lecture here, until her return from her tour through this territory and Oregon.

C. B. Reynolds.

To Spiritualists.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: As I know many Spiritualists read your paper, will you permit me to address to them a few words through its columns, first stating some of the causes which induce me to speak.

There are three Spiritualistic societies in Portland and East Portland, Ore., and it would seem as though there ought to be a growing interest. And so there would be, as I see things, but for the timidity and narrowness of those who generally manage to get or are thrust to the front. I learned long years ago that those of the past:

> Who sought to climb to the mountain's hight,
> And set their eyes to the larger light,
> Ne'er shrank from the vivid lightning's flash,
> Nor paled at the rolling thunder's crash.

And is it not equally true to-day?

I hav no fault to find with the intent, the goodness of those of whom I speak; not that, even though I hav learned that some people are so good they are really of no practical use—are good for nothing—but it is the fear that they shall transcend their limits and talk of something besides Spiritualism.

Suppose, friends, that a bridge had been built over a supposed unpassable river. It would be quite natural for a time that the wonderful triumph of mechanical art should occupy public attention, but what would you think of those who should attempt to make the science of bridge-building the only topic of discussion, or should forbid all crossing of the bridge only of certain classes and for certain purposes?

Remember, please, I am a Spiritualist, and am talking to the large class of Spiritualists who read The Truth Seeker, and I claim that Spiritualism, as understood by the class who so fear that foreign topics shall be brought upon our platforms, such Spiritualism is simply the bridge, and they are the gatekeepers who try to shut back those on that side who would come and, through mediums, inspirationally or otherwise, speak upon practical subjects that directly affect the welfare of those in both worlds.

Not long since a stranger, a gentleman from the East, availed himself of the "free platform" of one of our societies here to express his thought upon the labor question—upon the condition of the workingman. He said: "I am a Spiritualist; I do not question the facts or phenomena, but how can people progress, grow spiritual, under such conditions?" going on to state some of the hardships under which the toiler labored. At the close of his remarks the chairman stated that the object of the meeting was to investigate Spiritualism; that it was not the proper place to bring the labor question.

Spiritualists are quite fond of saying that if Jesus should come again, as many claim he did once, not having where to lay his head, the church wardens of to-day, if they gave him a place at all, would giv one up in the gallery, and in the far-corner back seat.

Permit me to ask what would be done with Wendell Phillips, if he should come as a spirit, and attempt to plead for justice to labor, where such a chairman presided, to say nothing of the myriads who are in that life—are spirits—if they should attempt to talk through media of the causes that crushed them—of the causes which are crushing hundreds of thousands annually?

I attended a meeting in Oakland, Cal., within the past year, where the chairman so worded his invitation to those who were asked to volunteer to occupy the platform, that there was no mistaking his meaning as to the close communion subject intended. Of course I sat still, as I will not talk with a padlock ready to be put upon my lips if I should happen to open them a little too wide. At the close a prominent worker for the oppressed while in this life so far got control that I walked up to that chairman, and in the name of said worker told him what he was doing.

"I can't help it," was the reply; "the discussion of outside topics broke us up in Curtis hall, and they can't be introduced here."

And why were they broken up at Curtis hall? Simply because the church power and the money power objected to free speech. These "Siamese twins" do not want important questions, particularly the labor question, discussed. It is through the influence of these that the laborers are divided into factions—are kept apart. Spies from the powers that be watch that the church interests are not interfered with. The religious bearing of the labor question must not be touched, or must be touched in such a way as to conserve instead of injuring, and the money power has its paid agents to distract and divide.

Now, one of two things must be true. That which is called death does, or it does not, change a man's character. Assuming that Spiritualists are right—that the character, the ruling love, is not changed—then there are those in the spirit-life who are still in sympathy with the church; who are still in sympathy with their friends here who are rich, who hold vast possessions; and, mark! they come to your Spiritual gatherings and oppose the advocacy and discussion of those questions which, if rightly understood and acted upon, would forever destroy church power.

Now, when at the dictatorial command of those influences who are determined to suppress such discussion, our Spiritualists submit to having vital questions ruled out for the sake of peace, what are their gatherings worth to humanity?

"Oh, but you get the proof that your friends still liv, and because they liv you shall liv also."

In the first place, permit me to say that I never doubted continued life, and further, I should prefer annihilation to living in hell.

"But you needn't liv in hell. That is played out."

It will be hell to me if, after I drop this physical body, I am shut off by conservativ chairmen of Spiritual meetings from using media, inspirational or otherwise, through which to discuss the wrongs of our earth systems, for the purpose of helping to redeem humanity from ignorance and superstition, provided I can find no other channel through which to work.

Poverty keeps people in ignorance, and ignorance is the soil in which superstition most flourishes, and the church power cannot be broken so long as our present property system remains intact. This last appeals to Materialists as well as Spiritualists, for in some respects they are making a better fight against that curse of the world, the Christianity which would make Jesus the ruler of nations, than are the Spiritualists themselvs.

One more statement. Having been reading the story, "Yone Santo: A Child of Japan," published by Belford, Clark & Co., in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, and which the church tried to prevent being put in book form, I was particularly aroused against the Christianity that deprives Japan of her rights, many of them as a nation, because not a Christian nation, and in view of the further fact that Japanese rulers were being so pressed that for the sake of their people they will yet feel compelled to adopt Christianity formally as the national religion—in view of all this, I spoke in strong terms against the teachings of the missionaries, and against the course pursued by Christian nations, calling said nations a brotherhood of thieves—did this at a meeting recently in East Portland, and, lo and behold! the chairman stated that the objects of that society were literary and Spiritualistic, and did not call for the denunciation of Christianity.

Of what use, Mr. Editor and Spiritualistic readers of The Truth Seeker, would a thousand such societies be in preventing the seizing of the reins of government for Jesus, as is being attempted by the same kind of Christians who send missionaries to Japan? And when they succeed, as they will if we are not vigilant, where will Spiritualists, as well as Liberals, Agnostics, etc., be so far as either freedom of speech or press is concerned?

I would recommend to your readers to buy, read, and circulate "Yone Santo: A Child of Japan."

Lois Waisbrooker.

How Courtlandt Palmer Became an Infidel.

An aged friend whom I knew more intimately in our youthful days than since, happening to meet me recently, made the following statement to myself and another gentleman:

Courtlandt Palmer when a boy belonged to my Sunday-school class in Dr. Hutton's church, University place, New York. Professor Draper, who married Courtlandt's sister, was an attendant at the same church, and I used to notice that the professor would often smile derisivly at what the preacher said. One day Courtlandt said to me, "Where can I get the proof that the Bible is true?' "Why do you ask that question?" said I. He replied, "Because sometimes I am asked the question myself, and I don't know how to answer it." I then told him that the proof could easily be obtained—that our pastor could show it to him or tell him where to get it. But the boy, you know, became an Infidel, and doubtless it was through his brother-in-law that he was led astray.

My friend who said this became a Christian about the time I began to evolute out of orthodoxy. He knew that I had departed from the faith to some extent, but did not know how far away I had drifted.

And by the way, he did not know, until I told him, that Courtlandt Palmer's body was cremated. So I hav hunted up The Truth Seeker of Aug. 4, 1888, containing the full account of the funeral, and mailed it to him at Johnstown, N. Y.

Burr.

A New Idea for the Schools.

Why is it that lawyers as a class hav more influence over the public than any other—or, in fact—all others combined? You may ask, "Is this so?" and you may doubt it. But if you will investigate it is probable that you will conclude it is the fact. In every village and town and in all the large cities lawyers are the leading men. In all legislativ bodies the lawyers outnumber the others "by a large majority." Of our presidents all hav been lawyers save three. Nearly every vice-president has been a lawyer. Let any emergency arise and you shall find lawyers come to the front as advisers.

The profession is unpopular. There is something contemptible in the position of a man who takes sides for hire. And there is no calling more odious than that of the wretched village pettifogger, and the business has naturally attracted to itself thousands of base, unprincipled men. But the most prejudiced critic of the profession must admit that nearly all the lawyers he meets with are men of sharp wit and close, critical reasoners on almost every subject. The cause of this is that they are trained to reason logically on every subject that comes before them. The legal methods are strictly logical. No men deal in sophistry more than do they, but they know it. An ordinary audience will listen to an orator and swallow all his assertions with perfect conviction, whereas the same number of lawyers would be laughing at his bald absurdities, his groundless assertions, his self-contradictions. For example, not long since a fine orator held his audience as bound by a charm, uttering melodiously one fallacy after another all in a chiaro oscuro of splendid imagery, a golden fog, describing the happy condition of the people of a certain state engaged in cultivating sugar cane, some five hundred thousand souls occupied in the "industry," and who would be made paupers if a certain threatened law were passed. It was magnificent. Political enemies were silenced, crushed, convinced. Not a soul, perhaps, of the vast concourse paused to ask how many people liv in the state and of them how many in towns. The simple facts are, that not more than ten or twelve thousand people all told were engaged in the business, and that there are not five hundred thousand people in the whole state, men, women, and babes, all told, outside of the cities.

The foregoing is an example of what takes place daily. People hear discourses or read whole columns without stopping to criticise. But not so with lawyers. They are trained to a critical examination of statements.

It is a serious defect in an educational system that literary criticism is confined entirely to words, to grammar, to sound, etc. A very simple course would suffice to put us all in the right way. A few lessons, beginning, say, with Macaulay's essays on Southey's "Colloquies," and concluding with a study of Chillingworth's "Religion of Protestants," would be training enough in the direction I mean.

But the schools will be slow to adopt the new study. Why? For the very reason they hav in all the long past neglected it. Priestcraft fears critical analysis. It dreads the interrogatory. Like some bothered parent it says, "Ask no more questions; shut up." Monopoly of all kinds, whether of physical or intellectual forces, shuns the bright flashing sword of truth. "Let me alone," is its motto.

It will effect a wonderful, a miraculous revolution, if ever a coming generation is well grounded in the study of logical criticism. One hundredth part of the time now wasted on precocious geography, even grammar, devoted to that science, will revolutionize society.

Holt.

As for the theology that is now studied—in place of natural philosophy—it is the study of human opinions and of human fancies concerning God. It is not the study of God himself in the works that he has made, but in the works or writings that man has made; and it is not among the least of the mischiefs that the Christian system has done to the world, that it has abandoned the original and beautiful system of theology, like a beautiful innocent, to distress and reproach, to make room for the hag of superstition.—Thomas Paine.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post.office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 15, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

WE very strongly urge those of our subscribers who are in arrears to forward the money at once, as it is needed in our business. The paper dealers and the printers and the landlord cannot be satisfied without cash, and that cash must come from our friends who owe it to us. Hundreds are owing from one to three dollars each, and this amount, small in individual cases but large in the aggregate, we depend upon to pay our bills. We hope no one in arrears will longer put off his plain duty.

Freethought Vindicated in Rome, and It Makes the Pope Sick.

Cable Dispatch to last Monday's Papers.

ROME, June 9, 1889.—The statue of Giordano Bruno was unveiled to-day with imposing ceremonies. Thirty thousand persons, including students and deputations from various parts of Italy, marched in procession through the principal streets. The removal of the canvas covering the statue was the signal for deafening cheers. The ceremonies were witnessed by the syndic of Rome, the government officials, and a large number of senators and deputies. Deputy Bovis, in an oration, eulogized the martyr and declared that to-day was born a new religion of Freethought and liberty of conscience which would be worse for the papacy than the loss of temporal power. After a banquet, at which one thousand covers were laid, the procession returned to the starting-point and was dismissed. In the evening the monument was illuminated.

The pope is much depressed. It is reported that he refuses to see anybody, and that he passed three days absorbed in prayer in his private chapel. Four hundred telegrams hav arrived at the Vatican deploring the unveiling of the Bruno monument. All the embassadors accredited to the Vatican met this afternoon in the pope's chapel.

The pope, finding his protest against the erection and dedication of the statue of Giordano Bruno to be useless, ordered the clerical papers, a few days before the dedication, to cease their abuse of the project. This was wise on his part, for the abuse only served to recall with greater clearness the infamous treatment which his church awarded the Italian philosopher nearly three hundred years ago. But the dedication of the monument completely prostrated the poor old man, notwithstanding his three days' praying vigil.

The statue is erected, dedicated, and is a permanent rebuke to Roman Catholicism. The pope could not prevent it, and he is left with only the encouragement he can derive from the four hundred consolatory telegrams sent by his friends and the sympathetic letter which the emperor of Austria is said to hav written him. The rulers of Austria are all good slaves of Rome, and about the worst and most immoral lot of tyrants in Europe. Probably Francis Joseph desired to return the favor the pope did his family by burying his roué son, who committed suicide, in "consecrated" ground. The emperor of Austria and the pope fit each other like the upper and nether jaws of a wild beast.

The part American Freethinkers hav taken in this rebuke to the church is one of which we are proud. If they will only stand as nobly together to resist Catholic and Protestant aggression in their own country, the end of ecclesiastical despotism cannot be far away.

Heaven.

The Omaha Republican has evidently engaged a theological editor, and he differs from most other theologians in that he possesses great good sense. A short time ago we recorded his opinion of ministers, and now he shows the Christians what heaven is and is not, if their theory be true.

In old times, when people worshiped the material, when they hardly distinguished the image of the saint from the sentiment it is alleged he represented, man obtained his physical conception of heaven. It was then pictured as a city of golden streets and jasper gates, with thrones and mansions for the blest. These people knew as much about it then as anyone does now, and there is no particular physical or scientific reason to change the conception. That the conception has changed is because the people do not believe in a heaven at all so much as they did.

In this city of golden streets and jasper gates and thrones and mansions for the blest, what of the life of those who hav gained it? There can be no love there, because love depends upon selection and finds its expression in a tender desire to assist and shield its object. The manifestation of love is in self-sacrifice. In heaven there can be no sacrifice, because everything is well, is best, is perfect. When we love a man we giv him more than we do to others. We cannot do this in heaven. We cannot do anything or anybody. Everybody is done for. There can be no passion in heaven, because there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage—life is not created there—it is. There can be no ambition, because there is nothing to gain. There can be no hope, because there is nothing to hope for. There can be no gratitude, because there is nothing to escape from. There can be no success, because there is no failure. There can be no gratification, because there is no desire. There can be nothing to do, because everything has been done. There can be nothing to remember and nothing to expect.

That, then, is the life of the saint in heaven, for which he has toiled and believed and cheated his neighbor and said long prayers and listened to stupid sermons and burnt witches and hanged Quakers and murdered heretics—a life without love, without passion, without friendship or hope or ambition or gratitude or success or work or memory or expectation—a perfectly dead-level sameness of measureless rest, undesired and undesirable. Wings at last, and nothing to do with them. Nothing to strive for, nothing to dream of, nothing to cherish, nothing to succor, nothing to weep over, nothing to smile upon—no heroes, no poetry, no temptations to resist, nowhere to go! An eternal supreme unimportance; an infinit uncaring peace! That is the orthodox heaven.

According to this picture, which is true to the picture presented by Christian dreams and the theology of Christianity's founders, heaven is about the last place in the universe that a healthy man would care to visit—even if he were dead. But nobody believes in it now. Nobody believes in the gold and jasper, because everybody comprehends that with the plentifulness of those materials and no financial use for them their value would be gone. Gold and jasper are to be desired simply because they enable the possessor to get the better of those who hav them not, and when all possess them in equal quantities the joy of possession is gone. So the old conception of heaven has been given up, and the seeker for eternal bliss finds himself confronted not with a condition, but with a theory, whereof there are many parts, and he can choose for himself. He can sing psalms or visit planets, attend spiritual conferences or plow spiritual gardens. The theory possesses great power of extension, and no one can contradict what another conceives, for no one knows. The theory is that spirits are happy, and that the Lord takes care of them. The question is, however, has the theory any more substantial basis than the conception of the condition?

The Johnstown Flood and the Ministers.

The frightful disaster at Johnstown, Pa., is bringing out the fool preachers in great strength. They derive all sorts of lessons from the calamity, and see in it the hand of providence from all possible points of the compass. "We must leave all to God," says Talmage, and the others echo the chorus, concluding that anyhow God is good, though men may not understand his motiv in drowning, burning, and maiming eight or ten thousand helpless human beings.

If the clergy would stop but a moment and reflect upon the relations God holds to this disaster, provided their theory of providence be true, they would be quiet and humble. If providence rules the world, it could hav prevented this flood. If it could and did not, it is a fiend. As such it is unworthy of one apologetic word, but should be denounced by every human being. A personal power which could hav prevented this agonizing casualty and yet purposely allowed it to occur can never be called good by any man with a heart until the significance of language shall be reversed.

And in relieving the indescribable distress following, where is the providence which the Christians look to? Has providence rescued one drowning man? Has it taken one woman from a burning house or snatched one child from the pitiless flood? Not one. Every particle of aid has come from human beings, who, if the providential theory be true, are periling their own souls in seeking to thwart the Lord in caring for those whom he designed should perish. Humanity is the sole savior of the people in the stricken valley. The rescuing committee do not pray, they ask for human aid. Food does not come to the survivors from prayer, but from generous human hands. Clothing for them is not woven in heavenly looms, but here on earth, by human beings who freely giv that those condemned of the Lord (if Christian theology be true) shall not perish from the earth.

In all, over all, and through all, we see inexorable law, but no providence. Nature is as pitiless as steel. She is controled only by putting one law against another, not destroying either but using the stronger to overcome the weaker. There was no providence in building a dam; there was no providence in its bursting under the weight of water rushing against it. God is absolved from all responsibility in causing the ruin, as he is from all concern in caring for the killed and the living. Human beings built the dam; they did not foresee the storms which flooded the country, and they did not build it strong enough. Theirs the blame. Human beings rescued the drowning; human beings did all they could to snatch the child from the flood and the women from the flames. Theirs the honor and credit.

Disasters like this show plainly how useless and foolish the clergy as a class are. They hav a hypothesis to support, a scheme to maintain, and to do it they can see good in utter evil, and evil in absolutely good. Their reasoning is foolish and their incantations are useless. Better in this catastrophe one loaf of bread, one garment of cloth, one helping hand—better even is one penny, than all the prayers that hav been uttered from all the pulpits and closets and public places of the world. Let us hear no more about leaving all to God; if that had been done the dead in the Conemaugh valley would hav numbered twenty thousand instead of ten thousand. The mysterious ways of providence are simply the deficient judgment of man, or perhaps a criminal carelessness.

A Small Christian.

A slimsy sheet out in Michigan has begun a violent warfare upon the New York World because the latter journal published a long interview with one of Colonel Ingersoll's daughters. "A great newspaper," says our Wolverine weakling, "should know better than to giv space to highly colored descriptions of the beautiful home life of an Infidel family. The Misses Ingersoll say that they hav never attended church, never prayed, and do not like the Bible because it is full of impossible and cruel things. They gush a good deal about their kind-hearted father, and claim that they are all superlativly loving and happy. All this nonsense about the prosperity and happiness of the Ingersolls is written by men who secretly desire to impress people with the idea that it is easy for an Infidel to be happier and more successful than a Christian. This is all there is in it, and the publication of such an interview was simply a piece of wicked folly."

It is too bad, indeed! The World should be suppressed at once; for if some young Christian who has been told that all Infidels are monsters miserable and cantankerous should see that description of the home and home life of the Ingersoll family, he might doubt the veracity of his teachers, and hav his confidence in them so shaken that he would refuse to believe the Bible itself. Shocking thought!

But this fellow out West speaks for a good many other Christians, or he would not be worth a moment's notice. It has been and is yet among the mossback Christians the plan of the church to assert, first, that there are no Infidels; second, that if there are, they are degraded specimens of humanity, immoral, drunken, thriftless, lazy, and quarrelsome. The Infidel depicted in Sunday-school books generally beats his wife, maims his children, and either goes to hell by lightning express or picks up a tract on the street, is overpowered by the force of the appeal to sinners, becomes converted, joins the church, and henceforward is a living testimonial—after taking—to the truth of Christianity as it is in Jesus.

It is such pictures as these that are destroyed by true descriptions of the Ingersoll family and home; and the fact that such pictures are destroyed is precisely what causes anger in the hearts of Christians like the Wolverine editor. They cannot bear that the truth concerning Infidels should be known at all. They would fain conceal it and go on lying about unbelievers in the good old pious style. For if it gets out that those who reject Christ are just as moral and generous and sympathetic and honest as any Christians, their stock of horrible examples would be gone. And if their wish could be parent to the fact they would hav Colonel Ingersoll the meanest of men instead of the best, and his family idiotic termagants instead of intelligent and kindly and beautiful women. This, to them, would be for the glory of God and the good of their religion.

And what kind of a religion is it that makes men small enough to demand the concealment of good qualities in any person simply because a knowledge of them might lead some of that religion's advocates to be a little charitable in speaking of unbelievers in it?

The Kansas Victims.

The opinion of Judge Foster in the case against M. Harman's demurrer to the indictment is a funny piece of reasoning. He seems to hav labored very hard to appear fair and broadminded, and then he turns around and shows his narrowness by holding that a printed article similar to others which he had said should not be prosecuted is obscene and should be suppressed.

The works of Swift, Pope, and Fielding, and the Bible, he says, do undoubtedly contain passages which are lewd and obscene, but anyone objecting to their transportation by mail would be laughed at for his prudery. He plainly intimates his impatience with self-constituted smelling committees constantly seeking for something to be shocked at, and altogether takes broad and sensible views of literature. All this, however, he renders void by his later opinions, and shows much lack of attention to principles. If Swift, Shakspere, and the Bible contain obscene passages, but are, nevertheless, not indictable because of that, why should a copy of Lucifer containing an article no more obnoxious be properly liable to the law? Why make fish of one and flesh of the other? If obscenity must depend, as Judge Foster says it does, largely upon the manner, place, and object of its publication, surely Swift, and Pope, and Fielding are more blameable than Mr. Harman. They wrote to amuse, to satirize, and for their own gain. Fielding's "Tom Jones," for instance, contains language which is certainly broader than is considered polite at present; and the object of the book is the amusement of its readers, with incidental satirical castigation of the hypocrisy and vice found in society. The manner is coarse; the object the same as that of thousands of novels. The articles complained of in Lucifer, on the other hand, were written with a purpose. They were relations of facts, a protest against vice, and the object purely to make men better. Why, then, shall Fielding's works be allowed the privileges of the mails and Lucifer excluded?

In another way Judge Foster has also done the defendants injustice. He has rendered an opinion that two of the indicted articles are obscene. This opinion was uncalled for, and should prevent his sitting as the trial judge. Whether the articles are obscene or not should hav been left to the jury to determin. To spread abroad a judicial opinion in advance of the trial is to prejudice the community from which the petit jury must be selected, and render it impossible for the defendant to obtain an intelligent and impartial jury of his peers. There is not one jury in ten thousand which, knowing the judge's opinion, would decide a case on its merits. All that was rightful for Judge Foster to do was to decide the legal points raised, and say he considered the obscenity of the articles, being a question of fact, a matter for a jury to determin. As it is, if Messrs. Harman and Walker are tried before Judge Foster, and by a jury of Topeka citizens who hav read his formal opinion that the indicted articles are really within the meaning of the statute, what chance for their liberty will they hav? This is outrageously wrong, for they will practically though not technically be deprived of their right to a trial before an impartial jury. Judge Foster should hav kept his opinion to himself till after the trial.

From present appearances, the prospects for conviction of the three defendants are exceedingly bright. It may be that the jury will possess minds and opinions of their own, with education sufficiently liberal to distinguish between the matter complained of and the lewd and indecent stuff which alone should be designated as obscene, but we hav grave doubts. United States courts usually convict; the judges are conservativ; the jury is usually selected from the "orthodox" class—men who act as though the guilt of an action lay in its being found out—and the prosecuting attorney generally thinks that he earns his salary better by convicting the accused than by securing an impartial trial. And with the opinion of the judge known beforehand, we fail to see even a small rift in the cloud lowering over the editors of Lucifer. It is a hard case indeed.

A Judicial Gem.

Considering the recent numerous cases of outlawry of Freethinkers in Alabama, New York, and other places, the following words are of supreme interest, inasmuch as they are the decision of a court. It is new to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, the decision being given in 1868 in the case of Hale v. Everett, by Judge Doe of New Hampshire. The case involved the expulsion for heresy of Francis E. Abbott (well known to our readers) from a church at Dover, N. H., where he was then installed as pastor. Mr. Abbott afterward founded the Index. He is and we believe always has been a Theist. Judge Doe's words are:

"A division of society into two ranks, a theological aristocracy on one side, a lower caste on the other—the former wielding all the instruments of the law and all the power of the government to degrade men of the faith of Jefferson, Franklin, Ethan Allen, or Governor Plumer; commanding what doctrin shall not be preached; suppressing the freedom of the pulpit . . . all this is as repugnant to the plain and vital principles of the Constitution, as to the sense and spirit of the people who made the Constitution. The governmental work of that generation has been sufficiently extoled for eighty-five years past as a triumphant vindication of human rights, affording a sure protection against ecclesiastical oppression. That work must be undone, and a degenerate age must be ready to welcome the return of the worse despotisms, before a system of religious caste can be introduced. When an Infidel does not stand as well in law before the tribunals of justice as a Christian, in any sense of the word, our free institutions are a failure. . . . The Constitution does not assume to create religious rights or to distribute them. A single unresisted infringement, established as a precedent, subjugates the weak, or leaves them at the mercy of the strong. Every man is liable to hold unpopular theological opinions. And when the right to hold and inculcate such opinions is not sacred, when the constitutional defenses of the right are dismantled, and it is left with no better security than the generosity and tolerance of an ecclesiastical court or the caprice of a ruling class, the theory of our government is exploded and its original authority at an end. We cannot adjudge his [Abbott's] faith to be a heretical departure from a state religion until we destroy the Constitution, establish a state religion, and annex a supreme bishopric to the judicial office. . . . Abbott's cause, strenuously opposed in the field of theology, becomes, in law, the common cause of religious liberty, and the indestructible interest of mankind."

These words should be writ large and placed where all men can see them. "WHEN AN INFIDEL DOES NOT STAND AS WELL IN LAW BEFORE THE TRIBUNALS OF JUSTICE AS A CHRISTIAN, IN ANY SENSE OF THE WORD, OUR FREE INSTITUTIONS ARE A FAILURE." Never was the true principle of our government better stated; never was there a more truthful sentence written. Judge Doe clearly saw what a secular government should be, and so far as he had the power he endeavored to make this a really free country. The concluding portion of his decision is a brilliant exposition of constitutional rights, revealing a love of justice and determination to uphold religious liberty. True it is to-day, true it has ever been and ever will be, that when a heretic has not the right to express his opinions, and when ecclesiastics form our laws, our government fails in its province, and departs from the intention of those who formed and established it.

These words of Judge Doe should be kept before the people, and made familiar to the judiciary of all the states.

Editorial Notes.

THE London Freethinker sizes up the church pretty accurately. "We are abandoning dogma," it quotes from the Christian World, "and getting closer to the heart of Christ." How pretty! exclaims Mr. Foote, but what the deuce does it mean? He would put it this way: "We are rebuilding and refitting the ship, chartering a different cargo, and running up fresh bunting, but we intend to keep the same old figure-head."

SINCE the list of Bruno monument contributions was printed on another page, Mr. Wakeman has forwarded these additional names: Charles Sach, Grand Rapids, Mich., $2; Arthur Litten, Green Valley, Cal., $1; H. G. Stillwell, Seven Rivers, New Mexico, $1—making $1,144.15 as the total contribution of American Freethinkers toward honoring one of the greatest men the popes ever cursed. This contribution is also larger than that of any other one country. The account is now closed.

SAYS the Christian Register, Unitarian: "Ministers who inveigh against the reading of fiction must consistently warn their hearers against reading a good many religious stories, such as make up Old Testament mythology. A better way is to enjoin their hearers not to read fiction as if it were bald fact." The Register might hav added the New Testament mythology and the great mass of theological literature, creedal, exegetical, and didactic, and then kept well within the limits of reading that should be indulged in sparingly.

THE London correspondent of the Sun relates that an English firm which is exhibiting in the Paris exhibition, and which is in the habit of covering its cases and withdrawing its attendants on Sunday, the only day when French workingmen can go there, received a valuable lesson on last Sunday They had been asked by the exhibition authorities to at least leave their exhibits uncovered if they didn't care to keep attendants there, but declined to be advised. On last Sunday the French workingmen amused themselvs by tearing the covers off the cases, and organized that particular exhibit in their own way.

THE Rev. George Washington Baskerville, of Tower City, N. Dak., is in trouble. Recently he preached a serm n on "The Modern Dance" which, when reported in the Tower City Herald, proved to be so indecent that the citizens boycotted the paper and engaged in lively abuse of the preacher. Mr. Peabody, of Oriska, sends the sermon to us with a request to print, which we must decline. The Holy Bible and sermons of this character form a class of literature that our type, old as it is, cannot reproduce without blushing. And anything that will make a combination of lead and antimony blush, or the stones to cry out, is too strong for the average human being to peruse.

IN an account of the devastation by the flood at Johnstown is this incident described in the associated press reports. We hope those ministers who are in this great emergency "leaving all to God" will read it and ponder: "An utterly wretched woman named Mrs. Fenn stood by a muddy pool of water trying to find some trace of a once happy home. She was half crazed with grief, and her eyes were red and swollen. As the writer stepped to her side she raised her pale and haggard face and remarked: 'They are all gone; O God, be merciful to them! My husband and my seven little children hav been swept down with the flood, and I am left alone. We were driven by the flood into the garret, but the waters followed us there. Inch by inch it kept rising until our heads were crushing against the roof. It was death to remain. I raised a window and one by one placed my darlings on some driftwood, trusting to the great creator. As I liberated the last one, my sweet little boy looked at me and said: "Mamma, you always told me that the Lord would care for me. Will he look after me now?" I saw him drift away with his loving face turned toward me, and with a prayer on my lips for his deliverance he passed from sight forever. The next moment the roof crashed in, and I floated outside to be rescued fifteen hours later from the roof of a house in Kernville. If I could only find one of my darlings I could bow to the will of God. But they are all gone. I hav lost everything on earth now but my life, and I will return to my old Virginia home and lay me down for my last sleep.'"

Letters from Friends.

SEDALIA, Mo., May 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find thirty cents, for which please send to my address one copy "Pioneer Pith." As yet we hav not perfected an organization, but we are still striving to accomplish it, with a fair prospect of so doing in the near future. We now hav several outspoken Liberals that are agitating the subject of organization and Freethought, and I hope to be able to send you news soon of our success.

Yours fraternally, WILLIAM MATTHEWS.

FRENCHTOWN, NEB., May 31, 289 E.M.

MR. EDITOR: The people in this state hav never known anything else but hard times, and will not now under the present pious administration. There is nothing doing to relieve the distress of the common people, nothing but show and parade in high places, while farmers are groaning under mortgages piled mountain-high—mortgages on their land, on teams, on stock of all kinds, on implements, and even their crops. We are not living, only hanging on ready to drop. All we need to make our misery complete is for Comstock to come along and gobble us up. MARY BAIRD FINCH.

OREGON, Mo., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The church of Rome had not a thing to do with the Holy Alliance. That alliance was got up by the emperor Alexander of Russia, who induced the emperor of Austria and the king of Prussia to join with him. The three represented themselvs as guardians under God and Christ of the general welfare. There were but three resolutions in their agreement. They sound as much like the resolves of our God-in-the-Constitution fanatics as it is possible. Indeed, the idea of the latter is evidently derived from this Holy Alliance. Your correspondent will get a full and minute account of that rather ridiculous affair from volume 1 of Brougham's Speeches, in the introduction to Brougham's speech on it. The book can no doubt be got of Daniel G. Francis, 17 Astor place, New York, if nowhere else.

CLARKE IRVINE.

VAN METER, IA., June 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I am much interested in the great question, theology. I hav been told I was in the wrong, and would regret all I hav said, etc. I hav been laying a good deal of stress upon the divinity of Christ, the miracles, and find they are something the church cannot prove. But they still say I "must believe or be damned." The more a person thinks of the way the church looks at these questions, the more absurd they seem. The churches simply tell you to be good for the reward you may receive, or to escape hell-fire—of either of which they know nothing. The idea I find that is much better to liv by is, Do right for right's sake, and not be preparing to die, but go out and help humanity, and the people to come will be the better for our having lived in the world. What a vast amount of good the church could do by educating the people during the week and preaching morality on Sunday! A friend, MOBRIDE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 3, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed application was picked up in the street:

HON. JOHN WANAMAKER, Postmaster-general, Sir: I want a place in your department and want it —— bad. I am thirty-eight years old; liv at No. 5,879 Chestnut street, west Philadelphia, and belong to the Young Men's Christian Association. I hav been a member of the church militant from before I was born. I came into the world with a hallelujah on my lips and intend to leave it shouting "Glory!" I hav always bought my clothing at Wanamaker and Brown's and shall buy my ascension robes there. I am a Republican black as the ace of spades, and, had I the power, would hang every copperhead in the land.

I fear that in the plenitude of Christian benevolence you victimize yourself for the benefit of your employees. I am told you pay your sewing-girls thirty-six cents per dozen for making shirts. You should not submit to such extortion. Twenty-five cents is quite enough.

Trusting you may, in tender mercy, appoint me to some fat position, I hav the honor to remain, prayerfully yours, JOSIAH SNAP.

Respectfully, J. K. BOLDING.

FROM AGNOSTICISM TO SPIRITUALISM.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Every man, woman, and child of ordinary intelligence in the world can hav the fact of spirit return proved to them if they desire it. The trouble with too many is, they do not want the proof. Some would like to hav it if they could stand off a certain distance and hav some one lead out a dead friend, giving them a chance to question such friend, or turn and run, as the case might be. But in no other way will they investigate. They want to giv all the rules to be followed in proving the fact, assuming that they hav the only reliable method, asserting at once their ignorance of the subject, taking the most bigoted orthodox position, that their way is the only way to the light.

I was amused a few days ago by some Agnostic friends who challenged me to produce the proof of spirit return. After much solicitation on their part, I whittled out a rough planchet, this being the simplest and most easily understood method of communicating with departed spirits. I gave the necessary instructions how to use the instrument, and requested them to try it. They partially followed my instructions without much success at first, but finally one of the parties (who had always been busy when a trial was in progress) placed his hand on the instrument with another, and inside of one minute it moved. This so startled him that he had other business at once. He admitted afterward that he was unable to work for an hour on account of the shock. These shouting Agnostics only need to be shaken up once by a departed spirit to set them thinking. And when they get to thinking they begin to realize that there is an invisible power possessing knowledge, and as they progress will soon learn that this knowledge and power was once encased in a human form, and they will be Spiritualists in spite of themselvs.

I am very skeptical when it comes to public manifestations of Spiritual things, and the last place I would think of going for proof of an existence beyond the grave would be to a public medium.

I hav attended the meetings of the Secular Union in this city of late, and as nearly as I can find out there is but one difference between a Spiritualist and an Agnostic. If seeking for the truth in all things, accepting nothing without absolute proof, working for the greatest good to the human family here and now, and for the perfect freedom of all, is the object of the Agnostics, I am with them. If seeking for proof of an existence beyond the grave and finding the proof makes a man a Spiritualist, I am a Spiritualist. What is the difference?

I can only giv my own experience. I feel very much further advanced in all that pertains to life, as a Spiritualist, than I had ever dreamed of as an Agnostic. The Spiritualist evolves out of the Agnostic generally, very seldom from the Christian. Christianity first, Agnosticism second, and Spiritualism last. And when they get there they stay, from the fact that they hav proof of their position in these matters. No one who honestly seeks for proof of the above-mentioned facts will be disappointed in finding the proof and any amount of it. F. E. ORMSBY.

LITTLE HOCKING, O., May 29, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: To-morrow, Decoration day, Ben Harrison, the religious bigot who fills the presidential chair of these United States, no doubt will hav a word to say about the "nation's honored dead—the men who fought, bled, and died to save this country." Wonder if Ben will stop long enough to think that a large per cent of these brave men went to meet their God unprepared, according to his religious belief, and that hell is now echoing with their cries and groans. What a beautiful custom, to strew the graves of these men with bright flowers! If they can but look up from the depths of hell, what consolation in the thought to know that man is not so mean as God! The meanest Christian in New Jersey or Alabama would hardly condemn these men, who laid down their lives in defense of their country, to such a punishment as this. Yes, go right on decorating, ye Christian brethren. Who knows but that this offering of flowers may act as did the burnt offerings in the days of old, and God's wrath be turned away from these innocent soldiers, and they be allowed to come out and cool off every thousand years or so? Even this would be an improvement on the eternal plan and serve to break the monotony.

FORESTPORT, N. Y., June 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read carefully the late articles of Burr, McArthur, and company in regard to Spiritualism, but the impression remains as strong as ever that they are looking for truth in the wrong direction. Rejecting the superstitions of the church and adopting the hallucinations of Spiritualism, looks to me like a change from partial to total blindness. Spurning with contempt the so-called miracles of the Galilean and his apostles and accepting with enthusiasm the sleight-of-hand performances of trance mediums, is, in my opinion, not an advance but a retrograde movement on the line of scientific discovery and common sense.

In the department of science I hav but little to say, being a plain farmer, and low down at that; but when Mr. McArthur and Dr. Severance tell us that it is no more strange that one of their aerial spirits should disregard the call of a friend or relativ when made outside the walls of a dark séance chamber than that a living man should be oblivious to a similar call made by a distant friend without the aid of a telegraph or a telephone office, I regard it as an insult offered to my understanding. This sort of maladroit comparison shows the utter weakness and helplessness and hopelessness of their cause. The working of the telegraph and telephone is done by materialistic force, arranged and controled by corporeal man, and there is no "spiritual phenomenon" about it. It is materialism pure and simple, and nothing else. A few years ago it would hav been regarded as Spiritualism, diabolism, or witchcraft. A few years more and all these mysterious phenomena that pass for Spiritualism, supernaturalism, and faith cure will be exposed, and explained upon the same principle. We must wait as patiently as we can until that time comes. I think the great trouble with these good friends of ours is, that in their eagerness to know everything they become excited and allow sharpers to fool them. I hav got pretty well over that kind of feeling, for I found out years ago that Agnosticism or downright ignorance is better than counterfeit knowledge.

There is another side to this question that has often presented itself strongly to my mind, and I think it is worth considering. Assuming that those spirits do exist somewhere in the vast unknown, and judging from all the "manifestations" we hav had so far, we must inevitably conclude that they care but very little about us, or else they hav but very little power to hear or to help us. Which is it? If I were as familiar with some of these ghostly visitors as McArthur is, I should never rest content until this question was satisfactorily answered. And in either case I don't think I should care to liv among them. I should hav no desire to liv in a society where I was destined to become callous or indifferent to the welfare of my fellow-beings. And surely I would never be willing to migrate to a country where freedom of action and liberty of movement is more restricted than it is here. Come, Mr. McArthur, let us hear from you. Call up your friend Dr. Davis and question him sharply about these things. We will take it for granted that you heard the writing being done under the table, and all that, but what we object to is that it is not good for anything when we hav got it. Get him to tell us something about the politics and social ethics of the country where he livs. And do please ask him why he can't write a short message on one slate as well as on two.

I hav been strongly inclined to a belief in this kind of supernaturalism from my youth up. I hav had dreams, visions, premonitions, and all that sort of thing, and consequently I suppose I must be a good subject for your party to work upon; but I warn you that you will hav to conquer my reason before you can convert me again to a belief in ghosts or spirits. Before I can again hav any faith that the spirits of departed friends are watching and hovering around me, they must put their messages into more definit and reliable form than they hav ever done yet.

JEREMIAH O'BRIEN.

HAY SPRINGS, NEB., May 15, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday evening I attended the Methodist Episcopal church at this place and in the latter part of the sermon the preacher opened up a tirade of abuse against Infidelity and Infidels, and commented in a sneering manner upon a matter published in your paper some few weeks since.

When I hear an orthodox preacher tell things which he cannot prove, and I hav not the chance or right to reply, it makes me feel like giving a toast to Mother Eve and the devil thus, "Here is to Mother Eve and the devil, the first advocates of free discussion."

When a preacher speaks about a person's "idea and conception of a God," I would ask if he believes that a God, who made all things, not only this little world and all things therein, but countless other worlds or planets—to try to number them would be like trying to dip the water out of the Niobrara river with a teaspoon to dry it up—if this is the same God that prescribed Ezekiel's bill of fare, and commanded what he should eat, and the amount that he should eat each day (Ezek. iv, 10-15)? I wonder if Ezekiel asked the Lord to bless his food when the Lord was not around, or, if the Lord was around, did he ask him to dine with him?

Now, to hav a conception of such a God is a great conception indeed, and to think that he was the true God of this universe especially.

Now, if there was any such God as the Bible givs a description of, he was a "Joe Dandy."

The Bible givs an account of God's followers getting a little full when he was along, and, after the wine was all drank, God (God and Christ were both one) made several barrels more, and after getting a little full, sat down and played "high five" for the drinks. (This is a special revelation of my own.) Now, I can come just as near proving this to be true, as an orthodox preacher can come to proving that the Bible is all true. And farther, is this not the same orthodox God to whom millions of prayers went up from pulpit, fireside, and tented field, both North and South, from Europe, and almost every nation on the globe, asking him to interpose and stop the strife between brothers, and to stop the bloody carnage? But the war continued without his intervention, and was not brought to a close until the South had exhausted its resources, and was no longer able to offer resistance to the Union armies.

Fred Douglass said that he prayed for over fifteen years, but the only prayer answered in his case was the one he made with his legs when he ran away from bondage.

Now, further in regard to "a conception of a God," think of those hundreds of quintillions of orbs—if they were made by the orthodox God, as the preachers claim they were, or any other god, can it be possible that any human being can hav even a partial conception of such a God? (We hav only a partial conception of this little world.) It is beyond the comprehension of the greatest developed brain; even the Hay Springs preachers cannot grasp the infinit; even Christ himself had no conception of the true god of this universe. Even he did not know of such a country or place as America. And God—Jehovah—did not know whether or not the children of Israel would come up on the mountain when he (God) and Moses were writing the laws on the tables of stone, as the Bible says that he told Moses to go down and tell them not to come up. Yours, T. S. TRIPP.

TILFORD, DAK., May 31, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Yours just received. I will take pleasure in doing all I can toward increasing the circulation and influence of your publications. This place is small, and a lot for its first church has just been located. A Sunday-school has been in working order about four weeks. I hav just organized the Tilford Progressiv Lyceum for the discussion of economic, social, and all other questions of interest to thoughtful men and women. I intend this movement to completely swallow up the church element. I secured a yearly lease on the only hall in town yesterday. I am the leader of an orchestra here, and we intend to absorb public interest so far as possible by furnishing the greater attraction. My idea is that by starting now we can preclude the possibility of sectarianism ever getting a foothold in this village. E. B. David livs here, a stanch Infidel. He claims a personal acquaintance with D. M. Bennett. John W. Allen, of Postville, three miles from here, is an outspoken Infidel, a prosperous farmer with much influence. Freeman Knowles, editor of the Tilford Times, is a progressiv writer, and favorable to the movement. George Zentz, a merchant, is an Atheist; James Chalmers, contractor and builder, Atheist. These men are all in the movement, and I think we shall hav no trouble in disposing of Freethought literature after two or three meetings. We shall start a Secular Sunday-school this fall, if not sooner. Mr. Knowles has eight children, and he has told me he would like them to hav opportunity to learn something of natural science and ethics; but Mrs. Knowles is a Christian, and her children attend the Methodist Sunday-school because there is no other place.

Mr. Knowles never saw an Infidel paper or read an Infidel book until he made my acquaintance at Sturgis last fall. "Men, Women, and Gods" very nearly converted Mrs. Knowles. I hav just been appointed justice of the peace by the county commissioners in response to a petition circulated last week. Seventy votes were cast here May 14th, and sixty-one names were on the petition. You will infer from this that my Infidelity does not hurt much yet. I am anxious to hav such conditions continue here, and this is why I start the Lyceum now while the town is only one year old, and before orthodoxy gets a hold. I will place on sale anything you send me, also advertise in the local paper. I would like the "Cosmian Hymnbook." Please send sample copy. If it is what it purports to be, I shall induce our society to order one of two dozen. I would like Remsburg's "False Claims" and "Sabbath-Breaking," about three copies of each to begin with. What I need here is Mrs. Slenker's "John's Way" and "The Darwins." I should like "Exeter Hall" and "The Heathens of the Heath." The reason I suggest works of this character is because I hav to do pioneer work for a while, and these are just what are needed for proselyting.

The single-tax movement is growing here in the Black Hills. The Farmers' Alliance is strong, and everywhere about me I see an open field.

I am reminded that several times I hav thought of suggesting to you what I believe would greatly add to the value of your publication, THE TRUTH SEEKER. Heston's pictures are immense, and if I could hav used them this winter without destroying valuable matter on the second page, I should hav pasted them in spots all over the town in which I lived. A dozen or two of these pictures pasted up solid in conspicuous places, with THE TRUTH SEEKER heading, would not only advertise the paper a great deal, but would attract attention and create argument. Could not the Truth Seeker Company afford a cover such as the Harpers now use on their Weekly? It could contain advertisments of your publications which would compensate for extra cost of paper, and then the pictures could be used, if on the cover, without destroying valuable reading matter. What do you think of the suggestion?

FRANK GREEN.

EDEN, ALA., May 28, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: J. A. Weaber, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 25th, asks, "If a man die, shall he liv again?" and then makes a lengthy argument to prove that the brain is the mind, and when the brain is dead the mind ceases to be. How this is I do not know. I will ask a question for all truth seekers to think over, and answer if they can, for I can not. Why is it that a man or woman who has lost a limb still feels the limb? How do you account for the phenomenon of a person who has lost a limb, the limb being buried in an awkward or unnatural position, being miserable till the limb is dug up and placed in a natural position? A case in point occurred a few days ago at Birmingham, Ala. A gentleman got run over by a street-car, causing his leg to be amputated. It was placed in a neat coffin lined with satin, padded, etc., and buried in the cemetery. The gentleman after getting from under the influence of the anesthetics complained that his foot was in a strain, twisted out of its proper position. I hav not heard from him since the foot was placed straight in the coffin, but it was really in the position he complained of. Now, how did he know it was twisted? An instance is laid down in the medical works of a person who had lost a foot and kept complaining there was something between his toes. He was so persistent in his complaints that his foot was dug up and a gravel was found between the toes, that had been buried without any protection from the dirt. Now, how did he know the gravel was there if the brain is the only seat of the mind or spirit? Several years ago, I mentioned in THE TRUTH SEEKER a few things that happened in my experience—the presentiment of something wrong at home at the moment one of my children died, I being eighteen miles in the country teaching school. What was it told me all was not well at home? What enabled me to recognize and describe a road I had never seen before? The moment I saw it I described a farm about half a mile ahead of where I first recognized the road, describing a house out of sight around a curve in the road I had never seen in my life to a person who was with me. How do you account for that?

There are many things we do not know, and may never know, and may never find out, either, in any other world, and the foregoing are some of them.

I hav been told that my religious friends are talking of turning me out of Sunday-school. What shall I do about it? They hav set down on my getting work to do, and I am not able to move, as I am entirely out of money, and hav precious little grub. I positivly hav not quoted anything outside of the Bible. Yet they are terribly stirred up. I hav let a few read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and others tracts, but not in Sunday-school. A preacher told me I ought to be burnt, and I am glad he did not hav the power to burn me before my time. There are very few people in St. Clair county that do not belong to some church. So you see how it is. I hav got "in the soup."

THE TRUTH SEEKER certainly has the best reading matter in it of any paper that comes within my reach. Lucifer has some fine correspondents, and so hav the Ironclad Age, the Independent Pulpit, and other Freethought journals, but THE TRUTH SEEKER leads them all for brainy correspondence and editorials, and Heston is excellent. When he gets through with the Holy Queer illustrations, I want his caricatures bound in book form. Could you not get out a first volume of his caricatures in cheap shape, for us poor devils to enjoy till he gets up enough material for a second? It will take him a long time to get through the entire book. I will miss a few meals so as to raise funds to pay for one volume of it. Put it on the market.

AMOS L. GRIFFITH.

OTTAWA, CAN., May 27, 1889.

MR. STEVENS, Dear Sir: Salut et fraternité. With due respect for your intellectual worth, I claim that my point was well taken, and that you yourself hav proved it. I said, if I remember aright, that your conclusions in reference to us French Canadians were inspired—whether inspired by the Mail, Sentinel, or Goldwin Smith the fact remains that your information is of second-hand, and not from personal observation. Now, this mondescript economist Goldwin Smith is a man of pronounced antipathies. His bête noir in America is the French element. You know, if anyone knows, that a prejudiced man's opinion must, as a rule, be taken cum grano salt, and you know also that Goldwin Smith is famed for anything but consistency. For instance, he is an annexationist here and an anti-homeruler in England. Besides, his attacks against our nationality hav frequently been answered in our French press, notably a short time since by Mr. Beaugrand, ex-mayor of Montreal, a French Freethinker of no mean merit, in his own paper La Patrie. Think you that Goldwin Smith will take notice of this article? Not at all. He, like the pope, considers that when he has once written upon a subject the matter is finally settled. Besides, Mr. Ross's assertions hav just been sustained by a committee appointed by the Ontario government, the report of which has just been published.

I possess the very hardihood from which you seem to think I will shrink in terror, viz., to affirm that the French Canadians are progressiv, and as you are, like all Liberals, open to conviction, I expect to make you share my opinion. 1. You know that climatic conditions, location, etc., are great factors in the advancement of a nation. Now, your states of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Maine are on about a parallel with the province of Quebec in this respect. I ask you frankly if Quebec has not distanced these states in progress? The general verdict is that it has. You surely would not call the inhabitants of these states retrogressiv. 2. You are too well versed in Canadian history to be ignorant of the fact that when England took possession of Canada all the French families of wealth returned to France. The sixty thousand of French origin that remained in Canada were impoverished by a long and unequal war. They were soon surrounded by the new English colonists, who treated my countrymen with cavalierly contempt—"blawsted foreigners, you know." All intercourse with France having ceased, harshly treated by the conquerors, they had to fall back upon their own resources, which were few. The priests generally took charge of the education of the children, taught them much Catholicism but little else. For one hundred years or so very little progress was made. And I admit that the elder generation of our day is illiterate. But I am sure that our growing generation is equal in general knowledge to that of any other nation. One instance to prove it. Last fall there was a competitiv civil service examination held in Ottawa. There were nineteen French candidates and one hundred and twenty-one English ones. Eleven out of the nineteen French obtained certificates, and only twenty-nine out of the one hundred and twenty-one English. That is to say, fifty per cent of the French and twenty-three per cent of the English were successful. Which is the inferior race? There is no doubt we were handicapped from the start, and the fact that we hav advanced proves conclusivly, I think, that we are progressiv. Now, do you think that our English friends hav much cause to reproach us with talking French when they themselvs forced us to do so? By keeping aloof from us they obliged us to talk French, as we could not very well learn English from the Indians. Let them at least accept the issue with good grace. It is a little late in the day, when we hav grown from sixty thousand to two millions, to ask us to abandon our mother tongue.

Our position is not similar to that of your German element. They come to the States strangers. We are at home. Canada is English by conquest; ours by priority of possession and colonization. We can surely not be termed aliens in the country of our birth. Every intelligent French boy very soon picks up English, and becomes thereby superior to the English boy, who seldom knows any other language but his own. I admit my countrymen hav religion very bad—or that religion has them bad—but not any more so than our English Protestant friends, and I consider that a bigoted Protestant is equally as bad as a Catholic one. It does not follow from that that they are both ignorant in the full meaning of the word. Agassiz and Chevreuil could not consistently be termed ignorant or retrogressiv, though both died believers. I therefore consider that the best way to cure my countrymen of Catholicism is by persuasion and logic, not by sweeping charges of ignorance hurled at them. I know that the former serves my purpose better, and I hope you are of my opinion. With best wishes for the cause of Freethought and truth, I am, Respectfully yours, L. S. MATHÉ.

REDUCTIO AD ABSURDUM.

MANTENO, ILL., May 31, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The writer proposes in the following paper to make only a few comments and suggestions on articles by D. Priestley on "Spiritual Phenomena," published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 25, 1889. That a man of his apparent intelligence should rush into print but to make an exhibition of his bigotry is truly surprising. He claims to hav studied very thoroughly, carefully, and critically all the laws pertaining to Spiritual philosophy, and after tracing them in all their ramifications through the measureless depths of the universe, comes to the very sage conclusion that there is no spiritual life, consequently no spiritual laws or phenomena existing in all the wide realms of nature, for he's left nothing undiscovered that exists.

Brother Priestley reminds me of another person of the same school and mode of thought, who, in conversation on this subject, said: "I know there can be no such thing as spiritual life." I thought, Of course, that settles it; when a person has attained to such dizzy hights of wisdom and knowledge that he becomes perfectly familiar with all the laws and possibilities of nature, there is certainly no room nor need for further research.

I infer from Brother Priestley's remarks that he has never deemed it necessary to stoop so low as to become a witness to phenomena claiming a spiritual origin; as he knows in advance the utter impossibility of such phenomena ever occurring. What would he think of the judge on the bench, or even the jury in the box, should they waive the examination and sifting of evidence, by assuming that owing to their superior wisdom they knew more about the matter in hand than the witnesses themselvs, and thus decide, without hearing the testimony? Or if a man should travel round in a small circuit—as Brother Priestley acknowledges he does—with his eyes fixed steadfastly on the ground, denying the existence of the sun in the heavens at midday, he would be equally as absurd as is the reasoning of the writer under consideration. Our brother says he started with a belief in continued life, but after traveling his little circuit awhile, he ceased to hav the slightest belief in anything whatever pertaining thereto. We certainly deplore and commiserate our brother's sad misfortune. He says further: "Can there be anything more absurd than the idea of writing being done between two slates fastened together?" But, as absurd as this may seem to our astute brother, the cold fact remains there just the same. And now, brother, I propose to help you a little in your sad dilemma, and giv you a point, the knowledge of which you can appreciate as something that takes hold on the affairs of this world. Whether you accept this proposition or not lies wholly with yourself; but if you are the man you take yourself to be, you will certainly do it, for there are millions in it for you. And if you undertake it you must follow directions to the letter. Procure two slates personally from London, Pekin, or Calcutta, if you please, keeping them in your possession till you reach home, then, after placing a fragment of pencil between them, fasten them together with screws, bolts, sealing-wax, or twine, as you may think most proper. Of course you'll hav the foresight to place private marks on the inside of these slates before fastening them together. Now you are ready for business and the next move is, through some friend make an engagement for a séance with some first-class medium for slate-writing, who livs at least one hundred miles from you, and five hundred would be better, that you may be sure he knows nothing of you personally. Then proceed to the place at the appointed time, which must be in the glare of daytime, and when you reach the séance room introduce yourself as the "friend" Mr. Brown has made the engagement for at that hour for a séance, so as not to let the medium know your name, residence, or the special object of your visit. You will of course understand that the slates are not to pass out of your hands during the journey, after the medium has locked the door, for of course no other person must be present at a private séance. You will take a seat as invited at the table, and if the medium wishes to, allow him to grasp one end of the slate, while you hold the other. Remain perfectly quiet and passiv, and the fewer words you utter the better, so he will get no clew to your identity, and in a few moments more or less, if everything should be all right, you will hear the pencil at work writing your messages. And when the signal is given that they are done and the medium releases the slate, pay him his fee, which may be one or two dollars. Put on your hat and return home by the shortest route, and when you get there, call your family and friends into a private room, and after locking the doors, proceed to unfasten the slates and read the messages aloud to your friends. The messages obtained under such circumstances usually purport to come from friends or relations of the person to whom they are addressed, who once lived in this world as we do now, but who long since passed through the change called death. And they ever breathe of love, affection, and joy, at once more being able to tell of their continued life and happiness. And now, Brother Priestley, to a man of your mental caliber and critical cast of mind, and knowing, as you certainly do, for you assert it with all the assurance of a mathematical maxim, that the alleged Spiritual phenomena are wholly and solely the result of fraud, delusion, and trickery on the part of persons claiming to be mediums, how easy it will be for you to pierce the delusion and account for the writing on your own slates obtained under your own keen scrutiny! And then you will be ready to proclaim to a weary, waiting world the glorious tidings, that it is not what it claims to be, "messages from departed friends," but merely a trick, and you know it, and for money you will giv it to the world, explaining everything, and then the world's treasure will pour into your coffers in a mighty and ceaseless volume. What do you say, brother? Such talents as yours ought to count for something in this world. This would pay much better than filling the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER with stale chestnuts and crude absurdities, and giving your readers the impression that you claim to hav sounded the depths of the universe. For when a man reaches that state of self-conscious exaltation that he thinks he has mastered about all there is in this world, the world ceases to hav anything more to do with him, and he is about ready to be laid away in a cave with other mummies.

But, my brother, dropping irony and hyperbole, I will say one word in conclusion, which shall serve as a guide in all your future investigations and deliberations in search of that "pearl of great price," the truth, which we are all eager to obtain and make our own. It is this:

Seize upon truth wherever found,
On Christian or on heathen ground—
Among your friends, among your foes,
'Tis the plant's divine where'er it grows.

O. W. BARNARD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

[RECITATION.]

The Blind Men and the Elephant.

A HINDOO FABLE.

It was six men of Indostan
To learning much inclined,
Who went to see the elephant
(Though all of them were blind),
That each by observation
Might satisfy his mind.

The first approached the elephant,
And happening to fall
Against his broad and sturdy side,
At once began to bawl:
"God bless me; but the elephant
Is very like a wall!"

The second, feeling of the tusk,
Cried, "Ho! what hav we here
So very round and smooth and sharp?
To me 'tis mighty clear
This wonder of an elephant
Is very like a spear?"

The third approached the animal,
And happening to take
The squirming trunk within his hands,
Thus boldly up and spake:
"I see," quoth he, "the elephant
Is very like a snake!"

The fourth reached out his eager hand,
And felt about the knee,
"What most this wondrous beast is like
Is mighty plain," quoth he:
"'Tis clear enough the elephant
Is very like a tree!"

The fifth, who chanced to touch the ear,
Said: "E'en the blindest man
Can tell what this resembles most;
Deny the fact who can,
This marvel of an elephant
Is very like a fan!"

The sixth no sooner had begun
About the beast to grope,
Than, seizing on the swinging tail
That fell within his scope,
"I see," quoth he, "the elephant
Is very like a rope!"

And so these men of Indostan
Disputed loud and long,
Each in his own opinion
Exceeding stiff and strong,
Though each was partly in the right,
And all were in the wrong!

MORAL.

So oft in theologic wars,
The disputants, I ween,
Rail on in utter ignorance
Of what each other mean,
And prate about an elephant
Not one of them has seen.—J. G. Saxe.

Freddie in School.

Little Freddie, seven years of age, was gaining a knowledge of the rudiments of learning at a village school-house in Vermont, but he sometimes forgot about the rules and allowed various diversions to allure his attention from his book. One day the teacher detected him in throwing pellets of paper which he had moistened in his mouth at the other boys, and when she gave him a smart rap with the ruler, he looked up and said: "Oh, you didn't mean to, did you?"

"Yes, I did mean to. You are very inattentiv to your studies. Now see if you can stop your play and attend to your book," replied the teacher.

Five minutes later she actually saw him engaged in the very ungallant act of making faces at the girls on the other side of the school-house. Another rap with the ruler was administered, and the teacher inquired: "What are you doing now?"

"Twisting my face up to cry," replied Freddie, rubbing his arm, and looking up at the teacher with every muscle of his face contorted.

She could not suppress a laugh, but not wishing to end the punishment for so grave an offense with a laugh, she put on an air of severity, and said: "You were making wry faces at the girls. Now, take your book and go over and sit with the girls and learn better manners than to make wry faces at them."

She placed him between the two oldest girls, with instructions to study his book. He fixed his eyes upon his lesson, but when her attention was called in other directions, he amused himself and them by showing them how to make a cat's cradle with a string upon his fingers, and in drawing pictures upon a slate belonging to one of them.

But the hour for the noon recess arrived and the school was dismissed; the teacher had donned her bonnet and was ready to go out, when Freddie said to her: "Please, may I sit with the girls in the afternoon?"

"No; you will sit on your own side of the house," said the teacher.

The noon hour passed, and just as the school was called to order in the afternoon, Freddie laid upon the teacher's desk a half dozen green switches, which he had cut from a thrifty young elm growing near the school-house.

"What are these for?" asked the teacher.

"To lick the boys. The ruler is too hard."

She caught him by the arm and selected one of the sticks.

"What are you going to lick me for? I didn't do anything. It's the other boys that want to be licked," pleaded Freddie.

She tested the quality of the stick.

L. F. H.

What the Little Ones Are Saying.

Little Annie saw a bit of turquoise in her cousin Lidie's ring. "Why," she observed, "you've a piece of sky in your ring, havn't you!"

George bit little Celia's finger while they were playing. On being scolded for it he said, by way of explanation, "Really, mamma, I didn't know where my mouth was going."

A four-year-old Grand Rapids boy fell from the fence and broke his arm. His mother was very much affected at the thought of the pain the little fellow must suffer when the fracture was reduced. George noticed this. "Never mind, mamma," he said bravely, looking at his arm, "I guess it's only bent."

Little six-year-old in Ward 3 was taking his first lesson in addition, and when a caller asked him, "If I were to giv you two cats and another lady gave you two more, how many cats would you hav?" he quickly replied, "Why, pretty soon I wouldn't hav any, for my mamma would break their necks with a broom. She doesn't like cats."

Little Charlie, whose grandfather is a Baptist minister, took dinner at the parsonage the other day. He lived at a hotel, and before his venerable grandparent began the blessing Charlie had begun eating voraciously, "Oh! don't mind me, grandpa," he observed between mouthfuls, when the latter remonstrated, "go right on with your blessing."

In one of our Sunday-schools recently the subject of the creation of man was under discussion. A bright boy who had caviled at nothing which had preceded, when the story of the production of Eve was reached, declared that he didn't believe a word of it. "For," said he, "there was any quantity of the same material that Adam was made of lying around loose, and I don't believe God would hav ripped up Adam, whom he had just finished, just to get a rib to make Eve with."

Correspondence.

SENECA, S. C., May 24, 289.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: This letter chronicles to you the death of my dear wife. She died night before last, the 22d inst. She had been in feeble health for thirteen months and in bed since the 29th of January last. She suffered extremely all the time, but the last six weeks of her life was a living death. No tongue, no pen, could portray the half of what she suffered. I never in all my rather advanced life saw a case anything like a parallel to hers. It would hav melted the most stony heart and watered the dryest eyes to witness her last days. Never did I witness as much weeping around a deathbed, according to numbers, as was around hers; not one came and went away with dry eyes. Her calm, sweet face and affectionate talk between the paroxysms of agony excelled anything I ever heard, and this is the word of everyone who witnessed the dying struggles of that noble woman. I was always proud of my wife and knew she was an extraordinary woman, but never until she was confined to her bed did I fully realize her many virtues and deep philosophical mind. On last Sunday she discovered her voice was weakening and it required some effort to talk. She called me to her bed, and in a calm, sweet way told me we must now take a farewell talk, for she would never talk much more. We talked one hour and twenty minutes. She talked of our troubles and sufferings for the last sixteen months, and of the many dear friends on whose charity we had subsisted almost entirely. She mentioned several names separately, and requested me to write to them when she was gone and tell them of her peaceful death, and the love and gratitude she felt for them as long as memory and reason remained master of their thrones. Among those she selected for me to write to was Susan H. Wixon. She said I must tell you that you and Dr. E. B. Foote were her standard ideals of male and female excellence and perfection, if there be any such. My dear wife has for several years been one of your greatest admirers. Many, many are the times I hav heard her express the wish that you could be with her at her death and conduct the funeral services. But as this seemed impossible, she expressed a wish that nothing be said at her funeral unless I felt like it and would do it. I made a few brief remarks and read some appropriate verses from your pen. I did not—I could not—say half that I wanted to, in spite of my best efforts. I broke down, or at least found I should, and stopped in time. These are the lines that closed the scene. They are her own selection:

You will weep as you look at my vacant place,
As you fondly remember the absent face;
But think, O my dear ones, no pain can infest
My haven of peace, my domain of rest.

In your deep grief remember humanity's needs,
And the heartaches forget in kind, loving deeds,
Which at last, incense never repressed,
Shall enwrap you in blissful, beautiful rest.

Farewell, then, a tender, a loving farewell,
My love and my blessing shall with you dwell.
The way is not long though with cares thickly pressed,
And soon you will join me in eternal rest.

I buried her fourteen miles from home, in order to lay her sacred remains in an Infidel cemetery, founded by T. L. Reed, an old-line Infidel who died last July, and who was almost a worshiper of the Boston Investigator.

Thus passes away a true woman, a sincere, steady Liberal. No man ever loved more, or felt more the loss of a wife than I. Mrs. Casey was born July 6, 1830, and died May 22, 1889. We were married May 25, 1848—only wanted three days of forty-one years. Miss Susan, will you please write and hav published in THE TRUTH SEEKER a nice, appropriate obituary for my poor wife? It was her request. And now, with a bleeding heart, peniless and hopeless, I bid you an affectionate good-bye. R. M. CASEY.

[Thus has passed into calm, sweet silence all that is mortal of a lovely, noble woman. Her character, the influence of her life, the tenderness of her untiring care and love, her sweet disposition, her kindly deeds and words or counsel, are all immortal. They can never die. They are the flowers that make her memory fresh and fragrant. There is this consolation—she who made home bright and happy can never suffer any more, never moan in pain and agony again, never shed a tear or be hurt for any cause. Many hearts will sympathize with our friend and brother in his great sorrow. The tragedies of life are many, and soon or late they come to us all. We can only bear what is as patiently as possible, remembering that, while we mourn our dead, they no longer require our care. That must be given to those who still remain on earth, and who need, from day to day, the ministrations of friends and neighbors.—ED. C. C.]

CROMWELL, IA., May 24, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write and send you an item out of our Cromwell paper concerning the debate between Rev. T. McK. Stewart of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Rev. U. M. Browder of the Christian church; if you hav room you may take the principal points out, if you think it worth while. I attended most of the sessions, and oh! how I wished some Liberal could take a hand in the game—some one like Ingersoll, Putnam, Remsburg, and others. But no, it would need no such men to hav played the top card. We liv one mile from town. I hav lots of chickens, turkeys, and flowers. I don't know the number of chickens; there are seventy little turkeys. The people are going to church now. How wicked they would think me if they knew what I am doing! I do not go to church. I would rather read stories. Well, I hav made my letter too long already and hav not told you half I wished to after all, so I will close, wishing success to the Corner. Any-one wishing to correspond with me will please address, MINNIE M. GEIER.

P.S.—The debate has not been decided yet; when it is I will write again. M. M. G.

RED OAK, MO., May 26, 288.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My uncle takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav been a reader of it for a year or two off and on. I like the Corner very much; and I like to read it. I think that Mr. Heston's pictures are very comical; some of them would make a dog laugh, I think. I don't go to church very much, for I am not fond of the "gospel." I never attend Sunday-school, from the fact that their bait is a little too thin. Their bait is a little card about an inch square. I never nibble at that bait very much. Tom Paine preached here a week ago to-day; but by no means the original Thomas Paine of '76. There is an old lunatic going to preach here to-night—some say he is about half crazy. There was a woman to-day that took the water for paradise, or in other words had her sins washed away. There were about twenty of us children who met in the woods and had a little picnic, without any ceremonies, but just to spoil things a little an old Bible-monger came around and raised a fuss about our cutting a few little saplings to make a table. The preacher that preached here to-night said in his sermon for all of them (the Christians) to rise to their feet who knew God or wanted to know him. Nobody rose to their feet, though; no, no. Well, it is getting about time for me to wind up. I hope to see this in print. My age is fourteen.

Yours truly, CHAS. W. MCALESTER.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 22, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: When I wrote my last letter to the Children's Corner I was living in Iowa, but since then we hav moved to Los Angeles. This is the most beautiful country I ever saw. I don't think I should want to liv at any place else. There are all kinds of flowers everywhere. There was a flower festival here a few weeks ago. My mamma and I went one night, and enjoyed it very much. We had another treat, too. We went to hear Samuel P. Putnam two nights. The first night he reviewed the work of Sam Jones and Moody, and the second night he lectured on "Sunday Laws." He was the first Liberal I ever heard lecture, and I thought it was splendid. We hav been to the ocean twice, and I think it is very nice indeed. The first time I went to the ocean I was very much afraid and would not go near the water, but the second time I would run along the shore, and when the breakers came in I would let the water run over my feet. I saw three big fishes, and they were called flounders; they looked odd to me because they were so flat. I hav now seen the Pacific ocean, and I would like to see the Atlantic ocean. On the road out here I wondered how the ocean would look. I never thought it was half as big as it is. I think I hav written enough this time, so I will close.

Yours truly, MAUD PARRISH.

W. S. BELL'S PAMPHLETS.

The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.

PRICE, - - - - - - - 15 CENTS.

Your treatment of the "Conflict" is excellent.—Harry Hoover.

LIBERTY AND MORALITY.

PRICE, 15 CENTS.

Accept my thanks for your excellent and useful discourse.—James Parton.

I am much pleased with your address, and will notice it in Man.—T. B. Wakeman.

A beautiful pamphlet of 36 pages. It is a very able paper, and deserves wide dissemination.—The Age.

ANTI-PROHIBITION.

PRICE, 20 CENTS.

The number of heads under which you hav divided the subject matter of the pamphlet, and the concise manner in which each point is discussed, should be highly commended. Therefore I take great pleasure in recommending "Anti-Prohibition" to the consideration of every person who is interested, not only in the cause of temperance, but in the principles of self-government.—J. J. McCabe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MIRACLES AND MIRACLE WORKERS.

By JOHN PECK.

"The miraculous is the impossible. Anything within the realm of the possible is no miracle."

Price, 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.

You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.

His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

FAITH AND REASON.

A concise account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity.

With elaborate index.

By HALSEY R. STEVENS.

A popularized account of Oriental religions, with many apt quotations from the sacred books of the East. Nowhere else can so much knowledge of what is generally unknown be obtained in such compact form.—[Literary Review.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO. 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentan Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids
Swan & Co.. 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

SOCIAL WEALTH,

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

Price, Cloth, - - $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates

We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St. New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 Cents.

THE Truth Seeker Annual

—AND—

Freethinkers' Almanac,

1889.

(E. M. 289.)

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1889,	5
Freethought in the United States for 1888,	17
Liberalism: a Symposium.
Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	28
James Parton,	32
Helen H. Gardener,	33
S. P. Putnam,	36
Charles Watts,	37
E. A. Stevens, Sec. A. S. U.	41
Parker Pillsbury,	42
Robert C. Adams,	44
J. D. Shaw,	46
F. M. Holland,	47
E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D.,	50
Lucy N. Colman,	51
J. H. Burnham,	53
L. K. Washburn,	63
Ella Gibson,	64
Susan H. Wixon,	67
John Peck,	71
W. S. Bell,	78
E. C. Walker,	80
Mrs. M. A. Freeman,	84
Dr. Juliet H. Severance,	87
Mrs. E. D. Slenker,	89
Col. J. R. Kelso,	91
G. H. Dawes,	92
The Nine Demands of Liberalism,	95
Ingersoll and Shakspere,	96

NEW YORK:

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

28 LAFAYETTE PLACE.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

LOOKING BACKWARD

By Edward Bellamy,

Author of "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process," etc.

It is a thought-breeding book, and all who are free to receive new light will find in it satisfaction and inspiration.—[New York Tribune.

The appeal is always made to a man's reason, and to his noblest sentiments: never to his selfishness.—[Boston Post.

A suggestion of a really practicable and feasible social state greatly in advance of the present. The romantic narrativ is rich in its forecast of actual possibilities.—[Boston Traveler.

12mo, cloth, $1.50; paper, 50c.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

MATERIALISM:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS INFLUENCE UPON SOCIETY.

By Dr. Louis Buchner, Author of "Force and Matter," etc.

Translated from the German.

Paper, 12mo, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Place.

The Career of Jesus Christ.

An Exposition of the True Meaning of this Character as described in the New Testament. By Milton Woolley, M.D., author of "Hebrew Mythology." Paper, 8vo, 25 cents,
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS
OF
THE BIBLE.

144 PROPOSITIONS, Theological, Moral, Historical, and Speculativ, each proved affirmativly and negativly by quotations from scripture, without comment; embodying the most palpable and striking self-contradictions of the so-called inspired word of God.
By W. H. Burr. 72 pages. Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, 1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50 cts.

NOW READY.

A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS
OF
HORACE SEAVER.

COMPILED BY

L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.

Price, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM

By DR. FREDERIC R. MARVIN, Professor of Physiological Medicin and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Paper, 12mo, 68pp., cloth, 50 cents.

His analysis of nervous and mental phenomena is sharply scientific; his pathological theories are rational, clear, and modern.—Medical Review.

His language is strong and well chosen, his style admirable in its directness and brilliancy, his thought clear and logical.—Liberal Christian.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

Essence of Religion.

By L. FEUERBACH.

Translated from the German. Cloth, 12mo, 75pp.; 50 cts.

The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral.—Extract.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

POINTERS:

A POCKET CYCLOPEDIA,

CONTAINING

Tables, Rules, Practical Hints, and Historical Sketches, for Farmers, Mechanics, Machinists, Merchants, Housekeepers, and the Public Generally, with

Numerous Maps, Illustrations, and Diagrams

Illustrating some of the more Important Comparativ Statistics of the World.

More Information for Less Money than has ever been offered.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

For $50 worth of "Cold Facts" boiled down in a Nutshell. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,

OR,

NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order." Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.

By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY

AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.

In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.

By M. L. Holbrook, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;

OR,

FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER

Twentieth Century.

DEVOTED TO

Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 Warren St., New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM

Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ For all Diseases of Eyes or Ears. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Ringing of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE,
10t28 Shakers P. O., N.Y.

DR. FELLOWS

STAR OF HOPE

Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.

VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exponde by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost is his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch Liberal is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collins, P. O. Box 1, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y.

Decision Against M. Harman's Demurrer.

The People against M. Harman et al in the United States Court at Topeka, Kan. Indictment for mailing alleged obscene literature. Foster, judge.

The defendant, Moses Harman, is charged with having unlawfully and knowingly deposited in the United States post-office at Valley Falls, Kan., for mailing and delivery to different parties, a certain obscene article of an indecent character, contained and printed in a publication entitled, Lucifer.

There are a great number of counts in the indictment, and it is unnecessarily long. The articles complained of are four in number, and were mailed at different times.

The defendant demurs to the indictment on the ground that it does not charge an offense under the law; that the statute does not reach a case of mailing a paper containing an obscene and indecent article, but that the publication, paper, or periodical itself must be of an obscene character as a whole.

Section 3,893 of the Revised Statutes declares as follows: "Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character . . . are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier." Counsel for defendant, in support of the demurrer, hav made an ingenious argument, and one showing much research in the field of general literature.

They insist that if an article in a paper or other publication comes within the meaning of the law, then by the same reasoning a chapter or a sentence of a book which is obscene would bring under the ban of the law the whole book, and would exclude it from the mails. As a result, not only medical works, but the writings of such authors as Swift, Pope, Fielding, Shakspere, and many others, and even the Bible itself, would be denied the privileges of the United States mails.

Undoubtedly, there are parts of the writings of said authors and many others equally noted which are open to the charge of obscenity and lewdness, but anyone objecting to such works being carried through the mails would be laughed at for his prudery.

I hav but little patience with those self-constituted guardians and censors of public morals, who are always on the alert to find something to be shocked at—who explore the wide domain of art, science, and literature to find something immodest, and who attribute impurity where none is intended.

The law is founded on reason and common sense, and the statute was enacted to prevent the mails from being used to disseminate the vile literature and indecent pictures with which the country was flooded; those things calculated and intended to create and cater to a morbid appetite for obscenity and lewdness, and to corrupt the morals of the people, and especially the young, who are more susceptible to such influences.

No one in this day can deny the right to the widest latitude of discussion of all subjects of interest to the people. Any thought which may contain the germ of an idea calculated to benefit any human being, when couched in decent language, ought to be disseminated among the people.

The question of obscenity in any particular case must depend largely on the place, manner, and object of its publication. It would not be proper to discuss certain matters in a family newspaper which might be discussed with propriety in a medical journal. Again, if the writer was in good faith attacking some great flagrant wrong, the use of plain language, although offensiv to ears polite, might be permitted.

It is claimed for the defendant that such is this case, but it does not so appear on the face of the indictment.

It seems to me that the first two of the articles set out are per se obscene and indecent in a publication for general circulation.

Is it an offense under the statute to knowingly mail a paper containing an article or articles obscene, lewd, or indecent, or must the paper as a whole be obnoxious? If the latter is the rule it would seem to apply to a writing as well as printing. So a letter or writing, unless the objectionable contents largely predominated, could not be excluded from the mail.

The statute uses the word "print or other publications of an indecent character." What is meant by print? Is it printed letters or a picture? The word picture appears just before it in the statute. Undoubtedly in its broadest sense it may be an impression of either figures, characters, or letters. In the more common sense it is used as applicable to letters.

Another question naturally arises under this statute. Does the term publication necessarily refer to the paper published as a whole, or may it properly be applied to an article published in a paper? We speak of the publication of legal notices, or the publication of an article in a newspaper. Suppose the obscene article was cut from the paper and inclosed in an envelope. It would be a print or publication and would be non-mailable. I can see no reason why it is any the less objectionable when mailed as an integral part of the original paper.

It is apparent that the construction of the statute contended for by the defendant would practically defeat the object and purpose of the law. It would be a very dull man who could not conform his publication or written communication to the exigencies of the situation.

A further objection is made to the indictment that there is a joinder of a multitude of counts for the same offense. I hav serious doubts whether the publisher of an obscene paper can be convicted, as a separate offense, for every person to whom he shall mail a separate copy of his paper. At the minimum imprisonment, even under a fine, the ordinary human life might not serve to fill out the period. But it seems to me that the most the defendant can do on that ground is that the government be required to elect on which counts it will prosecute.

The motion to quash must be overruled.

Since writing the foregoing opinion my attention has been called to a case recently before Judge Thayer, of the eastern district of Missouri—United States vs. Frank D. Clark. From what appears in the published extract of the case, it seems Judge Thayer takes a similar view of the law, on the chief points, as herein expressed.

PIONEER PITH.

THE GIST OF LECTURES ON

RATIONALISM.

By CAPT. ROBT. C. ADAMS,

President of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club.

A useful compendium of scientific and critical lore. The best handbook of its size for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.—British-American.

It is the author's aim to condense the main facts of Rationalism into a small compass. It contains more than other books many times its size.—Freethought.

Salient facts, arranged with remarkable perspicuity.—Tyler, Tex., Leader.

Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

For sale at this office.

DID MAN FALL?

The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.

IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?

$5,000 REWARD.

By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"

Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.

Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.

Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

Paper, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

Great Centennial Oration

ON THE

Declaration of Independence,

ALSO THE

Immortal Document,

And the National Anthem entitled:

"LAND OF LIBERTY."

Price, 6 cts; 5 copies, 25 cts; 25 copies, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

By NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE

ON CHRISTIANITY.

Between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. Burgess, Pres. of N. W. Christian Univ.

Paper, 183pp., 50 cts.; clo., 80.

COMMON SENSE

By THOMAS PAINE.

Written in 1776.

Price, . . . 15 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

IS AMERICA THE NEW WORLD?

By L. L. DAWSON.

Price, . . 10 cents.

DEACON SKIDMORE'S LETTERS.

(Zion Hill Baptist.) His Evolution out of Christianity. By D. M. BENNETT. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

ECCE DIABOLUS.

Jehovah-Worship and Devil-Worship Identical—i.e., Bloody Sacrifices and Burnt Offerings.

By the Very Rev. Evan Davies, Arch-Druid of Great Britain.

Price, . . 25 cents.

RELIGIOUS POSITIVISM;

OR, POSITIVIST CALENDAR. Brief Exposition of the Comtean System.

Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50.

Eight Scientific Tracts.

EVOLUTION, DARWINISM, etc.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD and others.

Price, 20 cents.

EPIDEMIC DELUSIONS.

By F. R. MARVIN, M.D.

Price, 10 cents.

Essay on Miracles.

By DAVID HUME.

Price, 10 cents.

ESSAYS AND LECTURES

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Paper, 300pp., 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

By T. E. LONGSHORE.

5c., 50c. per doz., 25 for $1.

THE UNSEEN WORLD.

By PROF. JOHN FISKE.

Price, 10 cents.

GOSPEL OF ATHEISM.

By ANNIE BESANT.

Price, 10 cents.

GOTTLIEB: HIS LIFE.

A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell.

By S. P. PUTNAM.

Price, 25 cents.

Heathens of the Heath.

RADICAL ROMANCE.

By WM. MCDONNELL.

500pp., paper, 80 cents.

HOLY BIBLE ABRIDGED.

The passages unfit for family reading.

Pap., 30c.; clo., 50.

THE

LOGIC OF DEATH,

OR,

WHY SHOULD THE ATHEIST FEAR TO DIE?

By J. G. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

THE

LOGIC OF LIFE,

DEDUCED FROM

THE PRINCIPLE OF FREETHOUGHT.

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

Secular Responsibility

By G. J. HOLYOAKE.

Price, 5 cents.

GENESIS I, II:

BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION.

By A. R. GROTE, A.M.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

Godly Women of the Bible.

A History of

ALL THE WOMEN WHO FIGURE IN THE BIBLE.

BY

An Ungodly Woman of the XIXth Century.

Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible,

144 MORAL, THEOLOGICAL, HISTORICAL, AND SPECULATIVE PROPOSITIONS.

Price, 15 cents.

SEPHER TOLDOTH JESHU.

Book of the Generation of Jesus. First Trans. from the Hebrew Original Story of Jesus.

Price, 15 cents.

SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER.

By C. SOTHERAN.

Paper, 8vo, 50 cents; cloth, 75.

SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY FOR CHRISTIANS.

A CARTOON

From The Truth Seeker, July 11, 1885.

17x24 in. 6 for 30c., 12 for 50c., 25 for $1, 100 for $3.

JOHN'S WAY. Radical Domestic Story.

15 cents. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LIT LE FOLKS.

By MRS. E. D. SLENKER.

Boards, 40 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS.

WITH THEOLOGICAL AMENDMENT AND STATE PERSONALITY.

By Joseph E. Peck.

Pap., 25c.

SPIRITUALISM

FROM A MATERIALISTIC STANDPOINT.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, 10 cents.

Religion Not History.

Examination of the Morals and History of the New Testament.

By PROF. F. W. NEWMAN.

Price, 25 cents.

RELIGION of COMMON SENSE.

By Professor L. Uhlich.

Price, 35 cents.

PAINE VINDICATED.

Reply to N. Y. Observer.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

With "ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD."

Price, 15 cents.

Scientific Materialism:

ITS MEANING and TENDENCY.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Price, . . . 10 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER TRACTS.

(Bound.)

Vols. I, II, III, IV, V, 18mo, 525 pages in each vol. Per vol, pap., 60c.

TWELVE TRACTS.

Bible Worship.
Darwinism.
Design Argument.
Evolution.
Jesus Not Perfect.
Underwood's Prayer.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

25 cents.

TWO HUNDRED POETICAL RIDDLES.

For the Instruction and Amusement of Youth.

By E. D. Blakeman.

25 cents.

TWO LITTLE RED MITTENS.

A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. 5 cents.

UNDERWOOD-MARPLES DEBATE

ON THE EXISTENCE OF A PERSONAL GOD AND INSPIRATION OF SCRIPTURES.

Between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. J. Marples.

Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60.

VOLTAIRE IN EXILE.

Memoirs.

His Life and Works in France and Abroad.

And Unpublished Correspondence With Mme. du Chatelet.

By B. GASTINEAU.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

WAIFS AND WANDERINGS.

A Liberal Novel.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Pap., 50c.; clo., $1.

BIBLE IDOLATRY.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 3 cents; per dozen, 30 cents; per 100, $2.

For all of the above books address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,

28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

—o—

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

TOGETHER WITH

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

78pp. Price 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH:

THEIR

Crimes and Persecutions.

8vo, 1,119pp. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE SAFEST CREED,

AND

TWELVE OTHER DISCOURSES OF REASON.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

A vigorous thinker as eloquent as Theodore Parker.—[New Bedford Standard.

Deep thought, thorough conviction, and great ability.—[Phila. Press.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 238pp., $1.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

A FEW WORDS
ABOUT THE DEVIL,

AND

OTHER BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES AND ESSAYS.

BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

With Portrait and Autobiography.

Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his "few words," and the devil will, we presume, at no very distant day hav a few words to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—[Chicago Interior.

Extra cloth, gold back and side stamp, 12mo, 260 pp., $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LIFE OF

Joshua Davidson:

MODERN IMITATION OF CHRIST,

As to his Life on Earth and his Communism.

BY MRS. E. LYNN LINTON,

Author of "A Protest and a Plea," in Order o Creation.

Cloth, 12mo, 279 pp., - - 75 Cents.

☞ This book was suppressed by the first American publisher. ☜

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

LIBERALS SUPPLIED

With GOVERNMENT LAND or CHEAP DEEDED CLAIMS. Address, inclosing stamp, TRIPP AND MINER, Hay Springs, Nebraska. 3m14

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible—What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price, 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price, 10 cents.

Liberalism. Treating the subject from a negativ and affirmativ standpoint, showing what it is not and what it is. Price, 5 cents.

tf

Ingersoll and the Deist.

BY

A NATIVE "TAR HEEL."

Price, - - Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

LIMITATIONS OF TOLERATION.

BY

Colonel ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
Hon. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, and
General STEWART L. WOODFORD.

PRICE, TEN CENTS PER COPY.

It should be extensivly circulated, as it teaches the doctrins of Liberalism on the most important subject of the world—the right to think and speak and write. The superiority of our doctrins on Liberty over the creeds of Catholicism and Protestantism was never better set forth, and must be manifest to any Christian who possesses the power to reason. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ARGUMENT

BY

Robert G. Ingersoll,

IN THE

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS

FOR

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.

Stenographically reported, and revised by the author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents, or $2 per dozen.

In this argument Mr. Ingersoll again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is in his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, hav in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism—is not often poured out in a court of justice.

The many calls for this Argument in complete and accurate shape hav led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, New York city.

L. K. Washburn's Works.

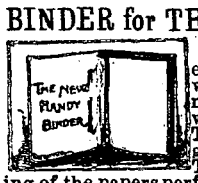
Sunday and the Sabbath. "A law regulating human conduct on the Sabbath is an impertinence." Price, 10 cents.

The False Teaching of the Christian Church. "The Thirty-nine Articles of the Christian church are thirty-nine poor, broken-down opinions." 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. "Think of a minister's praying God to kill grasshoppers, or trying to induce the Deity to undertake a crusade of one against the Colorado beetle!" Price, 10 cents.

Followers of Jesus. Price, 10 cents.

Spiritualism: Is It a Faith or a Fact? Price, 5 cents.



Temperance and the Bible. 5 cents.

Religious Problems. Price, 10 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

The Public Schools and the Catholic Church. Price, 5 cents.

BINDER for THE TRUTH SEEKER

For the benefit of our readers who preserve their papers we offer a new style of binder, made for the purpose, and with the heading of THE TRUTH SEEKER printed in gold letters on the outside. This binder allows the opening of the papers perfectly flat. It also allows the taking out and replacing of one or more papers from any part of the file without disturbing the other parts.

Sent by mail, postpaid, for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ON THE WORD GOD.

By Milton Woolley, M.D., Author of "Hebrew Mythology," "The Career of Jesus Christ."

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. —[Ps. xiv, 1.

Children and fools speak the truth.—[Old Saw.

Paper, 12mo, 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Steel engravings of this celebrated naturalist. 2x15 inches, suitable for framing, sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

tf

NEW EDITION.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

ROMANISM,

OR

DANGER AHEAD.

The Reason Why a Good Roman Catholic Cannot be a Good Citizen of this Republic.

By A. J. GROVER.

Price, paper, 40 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE NEW GOD.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Secretary of the American Secular Union.

Price 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

TRY-SQUARE;

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

For sale at this office. Price, $1.00.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

Girard College Theology.

AN EXPOSÉ

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SAKYA BUDDHA.

A Versified, Annotated Narrativ of his Life and Teachings.

With Citations from Buddha's "Path of Virtue."

BY E. D. ROOT.

I take pleasure in speaking in praise of this work.—Prof. J. M. Peebles.

The book has been introduced into Buddhist schools in Ceylon. The "Banner of Light," "Religio-Philosophical Journal," and many Spiritualist papers and lecturers hav spoken highly of the book.

Extra Cloth, 175 pp., $1.

The Forum.

Chicago Secular Union meets every Sunday evening at 7:30 P.M., at 558 West Madison street. Lectures and debates. Strangers from abroad are welcome.

Philadelphia Liberal League 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

The Secular Society of Kent, O.,

Meets semi-monthly, first and third Sundays, at 2 P.M., at the town hall. All friends of human cultivation are invited. MARIUS HEIGHTON, Sec.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, N.Y.

Meets every Friday evening, at 8 o'clock, at German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street. Lectures and discussions. The public cordially invited

---

The Newark Liberal League

Meets every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the League rooms, Market and Halsey streets. Seats free and everybody welcome. Spiritualist meeting at same place in the evening.

Akron, O., Freethought Union.

The Akron Freethought Union meets every Sunday evening in the Hall of Cramer's Block, South Howard street, at 7 o'clock.

Cleveland, O., Secular Union

Holds meetings every Sunday evening at 7 P.M., at room 29, City Hall. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Minneapolis Secular Union

Meets every Sunday at 7:30 P.M., at 412 Nicollet ave., Rooms 12 and 14, Eastman block, Minneapolis, Minn. J. F. MACOMBER, Pres.; CHAS. LOWND, Sec.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT Of Europe.

Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

WORKS OF O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Christianity a Reward for Crime.

Authenticated by the Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 29 pages, 10c.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED,

And Its Errors Exposed.

Paper, 12mo, 47 pages, - - - 15c.

Origin of the Christian Bible.

Paper, 12mo, 95 pages, 25c.

A Masonic Vindication of Right,

A Protest Against Persecution.

Paper, 12mo, 36 pages, - - - - 15c.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
22 Lafayette Pl., New York.

WORKS BY ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Was Jesus an Impostor? A debate between the Scotch novelist, Agnes Rollo Wilkie, and Arthur B. Moss. The best conducted debate of modern times. 160 pp., 25 cts. The Mirror of Freethought. 50 cts. The Bible and Darwinism. 25 cts. Biblical Errors and Secular Truths. 25 cts. Two Revelations. 5 cts. Bible Horrors; or, Real Blasphemy. 5 cts. Bible Makers. 5 cts. Bible Saints—Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Each 5 cts. Moses vs. Darwin. 5 cts. Socrates, Buddha, and Jesus. 5 cts. Christianity a Degrading Religion. 5 cts. Fictitious Gods. 5 cts. Natural Man. 5 cts. The Old Faith and the New. 5 cts. Bruno and Spinoza. 5 cts. The Bible God and His Favorits, 5 cts. Miracle-Workers. 5 cts. Health, Wealth, and Happiness. 5 cts. The Brain and the Soul. 5 cts. Nature and the Gods. 5 cts. Design and Natural Selection. 5 cts. Man and the Lower Animals. 5 cts.

Address Watts and Co., 17 Johnson's Court, E.C., London, ENG.

THE STRUGGLE

FOR

Religious and Political Liberty.

In which the author shows the repeated attempts of men of every age to acquire greater political liberty; also vigorously attacks the very foundation of the religion of every age; dwelling at length upon the wrongs of Ireland, and, in detailing the account of slavery in this country, calls the attention of thinking men and women to the position of womankind in America. Throughout, the work is replete with astounding facts and weighty arguments which cannot fail to interest the minds of this age.

By THEO. C. SPENCER.

Cloth, 12mo., 138pp., price 75 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

ANTICHRIST.

PROVING conclusivly that there was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate, but that the real Jesus, the illegitimate son of Mary by Joseph Pandera, was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. Cloth, 446 pages, with full Index. Price, $1.50. Former price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who hav examined it. Price 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO

News of the Week.

THE fund to erect a permanent Washington memorial arch at New York amounts to date to about $50,000.

CREEK Indians say delegates they selected stole $228,000 of the receipts for Oklahoma, on a pretense of legal services.

ILLINOIS has rejected Prohibition.

A HURRICANE in China has destroyed 10,000 lives.

JAPAN has had fires rendering 10,000 people homeless.

EARTHQUAKE shocks hav been felt in England and France.

DENVER is building a Catholic cathedral to cost $300,000.

THE Prohibition campaign has begun activly in Pennsylvania.

TWENTY-FIVE policemen hav been injured at evictions in Ireland.

THE Chinamen of Mott street, N. Y., raised $300 for the Johnstown relief fund.

A DAM on Fishing creek, near Bellefonte, Pa., burst, and villages were destroyed, with loss of life.

THE House of Lords has rejected by a vote of 108 to 23 the bill to allow women to sit in county councils.

THE Johnstown disaster is causing attention to be anxiously directed to the many other dams of the country.

THE lower house of Illinois has passed a bill for reformed balloting methods.

FORTY-FIVE passengers were hurt in the recent wrecking of a train by robbers on the St. Louis & San Francisco railway.

WOMEN employed in the rice fields of Medicina, Italy, hav struck. They hav pillaged bakers' shops, and troops hav been ordered to the scene.

MCGARIGLE, the Chicago boodler, has returned from Canada, and by arrangement of his friends been let off with a $1,000 fine. Such is Chicago justice.

FORMER slaveowners in Brazil hav formed a combination to compel the empire to recompense them for their freed slaves, threatening otherwise to subvert the empire in favor of a republic.

ON the 6th, a fire at Seattle, Washington territory, destroyed the business part of the city—thirty-one blocks, covering sixty-four acres. Several persons were injured by falling buildings.

INDIGNATION has been raised at the course of the contemptible Law and Order Society of Pittsburgh in preventing by a Blue law injunction a benefit dramatic performance on the Sunday night following the Johnstown disaster.

IN Clay county, Pa., a strike of miners has been on since May 1st, and 9,000 men, women, and children are suffering terrible destitution. The miners when at work earned $5, some weeks only $2 or $3. Troops hav been sent to suppress disturbances.

As the time for the first execution by electricity in New York state approaches, the editors reiterate their determination to publish full reports notwithstanding the law forbidding it, which law is no doubt dangerous as establishing a precedent in throwing a veil of secrecy over government operations.

THE loss of life at Johnstown is now variously estimated at 5,000 to 10,000. Johnstown's population was 28,000, not 10,000. That of the valley, that was more or less swept, was 50,000. Decomposing bodies hav filled the air with noxious gases. Europe helps to swell the immense relief funds. Catholics report two miracles: An image of the Virgin remained dry and unsoiled in a chapel in which the waters rose on the walls all around it and washed and muddied them; and a room in which were several nuns remained unpenetrated by the water that rose in surrounding apartments.

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS.

Biographies of 300 of the Leading Philosophers, Teachers, Skeptics, Innovators, Founders of New Schools of Thought, Eminent Scientists, etc. (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. 8vo, 1,075pp., cloth, $3; leather, $4; mor., g. e., $4.50.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Place, N. Y.

GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES.

Vol. I. Gives a Full Account of all the Gods, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 8vo, 835pp. Vol. II. Describes Fully all the Religious Systems of the World. 8vo, 957pp. Cloth, $3 per vol.; the 2 vols., $5; leather, $7; morocco, gilt edges, $8.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

JOSHUA WORSHIPETH THE LORD'S CAPTAIN.

And he said, Nay; but as captain of the host of the Lord am I now come. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and said unto him, What saith my Lord unto his servants?—Joshua v, 14.

Odds and Ends.

A MILK shake—Weaning the baby.

A WASHERWOMAN is a cruel creature. She daily wrings men's bosoms.

HUSBAND (sarcastically): "What was you when I married you?" Wife: "A fool."—Epoch.

TEACHER: "What is the most useful metal?" Tommy (whose pa is an editor): "Printer's zinc."—Terre Haute Express.

CORA: "What induced you to tell Mr. Merritt I went to the party last night with George?" Little Johnnie: "A quarter."—Harper's Bazar.

MRS. QUERIST: "I hear that your divorce suit is finished, Marie. What are you going to do next?" Mrs. Queerish: "Go to work on a new wedding-dress, of course."

A WOMAN remarks: "The smile is the same in all languages." This is not so. In German it is usually beer, while in America it is generally whisky straight.—Exchange.

"I SEE you are always rushing for a car." "Yes, I am generally a little late." "There is one thing you will never catch." "What is that?" "A train of thought."—Boston Gazette.

"WOOD you?" said the coal dealer cutely;
"I wouldn't," she answered quite grim;
And then, as she fired up slightly,
She gave the coal shoulder to him.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher: "We are told here that the prophet rent his clothes. Why did he do that?" Tommy Spaulding: "P'raps he couldn't afford to buy 'em."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

A HARLEM schoolboy was asked to name some part of his own body. He thought a moment and then replied: "Bowels—which are five in number—a, e, i, o, and u, and sometimes w and y."

A YOUNG lady in this city who teaches a Sunday-school class of eight-year-olds recently asked them the question, "What is an altar?" "I know," said one irrepressible; "it's where they burn insects."

IT has pained us much to note that certain of our contemporaries speak in a somewhat uncomplimentary tone of Queen Victoria's economy. They seem to forget that her gracious majesty has a large family.—Philadelphia Call.

YOUNG husband: "What? You are twenty-five years old to-day? Why, you told me a year ago, just before the wedding, that you were only twenty." Young wife (wearily): "I hav aged rapidly since I married."—Yankee Blade.

"HAV you got your scales with you?" said the trout to the sucker. "I hav," answered the sucker. "Why?" "Well," said the trout; "I'm going to take that fly, and I'd like to be weighed before I leave the brook, just for my own satisfaction."—Puck.

COMMANDING officer: "So you want to marry Private Malone's widow. She is old enough to be your mother. Surely a smart young fellow like you could find a nice young girl who would take you." Private T. Atkins: "Young girls is well enough, sor, but I likes my dinner 'ot, and I noticed Private Malone always 'ad 'is dinner 'ot, so I 'opes as you'll giv me lave, sor."—London Judy.

"LIGE." "Yes, your excellency." "I am being pitched into to an alarming extent for giving my brother an office." "That is true; but you should not care. You hav scriptural authority for it. Colonel Shepard tells me the Bible says that, 'He who will not care for his own is worse than an Infidel.'"—Puck.

DOWN where their garments hung low from a limb
Johnny and Jimmy went in for a swim.

Heedless they laughed at the kind teacher's rule,
Heedless they laughed and played truant from school.

Up where the sexton is digging away,
Digging a grave in the mold and the clay,

Chanting in wavering accents a hymn,
That's where they're planting poor Johnny and Jim. —Nebraska State Journal.

WE weren't there, but we never had reason to doubt the veracity of the gentleman who informs us that Senator Sawyer the other day witnessed for the first time in his life a game of baseball as played by professionals. At one point in the game the man at the bat knocked the ball away over the heads of the outfielders, and the crowd cheered until Senator Sawyer felt the warmth of enthusiasm rising in his own bosom. "That's too bad," he finally said to the gentleman beside him. "What's too bad?" "Why, it's too bad they didn't hav a man there to catch that ball. By George," said the senator warmly, "if I were manager of that club I'd put three more men out there in the field if it cost $2,500 a year."—Washington Post.

A MINISTER of the gospel was riding through a strip of woods, near a little town in Missouri, when he came up to an aged negro, seated by the roadside, who was an object of deepest dejection and woe. "What is the matter, my friend?" the good man inquired, looking with compassion on the grief-stricken African. The negro made no reply, but kept on muttering: "I'se a ruined man, I is. O Lordy! I'se de most misfortunate mortal dis world hab seen, sence Job got all er hiz property tuck away." "What is it that troubles you?" the minister again asked, kindly. "I'se ruined, sah." "Ruined? How are you ruined?" "I'se jist ruined—loss ebery cent I had, sah." "Lost your money? How did that happen?" "Loss hit shootin' crops, sah." "Shooting what?" "Crops, sah!" "What are they?" "What am what?" "Crops? What do you mean by crops?" "Hit is der game dem niggers play ter git er po' man's money, sah. Dey got all er dat, er church money, tew." "Do you mean to tell me that you hav been so wicked as to gamble away money that belonged to the church?" "I guesso, sah." "This is very wicked, sir; but as you are honest about it, and feel so downcast and repentant, perhaps the members of your church will forgiv you." "Fer what, sah?" "For losing the money that belonged to your church." "That ain't what's pesterin' me, sah." "Ah! I see, my good man. It is because you know that you hav committed a great sin against the Lord that makes you so unhappy." "No, sah; hit's not that—hit's two dollars o' my own dat dem niggers got is what's pesterin' me." And he broke forth again into doleful lamentations.—Yankee Blade.

Gems of Thought.

THE truth is, it is impossible to harmonize all the ills, and pains, and agonies of this world with the idea that we were created by, and are watched over and protected by an infinitly wise, powerful, and beneficent God, who is superior to, and independent of nature. . . . Nature, so far as we can discern, without passion, and without intention, forms, transforms, and re-transforms for ever. She neither weeps nor rejoices. She produces man without purpose, and obliterates him without regret. She knows no distinction between the beneficial and the hurtful. Poison and nutrition, pain and joy, life and death, smiles and tears are alike to her. She is neither merciful nor cruel. She cannot be flattered by worship nor melted by tears. She does not know even the attitude of prayer. She appreciates no difference between poison in the fangs of snakes and mercy in the hearts of men. Only through man does nature take cognizance of the good, the true, and the beautiful; and, so far as we know, man is the highest intelligence.—Ingersoll.

SERIOUS minds were racked by doubts as to Yahweh's justice. Then as now and always people in general were shallow enough to be satisfied with superficial answers, but those who followed out their thoughts were tortured by the grievous problems which the facts of life had forced upon their faith. The old answer, then, was still repeated on every hand, "National suffering is the punishment of national sin;" but we need not be surprised at its not satisfying everyone; and in itself it is obviously false. No rational connection can be established between the idolatry of Manasseh and the defeat of Josiah, or in general between the sins and the sufferings of Israel. Nor were these national sufferings the only enigma. The private lot of men presented many features that no one could reconcile with the righteous government of God. The ordinary doctrin that the good enjoyed prosperity, while the wicked were overtaken by adversity, was often in glaring contradiction with the facts. The great mass of people might hold it as a matter of routine belief; but anyone who thought it out was driven into doubt and the recognition of his own ignorance. It was but natural that many of the "sages" should find themselvs in this position. Jeremiah tells (Jer. viii, 9) us that even in his time the sages were ashamed, confounded, and dismayed; but he is content with the ready though shallow explanation that inasmuch as they had rejected Yahweh's word their wisdom must necessarily come to nought. And indeed a prophet and preacher of repentance like Jeremiah was not at all the man to understand and appreciate the sages. The cause of their confusion was not that they had disobeyed the word of Yahweh, but that facts were in contradiction with the current doctrin as to Yahweh's righteousness, and those whose office led them deliberately to examin what they saw and felt, perceived this contradiction sooner than the prophets; for doubt is fatal to the glow of inspiration, and the prophets were therefore instinctivly conservativ and unwilling to question or reject the traditional faith of their ancestors. To a sage, who reviewed the great question of God's justice with singular intrepidity, we owe a work which is one of the greatest glories of Israelitish literature; namely, the book of Job. —The Bible for Learners.

I WILL say unto God, Do not condemn me; show me wherefore thou contendest with me. Is it good unto thee that thou shouldst oppress, that thou shouldst despise the work of thy hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked? Hast thou eyes of flesh, or seest thou as man seest?—Job x, 2-4.

IT may also be observed, that the book of Job shows itself to be the production of a mind cultivated in science, which the Jews, so far from being famous for, were very ignorant of. The allusions to objects of natural philosophy are frequent and strong, and are of a different cast to anything in the books known to be Hebrew. The astronomical names, Pleiades, Orion, and Arcturus, are Greek and not Hebrew names, and it does not appear from anything that is to be found in the Bible, that the Jews knew anything of astronomy, or that they studied it; they had no translation of those names in their own language, but adopted the names as they found them in the poem. The probability, however, is, that it is older than any book in the Bible; and it is the only one that can be read without indignation or disgust.—Paine's Age of Reason.

THE learned Jewish authors, Eben Ezra and Spinoza, also declare that this book, Job, is not a Jewish production at all and that, consequently, it does not properly constitute any part of the Bible.—Kelso.

OUT in the intellectual sea there is room for every sail.—Ingersoll.

THERE can be nothing more utterly subversiv of all that is really valuable than the suppression of honest thought.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 16. No. 25. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, June 22, 1889. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 per year.

THE GUARDIANS OF LEARNING DURING THE DARK AGES.

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that the members of the South Fork Fishing Club, who owned the dam behind which were gathered the waters that desolated the Conemaugh valley, intend to turn their clubhouse into an asylum for the orphans of those who were lost in the great flood.

There is a larger proportion of the boys and girls of New Jersey than of any other state in the Union who go to Sunday-school. It appears by statistics recently taken that there are just about 280,000 children in the 1,997 Sunday-schools of New Jersey. This fact ought to insure a high grade of hypocrisy for the next generation of citizens of the state.

Down in Clark county, Ga., is an old negro woman who every night prepares for death. According to a local newspaper, "after a short prayer, she clothes herself in a long, flower-bedecked gown, plaits her hair carefully, crosses her hands on her breast, and falls asleep. Two coppers are placed on the table beside her to put upon her eyelids. She has directed that she be buried on the banks of the Oconee river, and believes she is going directly to heaven. She is angry beyond expression as she wakes each morning and finds herself alive."

It is said that M. Gounod, the composer, who is a man of intense religious convictions, once spent an hour upon his knees praying for the conversion of Sarah Bernhardt, in that lady's presence. Sarah's answer was short but not very sweet, and at last she had to turn him out of her house. Gounod's house was threatened during the Franco-Prussian war. Trusting to his fame for defense, he put up the following inscription: "The house of Charles Gounod, the composer of Faust." But the marauding Germans burnt it to the ground all the same.

The governor of Van in Armenia has recently issued a decree against the breviary which Gregorian and Catholic Armenians hav used in their schools for more than a thousand years, the only difference between the Gregorian and Catholic versions being that in the former the name Catholics is substituted for that of pope, used in the latter. The governor's reason was that the teaching of the breviary was opposed to Ottoman national principles, some of the saints mentioned in it having been kings of Armenia, and also foreign kings. Both the Catholic and Gregorian patriarchs hav seen the grand vizier at Constantinople in behalf of their people, but as yet in vain.

In one of the British reviews for June is an appeal "to the common sense and educated thought of the men and women of England against the proposed extension of the parliamentary suffrage to women." It is signed by over one hundred women, representing a great variety of social interests and radical differences of political opinion. The names include Mrs. Leslie Stephen, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Miss Beatrice Potter, Mrs. J. R. Green, Lady Layard, Mrs. Huxley, Mrs. Lynn Linton, Mrs. Alma Tadema, Mrs. W. E. Forster, Mrs. Matthew Arnold, Mrs. Max Müller, the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley, Lady Frederick Cavendish, the duchess of St. Albans, Lady Louisa Egerton, and Mrs. Goschen.

An Antarctic expedition is again being talked of. A New Zealand colonist of Norwegian origin has gone to Europe for the purpose of taking out a contingent of his countrymen accustomed to fishing. His object is to endeavor to organize an Antarctic whale fishery. He hopes to equip two steamers with which to explore the region generally, and, if possible, he will leave a contingent of men on Victoria Land or some other suitable point for a whole year. One or more scientific men will be taken, so that if the expedition be carried out we may expect important results.

The Star of Fort Gaines, Ga., has a new editor, and a passage from his salutatory is as follows: "We feel like we hav claims upon the people of Georgia, having been a preacher and pastor for forty-four years; and having in that time baptized over four thousand people, we feel, as Paul said, if any others hav claims we hav more, having labored more abundantly. But now being too old and ugly longer to be a pastor, we turn in this new direction hoping still to be able to do some good in the world, and to make an honest living for ourself and family. There will be, as soon as we can get under way, a religious corner in the paper for Sabbath reading."

The Boston Anarchists seem to be an exclusiv set, something like New York's four hundred. Mr. Tucker says: "Labadie proposes the orthodox God for membership in the Anarchistic fraternity. He should be buried beneath a mountain of black balls. Whether God made the orthodox man in his image or was made by the latter in his image, he is totally unfit to be one of us. Far from free, independent, sovereign, and willing to do good, he is represented throughout the inspired book as a despotic, vain, whimsical, contradictory, impotent, sulky, malicious character, with whom no noble mind can be on speaking terms. No, be it known once for all that no god nor godlike man need apply for fellowship among us." Barring, perhaps, a lack of reasoning power, we should think the orthodox God would make a very good Anarchist.

Mrs. Besant, says the Home Journal, is the ablest, as she is the most "advanced," of the women who undertook for the first time this winter the responsibilities of official life on the London school board. She has been before the public for the last twelve years, and the splendid total vote of fourteen thousand votes by which she was elected by the Tower Hamlets division of London last November was a well-earned tribute of admiration from the workingmen of the district. Mrs. Besant's popularity and influence with the London democracy are undoubted. There is a wonderful magnetic attraction about her. Her face in repose can hardly be called handsome, but when animated, her dark Irish eyes flash fire, and, as one of her lady friends once said to me, "She has one of the sweetest smiles I hav ever seen." Her short curling hair, and the somewhat peculiar attire which she affects, add to the individuality of her appearance. But her eloquence is after all her greatest attraction. It was entirely on religious grounds that she left her husband, a clergyman and a brother to Walter Besant, the novelist, and the separation from her only daughter has been the deepest sorrow of her life.

Communications.

Who Are the Infidels?

The word "infidel" has two separate and distinct meanings.

ITS REAL MEANING.

In the first place, it comes from the Latin infidelitas. It means being unfaithful, and is frequently used to describe a man who is unfaithful to his wife, or a wife who is unfaithful to her husband. In this relation the word conveys a distinct idea, and is full of force and meaning. For many ages, however, religious folk hav given it a second meaning, a meaning in no way warranted by its Latin root, and hav applied it to all persons who in any way and in however small a degree disputed the truth of the prevailing religion.

A QUESTION OF GEOGRAPHY.

A man's religious belief, as everybody now knows, is the result for the most part of a geographical accident. If I had been born in Turkey, of Mohammedan parents, or in India of Buddhist parents, trained from childhood in either of these religions, I should hav been a Mohammedan or a Buddhist for precisely the same reason that, having been born in England of Christian parents, trained in orthodoxy, I was a Christian for the first eighteen years of my life, and only outgrew my early beliefs by a study of other religions and their relation to man's mental growth or development.

SOCIETY FOSTERS HYPOCRISY.

Just think for a moment what a large part our early training plays in the formation of our beliefs.

At our mother's knee we are first taught to pray. With her loving hands she puts us in the little cot and bids us think not of the things of this world, but direct our thoughts toward heaven and the great God, the monarch of the heavenly sphere.

How can we doubt our mother's word? To her loving-kindness and care we owe everything; we would sooner doubt anything and anybody than her.

Nevertheless, our mothers are our first priests. They giv us our first lessons in theology. They fill our imaginations with the idea of an infinit ghost; and once mother has given form to "airy nothings" and framed the picture, it is hard for the child to do anything toward its destruction.

When we grow to manhood we find that our advancement in the world depends upon our maintenance of the creed of our childhood. If we refuse to support it we are regarded in the same light as a father who refuses to support his child—we are shunned—condemned as inhuman monsters, without so much as a word being allowed in our defense.

THE TYRANNY OF THE MAJORITY.

For ages the thoughtful and courageous and progressiv among men hav suffered from the tyranny of the majority; and, as a general rule, in matters of belief, majorities are in the wrong. Minorities are always the pioneers of progress; they compose the little band of heroes and martyrs in all ages.

Who can tell the sufferings of these noble pioneers—who recount their hardships when so much has been endured in silence? We know, however, that but for such unselfish heroism, such constant, though unrewarded, struggle, we should not enjoy so large a measure of freedom as we do to-day.

Think of the tyranny of the creeds in the past; think of the sacred blood shed in the name of religion in all parts of the globe; think of the torture endured by our Freethought martyrs in the past, and you will appreciate the meaning of the term, "tyranny of the majority."

Every creed has had its Infidels; every sect its outcasts; and whenever a man was found who stood intellectually or morally above his fellows—unless he chose to hide his thoughts, or play the hypocrit—he became the target for all the poisoned arrows of religious malice.

All honor, then, to these brave pioneers! Let their memories be kept green in our hearts and minds, moistened by tears of sympathy. Let the American poet, Will Carleton, giv voice to our sentiment.

> When the springtime touch is lightest—
> When the summer-eyes are brightest,
> Or the autumn sings most drear;
> When the winter's hair is whitest,
> Sleep, old pioneer!
> Safe beneath the sheltering soil,
> Safe enough you crept.
> Well you paid for every blessing
> Bought with grief each day of cheer;
> Nature's arms around you pressing,
> Nature's lips your brow caressing,
> Sleep, old pioneer!

But while the great dead lie silent in the grave, let us recount some of the glories of their career, and deduce useful lessons from their lives and struggles.

THE GLORY OF THE FREETHOUGHT MOVEMENT.

It is the glory of the Freethought movement that it has produced men of varied talents; that is to say, the genius of its men and women, its heroes and pioneers, has not all run in the same groove.

Among people who think, differences of opinion are inevitable; every brain differs from every other brain in some respect, either in its size, its shape, its quality, or its convolutions. It is only among the orthodox—the tories in religion—that thought is stagnant as an unused pool. The orthodox are content to take their opinions on trust; they are the perpetual victims of a theological "confidence trick;" but the Freethinker is wide awake—he does his own thinking, makes his own investigations, reaches his own conclusions, and dares the consequences.

CHRISTIANITY A PERSECUTING RELIGION.

The Christians were the first to introduce the practice of punishing persons for unbelief. Buddha taught his followers the principle of allowing others to differ in opinion without either condemnation or punishment. Like every great teacher, he thought his opinions were right, and that the consequences arising from neglect to put them into practice were terrible; but he appeared to think that the consequences of one's misdeeds were a sufficient punishment. Paganism was tolerant enough. The Romans did not persecute for unbelief. Renan says: "We may search in vain the whole Roman law before Constantine for a single passage against freedom of thought, and the history of the imperial government furnishes no instance of a prosecution for entertaining an abstract doctrin." Think of that; yet Christians, who tell us that the highest and noblest virtues were manifested in Christ, are yet inconsistent enough to declare that it was he who first laid down the atrocious principle of the

CRIMINALITY OF UNBELIEF,

in those memorable words: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

For the purpose of my article, however, let me dwell for a brief while on the LIVES OF "EMINENT INFIDELS,"

that is, the lives of great men who hav been called "Infidels" by Christians. They are of four kinds. First and foremost came the scientific Infidels—the men who insisted that facts that could be verified by experience—were of more importance to the world than "inspired fictions."

Then came the logicians—the reasoners—who were also students of the Bible; then the poets; and lastly, the man of versatil talents—the man who combined in a small degree the qualities of the others, in other words, the man of "Common Sense." Take first that most heroic of men, whose statue is to be unveiled in Rome on Whitsunday this year, near the spot where he was burnt in 1600; is he not rightly numbered among the most worthy of the sons of man? Yet he was an Infidel. And what a man! Braving the greatest dangers, standing erect in the very shadow of the grave, in the presence of the rack, the thumbscrew, the stake, while others played the hypocrit or the coward. His name will be handed down to posterity as an example of a truly great man, i. e., a man who regards truth and virtue as the highest of human qualities—this name will liv when those who tortured and burnt him will hav gone down to everlasting oblivion.

GIORDANO BRUNO,

Who was this Bruno? He was a poor Italian student. Born at a small place called Nola, near Naples, in 1548, Bruno gave early evidence of a studious turn of mind, and was a regular attendant at the private and public lectures of the various professors at the colleges of Nola and Naples. But a profound study of science and philosophy led him early in life to see that the Bible was unscientific, and he very soon made known his heresy. He was only sixteen years of age when the authorities of San Domenico drew up an indictment against him, which, however, was not pressed on account of his youth.

BRUNO IN ENGLAND.

Bruno then wandered about from Noli to Venice, from Venice to Milan, from Milan to France, and ultimately to England, where in the University of Oxford itself he was invited to lecture. Here Bruno's heresy found free expression. He lectured on the "Indestructibility of Matter," the "Plurality of Worlds," and the "Pantheistic Philosophy." Bruno's great crime was that he discarded the Aristotelian theory of the motion of the earth, and advocated the theory of Copernicus.

BRUNO BETRAYED.

Bruno continued to wander from place to place, and was ultimately induced by one Mocenigo to return to his nativ land, where he was betrayed to the Inquisition. I need scarcely tell how Bruno was condemned to seven long years of imprisonment—imprisonment away from his beloved books—and after many ineffectual attempts to induce him to recant, how he was at length condemned to die at the stake. Think of his speech to his judges: "You are more afraid to pronounce my sentence than I to receive it;" and then you will in some slight degree understand what sort of man this grand Italian "Infidel" was. But oh! how he faced death; he did not quake with fear, he did not appeal for mercy, but bore his inexpressible sufferings serenely and bravely to the last! Thus Bruno's body was destroyed, but his influence for good in the world remains with us to-day, and is practicably imperishable.

Bruno was called an "Infidel." The word was used as a term of reproach; but methinks that the time will come when to be called an Infidel will be the highest honor.

From Bruno we turn naturally, as the next step, to

SPINOZA, THE DUTCH JEW.

He was born at Amsterdam in November of 1632. Like Bruno, he was a pantheist; to his mind God permeated the universe.

Spinoza was a logician by a profound study of the Bible. In his "Tractatus-Theologico Politicus," Spinoza givs us a most searching analysis of the Bible, shows us its true value, as the work of fallible men, denies the possibility of miracles, in short, destroys the very foundation of the Christian faith.

Spinoza was anathematized and excommunicated by the Jewish church. Thenceforward he worked not for a sect but for humanity.

Is his name forgotten? Not so. In any good history of philosophy the name of Spinoza cannot be omitted.

Then we come to a different class of "Infidel"—to François Marie Arouet, known as

VOLTAIRE THE POET, THE PLAYWRIGHT, THE SATIRIST, who was born on Feb. 20, 1694, and died in 1778.

He assailed theology with the strongest arguments, the most impregnable logic, and the theologians are sorry, but they do not rush about proclaiming that they are hurt; for they imagin that there is something deeper in human nature than mere logic. But satirize their creed, laugh their doctrins to scorn, and do it with all the skill of the wit and the elegance of the poet, and they will never cease their tumultuous cries of agony while you liv, and will slander and villify you when dead.

Voltaire flung the spear of his wit and the shafts of his ridicule at the carcass of Christianity, and the clergy felt these assaults terribly. The point penetrated, and though like Mercutio's wound it was "not so deep as a well nor as wide as a church door," 'twas enough.

The clergy will never forgiv Voltaire. He was a hateful Infidel to them, though beloved by the people. In France to-day it is not the clergy who slandered Voltaire whose names are remembered with pride, but it is the poet's—Voltaire's himself—and to-day his countrymen are never tired of singing his praises. Yet he was an "Infidel!"

The fourth class of Infidel to which I will refer is that is, the man of versatil talent—the man who knows a little of everything and who possesses the requisit amount of tact to put it into practice. Such a man was Thomas Paine. Preëminently a man of common sense, he was capable in argument of silencing the ablest theologians, for with his knowledge of mathematical principles, combined with an accurate knowledge of the Bible, he was able to show that the clergy were wrong, and further that they were ignorant alike of science and of the book of which they professed to be the special interpreters.

THE INFIDEL OF "COMMON SENSE"—

Thomas Paine, the English Freethinker, was born at Thetford, Norfolk, on Jan. 20, 1736, and died in June, 1809. He took part in two Revolutions. It was he who gave utterance to the noble sentiment, "Let us hav war now that our children may hav peace"—he, too, who said, "All the world is my country, and to do good my religion."

And not only did he say grand things, but he acted grandly too. He was the first Englishman to construct a bridge, and probably the first who sat in the French chamber as deputy, representing as he did the departments of Calais and Versailles.

Thomas Paine wrote his "Common Sense" and convinced our American brethren of the folly of monarchy. By his "Age of Reason" he demonstrated to "all sorts and conditions of men" the unreasonableness of the Christian religion.

Yet this man was "an Infidel." I hav not time now to speak of Shelley, of Robert Owen, of Richard Carlile, of John Stuart Mill, of Charles Darwin, and a host of others, "Infidels" all, but I must turn at once to the next point for consideration in this lecture. If all these men were Infidels, in what sense were they so? Were they unfaithful to their wives? No. Even the theologians do not allege this, except in the case of Thomas Paine, and then without the smallest evidence to support their statement.

In what respect, then, were they unfaithful? Unfaithful to their convictions? On the contrary, in this regard they were true above all their fellows. How then can they rightfully be called Infidels? They can not. The truth is, the term was coined by wicked and malignant priests to use as a stigma, as a brand, with which to stamp all men who were either too earnest or too brave to be unfaithful to themselvs.

Shakspere says:

> To thine own self be true,
> And it must follow as the night the day,
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

So thought these brave men; the priest, however, thought otherwise.

And I say here that these men were not Infidels, in the true sense of the term. They were not unfaithful. Nay, I will tell you who are the REAL INFIDELS.

They are the people who profess to believe that which they really do not believe. They are the hypocrits of all nations and all creeds. They are the people who call themselvs Christians who are nevertheless ashamed to put Christ's doctrins into practice. They are people who say they believe in a God of justice and goodness, and yet are continually doing deeds which must be abhorrent in the eyes of the being they profess to worship. They are the persons who say, "Lord, Lord, thy kingdom come," and who dread the approach of death as much as the most miserable of sinners.

Who are the Infidels? Every man who takes the Christian name and does not strive to emulate the deeds of his master—that man is an Infidel.

WHAT JESUS DID.

Jesus had not where to lay his head. He wandered about like a beggar and an outcast. All persons who liv in fine houses and call themselvs Christians and at the same time are not seeking to bring about Christ's kingdom on earth are Infidels!

To be like Christ they should "sell all they hav and giv to the poor;" they should "resist not evil," but when smitten on one cheek they should turn the other to their assailant and "let him smite that also." "They should giv to every man that asketh," and in a short time they would qualify themselvs for the world above the skies. To be good Christians, too, they should "take no thought for the morrow what they should eat, what they should drink, or wherewithal they shculd be clothed." God looks after the lilies of the fields—would he neglect to make provision for those who believed in him?

All good Christians should be "Communists;" they should hav everything in common. They should liv in the same kind of houses; rise at the same time in the morning, breakfast together; hav the same kind of food and the same quantity of it; do the same kind of work, wear the same kind of clothes—and if they took to jewelry, or finery of any sort, no man should hav a more valuable watch than another, and no lady presume to wear a dress out of the orthodox fashion or of more than ordinary value, because if they made any differences there would be a most unpleasant time of it for somebody in the community. To be like Jesus they should hav faith, and plenty of it. If a man in a railway train asked them to select the picture card out of three, they should hav faith and do it. If a man asked them to take shares in "The Absolute Bargain Co.," or the "Society for the Relief of Aged Cripples Abroad"—they should hav faith—and assuredly they would get their reward, with a capital R.

To be like Christ they should "love their enemies," and in the time of invasion they should try and convert the enemy by meekness and love. They should "Lay not up treasures on earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt," etc., but think only of heaven and the glory of a rapid departure.

If they would do these things, they would be consistent, they would justify in some sort the Christian name.

But how do they act? Instead of "love for their enemies," a Christian government prepares powder and shot, and wrings from a poor, struggling population millions per annum to keep up a standing army.

Instead of "taking no thought for the morrow," they erect banks, start prudential societies and all sorts of institutions for making provision for the distant future; and if anyone takes the liberty of smiting them on the cheek, they immediately rush off in quest of a policeman. The poor fellow who has the misfortune to hav nowhere to "lay his head" is sent to jail by a Christian magistrate as a "rogue and a vagabond." I hav myself seen a "worthy" city alderman (Sir Robt. Carden, M.P.) commit a dozen half-starved wretches to jail for a month, against whom there was not the slightest rag of evidence of criminality—for no other reason than that being out of work they preferred to sleep in the "open air" rather than seek a night's shelter in the workhouse. Yet Jesus said, "Blessed be ye poor; yours is the kingdom of heaven." Is it possible that the pauper will get a "mansion in the sky" when all he can succeed in getting in this world is a "plank bed?"

Poor Herbert Freund has had several terms of imprisonment for faithfully imitating his Lord and Master.

He has spent more than a year in prison at various times for going to St. Paul's cathedral and in the midst of the service proclaiming "the day of judgment and the doom of the city."

Poor fellow, he suffers from a chronic congestion of the brain; and so perhaps does every other religious enthusiast.

Had this man lived in the fourteenth century instead of the nineteenth, he would hav been hailed as a god; he is now regarded as something approaching an idiot. Yet I dare swear that Herbert Freund is a better Christian than those who condemn or punish him.

He at least is consistent. He at least takes Jesus to mean what he said. With him there is no paltering with words. If Christ did not always mean what he said, how are we to know what he meant at all?

The priests are philological jugglers. They invent "spiritual meanings" for plain secular sentences, because they know that dexterity of the tongue may deceivê the brain. They are "sophisticated rhetoricians inebriated with the exuberance" of spiritual verbosity, and until Freethinkers compile a new authoritativ dictionary from which there can be no rational appeal the theologians will continue their trade of deception.

They are the real infidels and the manufacturers of Infidels. The only conversions they ever effect are the conversions of honest men into unconscientious hypocrits. The late William Maccall called them "Bethelites" in one of his fierce moments—and he had many of them. He exclaimed:

> Christ and Christlike men I love,
> Me they lead to heaven above.
> But the Bethelites I hate,
> Who me pester early, late,
> With their chatter of salvation—
> With their menace of damnation.
> They make high God a chapel fixture,
> And piety a "bloody mixture," etc.

A strong metaphor, truly, but it is scarcely an exaggeration of the fact. The priest tells us we are to be washed in the blood of Christ—to be made white. But if we tell him to go and bathe himself in the sanguinary fluid he calls us "vulgar Materialists." I retort by calling them "Christian Infidels"—proclaiming one kind of conduct for their credulous dupes and performing quite another themselvs.

How long shall these hypocrits hav power? How long shall they be allowed to blacken the characters of our great dead? How long shall slander and calumny be heaped upon the pioneers of progress? Not long, surely. The day of the schoolmaster is at hand; for with an educated people the doom of the creeds is certain.

Again quoting William Maccall:

> Like Christ is dying the Christian creed;
> It wears a crown, not of thorns, but gold.
> It revels in lusts and lies and greed,
> Its most sacred things are bought by gold.
> Scorning the gospel of Christ and his cross,
> A gospel it babbles of profit and loss.
>
> Of a life and a death and a faith benign
> Nought remaineth but legends strange and dim—
> Fruits withered but luscious on poetry's vine,
> Broken notes of nature's eternal hymn.
> Ah! none are thy brothers, dear Christ, but those > Whom priests and Pharisees curse as thy foes.

Come forward, then, all you whose minds are not darkened by clouds of superstition; sow the seeds of Freethought; be brave and fear not the bigots, for with truth on your side, and courage and enthusiasm for the work, you cannot fail to reap a golden harvest.

ARTHUR B. MOSS.

Christ and Peter, Both Romish Frauds.

The ancient Syriac New Testament, called the Peshito, has no Christ in it, but always the Syriac word meshiha, meaning "anointed," which Dr. Murdock has not translated, as he ought to hav done, but rendered Messiah, with a capital M (not a capital C as erroneously written and printed in our former article). Accordingly in Dr. Murdock's Syriac New Testament the first verse of Matthew reads as follows:

> The book of the nativity of Jesus the Messiah.

And the first verse of 1 Corinthians:

> Paul, called and sent by Jesus Messiah.

Here, as in almost every other instance in this epistle and some others, but not all, the definit article is not used, and the presumption is that it is an interpolation; that is to say, that Paul always wrote Jeshu meshiha, "anointed Jesus."

The Apocalypse, which was originally composed in Greek—for the Syriac version betrays its Greek origin—has "Jesus the Messiah," i.e., anointed, throughout.

But although there is no "Christ" in the Syriac version, it is remarkable that the word "Christian" occurs three times, as follows:

> The disciples were first called Christians [Syr. Christianyah] at Antioch (Acts xi, 26).
>
> Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian (Acts xxvi, 28).
>
> But if he suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed (1 Peter iv, 16).

The Syriac title of this book is, "The Epistle of Peter the Apostle; Simon Kepha." Showing how the Syriac version got tampered with under the influence of the Greek branch of the primitiv church. The epistle is perhaps genuin, barring corruptions, and may hav been written in Babylon, as it purports to be. And this is the only epistle of Simon Kepha in the ancient Syriac collection. The second epistle of Peter is a later Greek fabrication.

We hav said that the Greek word Christianos occurs three times in the ancient Syriac version, as it has come down to us. So also the Greek proper name "Petros" occurs three times in the same version, to wit:

In the caption of the epistle of Simon Kepha, as before mentioned; in the first verse of the same epistle ("Petrus, an apostle to Jesus the anointed"); and in Acts i, 13, where Petrus is named as the first of the eleven apostles. But in Luke vi, 14, where the same list is given by the same writer, the first of the apostles is "Simon, whom he named Kepha."

It is therefore evident that these three occurrences of the name Petrus in the Syriac New Testament are corruptions. The name given to Simon by Jesus was Kepha, meaning "stone," and he never could hav been known in Galilee or Judea as Petros, any more than Jesus could hav been known as Christos. The Greek language was not spoken in those countries.

ANTICHRIST.

The Danites in Search of a Possession.

The eighteenth chapter of Judges opens with the above, and this is the gist of the story:

It is evening in Laish. The day's toil is over, the sun is sinking behind the western hills, whilst the summits of the eastern ones are bathed in golden light. But lower down their slopes the shadows are creeping toward the valley, where all is peace and happiness. The children are assembled at their evening games, and their joyous shouts are reëchoed from the surrounding hills. The parents look on well pleased. Fair maidens are wandering in oliv groves attended by favored swains, who pour into willing ears the old, old story, though ever new, and without which "this world would be a desert." The young mothers sit fondling their first-born, and as they press them to their bosoms in a transport of love their eyes meet and both see their heaven there. Young husbands are standing by, though every now and then called off by the youngsters at play to settle some trivial dispute, but quickly returning to wives and little ones. The elders are gathered in groups discussing an event that occurred to that peaceful community a short time before. They were visited by five strangers. Had the Laishites hanged them on the spot the Jewish Yahweh would then hav had one crime less to answer for. But no. With that noble hospitality that ever distinguishes nature's children, they received them as guests. Water was furnished to wash their feet. They partook of the traditional bread and salt which, according to Eastern custom, made them sacred in the eyes of their hosts. They were permitted to wander through the land, which they found teeming with plenty, producing everything man needed in abundance. The people, simple and honest, knew no guile. There was no magistrate in the land. Why? None was needed. The men were honest and industrious, the women virtuous, the children dutiful. But when were such virtues a passport to the favor of the Jewish Yahweh? The spies returned to their tribe and reported what they had seen. They decided to ask counsel of the Lord. His answer was, "Go up quickly and take possession, for lo I hav given it into your hand" (see Judges xviii, 6–10). And on this eventful evening this horde of Jewish robbers are lying in wait to fulfill the commands of their revengeful God.

The moon has just risen above the eastern hills, casting a peaceful light over the joyous scene, but throwing the lower slopes into deeper shadow; "the children are summoned from their evening games to prepare for the night's rest;" "good-nights are spoken by fond lovers, with promises to meet on the next"—alas! they are eternal. No more shall the joyous shouts of those innocent children reëcho through that peaceful valley; no more shall those fond lovers wander through the oliv groves; no more shall the young mothers clasp their babes to their bosoms. An unusual noise is heard. The children cling to their parents in an agony of terror. "What is it?" is asked, but not answered. Again it is heard, but nearer—a noise as of wild beasts rushing over the ground, accompanied by a clash of cymbals—and the ruthless horde of Yahweh hav rushed upon their prey, and sword and spear are doing their bloody work. A fiend tears the babe from its mother's arms, and ruthlessly dashes its brains out against a stone. The young mother rushes frantically forward to save it, and is received on the point of a Jewish spear, piercing her pure bosom, and the life-stream of mother and child mingle as they are absorbed in the bosom of nature. "And Yahweh smelled a sweet savor." The massacre is over, and the city, together with the bodies of its former peaceful inhabitants, is offered as a burnt-offering to a relentless Jewish God, who is reported as the author of the sixth Commandment, Thou shalt not kill.

Josephus, the Jewish historian, as if ashamed of the act, merely says they went up and took possession.

W. H. FORBES.

DID the book called the Bible excel in purity of ideas and expression all the books now extant in the world, I would not take it for my rule of faith as being the word of God, because the possibility would nevertheless exist of my being imposed upon. But when I see throughout the greater part of this book scarcely anything but a history of the grossest views and a collection of the most paltry and contemptible tales, I cannot dishonor my creator by calling it by his name.—Thomas Paine.

The American Secular Union.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, - - - Princess Opera House, 558 W. Madison street, Room 1, Chicago.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas., - - - - - - Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com., 334 W. Madison st., Chicago.

Opposed to the Clan.

The pope's Irish hav so long ruled Chicago with a ruinous hand that it is a matter of no small satisfaction that the revelation of this Cronin murder is turning the tide against them, and I note one startling coincidence in this matter. The 4th of May is the anniversary of the Phenix park assassination, the Haymarket tragedy, and the Cronin murder. It seems to be an Irish blood anniversary, for when the Haymarket bomb-thrower is found I imagin that he will be an Irish dynamiter.

Against this pernicious influence it is necessary to strike while the iron is hot, and if possible point out the way for our city's redemption from Romish rule. A few Liberals inaugurated a movement last Sunday, the names of some of whom are not unfamiliar; and this is what the Chicago Tribune says of it:

OPPOSITION TO THE CLAN.—THE AMERICAN PATRIOTIC LEAGUE THE TITLE OF AN ORGANIZATION TO OFFSET THE CLAN-NA-GAEL'S INFLUENCE.

The citizens of the Northwest Side, headed by W. F. Whitehead and J. M. Stiles, inaugurated yesterday a movement which promises to become of no little importance in the politics of this country. It is the organization of an American Patriotic League to act as a checkmate to the encroachments on American affairs by secret societies composed of foreigners.

"The revelations in the Cronin inquest of the Clan-na-Gael's noxious influence and power in the municipal and national government of this country—a cancerous incubus on the body politic," said E. A. Stevens, "suggested and prompted such a movement."

The first meeting was held at No. 994 Milwaukee avenue yesterday afternoon. J. M. Stiles presided and H. T. Curry said:

"Americans hav too long crouched in servil humility before this foreignism that is literally strangling the liberty of this country," said the speaker in the course of his remarks. "What do we see to-day? One of the most atrocious murders that hav ever been committed is perpetrated right here in this big city of Chicago.

"When these men," he resumed, "come from another land I want them to become Americans. Do you know I hav about reached the conclusion that foreignism is strangling Americanism. The Irish vote in this country is about one-sixth of the total vote. How many offices do you suppose they hold?"

"All but one-sixth," shouted somebody in the hall.

"That's exactly it!" retorted the speaker. "The education of this country will be its salvation, and I want Secular education and not parochial."

E. A. Stevens, who followed, made remarks of a similar nature.

"What is the condition of things here?" he asked. "What do we see? A certain Maurice J. Dorney, a Catholic priest, a man who pretends to preach the gospel of peace, being actually associated with revolutionary secret societies and an intimate of men who do not stand any too well to commit murder. We learn from the coroner's inquest that an institution has grown and thrived in this land in direct violation of the Constitution. We find that men, members of that organization, under oath to tell the truth, equivocate, lie deliberately, or hav forgetful memories. We discover that justice cannot get at facts; that secret society oaths are more binding to these men than their oath of allegiance to the Constitution of this country. Men who wear a uniform supposed to be symbolical of law are brought into this inquest—men who are guarding your homes and mine—and we find that they are accused of being accessories to this murder. Is it not about time to call a halt? Is it not about time to be up and doing?"

He was frequently interrupted by storms of applause.

The speaker also alluded to the return of McGarigle, and in that connection had this to say: "I shouldn't be surprised if by indicting the whole police force of Chicago they would find Cronin's murderers. That force is recruited from an association of assassins—an association against the ideas and law of America which they would throttle. Can we afford to hav a lot of organized thugs liv here on the pretense that they are serving the cause of Ireland?"

Mr. Stevens criticised a religious sect which tolerated such men, opposed the parochial school system, and took another crack at McGarigle.

Speeches were made by Mr. Whitehead, Mr. Bush, and others. The object of the American Patriotic Association is to imbue all American citizens with a deeper love of country. It has adopted as its motto: "Love of Country, Liberty of Conscience, and Loyalty to the Constitution." It will meet every Sunday at 2 P.M. at No. 994 Milwaukee avenue. A permanent organization will be effected next Sunday.

A CARD OF THANKS.

DEAR FRIENDS: I was so overwhelmed with expressions of good-will, regard, and esteem from the members of the Chicago Union and prominent Liberals of this city, and was the recipient of such an elegant and valuable present, on the anniversary of my birth, that I cannot adequately express in words the depth of the gratitude I feel.

To our honored president, R. B. Westbrook; to those noble Nestors of Liberalism, Horace Seaver and J. P. Mendum; my cherished friend and able Editor, Eugene Macdonald; to Otto Wettstein, our scientific sage of Rochelle; to Mrs. Freeman, whose glowing rhetoric sheds a radiance over the Radical rostrum; to my old-time compatriot, Dr. McLeod; to our indefatigable Jehu Barr, and to my esteemed friend, Mrs. C. Piper, who, with her talented daughter, Bertha, made this occasion memorable, and to all others, I extend my most sincere thanks for their acts of appreciation and words of encouragement.

As long as memory lasts I shall treasure the unique memorial, on which are inscribed the donors' names—an array of which any person should be proud, including thirteen of Chicago's most fair and intelligent lady Liberals, besides representatives of art, science, and letters, men in official life, the bench, the bar, and business, among whom I note with no slight satisfaction the name of my old employer and friend, Otis S. Favor.

Dear friends, I tender my heartfelt gratitude, and cheerfully accept the agreeable servitude of being under obligations to those I so profoundly esteem.

To one and all I shall ever be,

Yours gratefully and sincerely,

E. A. STEVENS.

[The explanation of the foregoing Card of Thanks is found in the following.—EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER.]

CHICAGO, June 11, 1889.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: We, members and friends of the Chicago Secular Union, were tendered a party by our president, Mr. E. A. Stevens, in honor of the forty third anniversary of his birth, June 8th. Mr. Stevens, with his usual good judgment and management, entertained the society with the following elaborate, select, and brilliant literary and musical program:

PROGRAM.

OVERTURE.....Segner's Orchestra.....Festival.
RECITATION.....Prof. Geo. A. Vinton.....Selected.
SONG, "Ecstasy".....Mrs. Julia Rogers.....(Arditi).
RECITATION.....Henry Borst......"The Reformer."
SONG.....Ethel Sheff r.."A Grandmother's Advice."
GUITAR SOLO.....Dr. G. W. Kennicott.
BARITONE SONG.....Mr. Fred. Miller.
MARTIAL MUSIC.....Messrs. Elliott and McNally.....(Farci).
SOPRANO SOLO.....Miss Annie Rogall.
Accompanist, Miss Allie Evans.
PIANO SOLO.....Miss Bertha Piper.
THE JUVENIL DUET.
RECITATION.....Mrs. C. Piper.
THE INIMITABLE SPECIALISTS (in costume)...Little Ella and Maud.
Intermission—Refreshments, followed by dancing.

At the close of the literary and musical program, Mrs. Freeman, in presenting Mr. Stevens with a fine gold watch and chain, as a token of regard, esteem, and appreciation of his sincere devotion to the noblest cause of man, in an eloquent, well-chosen, and masterly speech, said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I hav been requested to make a speech, and that I may not go over my time I will ask Mr. Stevens to take the chair. Now, I hav always noticed that speeches of this kind are a failure, therefore I shall inflict upon you but a very short one. The Chicago Secular Union was organized about ten years ago. You are aware of its work, its struggle for existence. It has required persistent effort to keep it alive. Need I tell you that that effort has been made, that work done, pre-eminently by one individual? Should the roll call be made to-night of the old charter members, but one would answer to that call—Mr. Stevens. Others hav dropped aside. He has remained firm. The members of this Union hav evinced their appreciation of his devotion to the principles of their cause, his disinterestedness, his unparalleled generosity, by unanimously electing him president nine or ten terms. They hav not been satisfied with this. Something more was needed. They wished to tender their appreciation in a more enduring form. They wished him to take with him into the future some slight token as a remembrance of their approval. They wished him to hav something in that future pleasantly recalling the past, so that when only the memory of the present remains, and the hands that hav sustained him hav fallen away, some of them helpless in death, others turned aside to other work, he might ever be reminded of this past and the many friends who hav met on this anniversary of his birth. In the name, then, of these friends—these grand men and women who are laboring for the upbuilding of Secularism, who believe in truth and justice—these apostles of humanity; in the name of the Young People's Society of which we hav been so justly proud, and in the welfare of which you hav taken so warm an interest, we, the committee, present to you, E. A. Stevens, this little memento, and may it be as faithful in your service as you hav been loyal to liberty.

Mr. Stevens, so peerless in the prosecution of the theological robbers of the public treasury, so quick in debate, with his sharp repartee and sparkling declamations, was completely taken by surprise, and struggling with emotion, said: "I can say nothing," but the tone spoke volumes, and went deep into the hearts of all his friends. Finally he managed to control his feelings and thanked the friends for their kind gift.

Mrs. Freeman then read the following letters of congratulation:

TO THE MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE CHICAGO SECULAR UNION, Ladies and Gentlemen: Please present my most hearty congratulation to your president, and our efficient and popular secretary, on the occasion of the forty-third anniversary of his introduction to this tumultuous and mysterious life of ours. May his career be long, and as useful and honorable as in the past. I hav been intimately associated with many "good men and true" in public life, in both church and state, for half a century, and it givs me great pleasure to say that I hav never found a more agreeable and honorable gentleman than I hav found E. A. Stevens to be; and, from my heart of hearts, I giv him, and you, his friends, my apostolic benediction. Yours cordially,

R. B. WESTBROOK, Pres. Am. Sec. Union.

BERTHA PIPER, Chicago, Ill., Respected Friend: We are very glad to learn by your favor of the 1st instant that E. A. Stevens's services to the Liberal cause are to receive public recognition in a proper and practical manner on his forty-third birthday.

Mr. Stevens's work, as secretary of the Secular Union, has been a telling one, and all who hav witnessed his untiring zeal in the furtherance of Freethought principles must feel, as we do, that the gift, the Liberals of Chicago are about to make to him, is worthily bestowed on one whose single purpose has been to elevate mankind.

Please extend to Mr. Stevens our cordial congratulations, and our wishes that many years may yet be before him in which to battle for the truth. Very truly yours, J. P. MENDUM.
HORACE SEAVER.

MISS BERTHA PIPER, Chicago, Ill.: Although the occasion seems to be one on which greetings to Mr. Stevens are in order, I must first congratulate the Chicago Secular Union on the work which, under Mr. Stevens's leadership, it is accomplishing. My best thanks to the Young People's Society for instituting this movement and allowing me to unite with them in this testimonial, and finally my heartiest congratulations to Mr. Stevens, hoping that this token of his friends' esteem may measure many more fair years of success in the cause of Universal Mental Liberty

Very sincerely, EDWARD S. MCLEOD.

E. A. STEVENS, President Chicago Secular Union, My Dear Sir: There is an old saying that, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." If there is a Lord, and this be true, then "verily I say unto you" that the Secularists of Chicago are well beloved to-night. I desire to say that never in my life hav I heard such kind thoughts and friendly wishes expressed toward anyone as I hav listened to since my efforts began in procuring the amount to obtain the watch and chain presented to you to-night—the most friendly expressions, of which a few of the following will show: "There is no one in Chicago more deserving than Mr. Stevens." "Don't let the matter drop: come again if you are not successful." "Mr. Stevens is well worthy of our esteem. I am glad you are making an effort in that direction. Hope you will succeed." I hav never met with such hearty good-will and ready co-operation as I hav with the members and friends in my effort to secure this token of regard toward you. I know you will join me in thanking them all. May you liv to see many returns of the day, and, as the time is ticked away, it will add as many more pleasant friends to the ones that greet you to night, is the best wish of the writer. Yours for Freethought,

CAROLINE M. PIPER.

Here are a few excerpts from E. M. Macdonald's letter: "E. A. Stevens has been an intrepid soldier of freedom. He hates a chain; he despises locks; a fetter stirs him to wrath. He is for liberty always; injustice is his foe. . . . With one man like him in every city, Freethought would conquer the country and justice between the church and the people be no longer but the dream of a few Infidels."

Congratulations were also received from Mr. Otto Wettstein, of which the following is an extract: "I would like to do honor to our noble and efficient secretary, whose whole life and every thought is consecrated to the grand cause of human freedom and progress; who battles bravely for every right against every wrong; for truth against falsehood; for fact against fiction; for science against superstition; for reason against mental stagnation and credulity; and for free thought, free speech, and free press against mental tyranny and oppression in all its hideous forms."

One of the most important consuls to Prussia appointed by President Lincoln, and who served the United States until after Grant, and who was also the resident Swedish consul in Chicago for several years, C. J. Sundell, Esq., a member of the board of education, a contributor to the gift, was evidently disappointed, as will be seen by the following:

ALLEN LINE OF ROYAL MAIL STEAMSHIPS,
CHAS. J. SUNDELL, MANAGER.
CHICAGO, June 9, 289.

E. A. STEVENS, Esq., Valued Friend: I write this at my home in Lake View, to say that I spent almost two hours last night trying to find the place for your entertainment, but in vain, as you had omitted to name it in your courteous letter of invitation, and can assure you that I felt much disappointed, since I had started out to convey to you my high regards and warm congratulations on the anniversary of your birth . . . and had to return home deprived of the anticipated pleasure.

I trust you had a delightful time, and pray you to accept hereby the expressions of my sincere regards, well wishes, and congratulations. Very truly yours, CHAS. J. SUNDELL.

Mr. Barr presented Mr. Stevens with a neatly framed list of the contributors. Just here I want to say a word of praise and thanks to Mrs. Caroline M. Piper, and her daughter, Miss Bertha Piper, for their work in originating the movement and the procuring of Mr. Stevens's present and the secrecy with which they kept all knowledge of it from him, which was duly appreciated by the Union when Mr. J. M. Stiles made a motion to giv a vote of thanks to Mrs. and Miss Piper for their work, which was carried with a ringing unanimous vote.

The watch was a fine gold one, and on it was engraved: "Chicago Secular Union to E. A. Stevens, June 8, E.M. 289." It was procured of the noted Freethought writer and jeweler, Mr. Otto Wettstein.

After the society had listened to the eloquent recital of fine pieces, the charming singing of inspiring songs, and the soft, sweet swells and strains of instrumental music, they prepared for the dance. Soon all was wreathed in pleasant smiles. All cares were driven away and joy, with its radiating waves of happiness that beamed from every face, was master of the day. During the intermission Mr. Stevens had prepared refreshments fit for a king, and after we had partaken of the delicious dainties and delicacies they all said, by their actions, "On with the dance, let joy be unconfined." Of all the nice, pleasant times we hav had, this was the happiest, gayest of them all; and when the last strains of that grand old tune, "Home, Sweet Home," died away in low, tremulous waves, the party dispersed, each one feeling lighter, happier, younger than before. Yours truly, WM. THOMPSON,
President Young People's Secular Mutual Improvement Society.

Our London Letter.

Although some of the more enlightened members of the community are steadily working in the direction of making the toilers less miserable than they now are on the only day of the week on which they hav any leisure time at their disposal, by the advocacy of rational means of enjoyment, there is still unfortunately a noisy majority who, incapable of enjoyment themselvs, are consequently only too desirous of making and keeping others equally wretched. The Workingmen's Lord's Day Rest Association hav held their annual meeting, and congratulated themselvs on their successful efforts in opposing the opening of art galleries and public libraries on the first day of the week. One of the speakers thought the infamous act of Charles II. rather a credit to the statute book than otherwise, and appeared to regret that it was not more fully enforced. The party of common sense will of course win in the long run, but in the mean time thousands will hav to struggle through a typical Puritan Sunday as best they may. There is a clergyman in Whitechapel who has an annual exhibition of paintings open seven days a week, for a month or six weeks, and this is greatly appreciated by those living in close proximity. A far more orderly crowd may be seen there on Sunday than at some of the fashionable churches, and if it were not for the fanatics, many such refuges would be available for the wage-earners.

The Christian Evidence Society hav had their little say, and disappear from the scene till next May. It seems they hav driven Freethought lecturers from Hyde park, but it would not do to drive them from any other spot at present. If they extinguish Infidelity too quickly, the society will hav no reason for existence, and there would not be any more subscriptions to divide; so no doubt at the next anniversary it will be reported that although they hav driven the Freethinkers from Regent's park, they hav meanly gone back again to Hyde park; this seems to be about the sum and substance of the annual reports. It is satisfactory to hear that the examinations hav maintained their high character and value, there having been an unusually large number of candidates, especially in the advanced grades. What these are, I don't quite know, unless it be a fuller knowledge of the vernacular. I never heard one of these lecturers offer any evidence, except of his own incapacity and ignorance. The great grievance of these peripatetic lecturers is that Mr. Bradlaugh and a few others are better off than they hav been at some former time, and it can only be accounted for by their having sold themselvs to the devil, which incontrovertibly proves the inspiration of the "word of God."

I fear poor old Booth is desirous of kicking over the traces, or why should he be desirous of seeing the continental system of registering houses of ill fame extended to this country? Does he think he would be safer if he knew where one or two duly licensed out-of-the-way houses could be found? I dare say he is tired sometimes of the clatter-clatter of Mrs. "General's" tongue and her not very handsome visage.

It is interesting to know that Mr. Spurgeon would rather be saved with the Puritans than be damned with the "modern thought" people. No one could ever hav doubted that if there was any good thing going either here or hereafter he would be after it, and I don't suppose he would be over and above particular whose company he went in, so long as he secured a goodly share of the prize. I will do him the justice to say that there is no man living who has a greater concern for number one.

If the reports of the various religious societies could be depended upon there would be cause for rejoicing, but it is very difficult to say how far they are correct. Most of them profess that subscriptions are falling off or that greater expenditure is necessary; and take it all round, they seem in rather a hard-up condition. I should very much doubt but that there is always a reserve somewhere handy for the head showman in case the concern collapses, just sufficient to keep him from bothering the Lord for support.

Twenty-nine deaths from starvation are reported to hav occurred in London during 1888, and these are only cases fully proved by evidence brought out in the coroner's court. These, however, are quite sufficient to show the care taken by the Christian God and his church for the poor and needy, and it is a burning disgrace to any religion that permits such things while millions of money are squandered in what are called missionary efforts. Christian hypocrisy is the worst kind of hypocrisy ever recorded in the annals of man, and the sooner the religion that fosters it dies out the better for mankind.

The social purity of England has been published to the admiring world. Mr. Vizetelly, bookseller, over seventy years of age, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment and a fine of £200 for selling Zola's works. We now only want Booth's idea carried out and keep all ladies of easy virtue in properly appointed houses, where men of God can call and converse on godly matters with the occupants, without fear of disturbance, and we shall then be more the pattern nation than we now are. J. D.

Paul's Jesus Not a Phantom.

While it is true that Paul never saw Jesus in the flesh, and that there are a few passages in his epistles that may seem to support the hypothesis that he was a Gnostic, believing in a phantom Jesus, there are many other passages which are irreconcilable with that hypothesis. For example:

Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead (Rom. i, 3, 4).

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ (Gal. iii, 16).

But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his son, made of a woman (Gal. iv, 4).

For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas then of the twelve: After that he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto the present, but some are fallen asleep (1 Cor. xv, 2-6).

The writer of these and other similar passages in the Pauline epistles was certainly a believer in an objectiv Jesus. Nor can they be eliminated as corruptions without rejecting the authenticity of the epistles generally.

The author of "Supernatural Religion" does not attempt to prove that there were no gospels prior to the latter part of the second century, but that the four gospels, as we now hav them, cannot be traced back of the year 180.

The fourth gospel, which is generally considered the latest, is perhaps the earliest. Doubtless it is much corrupted, and Pontius Pilate is made to participate in an execution which occurred a hundred years before he became procurator of Judea. But Nicodemus, "a man of the Pharisees," and "a ruler of the Jews," who went to Jesus by night, as described by John, answers to a minister of that name who was sent by King Aristobulus as an ambassador to Pompey, when he invaded Syria, 64 B.C. (Jos. Ant. xiv, 3 § 2).

And Malchus, whose right ear was cut off by Simon Kepha, answers to Malichus, who poisoned Antipater, the father of Herod the Great, and was in turn assassinated by the command of the Roman general, Cassius, at the request of Herod, about 43 B.C. Malichus was, at the time of his death, in company with the high priest Hyrcanus, who succeeded his father, Alexander Janneus, about 79 B.C., and was consequently high priest when Jesus was stoned and hanged in the reign of Alexandra, widow of Janneus and mother of Hyrcanus and Aristobulus. The real name of the servant of the high priest in the fourth gospel was Malich. Josephus has added os to the name, in conformity to the Greek idiom, and the New Testament scribe has not only done the same, but has inadvertently dropped the letter i.

Much of our information about Marcion, who is said to hav brought Paul's Epistles to Rome about A.D. 139–142, is untrustworthy. We hav a volume of "Tertullian against Marcion." Tertullian is the earliest of the Latin fathers; but the fact that his works were found by the forger of the "Annals of Tacitus" is very suspicious, to say the least. But whatever was the creed of Marcion, the writer of the Pauline epistles was not a Gnostic. ANTICHRIST.

Is George Washington in Hell?

This question is put to those papers in Chicago who, when commenting on Secretary E. A. Stevens's address, headlined their columns with "Was Washington a Freethinker?" I ask if Washington is in hell? Because if this Christian Bible is true, then he is in hell; not only Washington, but all the good and patriotic soldiers who fought in the armies against King George. Listen to the reading of this (alleged to be) God-given book. Rom. xiii, 1, 2, says: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. . . . The powers that be are ordained of God: whosoever therefore that resisteth the powers, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselvs damnation." 1 Pet. ii, 13, says: "Submit yourselvs to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors." Now, as George Washington resisted the wrongs and oppressions of King George, I wish to know if he is under the condemnation as is given in the quotation above? If you hav any doubts about the meaning of the word damnation, just turn to Webster's or to any theological dictionary. Never resist the wrongs done us—a fine doctrin! S. P. HERRON.

Coalton, Ky.

A Mystery Cleared Up.

CAIN.

O Cain, the first-born manchild you of earth—
Provided the "inspired" were not mistaken—
Just for a moment, if you can, awaken
And giv us of that murder tale the girth.
Did you or not do murder, Cain, most foul,
When you knocked out your "sacrificing" brother,
Much to the sorrow of your gentle mother?
Come, now, the straight-out tip without a scowl—
You're on your oath, remember, though a ghost;
Now, was it murder, Cain, or mere manslaughter?
What's that you say—you'd like a drop of water?
Gad Zooks! I fear they're giving you a roast!
Sorry; but I'll call up your brother Abel,
For this sad case I wish the proper label!

ABEL.

O gentle Abel, tender of the flocks,
Brother-to-Cain and son of old man Adam—
Likewise, as rightly understood, of madam—
A moment, and you please, and nothing blocks.
What was the rumpus, Abe, 'twixt you and Cain,
That led to your becoming a mere "body,
Demnition moist" and cold? Say, was it toddy
That led to your demise upon the plain?
Did you and Cain that day "hav words," "sling mud,"
Both waxing wroth and picturesquely bitter,
Until one of the twain became a hitter,
And that one which? Say, now, who claimed first blood?
Oh, you did, eh?—you hit him with a platter?
That settles it! Manslaughter's what's the matter!

SI SLOKUM.

Pulpit Nonsense.

From the Duluth, Minn., Daily Tribune.

It is rather amusing to see a man who cannot swim floundering around in the water and endeavoring to keep himself afloat. In like manner it is amusing to see an ironclad, orthodox clergyman—one of the kind who holds that the almighty is the prime cause of every event that transpires in the universe and that he is also the loving father of us all—trying to maintain his consistency and still endeavoring to account for such catastrophes as the Johnstown disaster, in which there was such a frightful destruction of human life. If a bloodthirsty Sioux Indian had swooped down upon Johnstown, and with his murderous tomahawk slain a dozen sleeping and innocent men, women, and children, these clergymen would hav cried out for that Indian's blood, and in doing so they would hav been but obeying the impulse planted in every civilized human breast. These same clergymen, however, while telling us that God sent the great Pennsylvania flood and that he "knew all things from the beginning" and knew beforehand what would be the consequences of that flood, ask us in all seriousness to believe that it was still all right for him to send it along and drown some twelve thousand or fifteen thousand of his "dearly loved children," like so many puppies; and then, to cap this absurd climax, they ask us to love and adore the being which they allege caused this slaughter, or who could hav prevented it, but did not.

In all seriousness, is it any wonder that there are heretics and Infidels in this intelligent age of the world, when such ineffable nonsense as this is heard from orthodox pulpits, from the lips of men who pretend to hav delved down deep "into the mysteries of godliness" and to be wiser and more profound than ordinary mortals?

We observe that one of the orthodox clergymen of Duluth has been trying his hand at explaining how good God is to his children sometimes and what an engin of destruction he is among them at others. From a synopsis of his Sunday's sermon, as published in the Herald of yesterday, we select the following theological gem:

Science is irreverent. The engineer of the Tay bridge thought he had built a defiance to the wind and wave. But at one breath of God the center fell one thousand feet and cars chased each other into the awful abyss.

Had some Anarchist put dynamite under that bridge as the train of cars was passing over it, and had he thus been the cause of its destruction and of the great loss of life when it fell, our good brother would hav shouted, "String him up!" but he tells us that God blew down that bridge, and then asks us to love and adore him for so doing.

This kind of talk might be swallowed without questioning by children, and hy ignorant and superstitious heathen, but it is an insult to the intelligence of an adult Duluth audience for any clergyman to ask them to believe any such trash.

God is either good or he is bad, and "the good book" tells us that "a tree is known by its fruits." Were old Diabolus—if there is such a creature or being, which few people now believe to be the case—to escape from his keepers in the torrid regions in which he is said to be imprisoned, and to come up on earth and go to work tearing down reservoirs and blowing down railroad bridges, and slaughtering unoffending men and innocent women and children by the thousand, the orthodox people would never think of worshiping and loving and adoring him for so doing, but some of them ask us to love and adore God, who, as they allege, has done these same things.

The real blasphemers of this age are the clergymen who accuse God of doing deeds which, if done by anyone else, would be universally denominated as monstrous.

How the "Called of God" Get There.

From the London Telegraph.

The election of a clergyman for the Church of St. John, Deritend, Birmingham, by the householders of the hamlets of Deritend and Bordesley, took place on Saturday. The Church of St. John is now of the value of £450 per annum, and in a few years the income will be enormously increased owing to the falling in of leases. Since the fourteenth century the chaplains, as they are termed, of St. John hav always been elected by the householders, the deed prescribing that each person having a hearth should be entitled to vote, so that the franchise is similar to that of a municipal election, including women voters. The last election took place in 1870, and the present vacancy was created by the retirement of the then successful candidate.

Five candidates entered the field out of about fifty applications, but only three went to the poll. These were the Rev. C. J. Sneath, a High Churchman, curate of a neighboring parish; the Rev. J. O. West, curate of Christ church, Sparbrook, an evangelical, and the Rev. L. H. Davies, of Blackpool, described as "the true Protestant candidate;" but the contest practically lay between the two first named. There are nearly 20,000 voters in the hamlets, which comprise the greater part of the two Parliamentary divisions of Bordesley and South Birmingham. There were seventeen polling-stations.

The election, being by open voting, took place amid unusual excitement, and as the Corrupt Practices act does not apply, it is said that a large amount of treating took place. Mr. West, being a total abstainer, received the support of the temperance party, while Mr. Sneath, having declared that he saw no harm in a man having a glass of beer, was actively supported by the publicans and brewers. Betting took place on an extensiv scale.

A question with respect to the right of bill-sticking gave rise to one of the liveliest episodes of the day, as the chosen of the congregation, Mr. West, had had one of his bills posted on the chapel notice board. Soon after 8 o'clock, when the poll opened, this was covered by a bill bearing Mr. Sneath's name. At about 10 o'clock a billposter arrived and superimposed one of Mr. West's bills. This was quickly covered by the opposition and for about an hour the game went on. At length an excited old lady with a fire shovel scraped off the last posted of Mr. West's bills, and on this being replaced the notice board was taken down.

The public houses, especially in Deritend, were crowded throughout the day. It is said that the drinking and rowdyism were nothing to what were to be seen at the election nineteen years ago. But the scenes in Deritend were shocking, even apart from the fact that the occasion was one associated with religion.

One of the features of the election was the wearing of party colors, Mr. West's friend sporting yellow ribbons and rosets, and Mr. Sneath's bright red. There was a profuse display, too, of election literature. The placards on Mr. Sneath's vehicles were for the most part exhortations to the electors not to be deluded by any "state of the poll" that might be issued during the day—a warning that was unnecessary, seeing that both candidates adhered to the agreement not to increase the excitement by any such means. Underneath was this:

Poll early, men, for Sneath, the bold,
For he'll be neither bought nor sold.

Mr. Sneath was also freely billed as "the friend of the poor," and spoken of in various couplets of indifferent rhyme and meter as "good old Charlie." Early in the day a local publican displayed the "latest betting" as follows: "Deritend Races.—All-aged Stakes of 400 sovereigns, and 600 sovereigns added. Betting: 6 to 4 on Friend of the Poor; 3 to 1 against West End, offered; 200 to 1 bar two, offered. Doings of the cracks: Friend of the Poor had a good gallop this morning, and is sure to win. West End took walking exercise. Davy Jones reported scratched." Mr. West's friends delighted in describing him as the "choice of the congregation," while as a set-off to Mr. Sneath's claim to be the "friend of the poor," they issued a bill stating that "Mr. West will not purchase votes, nor bribe, nor giv beer, nor promis rewards; but if elected he will do his duty to both rich and poor." Another effort of theirs resulted in the following appeal: "Question! Will free Britons giv their money to force a tyrant king on an unwilling people? Will the electors of Deritend and Bordesley giv their votes to force a rejected minister on an unwilling people? Ten thousand voices answer, 'No! no! no! Vote for West, the congregation's choice.'"

The result was declared about eight o'clock by Mr. Alderman Johnson, the returning officer, as follows: West, 6,072; Sneath, 5,038; Davies, 167; majority for West, 1,034. The alderman, in acknowledging a vote of thanks, expressed a strong hope that he would be the last returning officer under that antiquated mode of election. During the evening the bells of St. John's were rung in honor of Mr. West's return

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY'S Catalog of Freethought, Reform, and Scientific Books will be mailed free.

Communications.

What Is Left of Christianity?

In the June number of the North American Review is a finely written essay by M. J. Savage, headed, "The Inevitable Surrender of Orthodoxy." Had it been written by an Infidel and published in a Freethought magazine it wouldn't be worth noticing, as the author has nothing new to say—he only follows the footsteps of Colonel Ingersoll. Of course, the subject is very old, but as Colonel Ingersoll says, "In the human mind certain ideas, or in the human heart certain passions, are forever old; but genius forever givs them new forms, new meanings, and this is the perpetual originality of genius"—a quality which I fail to find in Mr. Savage's article. The "reverend" gentleman simply repeats the arguments used by Ingersoll and other Freethinkers. That being so, it is of no value to people who left orthodoxy behind them. A mere repetition of the ABC of Freethought is an unprofitable business. We cannot afford to waste time in playing on one string all our life, no matter how sweet the music might be. Mental stagnation is no better in Freethought than in orthodoxy.

But taking into consideration that the article in question is written by the Rev. Minot J. Savage, of the church of Unity, Boston, that is to say, a gentleman who is styled a Christian, it is of great value.

Mr. Savage is convinced that Jehovah is a monster born in the imagination of a barbarous nation. He cannot believe that a God would command all the brutalities which the writers of the Old Testament attribute to Jehovah. He has no doubt that the fall of man is an absurdity. He does not believe that man was created a perfect being and suddenly fell, but declares that "modern science has demonstrated the antiquity of man and his derivation from lower forms of life."

Let us not forget that this doctrin of the fall of man is the foundation of the orthodox creed, and when the foundation of a building is destroyed, the whole building falls to the ground. Thus, if man never fell, the doctrins of atonement through Christ, heaven for believers and hell for disbelievers, are equally false, as Mr. Savage states in very plain language.

Now let us ask a very simple question: When all these creeds are mercilessly destroyed, does Christianity still remain? Can "Hamlet" be played on the stage with the role of Hamlet left out? Can the history of the United States be written with the names of Washington, Jefferson, Paine, and Franklin left out? How then can Christianity exist with Jehovah, Jesus Christ, and the Bible left out? If in place of Jehovah we will create a new god, in place of Christ a new savior, and in place of the Bible a new book, will the new religion still be called Christianity? Imagin a living man with his head, arms, and feet cut off, and you will get an idea of Christianity deprived of all its essential points.

If Jehovah is not the real God, then the Bible is without authority; it becomes a mere collection of myths, fables, and traditions of the ancient Jews. Mr. Savage is not certain of the "verbal accuracy of any single text on which, we are told, hangs the tremendous issue of heaven and hell." But even admitting, for argument's sake, that the Bible as we hav it now is precisely the same as it has been when it first came out from the pen of its writers, that it is in no respect altered or interpolated, its authority cannot be increased on account of its accuracy. If Jehovah is a myth, then certainly he is not responsible for the contents of the Bible. We must admit that there is nothing supernatural about it, that it was written by men without the aid of any ghost, holy or unholy. It matters not whether the writers were honest or not. We may giv them credit for honesty, and yet declare that their statements, at least many of them, were not true. Remembering the age in which they lived, we can find justification for their pretensions.

The same is true of all classic literature. We do not mean to accuse the writer or writers of the "Iliad" and "Odyssey" of dishonesty, and yet we are satisfied that even if the battle of Troy was a historical fact, the gods had nothing to do with it.

Swedenborg was undoubtedly honest, and still I refuse to believe that he ever visited hell and saw John Calvin there.

It may not be out of place to state here that when the robes of divinity are removed from the Bible, it loses nothing of its real value; on the contrary, it gains the esteem of thinking people. When the rags of sacredness are torn off, it becomes a valuable monument of the past. Jehovah ceases to be the creator but becomes the creation of man, and very much resembles his creator. "The proper study of mankind is man," and a study of man's conception of Jehovah givs us some idea of what man himself has been. We notice in the character of Jehovah a strange mingling of cruelty and kindness. What does it mean? Simply that his creator has been partly savage and partly humane. Jehovah was not an unchangeable being, but was subjected to the laws of evolution. Surely the God of Isaiah is an improvement upon the God of Moses. He is a new edition of Jehovah, but revised and enlarged. Does it mean that God had reformed? No; it means that man had developed.

The doctrin of the fall of man, as accepted by the orthodox creed, is an infinit absurdity. However, the Bible narrativ of the expulsion of man from the garden of Eden is true. It is, undoubtedly, a poetical fancy of the babyhood of the human race, when there was very little distinction between man and beast; when man lived in a happy state of ignorance with very little care. But so soon as he got more or less developed, his wants and consequently his labors increased and he was obliged to "till the ground."

The story of Abraham willing to sacrifice his son Isaac is disgusting, if it is literally true. But there is no proof that Abraham was a historical personage, and the story must be regarded as a mythological description of how the darkness kills the light, as we find similar stories in the religions of other nations.

Many of the moral precepts of the Bible are grand, many laws are just and wise, and many sayings are beautiful. If on the same pages we find cruel and barbarous laws, useless and even foolish sayings, we must hav a little charity, and "let us gratefully remember, let us gratefully forget." We should not forget that even in our own day justice and wisdom are not always to be found, and as the writers of the Bible had not the slightest idea of what man was to be in the nineteenth century, we can find excuse for their mistakes, foolishness, and cruelties.

Ernest Renan says: "The history of the Jewish nation is very remarkable, and I do not regret having spent so many years in studying it. But I am not under any obligation to conceal its faults. We must openly acknowledge them. Neither should we be surprised at them, as there is not a faultless history in the whole world."

The distinguished Russian realistic writer Pisareff was a hater of esthetics. He recognized no "art for art's sake." Poetry, music, and painting are in his opinion of no use to humanity. Art has no excuse for existence, unless it serves as a medium to express a grand and useful idea, which cannot be expressed by its owner in any other form. The hero of Tourgeneff's well-known novel, "The Fathers and the Sons," Basareff, a physician by profession, used to spend considerable time in anatomizing bullfrogs, and Pisareff remarks that in this kind of work is our salvation, as very few "beautiful words" can be said about the bullfrog. He hated "beautiful words." Not the beautiful, but the useful, attracted him. His motto was, less talk and more work. He was perfectly satisfied that the world would hav lost nothing had Shakspere never been born. Still, he was a great admirer and lover of Heine, whom he regarded as the greatest man of the nineteenth century and the truest representativ of humanity with its lights and shadows, grandeurs and faults. If we will divide Heine's works into parts, he says, we shall find in them some very precious gems and a mass of rubbish. Some are inclined to think that the gems ought to be preserved and put into golden frames, and the rubbish thrown out of doors. But this only proves that they do not comprehend Heine. He can not be divided. He must be taken as a whole. Even his worthless love-songs are of great value, as they represent the frailties of humanity.

I do not care to argue whether Pisareff was right or wrong. Perhaps very few will agree with him. But it seems to me that what he says of Heine is equally true with regard to the Bible. Viewed from a modern standpoint, it contains a few pearls and a big mass of rubbish, and we may be justified in saying that the pearls are worth keeping and remembering and the rubbish should be thrown away. So far as the practical usefulness of the Bible is concerned, the justness of our verdict cannot be disputed. But the Bible as a record of the past, as a mirror in which we see the skeleton of a nation with its hopes and fears, cruelties and benevolence, folly and wisdom, suffering and happiness, is in the whole a very interesting book, and is worth studying just as much as the poems of Homer.

So much for the human side of the Bible. But when the inspiration of the Bible is denied, Jehovah denounced as a heartless monster, the fall of man absolutely refuted, the divine scheme of salvation regarded as false and immoral, and even the "practical morality" of the Sermon on the Mount questioned—and all this is done by Mr. Savage—the question rises, What is left of Christianity? And why should people who deny the authority of the Bible still call themselvs Christians and use the Bible as a textbook for their discourses?

Admitting that Jesus of Nazareth is a historical man, how much do we know of the true story of his life and his true character? Taking for granted that he suffered martyrdom on account of his principles, is he entitled to more credit than Socrates, Bruno, and many others?

No, there is no use in deluding ourselvs. The inevitable surrender of orthodoxy means the inevitable surrender of Christianity. The Bible must be divine or human. If divine, it must be just as binding now as it has been for the twenty centuries past, and its defenders ought to hav courage enough to stand by its every word. If human, no religion can be made out of it in the nineteenth century.

It must be accepted as infallible, or treated with no fear, as any ancient book.

To the orthodox preacher the Christian scheme of salvation looks very reasonable. He cannot see how any sensible man or woman can reject it. The Rev. Dr. Talmage said in a recent sermon, "The silliest and wickedest thing you can do is to reject Christ." Why should it be so? Was the Greek silly and wicked when he rejected Zeus? Is it an act of silliness and wickedness for the poor heathen to reject his god and accept the god of Mr. Talmage? But the orthodox can see nothing beyond his own little mental horizon. He reminds us of the physician in Heine's poem, "Vale of Tears," who was called to certify the death of two wretched creatures who were frozen to death:

> The nipping weather, he affirmed,
> Had finished the deceased.
> Their empty stomachs also caused,
> Or hastened death at least.
> He added that when frost sets in
> 'Tis needful that the blood
> Be warmed with flannels; one should hav,
> Moreover, wholesome food.

The doctor no doubt was well fed and clothed, and he could see no reason why people should freeze to death, when in order to prevent it all that is necessary to do is to hav wholesome food and warm flannels. That many are deprived of the necessities of life for want of cash is a question which did not trouble the doctor.

So it is with the Christian preacher. Christianity satisfies his brain and heart, and he can see no reason why it should not be good for the whole world. He cannot comprehend why people should be unhappy here and unhappier in the "life to come," when simple belief on the Lord Jesus Christ will make them happy here and hereafter. Now if anyone is so foolish as to reject Christ, let him blame himself if the gates of heaven will never be opened for him.

Such is his doctrin. That belief is not a matter of choice is a thing which you couldn't put into his head without a surgical operation.

A Methodist minister recently said to me: "Look at me. See how happy I am since I hav found my savior. And I tell you, all you need to complete your own happiness is to become a soldier of Christ."

"Will you be kind enough to tell me how I can become a Christian when I am convinced that Christianity is, to say the least, a great mistake?" I inquired.

"Pray to God and he will open your eyes."

"I cannot pray to a being of whose existence I am not certain."

"No matter if you are not certain. Pray: 'O God, if there is a God,' and, 'O Christ, if there is a Christ,' etc."

Indeed, nothing can be easier. But how ridiculous it looks in the light of common sense! Think of praying to a phantom to enable us to understand the great fact that twice two make, not four, but three and a half. But such is orthodoxy. Nothing is impossible with it.

The great German poet Heinrich Heine, a Jew by birth and a Freethinker by conviction, was once asked by a friend what induced him to join the Christian church. He gave various reasons, and one of them is as follows: "I went into the fortress in order to destroy it. But while I destroy Christianity, I am at the same time destroying Judaism, to the end that the Jews and the Christians may unite in the temple of love and freedom."

This is a grand mission. Let us work on the same basis Let us destroy the playthings of the past not simply for the pleasure of destroying, but having in view the happiness of mankind. Let us hasten the time when men and women will be grander than gods and angels; when, forgetting all differences of opinion, they will unite and bow their heads in the temple of love and freedom. When this will be done, but not until then, Mr. Savage's dream of "a new universe, a new God, a new man, a new destiny," will be realized.

We may object to the term "new God," but if we need a god at all, let us place him on the earth, where he can be of some use to humanity, but not in the clouds. A new god in heaven may be an improvement upon all the gods that ever existed in the imagination of man; he may even be an ideal god; but he cannot be useful. Let the new heaven be here and now, and let the new god liv on our globe and serve, instead of ruling, us.

CLEMENS P. BERYLSON.

Purdy's Station, N. Y., June 9, 289.

Remodel the Government.

It is currently reported that many of the old Greenbackers voted the Prohibition ticket, and an effort is being made by this class of persons to unite the advocates of these two opposing principles of government into one party. If a man is a Prohibitionist, he is a very poor Greenbacker.

Greenbackers ask for a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people," while the first declaration in the Prohibition platform is, "The Prohibition party in national convention assembled, acknowledging almighty God as the source of all power in government, do hereby declare ——"

The doctrin of the Prohibitionists is, Turn over the government to almighty God (that means the church, to the preachers and priests), put God in the Constitution, make Jesus king, enact government Sunday laws, blasphemy laws, and laws against heresy and unbelief; imprison, fine, torture, hang, and burn heretics and unbelievers.

The workers of this Prohibition racket wish to enforce the principles and practices of the Dark Ages on the people of this enlightened age, and to do this they hav chosen the whisky question as a mere pretense to get power to work their diabolical scheme to unite church and state, as set forth, clear as the noonday sun, in the first declaration in the platform of this pious party.

Now, if the almighty God is the "source of all power in government," he is the source of power in bad as well as in good government, and by this logic, when the people of this country rebelled against the British, they rebelled against the power of almighty God also; and they overpowered both the power of almighty God and the British, and formed a government that was said to be "of the people, for the people, and by the people," but this principle even in its formation was not carried out, for human slavery was sanctioned and maintained by this sham republic, and the black man who fought by the side of the white man for freedom was driven by the white man back into slavery. And what a fearful price hav we, the citizens of this sham republic, paid for this savage injustice! The effects yet oppress us, like a horrid nightmare, in the silent graves, in the memory of the fathers, sons, and brothers who fell on the battle-field, died in hospitals from sickness, wounds, exposure, and were starved to death in prison by the barbarous slaveholders. Many of those who returned home from the conflict were broken in health and battle-scarred; and another thing we will not forget, nor will generations yet to come, and that is the great war debt which scourges the people like the lash of the slave driver.

But what of the South? The more guilty of the two, her people fared worse than the North—all the calamities of war and invading armies, the loss of their slaves, no pensions for her soldiers, and compelled to carry her portion of the war debt, made and fastened on our country by the intrigues of the money aristocracy of the North, by which they received two dollars in bonds for each dollar the government received of them—this great fraud debt stands as a parallel of injustice with slavery retained in the formation of our sham republic.

The slave aristocracy ruled from the formation of the government to the breaking out of the Rebellion, and the money aristocracy during the Rebellion fastened its tyrannical grip on the government. By threats and intrigues in the House of Representativs and the Senate they got a law that enabled them on an average to get two dollars in bonds for one in money; the one dollar was subject to tax, the two they received are untaxable; the taxable dollar had bought two untaxable dollars, and these two untaxable dollars tax the government, draw interest.

These bondholders are an untaxed aristocracy supported by the common people like the royal family of England.

On these bonds the national banking system is established, and our government lends the bankers money at one per cent; the common people must borrow of them and pay from six to twelve per cent.

The laws establishing the bond and banking systems are class legislation—monarchical laws giving power to non-producing speculators to rob the workers by law.

The teaching of Alexander Hamilton that "the rich and well-born should rule and govern the masses" is being carried out, and we are living under a monarchical aristocracy—the name republic is only a sham.

That we may hav a true republic—a government of justice, liberty, and equal rights—it is necessary to remodel our government, and take the power and rule from the aristocracy, politicians, and office-holders, and restore the inalienable right of self-government to the people.

Abolish the offices of president, vice-president, and United States Senate.

A president is a monarch under another name; a vice-president is a monarch in expectancy, waiting for the president to die or be assassinated; the United States Senate is an assembly of aristocrats, in imitation of the House of Lords in England, fastened on our government in its formation by the Tory element led by Alexander Hamilton.

The one House of Representativs is all the representativ government an intelligent and free people need, and it with very limited and well-defined duties and powers which it cannot abuse.

Constitute Congress a committee selected and appointed by the people through the ballot to draft and formulate laws (statutes), which shall be after not less than three months' publication and free investigation and discussion of the same voted on by the people, and two-thirds of the votes cast on each law shall be required to establish any law, but a majority of votes against shall repeal any law already established.

Abolish the bond and banking systems, and issue full legal tender paper money from the treasury, in the same way as and equal in value to metal money, sufficient to do cash business.

Abolish the speculation on money, by limiting its use to exchange and government loans at one per cent to the people, the per cent at which the bankers now get their money from the government.

Abolish all the monopolies that oppress the people by concentrating the earnings of the many into the hands of the few, and establish a just and universal coöperation, giving each individual what he earns, nothing more, nothing less.

Abolish the land monopoly by constitutional limitation of ownership to one hundred and sixty acres, or any other amount the people may determin, and in the new constitution guarantee the people in each state the right, by a two-thirds vote, to make the limit less than the general government, but not more; in each county less than in the state, and in each township less than in the county; and in the cities and towns limit to two lots, one for residence and one for business; and no ownership without occupancy and use, and so abolish rent, and every citizen can own a home, and not be an alien on the earth paying some one else for standing-room.

Each human being has an equal and inalienable right to earth, air, and water.

Abolish all our law machinery (miscalled courts of justice), and try non-criminal cases by arbitration, and criminal cases by a jury of just and truthful citizens against whom no charge of wronging any human being shall be made and proved.

Justice is superior to man-made law. Now cases are decided by law often against both evidence and justice. We need but few laws and they of general import. The simple sentence, Decide each case in dispute according to evidence and justice, does away with the use and necessity of thousands of laws on our statute-books which hav been enacted by interested parties to make, establish, and mystify the law business, and when to their interest, to defeat the ends of justice.

Abolish the so called judicial, but in reality religious oath, and establish in its stead simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury.

Abolish woman's slavery and giv her equal rights with man. Make her a citizen.

Abolish the death penalty, and to protect society confine the murderer for life without reprieve.

Abolish all class legislation, civil or religious, and establish absolute separation between the government in all its branches and all religions, their rites, holy days, and ceremonies, but secure to each individual his equal and inalienable rights to adopt any religion he may choose or reject all, and secure to each and all alike the freedom of thought, speech, and press. Let each religious belief, idea, principle, or fact stand or fall on its own merits, without any law or government financial support to prop it up or compel the people to accept it.

Abolish in the states the offices of governor, lieutenant-governor, state senate, and all other use less offices, and remodel the states after the pattern of the general government.

I hav here given my ideas of the new platform for the Abolition party. It may be necessary to make some additions. As it is, it is the result of much thought on my part.

My object is to form a true republic, and this platform is radical enough to draw the fire from all the enemies of justice, liberty, and equal rights. As the old Abolition move did, so this will receive the condemnation, curses, and persecution of the monarchists, aristocracy, judges, lawyers, politicians, office-holders, priests, and preachers.

I, for one, propose to advocate these principles and make an effort to get the people generally familiar with this idea of a government.

This work is educational, and when the great mass of the people become intelligent enough they will adopt this form of government.

Neither the Greenback, National, or Union Labor party struck at the root of the evils that oppress us. I hav worked with all these, and cutting off some of the top branches was the best they proposed to do. The foundation of our troubles as a government is in the power placed in comparativly irresponsible elected officers, who usurp authority and enact laws in the interest of the wealthy non-producing speculators, with no regard to the interest or rights of the common people. To correct these wrongs it is necessary to remodel the government, form a new constitution, with the power to enact and repeal laws wholly in the hands of the people, where it rightly belongs.

Kokomo, Ind. W. L. Willis.

Notes of Travel by W. S. Bell.

I had no idea of the vastness of the desert I must cross from Ogden to Sacramento, eight hundred miles! For the most part of the way the scenery abounded in sage-brush and alkali-beds. If there were any change at all, it was from sage-brush and alkali-beds to alkali-beds and sage-brush. It was the most dreary and dismal ride I ever endured. The natural scenery of mountain and cañon, which was grand in Colorado, had here almost wholly disappeared. There were glimpses now and then on the Sierra Nevada range of interesting scenery, but we could get only a glimpse, as we went over the highest parts of the mountain under cover of about forty miles of snow-sheds. After escaping from them on the western slope we saw the great wash-outs on the hillsides where formerly the hydraulic works tore up and washed down thousands of acres of surface land in order that the gold-hunter might gather up the shining dust. This enterprise was so extensiv that it threatened to destroy ranches in the valleys and laws were passed prohibiting such operations.

In Sacramento Freethought is not aggressiv. There are a few, and only a few, really good Liberals here. Foremost among these is Mr. N. D. Goodell, an architect, who has designed and supervised the construction of more than half of all the best buildings in the city. He is a forty-niner, and slept under a tree one of the first nights he came to where Sacramento now stands. Mr. Goodell has no designs or specifications of the mansions above. In fact, I think he regards the mansions above as "chestnuts," and moldy ones at that. I shall not soon forget his kind entertainment, and that of his wife also, although she is orthodox. Mr. Goodell is quite humorous and looks upon the happy side of life.

Mr. R. Butterfield, a gentleman of elegant leisure, is another outspoken Liberal. I had the pleasure of Mr. Butterfield's company and a ride at the same time, out to the ranch of Mr. O. T. Davis, an earnest and intelligent Radical, who loves so well to talk with ministers that he sometimes offers them $2 50 if they will come out to visit him. Mr. Davis is physically a small man, but contains in condensed form a vast amount of large truth, when it is ventilated, and the preacher who accepts his offer generally finds before he leaves the ranch that he has earned his money.

My lecture in Sacramento was attended by about the same number that was present when Mr. S. P. Putnam lectured, except that I had more ladies present.

I am to lecture in Oakland June 2d, in San Francisco June 9th, and then I am off for Oregon.

Some time early in August I shall be in Washington. Persons wishing to correspond with me may send their letters to Silverton, Ore., in care of Hon. R. D. Allen, who will kindly forward them to me.

W. S. Bell.

Commended to Mr. Crafts.

An amendment to the Constitution of the United States after the Blair bill:

Art. I. All churches of all denominations shall be chartered and incorporated by the state.

Art. II. Every member of said church shall be a qualified agent of said church corporation.

Art. III. Every church corporation shall be responsible to the people of the state for the actions of its agents or members.

Sec. 1. It shall be unlawful for a sheriff or constable to arrest a member or agent of the church.

Sec. 2. Said officer shall, upon notification to collect debt or stolen property, notify said church.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of said church to pay said debt or pay for the said stolen property.

Art. IV. Any or all churches refusing to comply with the above shall, upon conviction thereof, forfeit all parsonages in the state, and for a second offense they shall forfeit all places of worship.

1. This bill will be a benefit to the citizens of the state. The churches will hav to catch and punish their criminals if they want them punished.

2. It will giv the church a chance to demonstrate the duties of the church and its teaching, by allowing their members to repent, while the church makes good the wrong they hav done.

Instead of Jesus paying it all, let the church pay "Brown," and then they can forgiv "Jones" if they want to.

A. York.

A ready-made creed is the paradise of the dreams of the indolent and mentally lazy. A string of authoritativ dogmatic propositions comprises the whole mental wealth which they desire. The volume of nature, the volume of history, the volume of life appall and terrify them. Such men are the material out of which good Catholics—of all sects—are made. They form the uninquiring and submissiv flocks which rejoice the hearts of all priesthoods.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
28 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, Post-office and Express Money Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 22, 1889.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription in advance	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Renouncing the Bible.

It is said in the daily papers that the disaster at Johnstown, Pa., has caused many of the victims to lose all their faith in "Providence." Some of them, it is alleged, hav thrown away their Bibles, and others hav burnt the book. Some incidents to prove this are given. One story runs thus:

"During the flood one of the most devout merchants in town was rescued as by a miracle. He was floating on the roof of a house, which was whisked around with frightful rapidity. At every revolution part of the roof was knocked away until but a few shingles were left, to which the merchant clung with desperation. Just as he was on the point of sinking, his slight raft was thrown near enough to a window to permit some friends to seize him by the hand. It was with considerable difficulty that he was revived, but as he was lying on the bed a clergyman who was present dropped on his knees and earnestly began to pray. 'Leave me,' cried the merchant. 'This is no time to pray or to thank God. I never want to see your face again.'"

Another incident is equally dramatic:

"A lady who had lost her husband and four children was gathering together the relics of her home, when she came across the family Bible containing the record of her birth, marriage, and the births of her children. A stranger happened to pass, and, tearing the records out, she proffered the book to him. The man was a clergyman, and asked: 'Do you realize, madam, what you are doing?' 'Perfectly,' was the reply. 'I hav no further use for that book. I hav always tried to be a consistent Christian woman. I brought up my four girls as strictly religious as I was, but I cannot read that book any more.' The clergyman thought the loss of her family had turned her head, and called the next day. She refused to see him. He sent some of her friends to see her, but, after explaining the circumstances, she refused to enter into any argument."

Whether these stories are true or not we hav no means of knowing, but it is very likely they are. Emotional people would do just these things, and the terrible misfortune at Johnstown is well calculated to shake faith in the goodness of "God." If a human parent, having power to prevent it, should allow his family of children to be tortured and murdered, the surviving members would be justified in denouncing him, and in refusing to ever again listen to his words. Christians who hav put "God" in the place of a parent and themselvs in the place of helpless children to be cared for and watched over by the parent, cannot be blamed for any extravagant and dramatic renunciation of that parent, though their conduct may be as illogical as their previous faith was foolish. If men and women could only realize that the operations of nature are not the result of the whims of a personal providence, but are under immutable laws which always under the same conditions produce the same effects—and that the wish, or the welfare, or the death, or life even of man has no effect upon them—then they would be spared these violent transitions of feeling. It is natural to hold enmity against a person who has done you an injustice or wrong, but how foolish to inveigh against the law of gravity which makes water seek a lower level! So these Christians cannot be blamed for their anger toward a supposed personal God, though to a person of scientific mind their action seems extremely childish. It is the result of their religious education, and the clergy hav themselvs alone to blame if under this great affliction the people desert the church. If the church did not claim quite so much for its God, the feeling against him would not be so bitter. But then, if God were not all that the clergy claim, he wouldn't be God.

In disasters of this kind, which bring grief so poignant that reason almost loses its throne, humanity is the sole source of relief, and philosophy the only mental action which affords permanent consolation. A mother raving for the loss of her children cannot be asked to "turn to God," for the thought holds her mind that it was that same God which permitted and caused the death of her children. And if a man kills your babe shall you pray to him, praising him for his goodness, and asking him to bless you and the babe he has destroyed! Turn to humanity, is all that is left her to do—to friends who can share her grief and relieve her distress so far as that can be done. Time, kindly time, will alone render her tranquil, and enable her to resume the burden of living. Christianity cannot do this, for its source of consolation is also the cause of grief.

Mr. Newman and His Sermonic Habits.

An Iowa friend has sent us a report of a recent sermon by the irrepressible J. P. Newman, which contains some entertaining and remarkable sentences. Mr. Newman is the gentleman who has so successfully united in himself the politician and the preacher that he has usually done his traveling at the expense of the country, and when that resource failed he had himself elected a bishop in the Methodist church and now makes his pilgrimages over the country, and lets that church foot the bills. His sermon on the occasion under consideration was on "The Mission of Christ." The humorous and remarkable part is subjoined:

"Christ saw the failure of Buddhism, Brahmanism, and Confucianism in the east, of law in Rome, and of art in Greece. He saw that one thing was left, the human heart. 'I will become the king of hearts,' he said. 'The heart sways the whole man. I will transform humanity through it.' He would not be diverted from that. He did not come primarily to improve man's temporary condition. He did not heal all the sick nor giv sight to all the blind. He wrought miracles as credentials for his doctrin of the new heart. He did not send the schoolmaster abroad. But one of these days some one will write a monograph on the intellectuality of Christ, and it will astonish the world. He could hav given the world the telegraph and the telephone. He did not come for that or for a political career. He was jealous only of the realm of the heart. He was not a propagandist of total abstinence, or of any political system, or of any social system. He did not anticipate the work of Wilberforce and Lincoln. But he laid down the grand principles of temperance, liberty, industry, and charity. He laid the foundations of the Christian philanthropy which are removing all the ills of humanity. Under Christian science all the diseases to which flesh is heir will ultimately be healed. I hav a friend in New York who has given sight to over two hundred blind persons. Christ put in our hands a book which carries with it the solution of all problems. The universities of the world are under Christian men. It was a Christian, Watt, that gave us the steam engin, and Christians like Morse and Edison hav given us all the greatest inventions. Jesus did not organize total abstinence societies, but on the portals of heaven he wrote the words, 'No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven.' There I get my total abstinence, my local option, my Prohibition, the destruction of the whole accursed rum traffic. Such was Jesus's relation to social purity and to peace. Buckle denies that the race has taken its impetus to progress from religion. Buckle is a great writer, but a dangerous man, a man that deals in half truths, in facts out of their true relations in history. Buckle is a writer whose works I would not put in my son's hands without expurgating them."

As an explanation of the sort of preacher Mr. Newman is we will point out a few inaccuracies in this, the kernel of his preachment. 1. There is no kind of evidence whatever to show that Jesus (allowing for the sake of the argument that he existed) ever heard of Buddhism and the other eastern religions. The theologians who compiled the gospels somewhere from one hundred and fifty to two hundred years after him put a great deal of the philosophy of the east into his alleged teachings, but Jesus knew it not. 2. There is no generally accepted criterion by which to measure the "success" of a religion, but judging from material evidences Buddhism and Brahmanism and Confucianism are fully as successful as Christianity. More people accept them and find comfort in them than accept Christianity. The true test, which religion gets the most souls into heaven, there are no means of applying. From that undiscovered bourne no statistician has returned. 3. Jesus did not teach temperance. On the contrary he made wine to help along the revelry of a crowd already too jovial. 4. He did not teach liberty at all, but counseled the people to submit to priests and potentates. 5. He was distinctly an apostle of anti-industry, both by example and precept. Take no thought for the morrow, was what he practiced and preached. 6. His charity was principally confined to adulteresses and tramps who bowed down to himself. For those who opposed him he held the sentiment expressed in the words, Bring hither mine enemy that I may slay him. 7. To say that Christ laid the foundations of science is to plainly misstate facts. This statement of Dr. Newman's is strategically ambiguous and may be taken to mean that science in countries nominally Christian has done a great deal for humanity, or it may be taken as stating that the humbug known as "Christian science" has removed or will remove all the ills of humanity. In either case, the assertion that some real or pretended physician in this city has restored sight to two hundred people is false. Some oculist or specialist in eye diseases known to Mr. Newman may hav treated and helped two hundred people whose eyes were diseased, but there is no treatment known to science which will restore sight to eyes organically defectiv. And to say that any "Christian scientist" in this city has cured two hundred blind people of New York, is to tell as large an untruth as most occasions require. It is totally and absolutely false, and known to be so by every intelligent citizen of New York. 8. Morse may hav been a Christian, but Edison is not generally so put down. He is a member of the Theosophical society. 9. The estimate of Buckle is so far wrong as to be scandalous, and to mark Mr. Newman as either ignorant of Buckle's place among philosophical writers or wilfully dishonest. We do not believe that he is ignorant.

There is one statement in this sermon which for humor excels any effort of a professional humorist. It is that "one of these days some one will write a monograph on the intellectuality of Christ, and it will astonish the world." This we believe to be true. Any monograph proving that Christ had any intellectuality to speak of will indeed astonish the world. Christ has been given credit for possessing about all the qualities the human race conceives to be good, but the quality of intellectuality has not hitherto been prominent in the catalog. Jesus was, if anything, a being of feeling, passion, fanaticism, zeal, sentiment. That he possessed reasoning powers in a small degree is of course true. But that he was highly intellectual, or profound or philosophical, as is alleged of Confucius or Buddha, has not been generally claimed, and certainly, from the evidences at hand, cannot be conceded. Proof in this matter is urgently needed.

Mr. Newman is a good sort of a preacher for a Methodist, but his habit of making statements not confirmed by facts seriously mars the efficiency of his sermons among educated people.

Mr. Pentecost's Words and Our Pictures.

We are beginning to like Mr. H. O. Pentecost. We say Mr. Pentecost rather than the Twentieth Century, wherein he prints his world-reforming schemes, because his individuality overshadows his paper, and in reading it one thinks of the editor more than of his journal or his cause. Mr. Pentecost is a growing man. He knows less than half as much as he did when he first left the church, and gave us as brand-new ideas sermons molded on the same plan as the oratorical fireworks of George Chainey and other ministers who hav left the pulpit to teach reform and Radicalism. Mr. Pentecost is a good man to hold a disputation with, albeit he differs from Crockett's coon somewhat in being slow to come down; but then he has the disposition to be fair, and is not proud and haughty like Anarchist Tucker and the Socialists. He is good-natured and means first-rate, as anyone can see from these paragraphs in his paper:

"Our neighbor, THE TRUTH SEEKER, says that when I said: 'The name Liberal describes a number of persons' who are il-Liberal that I meant that all Liberals are il-Liberal, and that when I said afterward 'some Liberals' are il-Liberal I was 'hedging.' If I had meant that all Liberals are il-Liberal I would hav said so. But if I had said so I would hav justly opened myself to the criticism that THE TRUTH SEEKER has visited upon me. No such sweeping statement would be true of any class of persons.

"But let us hav no misunderstanding about it. I read orthodox and Liberal papers by the score, and I cannot see but that the Liberal papers are just about as il-Liberal toward orthodox Christians as orthodox papers are toward Liberals.

Where will you match these two items, for example, in any orthodox paper, for vulgar bigotry? They are from one of our Liberal exchanges:

"'The new three-million Catholic monkery and harem at Washington is setting up pretensions to the dignity of a college as well as a Christ-and-Virgin-Mary shop.

"'The Salvation Army idiots of this city hav been holding a high carnival—last suppers and hallelujah hoe-downs.'

"I believe that the Christian church of to-day, as an organized institution, is a teacher of false doctrin and an enemy to mental and industrial progress, but I abhor, with my whole soul, the method of attacking it which many Liberal papers adopt. For another example (and I hope our uptown contemporary will take what I say as kindly as it is meant), I think the cartoons on the last page of THE TRUTH SEEKER are mistaken weapons to use against the church or in defense of Liberalism. We who hav left the church, or never were in it, are either on the side of truth or we are not. If we are, we only weaken our cause by descending to the methods of attack and defense which we always declare are evidences of weakness when used against us.

"If the writings of Voltaire or Paine were rummaged for texts, and pictorially illustrated in some orthodox paper after the manner of the last-page cartoons of THE TRUTH SEEKER, every Liberal in the land would hav just ground of complaint. If the Liberal cause cannot succeed by fair, dignified, and reasonable arguments, and without resorting to such methods as I hav just indicated, it ought to fail."

But we cannot agree with him yet as to the meaning of words, though we attribute that fact to the uncertain use of language to which ministers become addicted through the necessity of proving, in order to support their scheme, that three times one make one and that sentences in holy books which say one thing really hav another and altogether different meaning, rather than to any present intention on the part of Mr. Pentecost to mystify his readers—for has he not reformed and left the church? But we still maintain—and this for our own vindication in criticising so good and gentle a man—that his original language not only bears the construction we gave it, but can honestly and grammatically bear no other. His words were: "The name Liberal describes a number of persons who are about as il-Liberal as it is possible for human beings to be." And he further added that if they (the Liberals) had the power they would go on and persecute the Christians as savagely as the Christians hav persecuted them. Now he assures an astonished world that he meant only that some Liberals are il-Liberal, and, necessarily following, that only some Liberals would persecute the Christians. We are perfectly willing to concede that this is his meaning now, but we must contend that it is not what he said then. Suppose, for instance, that we had said that "the name Beekmanite describes a number of persons who believe that Dora Beekman possessed the attributes of divinity," would not any reader get the impression (fully justified by the language) that all Beekmanites so believed? Again, if some one had asked us, "Who are the single-taxers?" and we had replied, "the name single taxers describes a number of people who reverently listen each Sunday to Mr. H. O. Pentecost," would not the idea hav been conveyed that Mr. Pentecost's congregation included all the single-taxers? Unquestionably. There is no getting away from the meaning of Mr. Pentecost's language, though we are very glad to see him make such strenuous, if sprawling, efforts to do so.

As to the balance of Mr. Pentecost's remarks, they are irrelevant. We hav admitted that some Liberals are il-Liberal, and as he has abandoned the vicarious atonement doctrin, Mr. Pentecost should not blame us for what our esteemed Illinois contemporary has said. Perhaps its editor is included in Mr. Pentecost's "some." We hav occasionally harbored that suspicion, but generally cast it aside at once as tending, possibly, to bring us into the same class. For the pictures, however, to which such strong objection is made, we are responsible, and take the criticism as kindly as it is meant. A good many hav protested against the last-page cartoons—notably a Jewish friend and a Protestant friend. The pictures jar their feelings, they say, at first exciting anger toward the paper, but then leaving them with a tendency to think more lightly upon serious subjects. This being the design of the pictures, we feel satisfied, and assure our friends that in time they will probably recover. Before a Christian can progress mentally far enough to become a single-taxer he must hav his old notions of what God has decreed shaken out of him. If Mr. Pentecost had brought his Newark church up to the point of viewing our pictures with equanimity, he would not hav had to leave the church when he became a land reformer. It is the feeling of reverence and awe with which most people—and is Mr. Pentecost sure he is free from it?—regard a certain book, no truer than any other work of fiction, that we wish to destroy. We want the people to regard the Bible just as they do any other book.

It is not likely that Voltaire, the consummate master of satire and caricature, would hav cared whether his works were rummaged for texts for pictures or not. Neither would Paine. And when Liberals set the works of these two authors up as a fetich, and to be blindly believed without investigation of their contents; when they enact laws punishing unbelief in the "Philosophical Dictionary" and the "Age of Reason;" when they become so stricken with awe at the sight of the books that they must denounce as impious and blasphemous all who can not accept the paper fetichs—then will we engage an artist to rummage the writings of Voltaire and Paine for texts for pictures to destroy the odor of sanctity which has gathered round them. There should be no reverence for anything except worth and truth.

Conceding that Christianity is open to attack, as a teacher of false doctrin and an enemy to mental and industrial progress, as Mr. Pentecost does, who shall say how the fight is to be waged, or which is the most effectiv weapon? Shall we be content with throwing kid gloves against its wall, which make no noise and no breaches, not even disturbing the congregation slumbering peacefully within, or shall we direct strong weapons at the foundations and seek to tumble the structure down at once? Remember, it is not the preacher we are after, it is the system that has made the preacher. A good many ministers are honest and sincere and believe all they preach. They think the Bible is wholly true, and that the characters described therein are holy men and sacred. The people sustain them in this. What is the proper way to enlighten these deceived masses? Is it not to destroy their reverence for the book which enslaves them, and so get them to investigate its statements as they inquire into other affairs? And what more effectiv as a destroyer of awe than humor? Transform a ghost into a clown and no one fears to walk past the churchyard wherein he cuts his antics. Strip the sacred sheet from the "holy" men of old, and what are they but clowns and thaumaturgists and petty rulers? Who fears their displeasure or who cares for their commendation? Voltaire caricatured Catholicism into retreat; would he hav conquered it by protesting that he respected it? Did he weaken his cause by poking fun at the ceremonies and holy men of the church? His warfare was the kind that James Parton calls undignified, but justified by the exigencies of the times. It won. That is its greater justification.

It takes all sorts of arguments to reach all sorts of people, and we hav known these very pictures which Mr. Pentecost condemns to start a Christian thinking when "fair, dignified, and reasonable arguments" rolled off his mind like water from a duck's back. Their justification, provided they need any, is their effectivness.

LAST February the grand jury of Forsyth county, Ga., immortalized itself by adopting as the sentiment of its members the following document:

"STATE OF GEORGIA,
Forsyth county.

"The grand jury, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charge and accuse Day Conklin, of the county and state aforesaid, with the offense of misdemeanor for that the said Day Conklin, on the second day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, in the county aforesaid, with force and arms did unlawfully, then and there, pursue the work of his ordinary calling upon the said second day of December, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, which was then and there the Lord's day, by cutting timber and clearing lands and by digging and other work then and there, did said work and said cutting timber and said clearing and said digging, not then and there being work of charity, and not then and there being work of necessity, the said Day Conklin then and there being a tradesman, the said Day Conklin then and there being an artificer, the said Day Conklin then and there being a workman, the said Day Conklin then and there being a laborer, the said Day Conklin then and there being a farmer.

"Contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof.

"Forsyth Superior Court, February term, 1889.

"GEO. R. BROWN, Solicitor-general."

Mr. Conklin is an elder in the Seventh Day Adventist church. His fellow-Christians are thus showing how they keep the commandment that they love one another. His trial will take place in August.

MR. H. J. WARD, of Coaling, Ala., writes to explain the error into which he led us in charging Judge Sprott with refusing an affirmation of a witness. It seems that Mr. Ward sued in a justice of the peace's court and was refused the right to affirm. The reference to Judge Sprott, it should hav been explained, was concerning another case, that of Samuel Black, who was a witness in a case before Judge Sprott, in the circuit court, and was challenged as an Atheist. Though he denied the allegation Judge Sprott remarked to the jury that an unbeliever, or a "man who had nothing to bind his conscience," could not testify or sit in a jury-box. This reference to Judge Sprott was made because Mr. Ward intended to appeal his case to Judge Sprott's court, but was told that Mr. Sprott would probably rule him out, and this case wherein Mr. Black figured was cited. We are confident Mr. Ward intended to speak only the truth, and we are equally confident that he has been outrageously used by the justice's court. And we cannot see wherein Judge Sprott had much to complain of, for a judge who will exclude Atheists from the witness-chair or jury-box would probably go one step further back and refuse them the right to make an affirmation in the first place. There is no difference in the two acts. Technically Judge Sprott's denial was true; morally it was not, and Alabama must take her place in the procession of states alongside of New Jersey.

OUR postmaster-general Wanamaker seems to be running his department in the interest of the Protestant church and general piety. He holds that the man who swears is not as good a man for a public servant as a man who belongs to the church and is too big a hypocrit to express his sentiments in fervent language. Such at least is the doctrin he followed in choosing a postmaster for Portsmouth, N. H. In selecting this office the plum fell to a Mr. Locke. Everyone had supposed that Colonel Sides would be appointed and his name was repeatedly urged upon Mr. Wanamaker. Colonel Sides uses profane language now and then. He contracted the habit while in the army, and it has been aggravated since then by the varying disappointments of New Hampshire politics. Mr. Wanamaker heard of this weakness of the colonel and said he could not appoint such a man. He also objected to the names of several other well-known politicians, because they were not supported by the Sunday-school element. Before he appointed Mr. Locke Mr. Wanamaker wrote to the secretary of the state Young Men's Christian Association, asking about his church connection. Mr. Locke was thereupon indorsed by five ministers as the favorit of the religious element of the city. Mr. Locke got the appointment at once, although Colonel Sides was the almost unanimous choice of his party, and the Christians are jubilant. It is evident that piety counts heavily with this administration.

THE Cleveland Plain Dealer scored a point on the Sabbatarians when it said that those clergymen of Cleveland who would on no account look into a Sunday paper went into their pulpits on the Sunday after the Johnstown disaster without knowing anything of the dreadful calamity, or of the governor's proclamation, or the mayor's call for relief contributions, and therefore could not inform their congregations of the extent of the distress or the crying need for instant aid. A Prohibitionist, and of course religious paper, acknowledged the point to be well taken, but crawled out of the difficulty by saying that "a little penny, four-column extra could hav told enough of the awful story of the Johnstown flood, and no minister in Cleveland or any other city would hav objected to the issuing of such a sheet at such a time." What arrogance these religious papers show! They imagin that the ministers are the rightful owners of the earth and heaven, and what they are not graciously pleased to permit should hav no existence. The hypocrisy of such flimsy and impudent pronunciamentos is well exposed by the Plain Dealer in commenting upon the religious paper's idiotic squirm. So, it says, it is the size that makes the sin. It is a sin to issue a sixteen-page paper at five cents, but a Christian work to put out a four-column extra at one cent. We commend this to the careful and prayerful consideration of the ministers who, it is reported, intend making another effort to crush out Sunday newspapers in Cleveland, notwithstanding the disastrous outcome of their last crusade against the Sunday press.

GOVERNOR GOODELL of New Hampshire is one of those wealthy, close-fisted pharisaical sort of men that are invariably made deacons of churches up in the Granit state. Such men always make prayers take the place of deeds, and regular attendance at church they regard as covering up sins like foreclosing a mortgage on some neighbor's farm and so getting it for half its value. Governor Goodell's recent inauguration message, filled with piety, recalls a good story told of him by the somewhat heretical wife of a New Hampshire farmer, himself something of a Puritan. The farmer had long known Governor Goodell, worked for him, and voted for him, and admired him for his strict piety and attention to religion. They lived in neighboring towns, and one day the farmer's house was burnt to the ground and his household effects went up in smoke. The loss amounted to two or three thousand dollars. His townsmen sympathized with him and raised a purse to help him rebuild. The amount was insufficient, and needing to borrow some it occurred to the farmer to call on his friend Goodell, whom the Lord had blessed with broad acres, fat cattle, and much ready cash. The farmer's skeptical wife hinted that she didn't believe much in so pious a man, but the farmer defended his friend and his friend's religion, and rode over to Mr. Goodell's house, where he was entertained and condoled and prayed with. But he returned no richer than he went. The governor never gave him a chance to ask for a loan, much less hinted at making a donation. "How did you succeed?" inquired his wife. "To tell the truth," replied the farmer, "the governor talked so nicely that I didn't hav the heart to ask him!" His skeptical wife smiled; she knew the governor. "But," added the husband, as if to apologize for his friend's meanness, "he made a most beautiful prayer!" So if prayer and loud preaching will conduct New Hampshire's affairs satisfactorily, then is she blessed in her choice of governor. His message rivals one of Wanamaker's post-office documents. But whoever expects to find in Governor Goodell a broadminded, charitable man will be grievously disappointed.

Letters from Friends.

ROCKFORD, ILL., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER since it was first published in Illinois. You can set me down as a subscriber for life, which can't be very long, as I am past seventy. I am living in a priest-ridden city of twenty-five thousand inhabitants with the Salvation Army, and the New Christ thrown in. I went to his place last Sunday. They hav quite a following. I had a long talk with the New Christ. I could not see but he was a good deal like other Methodist ministers, only he doesn't believe in the resurrection of the body. Please find money order for $3.25, for THE TRUTH SEEKER and your ANNUAL.

Yours for the right, W. JILSON.

DES MOINES, IA., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for renewal for one year from date of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I had about concluded to let my subscription lapse on account of the arrogant, offensiv style of some of your correspondents in treating Spiritualism. But the last number of your paper givs a more respectful hearing to Spiritualism, so, as I do not wish to lose the general reading of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I renew. No one is more ultra-Liberal than I, but I am more of a Spiritualist than Liberalist, for Liberalism givs no hope or promis of future life, while Spiritualism givs positiv proof of it. I do not expect, nor wish to see, THE TRUTH SEEKER an avowed Spiritual organ, but only to giv Spiritualism a respectful hearing. Yours truly, V. C. TAYLOR.

FORD, KAN., May 31, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please send me a number of May 25th, as I hav lost mine? I look upon it as a very valuable number. We hav in this vicinity a great many good people, but filled with superstition by the doctrin of orthodoxy. I am doing all I can to induce them to read the Bible for themselvs, and some of them are doing it and are changing their views, and not one of them is willing to stand fire. Some of them grunt, some groan, and others resort to slang, as that is their only weapon, and after using it a time or two they throw it down and run, or shun you as if you were a viper. If we could hav some good lecturer giv us a call, I believe there could be large numbers of them changed to our side. The time has come when we should make a bold and determined effort to establish organizations all over the country. Hurrah for Heston and all the workers for reform.

Please send me a copy of Remsburg's "False Claims."

H. B. VAN VOORHIS.

LUMBERVILLE, PA., June 5, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The time was when we considered the Bible the "book of books," from whence correct God ideas alone could be reached. The time is when we are satisfied that no book that has ever been written has done so much harm to the human race. It has caused mankind to hate and persecute each other; it has caused ages of war and centuries of sword and flame; it has exterminated what hav been termed heathen nations; it has cherished error and superstition, established tyranny, and persecuted without mercy those who failed to understand and accept it according to the interpretation of popular theology when the same had the power. As a history of the past (discarding the idea of sacred) it might still be a useful book—the same as any other history. But a greater absurdity cannot exist than calling it the word of God and the only rule of faith and practice.

ALBERT LIVEZEY.

FOND DU LAC, WIS., May 26, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1, for which please send me part first "Wheeler's Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers;" "Life of Joshua Davidson," by E. Lynn Linton; "The False Teachings of the Christian Church," by L. K. Washburn; "The Foolishness of Prayer," by L. K. Washburn.

Mr. Raymond wants you to send to him your papers of April 6th and May 4th. He says some Christian has stolen them and he is without them.

I see that Mr. M. E. Billings is to hav a new trial. I am very glad. I regretted the statements you made at the time of his trial. I hav dealt with him a little, and when I hav sent him money and he could not send me what I ordered he has returned the money. And if the old Inquisition was now running I would hav filed a complaint against you and asked the court to try and punish you for the offense of publishing your statement at the time you did. And then we should hav had a Macdonald to erect a monument to.

Yours truly, DEW. C. PREET.

---

219 COIT AVE., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., June 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Please giv me credit for $2 to the Bruno monument fund. I am sorry I cannot make it two hundred, for never in the history of man has money been given for a more holy and righteous cause. We hav commenced to organize a Secular Union society in the city of Grand Rapids. Any person desiring to unite with us may do so by sending his full name and address to Charles Sach, Grand Rapids, Mich. We will then hav their names registered without further cost. There are only fourteen thousand Christians in this city out of seventy thousand inhabitants. Therefore you see our aid is very much needed. I hope no one within fifty miles of Grand Rapids will fail to respond. By the by, I wish to say to all our Secular societies I hav been out in the country school-houses and hav spoken to the people on the truths of the Bible, and never fail to gain one-half of the people. Young men can do the same almost anywhere if they will try. The cause is just. CHARLES SACH.

POCAHONTAS, ILL, June 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me through your invaluable paper to evince my gratitude to you and other Freethought publishers for the attentions I am constantly receiving. Yesterday a letter came to me bearing the stamp of Pittsburgh, Pa., containing bills. I and two boys of Mr. File hav been busy posting them up. On last Lord's day I distributed several TRUTH SEEKERS and Freethinkers' Magazines. A pious lady burnt one of the Magazines, and I replaced it, and had a peaceable chat with her, and she almost shed tears. I am sorry I can do no more, but who is doing more?

None are too prejudiced or bigoted to escape me, and ministers, deacons, and elders I make a specialty, and when the camp meeting season sets in I want to visit everyone I can and do all I can to scatter Freethought. I like the Independent Pulpit, but I like the Freethinkers' Magazine better—but THE TRUTH SEEKER best of all. L. K. Washburn's works are a holy terror. I hav scattered them around, and I think they are doing good. "Men, Women, and Gods" is going the rounds.

I become more impressed daily with the importance of zealous effort upon our part, and hav less endurance for weak-kneed, pretending Infidels. A man who hasn't the courage to speak his convictions is of but very little use in the world, and his sycophancy and meanness can be surpassed only by those who hav in them the spirit of persecution.

EX-REV. JOSEPH N. MAXEY.

YOOUMVILLE, CAL., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1 toward the Bruno Monument fund. Should this arrive too late to benefit the fund, donate to the Secular Union to help fight the harems of superstition, viz., convents of all denominations. It is a surprising fact that none of the great minds in Congress are Liberal enough to agitate the passage of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, compelling each and every parent to send their children to a public school free from all dogmas and religious exercises for a term of years. This would hav the desired effect of abolishing many if not all the parochial schools, which are the last straw at which the churches hav grasped to retain their balance of power. I do not dispute the right of parents to train or educate their children religiously, should they so desire, but such education should be restricted to times after all the rudimentary branches hav been mastered.

It is to be hoped that the Nine Demands of Liberalism will soon find their way through Congress and become a law. It would be very appropriate and also no doubt gratifying to many if Postmaster-general Wanamaker would resign and devote all his time to the Sunday-school, in which he seems so deeply interested. It might save the appointment of religious cranks in that department.

Send catalog of Freethought books.

HENRY DANNENBRINK.

RAVENNA, O., June 6, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: I venture to submit the following answers to the queries propounded by H. W. Hammond May 12th.

First. Would a body hurled into a hole in the earth pass the center of gravity? I think it would pass by the center of gravity just as far as the same force would hav carried it had it been thrown upward from the surface of the earth. Were it dropped into the hole it would go to the center and no farther, for the following reason: Every particle of matter attracts every other particle, and therefore as soon as the body has left the surface of the earth that portion of the earth that is left behind tends to retard it; consequently its motion would be constantly retarded until it reached the center of the earth, when it would hav an equal quantity of matter upon all sides and would therefore come to rest. The measure of the decrease in the weight of a body in moving toward the center of the earth is directly as the distance increases. Thus, one thousand miles below the surface (considering the semi-diameter of the earth to be four thousand miles) a body would weigh one-fourth less than at the surface; at two thousand miles one-half less; at three thousand miles three-fourths less, etc.

Now as to the second question. Does distance from the earth annihilate the force of gravity? Galileo discovered the important law that the earth's attraction diminishes as the distance from it increases; not, however, in simple ratio, but inversely as the square of the distance. For example, the surface of the earth is a certain distance from the center and bodies there are attracted with a certain force; at twice this distance from the center, the amount of this force is not diminished by one-half but by four times the amount; at three times the distance the strength of attraction is only one-ninth; at four times, one-sixteenth, and so on. Thus a body that weighs one hundred pounds at the earth's surface (4,000 miles from the center) would weigh only twenty-five pounds at the distance of 8,000 miles from the center; at 12,000 miles, one-ninth of one hundred pounds; at 16,000 miles, one-sixteenth, etc. W. M. CHAPMAN.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., May 25, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: The churches claim that the world must be terrorized by the fear of future-fire, in order to promote morality. They accuse us of "tearing down" their religion without "building up" anything in its place.

When we tear down falsehood, truth builds itself or becomes self-evident. It is necessary to destroy error that truth may grow. When we destroy the savagery of barbaric ages, the brotherhood of man, the solidarity of the race, and pure morality spring up in its stead.

We tear down the dungeon of the soul, which is fear, so that the sunlight of love may beam into it and produce happiness and peace. We uproot eternal punishment, so that men and women may learn to love and respect each other. In all earth's history nothing has had such a brutalizing tendency as this belief. It has kindled the fagots which hav blazed about millions of martyrs. We tear it down, and build upon its ruins hope for the future and confidence in the nobility of human nature. The respect of our fellow-men, and the approval of a refined and enlightened conscience, will do more to build up morality than the fear of fire, which we destroy.

We tear down superstition and error, that scientific truth may abound. We destroy the injustice of washing away our guilt in the blood of another—the "Jesus-paid-it-all" policy—that men may become honorable, self-reliant, and just. We wipe out the belief in "total depravity," that dignity, self-respect, and hopeful endeavor may be the result.

The absurd claim that Christianity has a monopoly on morality is entirely false. The Golden Rule was taught by eight different philosophers hundreds of years before the Christian era, viz., by Pittacus, 650 B.C.; Confucius, 500 B.C.; Thales, 464 B.C.; Aristotle, 385 B.C.; Sextus, 406 B.C.; Aristippus, 365 B.C.; Isocrates, 338 B.C., and Hillel, 50 B.C.

This principle of justice is natural morality, and yet Christians point to it as an evidence that Jesus was a God. Also the doctrin of love, which is ascribed to Jesus, was taught by Plato hundreds of years before the religion called Christianity was compiled by Potamon and other Neo-platonists. The seven mental jewels of Plato, "Love, truth, justice, purity, temperance, wisdom, and charity," acted out, will do more to bring "peace on earth and good will toward men" than all the precepts of Jesus, leaving out the faith cure, "believe or be damned," and the blood-washing, inaugurated after his death.

By the way, the sentiments of Thomas Paine are being taken up by Christians (not knowing the author), and called "higher Christianity." A Christian lady of this city, in writing to the daily Union, recently said she longed to see the time when people would rise above the sentiment of, "My country, right or wrong," to the higher Christianity of, "The world is my country, and to do good is my religion." Thomas Paine did considerable tearing down in his day, and yet he built something which is now called "higher Christianity." Look out, or our "doubting Thomas" will be dubbed a saint before we know it. Verily the world moves.

Yours for progress, MARY A. WHITE.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., May 29, 289.

MR. EDITOR: As you giv me the credit of procuring the largest petition against the Blair bill of any Freethinker, and as you are in a position to know, I thought it better to giv my experience, so that when the two houses meet and the bill is liable to come up the brethren can do valiant work in circulating petitions against it. The clergy are advertising their lecturer on the bill in Salina, and I presume other towns, and trying to create a following in favor of the bill, and we shall hav to recollect that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." As far as I tried, over two-thirds of the people signed my petition, and if it is different now it is probably on account of the influence the clergy hav brought to bear in favor of their bill. The best form of petition I hav seen, and the one I used, is a double one—one to both houses—got up by the Seventh Day Baptists. I spoke in a former letter about arguments I had while circulating the petition, but these took place while off duty. The first thing to do in starting a petition is to go to all the leading Liberals of a town and get them to sign it first; then take the business men just as you come to them, such as lawyers, doctors, merchants, ministers, and it is well enough to see the Catholic priest among the first, because he is apt to sign it. The one of Salina did for me. This means the Catholics as fast as you come to them. The way I introduced my petition was, I would commence unrolling it and say: "I am circulating a petition here. Are you in favor of stopping all trains, United States mails, and Sunday newspapers on Sunday"—and much more. In a great many instances they would speak up and say, "No, not by a damned sight!" You want to be sure to call at all boarding-houses and hotels. Traveling men will sign it almost to a man. Some of them will say, "I am not a resident here." Tell them, "That makes no difference. You are a citizen of the United States, and this is United States business." A good many will ask you what denomination you belong to and how you come to be circulating this petition. I say in reply, "If your question had anything to do with it, I would hav no objection in telling, but as it doesn't I'll not occupy your time and my own in telling you. It would be just as proper for me to ask you in presenting it to you what denomination you belong to, but as this would hav nothing to do with your signing it I never ask that question. And as some of nearly all denominations sign it, it doesn't seem to be a denominational question. I am circulating this petition on its merits, and as you hav it here before you the only question for you to settle in your mind is, "Are you in favor of uniting church and state in the way this petition proposes, or are you in favor of the laws remaining just as they are in regard to religious matters? They hav stood for over a hundred years, and giv very good satisfaction to all parties. And in order to know how it was before these laws were established just go back to colonial times when some one denomination had preference over the others. We find them banishing Baptists and Catholics, hanging witches, and piercing Quakers' ears, and tying them to the tail-end of carts and whipping them through the streets. We cannot blame Blair much; he imbibed his puritanical ideas from childhood, being raised in New Hampshire 'over against' Connecticut. And as my time is precious and as I am doing this for the love I hav for religious liberty, you will do me a great favor by not detaining me any longer than for you to fully decide whether you will sign it or not." Never use argument, except where the person wants to parley with you. It is well enough to tell them in this case about what per cent are signing it. In circulating a petition, try everybody. And it is not best to try and get signers on the street, but ask them to drop in to the nearest store and then introduce it, for the reason that on the street a crowd is likely to gather around and begin to get off sharp sayings and ten chances to one you won't get any of them. And a man that has his business in town should be always called on at place of business. This Blair bill givs all lovers of religious liberty a splendid opportunity to agitate in its favor. And I could not help laughing in my sleeve at the commotion I was causing in the ultra-orthodox camp by the circulation of the above document. I made the old moss-grown bones rattle, as it were. The great trouble with most persons is, their time becomes awfully precious when they hav a splendid opportunity of accomplishing more than they could in a lifetime when there is nothing to work on, and this, too, without paying out a cent.

I make this charge from my own feelings, but having read somewhere, "Learn to govern yourself, then you are ready to govern others," since that I hav become boss of myself and say, "John, you hav got to go where duty calls," and I go; and while those around me will hav to giv me the credit of being a successful farmer, I found time right in June to get over three hundred signers for the reprieve of D. M. Bennett, at another time sixty-eight for taxing church property, and with a little help about one thousand against the Blair bill, and am ready to do more of the same kind of work at the first opportunity that offers. JOHN W. ABBOTT.

TORONTO, ONT., June 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: It occurs to me that the preachers of our day are in the same manner related to philosophy as the man who was standing with open-eyed wonder staring vacantly at a calf's tail which was hanging through a hole in a board fence, when a stranger came up to him and said, "My friend, are you a butcher?" and the man said, "No." "Well, are you a tanner?" "No." "Then why are you taking such an interest in that calf's tail?" When the gazer replied, "I am a philosopher, and am trying to discover how that calf got through that hole all but its tail." Now, these preachers are about such philosophers as this man, because their highly seasoned eloquence is the natural production of as little thought, and they take so little activ interest in the works that tend to promote the welfare of the human race that their ideas must be contracted into such a small space as to make them drones on the commercial world.

They hold high carnival over the unfortunate, and try to frighten them into submission to their small-souled influence, and compel them to embrace the narrow-minded ideas which they themselvs entertain, and always at the expense of the oppressed, for they will not make an effort, however feeble, to strengthen their mental or domestic resources until they hav the gold in their clutches.

They are continuously slandering his satanic majesty, who is the best friend they hav in the world, for without this leer-eyed, cloven-footed myth they could not command such a welcome hospitality as they now enjoy at the hands of the kind-hearted mothers and daughters of their flocks, who exert all their energies, are so untiring in their devotion, and in very many instances deny themselvs and their families the necessaries of life, in order that the minister may indulge in all the lazy fancies peculiar to his profession.

What a deplorable state this Christian body is in! And if ministers, priests, and popes are going to be allowed to run the state through the instrumentality of the church, as they bid fair to do in Canada at the present time, I see no other result to follow but anarchy and confusion. It will fetter the political, commercial, and religious interests of the country; it will be the sunset of all our social liberty, and the end of all national greatness.

So long as the Bible is used as the instructor of morals and director of principle, just so long will such a condition of affairs exist, for it teaches that the God of the universe is a wrathful monster and certainly responsible for every form of vice and the perpetration of every crime known to the world. With such an example, what wonder that the people are so superstitiously afraid of the awful doom said to be awaiting them if they do not "toe the mark" in bigotry and persecution of their fellows?

I cannot imagin anyone going to heaven singing songs, waving palms, and being happy all the day, and knowing that a sister or brother or any dear friend had been consigned to awful torment, to eternal burning hell; and yet the church teaches its followers that it is so. Let us believe that revealed systems of philosophy and the discoveries of modern science will replace the errors of the church as they exist to-day with a just and exemplary condition of things that cannot be deplored and a foundation that cannot be undermined.

J. B. VAIL.

DES MOINES, IA., June 2, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: We hav in this city a flock of theological owls called the Des Moines Ministerial Association. They hoot occasionally, making the night hideous by their superstitious squalls. Like others of their type, they can attend to other people's business much better than they can attend to their own. They think they run this town—inhabitants, schools, teachers, billboards, and sidewalks included.

A few weeks ago, these vicars of Christ took a step outrageous to American liberty, and in which they showed their contempt for freedom of conscience, and their craving desire for theological domination. But they received a rebuke which they will long remember, as they found themselvs badly "in the soup." In the West Des Moines high school we hav one of the finest professors of science in the United States—Prof. R. E. Call. He stands third in rank, and, as you may surmise, he is no believer in the orthodox Christian religion with its hell and damnation, its priestcraft and fraud. He belongs to the Unitarian church. The Unitarians for the past six months hav been as a needle stuck in the seat of the orthodox chair. So the Ministerial Association declared that no teacher could be tolerated in the Des Moines schools who did not believe that the universe was made from nothing—that if women had not been created man would hav one more rib than he now has—that the sun was of so little importance that God waited four days before he created it—that the whale swallowed Jonah, or that Jonah swallowed the whale, should the Bible happen to say so. The leaders of this movement were Rev. S. E. Wishard, Presbyterian; Rev. H. L. Stetson, Baptist; Rev. H. O. Bruden, Campbellite, and Rev. Geo. C. Henry, Lutheran. The grounds upon which they wanted Mr. Call removed were these: because he taught evolution; because when some one asked him where we go when we die, he was honest enough to say, "I don't know;" because when some one asked him how he reconciled a certain statement with the Bible, he replied that he was teaching science and not Bible, and several other grounds of a like character.

The meanest and most contemptible part of the whole business was the sly and sneaking manner in which these preachers tried to carry out their plans. They did not want their scheme to be known until they were ready to put it into operation, so Professor Call and his friends would hav no chance to defend themselvs. But accidentally the cat was let out. The students of the high school heard of it, and all of them signed a petition to the board, rebuking the bigotry of the sky-pilots, and asking that Mr. Call be reinstated. The citizens also found it out, and were quite indignant. The clergy saw that public sentiment was against them, and they were only too glad to relinquish their attempt.

Professor Call at the next meeting of the board was re-elected for another year, and it will take a greater force than preachers are able to muster to remove him. We hope they will always receive a rebuke like this. It will teach them to keep their own place, and to mind their own affairs.

We tried early this spring to work up a debate between Mr. Jamieson and some minister of the city. We had the challenge published in the papers, inviting anyone to accept it, but to no avail. The birds of the air may hav nests; the son of man may hav nowhere to lay his head; but his priests always—hav a hole to hide in when you challenge them to a debate. F. W.

LEXINGTON, KY., June 4, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to say to "Christian ladies," you will regret as much as myself that a certain idea pervades the whole community, which induced a writer for the Forum for May, Mr. Allen, to speak of women in such depreciating terms. If we scribble a little, we only belong to the 'mob of gentlewomen who write with ease;" that is bad enough in all favor; but to hint to you that the whole animus scribendi is this—to exalt still further in human estimation the idea of an infinit being who needs no assistance from feeble beings who are hardly able to defend themselvs! What an absurd toy you sport with—a fairy king, seated upon a great white throne, commanding his subjects to be moral, torturing, drowning, anything to drive the masses to despair. His subjects do not fear him. Their sins and follies are the same as if he did not exist. And still you trust this God, this king.

Your hearts are burning with benevolence, and you ask God to aid you as you labor for the world. You raise money only to hand it to the clergy, who use it for religious purposes—not knowing how to turn such vagaries into peace, morality, public justice, and domestic happiness. So the funds are all wasted and nothing is done, and still the masses are wretched, cold, and hungry. Dear Christian ladies, how much longer will you pray to this marble God? While you are waiting for a phantom to save us, our beloved country is going to destruction. General assemblies cannot help us. They are gazing mournfully on churches closed, pulpits abandoned or four walls the only hearers. And what would they hear there? Tales of the "only begotten son," or the legend of the Veronica handkerchief. I know of priests who call their members ignorant, because they agonize over masses for the dead. Bishop Potter regrets that great evils hav crept into politics. What remedy does he propose? An infant could do as much. Can the clergy do anything efficient for the welfare of the republic at this crisis? When the ship of state seems ready to be dashed upon the rocks of disorganization and ruin, what can a bishop or cardinal effect, although his robes are stiff with gold, his persuasiv eloquence rivaling that of Chrysostom? We know, however, that giant minds of statesmen, like Jefferson and Paine, could devise something for our benefit in the hour of darkness and need. We want no pageants. We want practical truth.

Women could be mighty to save, if they could prevent the immigrants from being deluded by sharpers on their first entrance into the country. Why not arise en masse and attend to this enterprise which would dignify their piety? Money could be raised and houses erected for the stranger. Do you pretend to say that his labor will not support him, or that your influence cannot cause municipal laws to be passed to protect him while at work? Then what is a rich Christian country good for? "Christianity has been made possible" for some time, to the detriment of society; now let decency and common sense hav full sway, and an improved civilization will follow as a natural result.

It is also feared that women will "bring evil into politics."

You, Christian ladies, wish to fling treasures of philosophic thought away with contempt, to substitute the flimsy material of "Christ and him crucified," and if you had your way the dictates of your dwarfed intellects, brains addled by tricks of holy chicanery and priestcraft, would suggest no beautiful system of thought, to expand the human mind; but the modern intellect, which promised to be built of materials better than adamant and gold, would be remanded ignominiously back to the dark, defiled scorpions' dens of the Middle Ages.

Female logic is as good as male, though their plan of operations may differ in tone and character, but the great essential which is wanting is for them "to think for themselvs." ALHAZA.

June 1, 1889.

MR. EDITOR: Quench not the spirit. Let the discussion of the subject of Spiritualism go on. It is one of the most interesting questions before the people. Its agitation will result in the disclosure of the strength of one side and the weakness of the other. Spiritualists hav no fear of the result.

When God gave his revelation to man he, for some reason, omitted the information necessary to satisfy man's longing for a knowledge of a future life. Hear the mournful cry of Job, "If a man die shall he liv again?"

I noticed an article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 25th, signed D. Priestley, the perusal of which afforded me some amusement. His whole argument may be summed up in one word, ridicule. In fact, his avowed object in writing was to ridicule Spiritualism. Does it not seem to be rather late in the day to expect to accomplish much against Spiritualism by such means? If ridicule could hav prevailed against it, would it not hav died in its infancy? Its progress may be hindered, but the ground it gains against such opposition will be held the more firmly, and its final vindication be the more keenly appreciated. Spiritualists, confident of the integrity of their cause, invite investigation and discussion, and it is not the Spiritualists that fight and run away.

Mr. Priestley admits that were he to investigate Spiritualism and receive such evidence as others testify to having received, he would still hav no belief. This means that he would not trust the evidence of his own senses. Then what kind of evidence would satisfy such a mind? This admission of so unreasonable a prejudice against Spiritualism places him outside the ranks of reasonable men, genuin truth seekers. Yet it is an honest expression, and exposes the secret of much of the opposition to Spiritualism. I will quote his own words: "I giv the same credence to many of the witnesses that I would to my own observations, and if I had seen all that is claimed to hav been seen and heard, I should still hav no belief in the existence of disembodied spirits, or in their ability to collect around them material forms the exact similitude of those which were buried or cremated." Perhaps this was the state of mind that prevailed among the members of the Seybert commission when they made their despicable report. He admits that he does not speak from experience; that he has not investigated. Then his testimony is the testimony, or, more properly, the conjecture, of one that impliedly admits that he knows not whereof he speaks. There are those that seem to be predisposed to attribute deception or fraud to things they do not understand or believe.

Would Mr. Priestley hav expressed similar opinions in regard to the possible utility of the forces of nature, such as sound and electricity, before the invention of telephones and telegraphic instruments? He has attempted to reduce Spiritualism to absurdity. Well, it may seem absurd to him; truth often seems absurd to the uninitiated.

When Columbus endeavored to procure assistance in the prosecution of his voyage of discovery, his ideas and arguments were looked upon as absurd and irreverent. Yet his voyages resulted not only in the disclosure of truth, but in the exposure of the falsity of the foundation of the Christian religion, and the discovery of a new world.

May not Spiritualism lead to discoveries far more sublime? Outside of Spiritualism there is no evidence of a future life. Mr. Priestley offers no evidence against Spiritualism; he cannot. He offers no explanation of its phenomena; why? Millions testify to its truth; not because they hav been taught by priests; not because they hav read it in a book. They testify to the evidence of their own senses, and there is no higher evidence than this known to man.

The only evidence offered by the opponents of Spiritualism is, I do not believe. In the case of Mr. Priestley it is, I will not believe. There can be no real evidence against Spiritualism unless it be found in some more reasonable explanation of its phenomena. I can see no greater obstacles to belief in Spiritualism than to belief in magnetism or electricity. Spiritualism, if true, is natural. The display of magnetism requires a subject, favorable conditions, and a medium; that of electricity, conditions and a conductor. Like spirit, they are both invisible, powerful, material, natural.

Physiology teaches that the material of which our animal bodies are composed is continually changing—that there is a constant waste of material that we must replace by food and drink; that in from seven to ten years the whole body—flesh, blood, and bone—has entirely passed away and been replaced by new material, the old material returning to the general storehouse of nature to be again and again used in formation of the bodies of plants, animals, and men, until, at the age of seventy years, a man has had at least seven different bodies, so that if there is nothing of man but this earthly body, he loses his identity and becomes a new creature every few years. That a man does so lose his identity, has never, to my knowledge, been assumed by anyone to be true.

Now, I ask this question of Mr. Priestley, or any other opponent of Spiritualism, If man has no spiritual body, what is it that enables him, throughout all these changes of his animal body, to maintain his identity? LEMUEL J. POTTS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Master of the House.

He cannot walk, he cannot speak,
Nothing he knows of hooks and men,
He is the weakest of the weak,
And has not strength to hold a pen;
He has no pocket, and no purse,
Nor ever yet has owned a penny,
But has more riches than his nurse,
Because he wants not any.

He rules his parents by a cry,
And holds them captiv by a smile.
A despot, strong through infancy,
A king, from lack of guile,
He lies upon his back and crows,
Or looks with grave eyes on his mother—
What can he mean? But I suppose
They understand each other.

Indoors or out, early or late,
There is no limit to his sway,
For wrapped in baby robes of state,
He governs night and day.
Kisses he takes as rightful due,
And, Turk-like, has his slaves to dress him,
His subjects bend before him, too.
I'm one of them. Fate bless him!

Nature as Our True Model for Perfection.

Nature is the most beautiful though complex subject with which we hav to deal.

We know that we liv in the very midst of nature, and are to some degree a part of nature, for we receive life and support therefrom.

It displays a beautiful harmony and order, and givs vitality to many things.

It is the author of all things, and is constantly forming and governing all things and all kinds of life, and we are able by these same laws of life to comprehend something of the works of nature around us. Before I proceed any farther let me state what is meant by nature.

It is the personified sum and order of causes and effects, or the agencies which carry on the processes of the universe. It is natural for us to imitate the doings of others, so let us do so no more, but imitate nature herself.

We should ever resort to nature as our real model of right to prove true or untrue every human action and every human thought.

Nature manifests beautiful harmony and order, and as we wander over the hills and fields in the early months of the summer nature seems to hold intercourse with us from every branch, leaf, and flower, giving us instructiv lessons concerning the forces of nature that show themselvs around us, striving to bring the world continually to beauty and perfection.

Here may be recalled Bryant's beautiful poem "Thanatopsis:"

To him who in the love of Nature holds
Communion with her visible forms she speaks
A various language. For his gayer hours
She has a voice of gladness and a smile
And eloquence of beauty, and she glides
Into his darker musings with a mild
And healing sympathy, that steals away
Their sharpness ere he is aware.

As we inquire in her deep recesses we naturally conclude that her work is truthful.

We ought to imitate her in this particular respect, for "truth is wisdom, and to be wise we must be truthful, and to be truthful we must be natural." We must study into and observe the operations of nature.

The process of studying into nature's laws and works is termed the science of natural philosophy. It is a grand and interesting study.

All correct and truthful ideas of life involving principles are scientific. Nature has her own laws, and the efforts of man to force her to work against her laws are in vain, for it has often been tried with no favorable results, for nature would hav her own course.

If man would only base himself right he would be as immovable as nature's laws, always doing good, although he may differ from the outside shallow world.

Our country is rapidly changing to meet the advances of truth and progress, and the change of public thought, which is speedily becoming more Liberal. Despite the fixed doctrins, the human mind gradually keeps on growing, and nature exhibits the laws of life, under our investigation, more plainly than before.

There is a plain, natural way for accomplishing everything, and he who acts after the firm laws of nature will be remembered, while many about him are forgotten. His life will be a purpose, never to be crushed though legions would join in his overthrow.

We should, probably, never hav the desire to act contrary to nature, if we would study and strive to understand her various laws. We should then be convinced that she is honest in all her numerous developments. And the ones who regard her as their model of truth, and act according to her, "standing like the giant forest tree, bidding defiance to every wind of doctrin and blast of fortune," will liv on, though others cease to liv. It will be said: Their life was worth living and their work can never be forgotten.

ANNIE STOOKINGER.

Correspondence.

ELK GROVE, CAL., May 10, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav never written to you before, and I want to tell you and all the readers of the Children's Corner what we are doing. My brother, J. Trumbo, takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. Our school is out and we had an entertainment at night. Our teacher is a pretty good one, but is a little weak-kneed on some things. He would not let me speak my best piece until the regular program was through. Then he told the people he was done, but Jimmy had a piece that he would like to speak. After thanking him for this "hand-out" way of his, I did my best—the Presbyterian minister and members being out in force. Some one may like to hear it, so I send it to you for the Corner. Papa helped me to get it up. I want to tell you it brought down the house. The speech was followed by a jubilee song, "Wake Nicodemus." I am in the third grade, ten years old, wear a No. 7 hat.

JAMES M. FOSTER.

EMANCIPATION.

MY FRIENDS: I am here in the interest of progress. I am here to help promote your happiness and mine. I represent our little republic at home to-day. Soon we children will hav to attend to the more important duties of life, and I know what we undertake to do you want done well; for next to your own happiness, next to your success, is to see the happiness and success of your children. And I feel that the greatest honor I can show my parents is to correct, as far as possible, any mistakes that I may see they hav made, don't you? You want us to make splendid men and women. I know you do. Then we must exchange ideas—we must throw away shadows for substances, for realities. A thousand theories must go, if we can but get one fact that will benefit the human race. I ask then for the right to think. I plead for the privilege of being original. There is too much aping in this world. Don't chain us to the old truck-wheel systems of the past. Of all the blights that ever struck this world, mental bondage is the worst, because this slave will do his master's bidding with gladness. I want to tell you a few things this slave has done. He burnt Servetus at the stake, consigned Galileo to eternal flames, and drove Roger Williams to seek shelter in mid-winter among the savages. If the bones of his victims could be gathered in one place, they would cast a shadow beyond that of the Egyptian pyramids. Oh, I tell you it won't do. A tree bearing such fruit is but a upas, and sooner or later must fall. Thanks to the brave men and noble women, the dark curtain is rising. We hav passed the midnight history of this world. The grand intellectual morning is dawning. There is a general move all along the line. Fling the banner of Universal Mental Liberty to the breeze, and fall in, all you who want to battle for the right and for freedom. Thanks to such men as Martin Luther, Father McGlynn. Baron Humboldt, Herbert Spencer, Charles Darwin, Abraham Lincoln, Lloyd Garrison, and Wendell Phillips. A few more brave men, a few more brave women, a few more brave deeds, and man will be free. J. M. F.

[No wonder this recitation "brought down the house." It is excellent, and we shall number James among our brightest and bravest boys.—ED. C. C.]

ONEIDA, ILL., May 26, 289.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Perhaps you remember my little boy writing you a letter last fall about his hurting his foot (the cars running over it), and he could just get around on crutches. You wrote him a nice letter, inclosing your photograph, with which he is very much pleased. He has a new foot now, and can get around very nicely. It was made for him in New York by A. A. Marks He goes to school now, which is about a mile, and can walk there and back. He has only had it, the foot, about a month.

I hav also some sad news to write you. Jenkins's father became insane about nine months ago. We thought he would get better, as he had been so before and got over it, but he could get no help although we did everything we could for him. On May 5th he killed himself. He had been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER about fifteen years, always looking for his paper every Saturday night; he took lots of comfort with it until his mind began to trouble him, then he could not read it. It looks as though I hav had my share of troubles, but then I always think it might hav been worse. It is well that we do not know ahead what misfortune is to befall us or we should not be able to bear up under our loads as well as we do. Remember me your friend, MRS. E. B. REES.

[We sincerely sympathize with our friend in her sorrow and bereavement. The sunshine follows the cloudy night, and sweet flowers bloom and perfume the air that was heavy with storm. All the readers of the Corner will be pleased that Jenkins has a new foot and can go to school, and we know he will be a great comfort to his dear mother.—ED. C. C.]

COVINGTON, KY., May 25, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Through the kindness of one of your subscribers, Dr. Hollawel, I hav been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think its illustrations are grand. I like the Children's Corner best. I am twelve years old. I go to school every day. I begin to think I am a Liberal, too, since I read your paper. Mamma is going to take your paper as soon as she can. I hav two sisters—one older and one younger. The older one's name is Nellie. My baby sister's name is Mary. She and I hav a very good time together. She plays the violin very nicely. and I hav been taking dancing lessons. I won the large prize for dancing against fourteen. Don't you think that is good for my age? Since that great flood in Johnstown I am more of a Liberal than ever. Hoping to see my letter in print, I will close.

Yours truly, LULU DEVORE.

PORTLAND, ORE., June 3, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I was very much pleased to see my letter in the Children's Corner. It is very warm in Portland now. The heat makes you feel tired, and we think of going away when school is out. I hope some of the girls that write to the Children's Corner will write to me. I would be so glad to receive a letter from them, and will gladly answer it. I do not know much to write, and so I think I'll close my letter, remaining,

Your Freethinker friend,
FLORITA NEUNERT.

TALENT, ORE., May 17, 1889.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like the paper very much. I am going to school now, but my grandma got hurt and I hav not been going to school this week. It was a sad accident for me. Well, this is all. I write for the first time. Yours truly,

DELLA M. ROBISON.

Vanderbilt and His Father.

The son was then thirty-two years old, and himself a father. They were on board the steam yacht Northern Star, on their way to St. Petersburg. William, who was a habitual smoker, was puffing his favorit cigar. "Bill," said the commodore, "I wish you'd giv up that smoking habit of yours. I'll giv you $10,000 if you will."

"You needn't giv me anything," was the son's answer, as he flung the cigar overboard. "Your wish is sufficient." He never smoked afterward.

Points in Law.

A note by a minor is void.
It is a fraud to conceal a fraud.
A note dated on Sunday is void.
It is illegal to compound a felony.
Ignorance of the law excuses no one.
A contract made with a lunatic is void.
Principals are responsible for their agents.
Signatures in lead pencils are good in law.
The acts of one partner bind all the others.
The law compels no one to do impossibilities.
An agreement without a consideration is void.
Written contracts concerning land must be under seal.
A note obtained by fraud or from one intoxicated is void.
Each individual in partnership is responsible for the whole amount of debts of the firm.
An indorser of a note is exempt from liability if not served with notice of its dishonor within twenty-four hours of its nonpayment.

Lesson for Young Writers.

Caller (in newspaper office): "Twenty years ago I wrote a poem."

Editor: "Yes."

"I brought it to this office and you refused to publish it."

"Very likely."

"I remember that I mentally put you down then as a confounded idiot who didn't know enough to ache when hurt."

"Naturally."

"I looked that poem over again the other day, and hav come to see you about it."

"Aha."

"I hav come to say that if I looked as green twenty years ago as that poem proves me to hav been, I want to thank you because you didn't cut me up and feed me to the cows. Good day."

The editor drew a long chalk mark under the table. It was the first case in all his experience in which twenty years had begotten sense enough to understand that it is sometimes necessary to be cruel to be kind.

The Bear Cub and His Ma.

A traveler, who was crossing the Rocky mountains, overheard a teamster tell the story of a mother bear and her cub, giving what he called a good example to human mothers in family government. This teamster was going up the mountain for pine logs, driving a wagon. On the top of a large rock by the side of the road was a young bear. The mother had started up the mountain as the team approached.

"The cub looked so cute," said the teamster, "lying there with its paws dropping over the edge of the rock, watching the horses as they came up. Presently the old bear came bounding back to the cub, and, giving it a nudge with her nose, started up the mountain again, expecting the 'young one' to follow. But the cub made no move. The old bear then came back the second time, and taking up the cub in her arms, gave him several cuffs. This time the cub obeyed orders, and followed the old bear in a gallop up the side of the mountain. He knew, that cub did, that he'd better mind, for that old bear wouldn't stan' any more foolin'."

DID MAN FALL?

The Location and Topography of the Garden of Eden a Fact.

IS THE GARDEN ALSO A FACT?

$5,000 REWARD.

By ISRAEL W. GROH, Author of "Is the God of Israel the True God?"

Pertinent and interesting.—Freethought.
Will be handed to my Christian friends that they may, by finding the garden of Eden, get the $5,000 reward.—Editor Sequachee Times.
Raises the devil with the garden of Eden yarn.—Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer.

Paper, 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

ROME OR REASON

A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSAY WATERS.

A very critical analysis of both Protestantism and Catholicism, from the vantage-ground of an intimate personal experience with the two systems. It deals the most trenchant blows which pure logic is capable of inflicting.—[Critical Review.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE

MARTYRDOM OF MAN.

A COMPENDIUM OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

By WINWOOD READE.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—[Literary World.
You turn over his pages with a fascination similar to that experienced in reading Washington Irving.—[Inter-Ocean.
His history has a continuity, a rush, a carrying power, which reminds us strikingly of Gibbon.—[New Haven Palladium.
The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—[Penn Monthly.

Eighth edition. Extra cloth, 12mo, 543pp., $1.75.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

Great Centennial Oration

ON THE

Declaration of Independence,

ALSO THE

Immortal Document,

And the National Anthem entitled:

"LAND OF LIBERTY."

Price, 6 cts; 5 copies, 25 cts; 25 copies, $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

BIBLE INQUIRER;

OR,

A Key to Bible Investigation.

Containing 148 Propositions
With References to the most Plain and Striking Self-Contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures.

BY A. JACOBSON.

Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged.

Every Liberal needs a copy for ready reference. As a pamphlet to loan to Christian friends, it is the most effectiv Iconoclast ever published.

Price only 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
J. C. Scott, 22 Third st., San Francisco, Cal.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.
Estate of S. C. Blake, 503 Kearny st., San Francisco.
Richardson Bros., 213 Grant ave., San Francisco.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
R. W. Wheeler & Co., Hamilton, Ont.
Knowles, Cor. George and Granville st., Halifax, N. S.

COLORADO.
J. G. Jenkins, 400 Arapahoe st., Denver.

FLORIDA.
Jas. Douglas, 46 E. Bay st., Jacksonville.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
Post-office News Co., 103 Adams st., Chicago.
E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago.
G. E. Wilson, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.
J. W. Howe, 56 S. Halstead st., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

LOUISIANA.
Al. J. Dwyer, 226 Baronne st., New Orleans.

MASSACHUSETTS.
Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth st., Boston.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.
Johnson Bro's 5 N. Main st., Fall River.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Chas. Sach, 138 S. Division St., Grand Rapids.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.
Herman Reif, 94 Gratiot ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Phillip Roeder, 322 Olive st., St. Louis.
E. T. Jett, 802 Olive st., St. Louis.
Lang & Co., 709 Olive st., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.
Eaton & Smith, 1234 O st., Lincoln.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Burnton & Co., 92 Fourth ave., New York.
H. Adler, cor. Essex & Grand sts., New York.
H. Cohn, 320 West st., New York.
Morris Ash, 120 Broadway, New York.
M. B. Edinger, 1243 Third ave., New York.
L. Jonas, Astor House, New York.
J. H. Russell, cor. Fulton and Nassau. st, New York.
J. Vanden Broeck, 397 Bleecker st., New York.
New York News Co., 20 Beekman st., New York.
S. J. King, 179 So. Pearl st., Albany.

OHIO.
John Jacques, Akron.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.
J. R. Hawley, 164 Vine st., Cincinnati.

OREGON.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.
C. H. Wilcox, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 722 Spring Garden st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.
J. A. Kirk, Du Bois.

TENNESSEE.
Wm. B. Fisher, 84 N. Cherry st., Nashville.
D. P. Henderson & Co., Chattanooga.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.
H. S. Kratz, 306 Houston st., Fort Worth.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.
Stine Bros., Walla Walla.
W. Wedeken, Montesano.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.
Progressiv Pub. Co., 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

AUSTRALIA.
Mrs. J. Hadfield, Market st., Sydney, N.S.W.
W. Willis, 715 Haymarket, Sydney, N. S. W.

NEW ZEALAND.
A. D. Willis, Wanganui.

As a Means for the Production of
Relief Printing Plates
We can recommend the three processes operated by this Company.
Their ZINC ETCHINGS for cheap and coarse newspaper work, and their MOSS-TYPE process, by which engravings are made direct from photographs, as well as their MOSS PROCESS OF PHOTO-ENGRAVING, are all superior to any other like methods. Address
MOSS ENGRAVING CO.,
535 Pearl St. New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM
Sixty-five Years' Invariable Success.

☞ FOR ALL DISEASES OF EYES OR EARS. Immediate relief from Granulations, Inflammations, Dim Vision, Watery Gatherings, and Failing Sight of Eyes. Deafness, Drumming, Binging of the Ears dispelled by a few applications. Catarrhal difficulties of Eyes or Ears instantly removed. Sent the world over. "Box with instructions, by mail, 25 cents. S. A. NEALE, 10t23 Shakers P. O., N.Y.

PIONEER PITH.
THE GIST OF LECTURES ON RATIONALISM.
By CAPT. R. C. ADAMS, President of Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club; author of "Travels in Faith from Tradition to Reason,"
and
"Evolution—A Summary of Evidence."
A compendium of scientific and critical lore. Best handbook for introducing the general reader to the principles and data on which Rationalism is based.
Paper, 12mo, 100pp., 25 cents.

EVOLUTION THEORY.
Three lectures by PROF. THOS. H. HUXLEY.
Paper, 10 cents.

Thirty DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE STORIES, ESSAYS, and LECTURES.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Pap., 700pp., 75 cents.

BENNETT-TEED DISCUSSION.
"Jesus the Lord God, Creator of Heaven and Earth."
By D. M. BENNETT and REV. MR. TEED.
Paper, 30 cents.

BESANT-HATCHARD DEBATE.
BETWEEN
ANNIE BESANT AND REV. A. HATCHARD
ON
Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity.
Price, 25 cents.

BIBLE BALANCED.
Comparing the Bible's Best Teachings and Sayings with those of Philosophers who Lived previous to Bible Authors.
By G. C. DARLING.
Paper, - - 50 cents.

BIBLE FABRICATIONS REFUTED.
Errors Exposed.
By O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

BIBLE MORALS.
TWENTY CRIMES and VICES Sanctioned by Scripture.
By J. E. REMSBURG.
Price, 25 cents.

CRIMES OF PREACHERS in the United States and Canada.
By M. E. BILLINGS.
Price, . . . 25 cents.

BUDDHIST NIHILISM.
By MAX MULLER, M.A.
Price, 10 cents.

GOLDEN MEAN in Temperance and Religion.
By JOHN E. BURTON.
Price, 10 cents.

INSPIRATION OF BIBLES.
By JNO. E. BURTON.
Price, 10 cents.

Christianity and Materialism.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 15 cents.

CHRISTIANITY A REWARD FOR CRIME.
By O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.
Price, 10 cents.

CHRISTIANITY from a SCIENTIFIC and HISTORICAL STANDPOINT.
By W. N. MCLAREN.
Paper, 50 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus.
Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. New Scripture (evidently inspired). Discovered by I. N. FIDEL and A. HOOK.
Price, 25 cents.

THE CRISIS.
By THOMAS PAINE.
Written during the American Revolution, and by order of General Washington read to the army.
Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75.

CULTIVATION OF ART.
ITS RELATIONS TO RELIGIOUS PURITANISM AND MONEY-GETTING.
By A. R. COOPER.
Paper, 20c.; flexible clo., 35.

THE DARWINS. A Domestic Radical Romance. By Mrs. E. D. Slenker.
Pap., 50c.; clo., 75.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

SISTER LUCY
AND HER AWFUL DISCLOSURES.
AS TO NEW HALL CONVENT.
And a Few Words on Auricular Confession.
Price, 10 cents.

POSITIVIST CALENDAR.
Each day and month of the year being named after the great benefactors of the race, whose portraits are given. Instituted by Aug. Comte.
Cards, 11x14; printed on both sides, 25 cents; on two cards, 35 cents.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH.
J. E. REMSBURG.
Price, 10 cents; per dozen, 75 cents.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE.
Liquor-Drinking Commended, Defended, and Enjoined by the Bible.
By E. C. WALKER.
10 cents.

ECONOMIC EQUITIES.
A COMPEND OF THE NATURAL LAWS OF INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION AND EXCHANGE.
By J. K. INGALLS.
Price, 25 cents.

Science and Theology.
ANCIENT AND MODERN.
By J. A. FROUDE.
Price, . . . 25 cents.

Ingersoll on McGlynn.
30., 30c. per dozen, $2 per 100.

LAY SERMON.
On the Labor Question.
By R. G INGERSOLL.
Price, 5 cents; 50 cents per doz.; $1 for 25.

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL'S
OPENING SPEECH TO THE JURY
in the suit of the
Bankers' and Merchants' Telegraph Company
against the
Western Union Telegraph Company
Price, 10 cents.

THE STAGE AND THE PULPIT.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY.
By R. G. INGERSOLL.
Price, 3 cents; 30 cents per dozen; $2 per 100

Is the God of Israel the True God?
Narrative of the Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, and the New Testament.
Price, 25 cents.

Masonic Vindication of Right.
PROTEST AGAINST PERSECUTION.
By O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.
Price, 15 cents.

MIRACLES
AND MIRACLE-WORKERS.
By JOHN PECK.
Price, . . 10 cents.

THE
ORDER OF CREATION.
A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
GLADSTONE, HUXLEY, MULLER, LINTON, REVILLE.
On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
12mo, 178 pages, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

"Our Father in Heaven."
By CHAS. STEPHENSON.
1 cent; 50 cents per hundred; $3 per thousand.

PERSONAL EXISTENCE AFTER DEATH IMPROBABLE.
By L. R. SMITH.
10 cents.

WHAT LIBERALISM OFFERS IN PLACE OF CHRISTIANITY.
By B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Price, 10 cents.

For all of the above books address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
28 Lafayette Pl., New York.

HOW TO Strengthen the Memory,
OR,
NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC METHODS OF NEVER FORGETTING.

The Boston Post says: "This book actually shows us how to keep our memories in good working condition and repair them when out of order."
Price by mail $1.

Parturition Without Pain.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We giv our cordial approbation to this work. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable." Price by mail, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY
AND HYGIENE, or, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN. Carefully revised edition, with 111 illustrations. The most perfect book for men and women ever published. 50,000 sold. Price $2, by mail. Illustrated catalog free.

Marriage and Parentage.
In Their Sanitary and Physiological Relations, and in Their Bearing on the Producing of Children of Finer Health and Greater Ability.
By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

The Scientific American says: "This work is scientific, sober, clean, and worthy of conscientious consideration by every possible parent, and particularly by the young." $1.

EATING FOR STRENGTH;
OR,
FOOD AND DIET IN RELATION TO HEALTH AND WORK.

The New York Herald says: "Dr. Holbrook's book is among the very best of its kind."
The Home and Garden says: "A study of this book will enable any intelligent reader to make a choice of food which may save the cost of the book every day in providing for a family, besides increasing health, strength, and longevity." $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.,
28 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Twentieth Century.
DEVOTED TO
Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.
HUGH O. PENTECOST, EDITOR.

It contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday addresses of the editor before Unity congregation.
It is the only so called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.
Its columns are open to the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.
Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription, $1. ☞ Sample Copies Free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe." Address:
TWENTIETH CENTURY PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 4 WARREN ST., NEW YORK.

NOW READY.
A VOLUME OF THE WRITINGS
OF
HORACE SEAVER.
COMPILED BY
L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume comprises some of the ablest and best editorials written by Mr. Seaver during the past forty-five years. It is neatly printed on cream-white paper, bound in cloth, and contains a fine likeness of the venerable editor of the Investigator. Every Liberal should hav this book in his home. It is now ready for delivery.
Price, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKEB CO.

DR. FELLOWS
STAR OF HOPE
Send 10 cts. to Dr. Fellows, Vineland, N.J., for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from results of indiscretion and ignorance of youth. It sets forth an External Application—a positive cure. The book is worth many times its cost. State where you saw this advertisement.
VINELAND, N.J.

Similar advertisments from unreliable practitioners hav been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him. Being a stanch LIBERAL is further proof of his reliability.—National View.

Poetry.

My Little Maid.

M. N. B. in the Boston Globe.

Crimson clover-blossoms dapple
All the meadows, while the apple
Trees drift rosy snows beneath their bending boughs
On a little maid who passes
Through the rippling ranks of grasses
In the gloaming as she goes to call the cows.

Pretty, dainty, dark-eyed Phyllis,
Though her manner coy and chill is
As she hastens on to where the cattle browse.
Though she scarcely seems to notice
Me, the girl on whom I dote is
This little maid who goes to call the cows.

As the twilight shadows darken,
Even all nature seems to harken
For her footsteps, and that bird that's half adrowse
Pipes a sleepy little ditty
Just to tell me that my pretty
Is coming back from calling of the cows.

Here and there a glow-worm grazes
The white robes of nodding daisies,
Betraying where with king-cups they carouse;
Stars above begin to twinkle,
As I hear the "tinkle, tinkle!"
Of the bells upon my little maiden's cows.

She is come, still coy and colder
Than before. But love, grown bolder,
Bids me speak. And oh, she listens to my vows;
Lets me tell her that I love her,
And the happy birds above her
Hear the answer of my maid who calls the cows!

The Song of the Scythe.

From the Boston Journal.

Mowers, weary and brown and blithe,
What is the word methinks ye know,
Endless over-word that the scythe
Sings to the blades of the grass below?
Scythes that swing in the grass and clover,
Something still they say as they pass;
What is the word that, over and over,
Sings the scythe to the flowers and grass?

"Hush! ah, hush!" the scythes are saying,
"Hush, and heed not, and fall asleep;
Hush!" they say to the grasses swaying.
"Hush!" they sing to the clover deep.
"Hush!" 'tis the lullaby Time is singing,
"Hush, and heed not, for all things pass.
Hush! ah, hush!" and the scythes are swinging
Over the clover, over the grass.

ANDREW LANG.

The Cry of the Dreamer.

From the Nebraska State Journal.

I am tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men;
Heart-weary of building and spoiling
And spoiling and building again.
And I long for the dear old river
Where I dreamed my youth away;
For a dreamer livs forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I am sick of the showy seeming
Of a life that is half a lie;
Of the faces lined with scheming,
In the throng that hurries by.
From the sleepless thought's endeavor,
I would go where the children play;
For a dreamer livs forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I feel no pride, but pity
For the burdens the rich endure;
There is nothing sweet in the city
But the patient lives of the poor.
Oh, the little hands so skilful,
And the child mind choked with weeds,
The daughter's heart grows wilful,
And the father's heart that bleeds.

No, no! from the street's rude bustle,
From trophies of mart and stage,
I would fly to the wood's low rustle,
And the meadow's kindly page.
Let me dream as of old by the river,
And be loved for the dream alway;
For a dreamer livs forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

Dust.

A STANFORD UNIVERSITY STORY.

